Monday Feb. 2, 1953

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today, that his Administration has started to define a new, positive foreign policy. We have learned since 1945 that we cannot remain paralyzed, and wait for the aggressor to "cause us the greatest hurt, at the least cost to himself." The President's [redacted] state of the union message [redacted] was applauded some 50-odd times in the 56 minutes it took to read. He said: [redacted] he has ordered our 7th fleet, off Formosa, to stop "sheilding" the Chinese Communist mainland. He feels that the fleet, which had been enforcing the Truman orders to prevent Nationalist attacks on the mainland, and prevent the Communists from attacking Formosa, actually served as a defensive arm of the Communists. He made it clear this order "implies no aggressive intent upon our part." [I should like to review some of the foreign reaction to this in a few minutes.]

The President said again that we will increase the build-up of South Korean troops. And he promised to ask Congress for a resolution to make clear that [redacted] HIS Administration will not recognize any secret [redacted] committments made in the past, to "permit the enslavement of any peoples."

[redacted]

Monday Feb. 2, 1953

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today, that his Administration has started to define a new, positive foreign policy. We have learned since 1945 that we cannot remain paralyzed, and wait for the aggressor to "cause us the greatest hurt, at the least cost to himself." The President's [redacted] state of the union message [redacted] was applauded some 50-odd times in the 56 minutes it took to read. He said: [redacted] he has ordered our 7th fleet, off Formosa, to stop "sheilding" the Chinese Communist mainland. He feels that the fleet, which had been enforcing the Truman orders to prevent Nationalist attacks on the mainland, and prevent the Communists from attacking Formosa, actually served as a defensive arm of the Communists. He made it clear this order "implies no aggressive intent upon our part." [I should like to review some of the foreign reaction to this in a few minutes.]

The President said again that we will increase the build-up of South Korean troops. And he promised to ask Congress for a resolution to make clear that [redacted] HIS Administration will not recognize any secret [redacted] committments made in the past, to "permit the enslavement of any peoples."

[redacted]

[redacted]

The President said our new "positive" foreign policy must [redacted] be truly bi-partisan.. must be a coherent global policy. It will use peaceful methods and devices. We will not break faith with our friends. And we believe in mutual security and mutual co-operation. The President said we will help others to the extent that they help themselves. He made it clear we want "practical unity" in Western Europe. He feels those nations have made bitter sacrifices.. contributed much with their vision and determination.. but he wants co-operation "greater than has been known to date."

The President, who has been in office for less than two weeks, said there is much to be done to work out [redacted] programs to cover all phases of his responsibility. But he had a number of suggestions. He said: we must eliminate waste and duplication in the armed forces. AND intergrate the whole program. [redacted] He made it clear that he wants a civil defense program.. believes it is "sheer necessity" because "We have [redacted] incontrovertible evidence" that the Russians have atomic weapons. (Former President Truman has doubts.)

President Eisenhower promised to work toward tax reductions, at the earliest possible time. But he doesn't feel it would be wise to cut taxes until we have shown that we can cut expenses..reduce our deficits..meet the costs of defense.. properly handle our big debt, and check the menace of inflation. President Eisenhower says it is important that we all understand that his Administration does not and cannot begin its job with a clean slate; it cannot quickly erase or amend what has been done in the past.

~~[illegible] economy is highly complex and sensitive. [illegible] not be easy. But, he said, with the cooperation of every [illegible] the Congress and citizens and local government [illegible] themselves in demands on Congress for Federal funds [illegible]~~

The President says no problem has received more consideration from his advisors than the future of wage and price controls. He wants to let them die at the end of April because: they are artificial..arbitrary.. unsastisfactory, and unworkable. They have not kept the cost of living down, and they have not prevented inflation. But he would retain rent controls in areas with serious housing shortages. (chiefly defense areas.)

The President promised that all of his aides will attempt to surround themselves with government workers who are loyal in motives and reliable in their work. New loyalty and security programs will be started in all departments under the supervision of Attorney General Brownell. [redacted]

The President addressed himself to additional government problems. [redacted] He feels we must seek economic stability for the farmer..full parity for him.. and minimize governmental interference. He wants the Taft-Hartley law amended promptly (although he had no specific recommendations) [redacted]

He pledges to use all of his authority to end [redacted] segregation in the District of Columbia, the federal government and the armed forces. [redacted] He wants to extend old [redacted] age and survivors insurance.. to encourage private pension plans.. He asked Congress to eliminate the injusticies, the discrimination from the Mc Carran immigration bill. And he wants Congress to approve statehood for Hawaii...made no mention of Alaska.

The President's state of the union speech will be REBROADCAST over many of these stations at five minutes after midnight, eastern standard time.

~~The President summed up his views when he said he wants the conduct of our foreign affairs to "follow a steady course between an assertion of strength that is truculent and a confession of helplessness that is cowardly." In domestic affairs he seeks "the middle way between untrammelled freedom of the individual and demands for the welfare of the whole nation."~~

The Senate today confirmed three of the President's appointees:

Robert T. Stevens as army secretary...Robert T. Anderson AS Navy secretary...Winthrop Aldrich as ambassador to Great Britain. Action on ANOTHER appointee was delayed. Harold E. Talbott, designated to be secretary of air, ACKNOWLEDGED TO a Senate committee that during World War One an army procurement officer gave his aviation firm secret tips on airplane contracts. He said this was unfortunate..he wouldn't let anything like this happen again. ~~Another Senate committee heard John T. Flynn, a writer-economist, challenge the nomination of Dr. Conant to be high commissioner to West Germany. Mr. Flynn, a bitter critic of former Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, said Dr. Conant backed the controversial Morgenthau plan for dismantling much of Germany's industry. Senator Taft says he thinks Flynn~~

~~"made a good case" against Conant. Another witness, Joseph M. Dawson of the Baptists of America, said objections to Dr. Conant do him a grave injustice... are a "vicious threat to sound governmental policy."~~

In western Europe tonight there is fear of additional casualties as a result of the North Sea's high tide and freak hurricane that have already taken more than 950 lives. A few minutes ago my colleague Howard K. Smith told me by telephone from London that while the gale winds are abating the temperature has fallen radically to a near freezing point. And snow has started to fall along the British and Dutch Coasts. Smith says at least 1-thousand persons are unaccounted for in Britain.. in addition to a known dead of more than 300. This includes at least 11 American airmen and their families. In the Netherlands, there are 485 reported dead. The Hilversum radio "roughly estimates" one million persons in distress. The North Sea dikes of Holland have been cut in more than 70 places. Its the worst flood and storm since the middle of the 15th century: 23 islands are under water.. American Lieut. General Eddy, now in command of military assistance to Holland, says the scene from the air is "appalling".. The Dutch report thousands of acres of rich soil covered by salt water..damage estimates run into the millions. It was just a week ago that the Dutch informed Washington that they would no longer need our economic aid.

In Korea today, allied tankers ended a three-week attack on enemy bunkers along the central front. Allied officer says they shot up more than a thousand bunkers..call it "an unqualified success." Our Sabrejets today shot down two Migs.

Here in New York, 13 convicted second-string Communist leaders, were offered a choice by Federal Judge Dimock: they could go to Russia or to American prisons.
[redacted]. They chose [redacted] prison.

Edward R. Murrow: February 2, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary of State Dulles is touring Europe asking questions - making no commitments. Today in Paris he was on the receiving end of the questions; French officials wanting to know the meaning of President Eisenhower's speech. Mr. Dulles is reliably reported to have told them that this was the beginning of a cold war offensive, aimed at putting the Communist world on the defensive ~~in~~ an "effort to worry the Kremlin." The speech is at least worrying our allies.

In Britain the press is universally critical of the decision regarding Formosa. The London Times, which frequently speaks for the Foreign Office, says"the decision will be no more welcome in Whitehall than in Paris or Delhi. It will certainly underline the differences of view between the Western governments." Throughout Western Europe there is apprehension now, as there has been for some time, that we may take some action that will lead to all-out war with China.

The decision regarding Formosa is not likely to change the military situation in the near future. The monsoon season has started in the Formosa Straits, and this is no time for small landing craft operations by either side. Chiang-Kai-Shek does not have the men, the planes or the ships for an assault against the mainland. They are capable of carrying out small Commando-type raids; but in the words of one high-ranking American officer on Formosa, "if they attempted a landing it would be the shortest in history." And a civil population does not rise to assist soldiers they know are not going to stay. Some of Chiang's forces are well-trained, and capable of effective action, up to the battalion level; but continents are not invaded by battalions. The military balance is not altered significantly by the decision to pull the 7th Fleet out of the Straits of Formosa. Gen. Omar Bradley Chairman of the Joint Chiefs doesnt think this move involves "much greater" Risk of all out war with China

The President's disavowal of any or all secret understandings entered into by previous Administrations, permitting Russia to enslave free peoples, must remain something of a mystery. / Jim Haggerty, the President's press secretary, was asked whether this referred specifically to Yalta and Potsdam. Mr. Haggerty replied: "We are going to find out if any secret agreements were made in the past. It is broader than any one specific item". The agreements entered into at Yalta and Potsdam were subsequently published; and we were assured by the then Secretaries of State that there were no secret clauses or agreements. / The State Department refused to say what "understandings" the President had in mind. Representative Kirsten, of Wisconsin, has introduced a joint resolution declaring the Yalta agreement null and void, and not binding upon the United States. Whatever the fate of this resolution, it won't affect the outcome, because we are confronted not with an agreement but with armies in position; and how those armies are to be removed peaceably is a question no one has yet answered.

On the matter of domestic legislation, President Eisenhower talked with caution and in general terms. This was consistent with his campaign promises. He appears to be trying to apply the college seminar or study group principle to a great variety of complex problems. For example he wants the Congress to study the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. A committee will survey the international information field. The Secretary of the Treasury is studying the tax structure. There will be a study as to what to do about the farm laws that expire in 1954. The Congress is now studying labor legislation. The President wants a study regarding more local self-government for the District of Columbia. There will be another study of changes that may be required in the immigration law; another survey as to what the federal government should do about aid to education. There will be a committee to look into government re-organization. The Secretary of Defense and his aides will recommend changes in the law regarding defense activities.

If the President was rather more precise in what he said about foreign policy than in what he said about domestic policy, it was perhaps because foreign affairs are both more urgent and familiar. The long list of studies and committees probably reflect the President's repeated belief that he can work through and with the Congress rather than trying to give orders. He laid out a lot of homework for the Congressmen today.

President Eisenhower has made it evident in his State of the Union Message that much of his future action will be guided by the reports he receives from his advisors. In effect, he was saying what Peter the Great said in 1697: "I am of those who must be taught and am seeking for teachers." The goal of the President is based on the same belief expressed in the Babylonian Talmud: "The reward of study is understanding."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that his Administration has started to define a new, positive foreign policy. We have learned since 1945 that we cannot remain paralyzed and wait for the aggressor to "cause us the greatest hurt at the least cost to himself." The President's state of the union message was applauded some 50-odd times in the 56 minutes it took to read. He said he has ordered our 7th fleet off Formosa to stop "shielding" the Chinese Communist mainland. He feels that the fleet, which had been enforcing the Truman orders to prevent Nationalist attacks on the mainland, and prevent the Communists from attacking Formosa, actually served as a defensive arm of the Communists. He made it clear this order "implies no aggressive intent upon our part." I should like to review some of the foreign reaction to this in a few minutes.

The President said again that we will increase the build-up of South Korean troops. And he promised to ask Congress for a resolution to make clear that his Administration will no recognize any secret committments made in the past to "permit the enslavement of any peoples."

The President said our new "positive" foreign policy must be truly bi-partisan, must be a coherent global policy. It will use peaceful methods and devices. We will not break faith with our friends. And we believe in mutual security and mutual cooperation. The President said we will help others to the extent that they help themselves. He made it clear we want "practical unity" in Western Europe. He feels those nations have made bitter sacrifices, contributed much with their vision and determination, but he wants cooperation "greater than has been known to date."

The President, who has been in office for less than two weeks, said there is much to be done to work out programs to cover all phases of his responsibility. But he had a number of suggestions. He said: we must eliminate waste and duplication in the armed forces and integrate the whole program. He made it clear that he wants a civil defense program, believes it is "sheer necessity" because "We have incontrovertible evidence" that the Russians have atomic weapons. (Former President Truman has doubts.)

President Eisenhower promised to work toward tax reductions at the earliest possible time. But he doesn't feel it would be wise to cut taxes until we have shown that we can cut expenses, reduce our deficits, meet the costs of defense, properly handle our big debt and check the menace of inflation. President Eisenhower says it is important that we all understand that his Administration does not and cannot begin its job with a clean slate; it cannot quickly erase or amend what has been done in the past.

The President says no problem has received more consideration from his advisors than the future of wage and price controls. He wants to let them die at the end of April because: they are artificial, arbitrary, unsatisfactory and unworkable. They have not kept the cost of living down and they have not prevented inflation. But he would retain rent controls in areas with serious housing shortages, (shiefly defense areas.)

The President promised that all of his aides will attempt to surround themselves with government workers who are loyal in motives and reliable in their work. New loyalty and security programs will be started in all departments under the supervision of Attorney General Brownell.

The President addressed himself to additional government problems. He feels that we must seek economic stability for the farmer, full parity for him, and minimize governmental interference. He wants the Taft-Hartley law amended promptly (although he had no specific recommendations.) He pledges to use all of his authority to end segregation in the District of Columbia, the federal government and the armed forces. He wants to extend old age and survivors insurance, to encourage private pension plans. He asked Congress to eliminate the injustices, the discrimination from the McCarran immigration bill. And he wants Congress to approve statehood for Hawaii (made no mention of Alaska.) The President's state of the union speech will be rebroadcast over many of these stations at five minutes after midnight, eastern standard time.

The Senate today confirmed three of the President's appointees: Robert T. Stevens as army secretary, Robert T. Anderson as Navy Secretary, Winthrop Aldrich as ambassador to Great Britain. Action on another appointee was delayed. Harold E. Talbott, designated to be secretary of air, acknowledged to a Senate committee that during World War One an army procurement officer gave his aviation firm secret tips on airplane contracts. He said this was unfortunate, he wouldn't let anything like this happen again.

In western Europe tonight there is fear of additional casualties as a result of the North Sea's tide and freak hurricane that have already taken more than 950 lives. A few minutes ago my colleague Howard K. Smith told me by telephone from London that while the gale winds are abating the temperature has fallen radically to a near freezing point. And snow has started to fall along the British and Dutch Coasts. Smith says at least 1-thousand persons are unaccounted for in Britain, in addition to a known dead of more than 300. This includes at least 11 American airmen and their families. In the Netherlands, there are 485 reported dead. The Hilversum radio "roughly estimates" one million persons in distress. The North Sea dikes of Holland have been cut in more than 70 places. Its the worst flood and storm since the middle of the 15th century: 23 islands are under water. American Lieut. General Eddy, now in command of military assistance to Holland, says the scent from the air is "appalling." The Dutch report thousands of acres of rich soil covered by salt water; damage estimates run into the millions. It was just a week ago that the Dutch informed Washington that they would no longer need our economic aid.

In Korea today, allied tankers ended a three-week attack on enemy bunkers along the central front. Allied officer says they shot up more than a thousand bunkers, call it "an unqualified success." Our Sabrejets today shot down two Migs.

Here in New York, 13 convicted second-string Communist leaders, were offered a choice by Federal Judge Dimock: they could go to Russia or to American prisons. They chose prison.

Secretary of State is touring Europe asking questions - making no commitments. Today in Paris he was on the receiving end of the questions; French officials wanting to know the meaning of President Eisenhower's speech. Mr. Dulles is reliably reported to have told them that this was the beginning of a cold war offensive, aimed at putting the Communist world on the defensive in an "effort to worry the Kremlin." The speech is at least worrying our allies.

In Britain the press is universally critical of the decision regarding Formosa. The London Times, which frequently speaks for the Foreign Office, says "the decision will be no more welcome in Whitehall than in Paris or Delhi. It will certainly underline the differences of view between the Western governments." Throughout Western Europe there is apprehension now, as there has been for some time, that we may take some action that will lead to all-out war with China.

The decision regarding Formosa is not likely to change the military situation in the near future. The monsoon season has started in the Formosa Straits, and this is no time for small landing craft operations by either side. Chiang-Kai-Shek does not have the men, the planes or the ships for an assault against the mainland. They are capable of carrying out small Commando-type raids; but in the words of one high-ranking American officer on Formosa," if they attempted a landing it would be the shortest in history." And a civil population does not rise to assist soldiers they know are not going to stay. Some of Chiang's forces are well-trained, and capable of effective action up to the battalion level; but continents are not invaded by battalions. The military balance is not altered significantly by the decision to pull the 7th Fleet out of the Straits of Formosa. General Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, doesn't think this move involves "greater" risk of all-out war with China.

The President's disavowal of any or all secret understandings entered into by previous Administrations, permitting Russia to enslave free peoples, must remain something of a mystery. Jim Haggerty, the President's press secretary, was asked whether this referred specifically to Yalta and Potsdam. Mr. Haggerty replied: "We are going to find out if any secret agreements were made in the past. It is broader than any one specific item." The agreements entered into at Yalta and Potsdam were subsequently published; and we were assured by the then secretaries of State that there were no secret clauses or agreements. The State Department refused to say what "understandings" the President had in mind. Representative Kirsten, of Wisconsin, has introduced a joint resolution declaring the Yalta agreement null and void, and not binding upon the United States. Whatever the fate of this resolution, it won't affect the outcome, because we are confronted not with an agreement but with armies in position; and how those armies are to be removed peaceably is a question no one has yet answered.

On the matter of domestic legislation, President Eisenhower talked with caution and in general terms. This was consistent with his campaign promises. He appears to be trying to apply the college seminar or study group principle to a great variety of complex problems. For example he wants the Congress to study the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. A committee will survey the international information field. The Secretary of the Treasury is studying the tax structure. There will be a study as to what to do about the farm laws that expire in 1954. The Congress is now studying labor legislation. The President wants a study regarding more local self-government for the District of Columbia. There will be another study of changes that may be required in the immigration law; another survey as to what the federal government should do about aid to education. There will be a committee to look into government reorganization. The Secretary of Defense and his aides will recommend changes in the law regarding defense activities.

If the President was rather more precise in what he said about foreign policy than in what he said about domestic policy, it was perhaps because foreign affairs are both more urgent and familiar. The long list of studies and committees probably reflect the President's repeated belief that he can work through and with the Congress rather than trying to give orders. He laid out a lot of homework for the Congressmen today.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: President Eisenhower has made it evident in his State of the Union Message, that much of his future action will be guided by the reports he receives from his advisors. In effect, he was saying that Peter the Great said in 1687: "I am of those who must be taught and am seeking for teachers." The goal of the President is based on the same belief expressed in the Babylonian Talmud: "The reward of study is understanding."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, Feb. 3, 1953.

This is the news:

The Administration today started on its economy program. Budget Director Dodge told all agency heads, they must cut their spending..reduce their budgets..examine existing programs for economy... make no new committments unless they are essential. He wants "a progressive reduction" in government personnel. If you are an agency head and you have [redacted] staff vacancies, you must try to find someone else in the office, who can do the job. Maybe "more efficiency" can make up for the missing staff members. New ones are to be hired only if its "essential." Mr. Dodge has also ordered a review of government construction projects now underway. Where advisable, even those are to be halted. New federal buildings will go up only if its "essential"; and then under the strictest economy standards.

The White House says it WAS "unwarranted" for a Wage Stabilization Board executive to say, wage controls will be lifted immediately. That is under consideration..they might be lifted before the law expires at the end of April. [redacted]

[redacted]

The President was host today at a White House luncheon for 16 [redacted] Republican Senate leaders and committee chairmen. Senator Saltonstall said later: "President Eisenhower is a gentlemen who obviously wants to get along with us in Congress."

And Democratic Senators quickly offered to go along with the President's suggestions of a bi-partisan foreign policy. They say they are encouraged by statements that Administration officials will consult with Democrats "before and not after" policy has been formed.

The House today passed a bill to give President Eisenhower the same powers former President Truman had to REORGANIZE the government. The House defeated a committee plan to curb Mr. Eisenhower's powers.

Dr. Conant, the President's nominee to be high commissioner to West Germany, told a Senate committee today he doubts the "wisdom" of congressional investigations of Communism in colleges. He said he never agreed with the Morgenthau plan to dismantle German industry because it "carried a spirit of vindicteveness." He denied THAT HE ever made an attack on religious schools.

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

In London, Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons he believes the President's order to the 7th fleet..to stop sheilding Communist China--

[redacted] "will have [redacted] unfortunate political repercussions without compensating military advantages." Mr. Eden said the British three times expressed concern to Washington over the Administration's new policy. [redacted]

[redacted] Nationalist China's ambassador to Washington..Wellington Koo... says the Eisenhower order will not put Formosa in danger. Its apparent to him that the 7th fleet will continue to guard the Nationalist island.

Chaing Kai Shek has assured the western world that he does not want the help of any nation's ground forces; he suggests that he'd welcome air and naval support.

The influential "Times" of India says President Eisenhower "delights in hunting for peace with a gun" and wonders whether he will "embroil the world in another war." [redacted]

The Soviet press today summarized the President's state of the union message in 50 words..with no comment on the new Formosa policy. [redacted]

94

And the the Chinese Communists says the new plans for the 7th fleet are part of a "plot to enlarge the war and endanger peace in the Far East and the whole world."

[redacted]

In Korea today, American infantrymen attacked two Chinese hill positions. Frontline officers say it was a "tremendous success.." we killed at least 390 Communists. The operation was similar to the Less Successful Although much-publicized "Operation Smack." And General Collins, the army chief of staff, today defended that operation before a House committee. He said an over-zealous public relations officer made a mistake.. was "an eager beaver.." by putting the operation orders into a little colored-folder.

The death toll in Holland, England and Belgium has now reached an unofficial count of at least 16-hundred. And officials in all three countries indicate they have no idea how many people are missing. Today, North Sea waves pounded through broken Dutch dikes. And our correspondent at the Hague, Daniel Schorr.. says some of these breaks are 100 to 150 yards wide. Schorr says Dutch officials estimate it will take a year to recover from the effects of the past few days. [redacted]

[redacted]

Here in New York, Judge Dimmock sentenced TO PRISON 13 convicted second-string Communist leaders [redacted] for terms of from one to three years. Fines ranged from two to six thousand dollars.

The A. F. of L's executive council has given the International Longshoreman's Association 90 days in which to free itself from "all [redacted] racketeering, crime and corruption" on the New York and New Jersey waterfronts. The A. F of L. threatens to SUSPEND [redacted] the Longshoremen's union, if this is not done. Joseph Ryan, president of the longshoremen's union, says he's been trying to rid his union of racketeering and corruption for one year.

#

[redacted]

The latest Vienna spy case took a surprising turn today. You will remember that two naturalized ex-G.I.'s, Otto Verber and Kurt Ponger, were arrested as spies for the Soviet Union. They have been returned to this country to await trial. They are accused of maintaining contact with Yuri Novikov, the second Secretary at the Soviet Embassy in Washington. Novikov has left this country, at the request of our government. The first man picked up for questioning in connection with this spy case was another naturalized American citizen in Vienna, by the name of Walter Lauber. He was questioned for one week, and then released. And he immediately fled with his family to the Soviet zone of Austria. Today, in a Communist newspaper in Vienna, Lauber declares that American Intelligence agents tried to persuade him to give false testimony against his friends Verber and Ponger.

It appears that our Intelligence authorities released Lauber in the hope that he might lead them to other persons, in the Vienna spy ring. But he got away, and ended up in the Russian zone. Alex Kendrick cables from Vienna that the faces of American counter-Intelligence agents in Vienna are somewhat red. They allowed what might have been one of their principal witnesses against the two men accused of spying for Russia, to escape. He took his wife and two children with him. Our authorities say he was interrogated at length, but was not mishandled - was questioned under normal humane procedures.

It is, I think, much too early to speak of successes or failures in the foreign policy of the new Administration. Mr. Dulles is engaged in some very delicate conversations in Europe; our allies are apprehensive; much of their press is critical. But the progress or success of foreign policy cannot be judged by today's headlines, or by tomorrow's. / Despatches from Paris indicate that his conversations with the French leaders went much better than could have been expected a week ago. / He apparently persuaded the French that the new Administration is not considering any alternative to the European Army; has no idea of relying upon a ring of air bases outside Europe, as a counter-threat to the Russians; and that we have no thought of creating or helping to create a separate national German Army.

It also appears that the French leaders convinced Mr. Dulles that they will be able to get the necessary treaties through their Parliament this Spring, without sacrificing any essential elements.

Foreign policy is made up only in small part of the meetings of personalities. It involves procedures, and the routine relations between nations. And it is in this area that Mr. Dulles in Paris gave indication of what is to come in Washington. # For the past few years the State Department has been running only part of our foreign policy. In many European capitals there was confusion and conflict between our Ambassador, the man responsible for handling military aid, and the man responsible for handling economic assistance. The heads of these new agencies reported to Washington outside the old-time diplomatic channels. As we have reported from Europe from time to time, it seemed that the Defense Department and the Mutual Security Agency were more important and powerful than our Ambassador. This duplication of representation produced confusion in European capitals, and in Washington. For example, we now have in Paris four American representatives with the rank of Ambassador. Neither the French nor ourselves are quite sure who speaks with authority about what.

David Schoenbrun cables me from Paris tonight that French officials were astonished when Harold Stassen, the Mutual Security Administrator who is accompanying Mr. Dulles, told them in effect that the State Department was running our affairs - all of them - and that his was a secondary and minor role; and that he could do no more than follow the lines laid down by the State Department. This represents a clear indication to the Europeans, and to us, that the powerful days of the specialized agencies are numbered. The State Department has the responsibility of handling foreign affairs for the President. Our foreign affairs are made up in total of a mixture of diplomacy, economic and military aid, as well as propaganda. Mr. Dulles, and presumably President Eisenhower, appear determined to bring the control and direction of all of these varied elements into one place - the State Department - thereby trying to eliminate the crossed lines of authority, which have in the past frequently confused both us and our allies.

Schoenbrun reports that Stassen appeared not only to eagerly recognize the senior authority of Mr. Dulles, but also to advertise it. This could, and probably does, mark a real turning point in the conduct of American foreign affairs - a return of authority and responsibility to the State Department - a clarification of the chain of command ~~and~~ in the conduct of our foreign relations. We have a finger in every pie in Europe. This appears to be an effort to get ourselves a wrist, so that they can all be co-ordinated.

President Eisenhower had considerable first-hand experience with overlapping and duplicating agencies abroad, and has apparently decided that the State Department is to exercise overriding authority. The foreign policy of any Administration unfolds slowly, but the President is obviously trying to create a more cohesive and efficient instrument for its conduct.

A new administration is always confronted with the problem of reorganization...much like a new football coach taking over someone else's squad. Now, the State Department has a new "coach" who apparently believes as Edmund Burke did, that:"Good order is the foundation of all good things. To this, Mr. Churchill once added:"When you've got a thing where you want it, it is a good thing to leave it where it is!"

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Administration today started on its economy program. Budget Director Dodge told all agency heads they must cut their spending, reduce their budgets, examine existing programs for economy, make no new committments unless they are essential. He wants "a progressive reduction" in government personnel. If you are an agency head and you have staff vacancies, you must try to find someone else in the office who can do the job. Maybe "more efficiency" can make up for the missing staff members. New ones are to be hired only if its "essential;" and then under the strictest economy standards.

The White House says it was "unwarranted" for a Wage Stabilization Board executive to say wage controls will be lifted immediately. That is under consideration; they might be lifted before the law expires at the end of April.

The President was host today at a White House luncheon for 16 Republican Senate leaders and committee chairmen. Senator Saltonstall said later: "President Eisenhower is a gentlemen who obviously wants to get along with us in Congress."

And Democratic Senators quickly offered to go along with the President's suggestion of a bi-partisan foreign policy. They say they are encouraged by statements that Administration officials will consult with Democrats "before and not after," policy has been formed.

The House today passed a bill to give President Eisenhower the same powers former President Truman had to reorganize the government. The House defeated a committee plan to curb Mr. Eisenhower's powers.

Dr. Conant, the President's nominee to be high commissioner to West Germany, told a Senate committee today he doubts the "wisdom" of congressional investigations of Communism in colleges. He said he never agreed with the Morganthau plan to dismantle German industry because it "carried a spirit of vindictiveness." He denied that he ever made an attack on religious schools.

In London, Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons he believes the President's order to the 7th fleet, to stop sheilding Communist China - "will have unfortunate political repercussions without compensating military advantages." Mr. Eden said the British three times expressed concern to Washington over the Administration's new policy.

Nationalist China's ambassador to Washington, Wellington Koo, says the Eisenhower order will not put Formosa in danger. Its apparent to him that the 7th fleet will continue to guard the Nationalist island.

Chiang Kai Shek has assured the western world that he does not want the help of any nation's ground forces; he suggests that he'd welcome air and naval support.

The influential "Times" of India says President Eisenhower "delights in hunting for peace with a gun" and wonders whether he will "embroil the world in another war."

The Soviet press today summarized the President's state of the union message in 50 words, with no comment on the new Formosa policy. And the Chinese Communists says the new plans for the 7th fleet are part of a "plot to enlarge the war and endanger peace in the Far East and the whole world."

In Korea today, American infantrymen attacked two Chinese hill positions. Frontline officers say it was a "tremendous success." We killed at least 390 Communists. The operation was similar to the less successful although much-publicized "Operation Smack." And General Collins, the army chief of staff, today defended that operation before a House committee. He said an over-zealous public relations officer made a mistake, was "an eager beaver" by putting the operation orders into a little colored folder.

The death toll in Holland, England and Belgium has now reached an unofficial count of at least 16-hundred. And officials in all three countries indicate they have no idea how many people are missing. Today, North Sea waves pounded through broken Dutch dikes. And our correspondent at the Hague, Daniel Schorr, says some of these breaks are 100 to 150 yards wide. Schorr says Dutch officials estimate it will take a year to recover from the effects of the past few days.

Here in New York, Judge Dimmock sentenced to prison 13 convicted second-string Communist leaders for terms of from one to three years. Fines ranged from two to six thousand dollars.

The AFL's executive council has given the International Longshoreman's Association 90 days in which to free itself from "all racketeering, crime and corruption" on the New York and New Jersey waterfronts. The AFL threatens to suspend the Longshoremen's union if this is not done. Joseph Ryan, president of the Longshoremen's Union, says he's been trying to rid his union of racketeering and corruption for one year.

The latest Vienna spy case took a surprising turn today. You will remember that two naturalized ex-G.I.'s Otto Verber and Kurt Ponger, were arrested as spies for the Soviet Union. They have been returned to this country to await trial. They are accused of maintaining contact with Yuri Novikov, the second Secretary at the Soviet Embassy in Washington. The first man picked up for questioning in connection with this spy case was another naturalized American citizen in Vienna, by the name of Walter Lauber. He was questioned for one week and then released. And he immediately fled with his family to the Soviet zone of Austria. Today, in a Communist newspaper in Vienna, Lauber declares that American Intelligence agents tried to persuade him to give false testimony against his friends Verber and Ponger.

It appears that our Intelligence authorities released Lauber in the hope that he might lead them to other persons in the Vienna spy ring. But he got away and ended up in the Russian zone. Alex Kendrick cables from Vienna that the faces of American counter-Intelligence agents in Vienna are somewhat red. They allowed what might have been one of their principal witnesses against the two men accused of spying for Russia to escape. He took his wife and two children with him. Our authorities say he was interrogated at length, but was not mishandled - was questioned under normal humane procedures.

It is, I think, much too early to speak of successes or failures in the foreign policy of the new Administration. Mr. Dulles is engaged in some very delicate conversations in Europe; our allies are apprehensive; much of their press is critical. But the progress or success of foreign policy cannot be judged by today's headlines, or by tomorrow's. Despatches from Paris indicate that his conversations with the French leaders went much better than could have been expected a week ago. He apparently persuaded the French that the new Administration is not considering any alternative to the European Army; has no idea of relying upon a ring of air bases outside Europe as a counter-trheat to the Russians; and that we have no thought of creating or helping to create a separate national German Army.

It also appears that the French leaders convinced Mr. Dulles that they will be able to get the necessary treaties through their Parliament this Spring, without sacrificing any essential elements.

Foreign policy is made up only in small part of the meetings of personalities. It involves procedures, and the routine relations between nations. And it is in this area that Mr. Dulles in Paris gave indication of what is to come in Washington. For the past few years the State Department has been running only part of our foreign policy. In many European capitals there was confusion and conflict between our Ambassador, the man responsible for handling military aid, and the man responsible for handling economic assistance. The heads of these new agencies reported to Washington outside the old-time diplomatic channels. As we have reported from Europe from time to time, it seemed that the Defense Department and the Mutual Security Agency were more important and powerful than our Ambassador. This duplication of representation produced confusion in European capitals, and in Washington. For example, we now have in Paris four American representatives with the rank of Ambassador. Neither the French nor ourselves are quite sure who speaks with authority about what.

David Schoenbrun cables me from Paris tonight that French officials were astonished when Harold Stassen, the Mutual Security Administrator who is accompanying Mr. Dulles, told them in effect that the State Department was running our affairs - all of them - and that his was a secondary and minor role; and that he could do no more than follow the lines laid down by the State Department. This represents a clear indication to the Europeans, and to us, that the powerful days of the specialized agencies are numbered. The State Department has the responsibility of handling foreign affairs for the President. Our foreign affairs are made up in total of a mixture of diplomacy, economic and military aid, as well as propaganda. Mr. Dulles, and presumably President Eisenhower, appear determined to bring the control and direction of all of these varied elements into one place - the State Department - thereby trying to eliminate the crossed lines of authority which have in the past frequently confused both us and our allies.

Schoenbrun reports that Stassen appeared not only to eagerly recognize the senior authority of Mr. Dulles, but also to advertise it. This could, and probably does mark a real turning point in the conduct of American foreign affairs - a return of authority and responsibility to the State Department - a clarification of the chain of command in the conduct of our foreign relations. We have a finger in every pie in Europe. This appears to be an effort to get ourselves a wrist, to that they can all be co-ordinated.

President Eisenhower had considerable first-hand experience with overlapping and duplicating agencies abroad, and has apparently decided that the State Department is to exercise overriding authority. The foreign policy of any Administration unfolds slowly, but the President is obviously trying to create a more cohesive and efficient instrument for its conduct.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL.

MURROW: A new administration is always confronted with the problem of reorganization, much like a new football coach taking over someone else's squad. Now, the State Department has a new "coach" who apparently believes as Edmund Burke did, that "Good order is the foundation of all good things. To this, Mr. Churchill added: "When you've got a thing where you want it, it is a good thing to leave it where it is.." Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wed. Feb. 4, 1953

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists today "reacted" to President Eisenhower's decision to order our 7th fleet to stop sheidling Red China from Nationalist attacks. The Chinese communist radio says Chiang Kai Shek is egging on the United States to use its navy and air force to invade the mainland. Peiping says Chiang is a tool of President Eisenhower's scheme for having Asians fight Asians(a phrase he used during the campaign).

And in another enemy broadcast, Premier Chou En-lai said the Chinese are ready for an immediate cease-fire in Korea, IF the allies agree to settle, at a later date, the fate of prisoners of war. The Communists have suggested a similar plan before: they want all nations participating in the war to settle the fate of the prisoners at a conference after a cease-fire. (THE STATE DEPARTMENT says the plan is the same one Russia suggested.. the same one the U.N. Assembly turned down last December.

The enemy premier also made it clear that his people are prepared to continue the war "to the last." He called on China to mobilize its "manpower".. to increase its industrial and agricultural production.

Chou en Lai's broadcast came after the Voice of America had recorded an appeal by Mayor Wu of Formosa to the Chinese people on the mainland. He called on them to start a campaign of "passive resistance"...

to support the forces of Free China when these forces attack..to help disrupt Communist communications and destroy war materials.

The White House said today it will not announce when the President issues his order to the 7th fleet to stop sheilding the Communists [redacted]

Democratic Senator Fulbright suggests we give the Nationalists planes to bomb red china..just as the Russians have supplied planes for attacks on allied forces in North Korea.

~~And Republican Senator Cooper, of Kentucky, a former representative to the United Nations, says he doesn't expect the U.N. to do anything effective to end the Korean [redacted]~~

In Korea today, our fighter-bombers made another attack on enemy troop concentrations. And General Van Fleet announced that another South Korean division is now in the line. He also said there are enough South Koreans available to make up two more divisions. Right now, headquarters says, there are 13 R.O.K. divisions in the line plus 7 American divisions..one from the British Commonwealth and other smaller units from other countries.

The Pentagon reports we suffered another 271 casualties in Korea last week. The total now is just under 129 and a half thousand.

Secretary of State Dulles was in London today conferring with British leaders, who are worried about the new orders to the 7th fleet. Reliable informants say Mr. Dulles told Prime Minister Churchill and Foreign Secretary Eden, that we are going to continue our policy to try to limit the Korean war..that we have no aggressive intent. The two British leaders are said to have been "a great deal happier" after hearing this.

Mr. Dulles is also reported to have warned the British..as he has the French..that within the next 75 days they must show real progress in setting up a unified defense in Western Europe. If not, they face the risk of a cut in our military and economic aid. The 75-day time limit is said to Expire just before the North Atlantic Treaty foreign ministers are due to meet in Paris.

Tomorrow Mr. Dulles--and Mutual Security Administrator Stassen--go to West Germany. And today the West German socialists made it clear they do not favor approval of the European Defense Community plan at this time. They feel this would be dangerous to their hopes of an eventual alliance with East Germany. Chancelloer Adenauer hopes Mr. Dulles can win over the Socialists to his point of view.

On Friday, Mr. Dulles goes to the Netherlands..and there he will find.. as he did in Britain today.. a people primarily concerned at the moment with the tragedies resulting from their floods./ Tonight, a new North Sea gale is driving the sea through the broken dikes of Holland./ The death count in the affected countries is now a minimum of 17-hundred. The Dutch radio says 7-thousand persons are in peril because of 50-mile winds driving the sea over broken and temporary dikes./ No one appears to know how many others are isolated on the Dutch islands./ The weather was so bad today air planes were stuck to the ground..small boats were ordered to shelter. In Britain, gale winds are blowing along the whole east coast, from the islands north of Scotland to the Straits of Dover./ And Home Secretary, Sir David Maxwell Fyfe told Commons: the damage [redacted] is so extensive that repair work cannot be completed by the time the next high tides are expected. in ten days.

5

IN WASHINGTON TODAY,

[redacted]

Price Stabilizer Freehill SAID meat and a number of other commodities will be de-controlled before the end of this week. ~~The other commodities are expected to include: childrens and infants clothing at retail.. furniture..small electrical appliances, phonograph records and housewares. This action is being taken according to President Eisenhower's policy calling for an orderly end to wage and price controls.~~

~~Today the Administration abolished the Defense Production Administration and transferred the functions to the Office of Defense Mobilization.~~

A Department of agriculture economist predicts that farm income this year will be five per cent below 1952. O.V. Wells says this will be due to the big 1952 crops..shrinking foreign demands and a "substantial change" in farm price expectations.

Congress today compeleted action on its first bill: to create the post of a new undersecretary of state in charge of administration.

~~And a House committee reversed itself and voted to give President the same powers Mr. Truman had to reorganize government agencies.~~

The Senate today approved Harold E. Talbott to be air secretary. The vote was 76 to six. And the Foreign Relations committee approved General Bedell Smith to be undersecretary of state and Dr. James Conant to be high commissioner to western Germany.

Another Senate committee heard Mrs. Helen Balog, who keeps Foreign Service files in the state department, testify that John Stewart Service had access to the files for about a year. Mr. Service was later fired on the grounds of questionable loyalty. Mrs. Balog said he had been assigned to revise "very sloppy files."

Here in New York, William Remington, the former goverhment economist, was sentenced to three years in prison for perjury.

~~U.N. Secretary General Trygvie Lie says the United Nations "is not a profitable place for spies or saboteurs", because no military secrets are ever handled by the Secretariat. Mr. Lie promised to fire any employe when he has "reasonable grounds" for beliving the employe is carrying on subversive activities.~~

AND Paul G. Hoffman today resigned as chairman of the Ford Foundation. He will return to the Studebaker Corporation as chairman of its board. The Foundation has decided to move its headquarters from Pasadena to the East.

Edward R. Murrow: February 4, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has confirmed General Bedell Smith to be Under Secretary of State. He was General Eisenhower's Chief of Staff during the war - able, efficient, and at times ruthless, (as any good Chief of Staff must be.) In his new position General Smith, as the Number Two man in the State Department, will be running it for prolonged periods, while Mr. Dulles is off on his travels. [There are few if any men in Washington who better understand the workings of the President's mind.]

Today, in testifying before the Committee, General Smith quoted with approval a statement made by Lord Palmerston who directed British affairs during Queen Victoria's reign. The quotation was this: "It is always the policy and practise of the Russian Government, to expand its frontiers as rapidly as the apathy and timidity of its neighbors permit; but to halt or recoil, when met with determined opposition." And General Smith added: "A policy of containment is no more than passive defense; and the best you can get from that is a draw." The implication is clear. The Administration's "new and dynamic" foreign policy is not prepared to settle for a draw. Inevitably, at this early stage, the new Administration's foreign policy consists mainly of words. Mr. Dulles has said that somehow we must shatter the alliance between Russia and China. He has, in effect, threatened our allies in Europe by saying that if they don't get on with the business of unity and the creation of a European Army, we may have to do a little re-thinking about our whole position in relation to Europe. Administration spokesmen have repeatedly said that a way must be found - a peaceful way - to liberate the enslaved people of Middle and Eastern Europe.

These statements all add up to a declaration that we will not settle with the Russians on present lines. The only action we have taken, as distinct from words, was the President's order to the Seventh Fleet, which does not alter the military position significantly. We are no more committed now than we were before to nourish, support or sustain Chiang-Kai-Shek in any adventures he may undertake. But most of our allies in Europe feel that we are already undertaking an unwarranted risk of an extension of the war.

At this point we don't know how European unity is to be accelerated; how the Chinese-Russian alliance is to be broken; how the satellite nations are to be liberated peacefully; or how the enemy can be brought to seek peace in Korea. But the Administration, judged by the weight of its statements so far, is prepared to take risks - very considerable risks - in order to achieve some or all of these objectives. It accepts the risk, though probably not great, of expanding the war in Asia. It accepts the risk of offending or alienating a substantial body of opinion amongst our allies in Europe. And, in combination, it accepts the risk of another world war.

It seems to this reporter that American foreign policy, more than that of any other country, depends upon the support and acceptance of the electorate. As a nation and as individuals we are not disinclined to take risks. And we are not allergic to change. However, the fact remains that most of us do not know what a war - even an oldfashioned war like the last one - means. And that lack of experience is one thing that bothers our European allies.

It seems to me that the sum total of the Administration's pronouncements on foreign policy to date have been designed, in part at least, to create a climate of opinion in this country. We are being told that there is no safe way to achieve our objectives; that risk is involved in everything we do, unless we decide to do nothing. We are being told that those risks will be calculated insofar as it is possible for experienced men to calculate them.

In words, this Administration has committed the country to a most formidable and difficult task. Some of it may be impossible of achievement.

None of it will be easy or unattended by risk. And this Administration, like others before it, is engaged in trying to create a climate of opinion that will support its policies when the time comes to act. We are being told that we must live dangerously, but not recklessly; and that there is neither safety nor security in inaction. The whole history of the rise and fall of civilizations has been one of challenge and response. What we are now watching is the second phase of our response to the Communist challenge.

This is not the best of all possible worlds [redacted]. And no amount of [redacted] wishful thinking is going to make the job ahead any easier. Also, as Plutarch once noted: "Words will build no walls." With all our richness, many sacrifices will still have to be made. Terrence had some good advice when he said:"It is the duty of all persons when affairs are the most prosperous, to reflect in what way they are to endure adversity."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists today "reacted" to President Eisenhower's decision to order our 7th fleet to stop shielding Red China from Nationalist attacks. The Chinese communist radio says Chiang Kai Shek is egging on the United States to use its navy and air force to invade the mainland. Peiping says Chiang is a tool of President Eisenhower's scheme for having Asians fight Asians (a phrase he used during the campaign).

And in another enemy broadcast, Premier Chou en Lai said the Chinese are ready for an immediate cease-fire in Korea if the allies agree to settle, at a later date, the fate of prisoners of war. The Communists have suggested a similar plan before: they want all nations participating in the war to settle the fate of the prisoners at a conference after a cease-fire. The State Department says the plan is the same one Russia suggested; the same one the U.N. Assembly turned down last December.

The enemy premier also made it clear that his people are prepared to continue the war "to the last." He called on China to mobilize its "manpower". To increase its industrial and agricultural production.

Chou En Lai's broadcast came after the Voice of America had recorded an appeal by Mayor Wu of Formosa to the Chinese people on the mainland. He called on them to start a campaign of "passive resistance", to support the forces of Free China when these forces attack, to help disrupt Communist communications and destroy war materials.

The White House said today it will not announce when the President issues his order to the 7th fleet to stop shielding the Communists.

Democratic Senator Fulbright suggests we give the Nationalists planes to bomb Red China, just as the Russians have supplied planes for attacks on allied forces in North Korea.

In Korea today, our fighter-bombers made another attack on enemy troop concentrations. And General Van Fleet announced that another South Korean division is now in the line. He also said there are enough South Koreans available to make up two more divisions. Right now, headquarters, says, there are 13 ROK divisions in the line plus 7 American divisions, one from the British Commonwealth and other smaller units from other countries.

The Pentagon reports we suffered another 271 casualties in Korea last week. The total now is just under 129 and a half thousand.

Secretary of State Dulles was in London today conferring with British leaders, who are worried about the new orders to the 7th fleet. Reliable informants say Mr. Dulles told Prime Minister Churchill and Foreign Secretary Eden that we are going to continue our policy to try to limit the Korean war, that we have no aggressive intent. The two British leaders are said to have been "a great deal happier" after hearing this.

Mr. Dulles is also reported to have warned the British, as he has the French, that within the next 75 days they must show real progress in setting up a unified defense in Western Europe. If not, they face the risk of a cut in our military and economic aid. The 75-day time limit is said to expire just before the North Atlantic Treaty foreign ministers are due to meet in Paris.

Tomorrow Mr. Dulles - and Mutual Security Administrator Stassen, go to West Germany. And today the West German socialists made it clear they do not favor approval of the European Defense Community plan at this time. They feel this would be dangerous to their hopes of an eventual alliance with East Germany. Chanceller Adenauer hopes Mr. Dulles can win over the Socialists to his point of view. On Friday, Mr. Dulles goes to the Netherlands, and there he will find, as he did in Britain today, a people primarily concerned at the moment with the tragedies resulting from their floods. Tonight, a new North Sea gale is driving the sea through the broken dikes of Holland. The death count in the affected countries is now a minimum of 17-hundred. The Dutch radio says 7-thousand persons are in peril because of 50-mile winds driving the sea over broken and temporary dikes. No one appears to know how many others are isolated on the Dutch islands. The weather was so bad today air planes were stuck to the ground, small boats were ordered to shelter. In Britain, gale winds are blowing along the whole east coast from the islands north of Scotland to the Straits of Dover. And Home Secretary, Sir David Maxwell Fyfe told Commons: the damage is so extensive that repair work cannot be completed by the time the next high tides are expected in ten days.

In Washington today, Price Stabilizer Freehill said meat and a number of other commodities will be de-controlled before the end of this week.

A Department of agriculture economist predicts that farm income this year will be five per cent below 1952. O.V. Wells says this will be due to the big 1952 crops, shrinking foreign demands and a "substantial change" in farm price expectations.

Congress today completed action on its first bill to create the post of a new undersecretary of state in charge of administration.

The Senate today approved Harold E. Talbott to be air secretary. The vote was 76 to six. And the Foreign Relations committee approved General Bedell Smith to be undersecretary of state and Dr. James Conant to be high commissioner to western Germany.

Another Senate committee heard Mrs. Helen Balog, who keeps Foreign Service files in the State Department, testify that John Stewart Service had access to the files for about a year. Mr. Service was later fired on the grounds of questionable loyalty. Mrs. Balog said he had been assigned to revise "very sloppy files."

Here in New York, William Remington, the former government economist, was sentenced to three years in prison for perjury.

And Paul G. Hoffman today resigned as chairman of the Ford Foundation. He will return to the StudebakerCorporation as chairman of its board. The foundation has decided to move its headquarters from Pasadena to the East.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has confirmed General Bedell

Smith to be Under Secretary of State. He was General Eisenhower's Chief of Staff during the war - able, efficient and at times ruthless, (as any good Chief of Staff must be.) In his new position General Smith, as the Number Two man in the State Department will be running it for prolonged periods, while Mr. Dulles is off on his travels. There are few if any men in Washington who better understand the workings of the President's mind.

Today, in testifying before the Committee, General Smith quoted with approval a statement made by Lord Palmerston who directed British affairs during Queen Victoria's reign. The quotation was this: "It is always the policy and practice of the Russian government to expand its frontiers as rapidly as the apathy and timidity of its neighbors permit; but to halt or recoil when met with determined opposition." And General Smith added: "A policy of containment is no more than passive defense; and the best you can get from that is a draw." The implication is clear. The Administration's "new and dynamic" foreign policy is not prepared to settle for a draw. Inevitably, at this early stage, the new Administration's foreign policy consists mainly of words. Mr. Dulles has said that somehow we must shatter the alliance between Russia and China. He has, in effect, threatened our allies in Europe by saying that if they don't get on with the business of unity and the creation of a European Army, we may have to do a little rethinking about our whole position in relation to Europe. Administration spokesmen have repeatedly said that a way must be found - a peaceful way - to liberate the enslaved people of Middle and Eastern Europe.

These statements all add up to a declaration that we will not settle with the Russians on present lines. The only action we have taken, as distinct from words, was the President's order to the Seventh Fleet, which does not alter the military position significantly. We are no more committed now than we were before to nourish, support or sustain Chiang-Kai-Shek in any adventures he may undertake. But most of our allies in Europe feel that we are already undertaking an unwarranted risk of an extension of the war.

At this point we don't know how European unity is to be accelerated; how the Chinese-Russian alliance is to be broken; how the satellite nations are to be liberated peacefully; or how the enemy can br brought to seek peace in Korea. But the Administration, judged by the weight of its statements so far, is prepared to take risks - very considerable risks - in order to achieve some or all of these objectives. It accepts the risk, though probably not great, of expanding the war in Asia. It accepts the risk of offending or alienating a substantial body of opinion amongst our allies in Europe. And, in combination, it accepts the risk of another world war.

It seems to this reporter that American foreign policy, more than that of any other country, depends upon the support and acceptance of the electorate. As a nation and as individuals we are not disinclined to take risks. And we are not allergic to change. However, the fact remains that most of us do not know what a war - even an oldfashioned war like the last one - means. And that lack of experience is one thing that bothers our European allies.

It seems to me that the sum total of the Administration's pronouncements on foreign policy to date have been designed, in part at least, to create a climate of opinion in this country. We are being told that there is no safe way to achieve our objectives; that risk is involved in everything we do, unless we decide to do nothing. We are being told that those risks will be calculated insofar as it is possible for experienced men to calculate them.

In words, this Administration has committed the country to a most formidable and difficult task. Some of it may be impossible of achievement. None of it will be easy or unattended by risk. And this Administration, like others before it, is engaged in trying to create a climate of opinion that will support its policies when the time comes to act. We are being told that we must live dangerously, but not recklessly; and that there is neither safety nor security in inaction. The Whole history of the rise and fall of divilizations has been one of challenge and response. What we are now watching is the second phase of our response to the Communist challenge.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: This is not the best of all possible worlds. And no amount of wishful thinking is going to make the job ahead any easier. Also, as Plutarch once noted: "Words will build no walls." With all our richness, many sacrifices will still have to be made. Terrence had some good advice when he said: "It is the duty of all persons when affairs are the most prosperous, to reflect in what way they are to endure adversity."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Feb. 5 1953

This is the news:

Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today he is satisfied that the United States has no aggressive intentions in the Formosa area. In a debate on President Eisenhower's decision to order the 7th fleet not to "shield" Communist China from the Chinese Nationalists, Mr. Eden said: one should not read anything into the Eisenhower state of the union message. He said he declined to "defend or justify" the President's decision... but is certain that the Administration has no aggressive intentions.

Herbert Morrison, who was foreign secretary under the labor government, accused the President of egging on Chiank Kai Shek to attack the Chinese mainland. He said the President's decision "contains great and considerable dangers and we feel a grave mistake has been made." Mr. Morrison sees a "real risk" of American forces becoming involved with the Chinese on the mainland. He said the "profound emotional hatred " of Americans for Communism is inclined to lead Americans into "risky actions."

Mr. Eden pointed out that there have been 128-thousand American casualties in Korea. He said:"It seems to me the restraint of the Americans has been quite remarkable."

Tonight the British announced the degree of co-operation they are prepared to give to the proposed European army. The British, who refuse to join this army, say they will co-ordinate air defense with the other European nations..they will agree to joint training and an exchange of air squadrons.

Secretary of State Dulles left Britain this morning saying both of our countries are in "basic accord as to basic aims of peace, security and economic well-being." Then, in West Germany, Mr. Dulles took up the argument he has been impressing on all west European statesmen: they must demonstrate their intentions to form a unified army. Mr. Dulles told the Germans that only through the European army could they contribute to the defenses of the west. Again he warned that there might be a cut in American aid if no progress is made in this direction. German Socia ists also met with Mr. Dulles and explained to him that they oppose joining a European army because they think it might mean a perpetual split of East and West Germany.

Tomorrow Mr. Dulles meets with Dutch leaders. And today, although there were four new breaks in the Dutch dike system, officials felt that the worst has passed in their flood crisis. All day airplanes and helicopters continued to pick up persons stranded on Dutch islands. General Ridgeway flew over the area and said:"Its the worst natural disaster I have ever seen."

In Korea today our fighter bombers again attacked enemy bases and front line positions. And both the air force and the Marines revealed they now are using new jet night fighters. General Taylor, who takes over command of the 8th army from General Van Fleet, visited a South Korean artillery school and told the R.O.K's: "TO prepare for bigger battles in the North."

In Washington today, House Speaker Martin said he's confident that the President, "working with General MacArthur" can achieve peace in Korea. And Lieut. General Wedemeyer says we should drop atomic bombs on the Chinese mainland and open a ground offensive, with Asiatic troops, if it will help win the war.

The President said today that if we hold to the belief that good government must be based on religious faith, the government cannot help but be preserved. At a Prayer Breakfast in a Washington hotel the President said: "free government is immbedded in a deeply founded religious faith or it makes no sense."

Secretary of Agriculture Benson said today that he favors price supports for farm products. He plans no immediate sweeping changes in agricultural policy.

The government has lifted price controls on second-hand cars built [redacted] before 1946. And tomorrow price officials are expected to lift price curbs on restaurant meals.

C.I.O. President Reuther today asked the President to end all wage controls immediately. He says thousands of workers wages have been frozen because the Wage Stabilization Board plans no further action on contracts submitted for its approval.

And AF of L. President Meany says the end of wage controls will cause the immediate re-opening of a lot of contracts.

A House committee was told today that Carroll E. Mealey, [redacted] former alcohol tax chief, spent at least 40-thousand dollars more than his reported income in the five years he served in this job. And Dwight E. Avis, who succeeded Meaney, said "political considerations became an important factor" in making appointments in the tax bureau after Joseph Nunan became tax commissioner in 1944.

A Senate committee was told by John E. Matson, a special agent in the State Department, that his report on a "suspected Communist" employed by the department has disappeared from secret files. Matson said that on several occassions he found documents missing from the files.

Here in New York, striking tugboat crewmen set up picket lines today. A. F. of L. Longshoremen refused to cross the lines and as a result 83 of this city's 143 piers were sealed off.

A fire broke out at the Brooklyn Navy yard tonight... in a metal building. Five alarms were turned in as flames amd smoke shot hundreds of feet into the air. More than 200 city firemen, and two fireboats have joined the Navy yard's firefighters.

Edward R. Murrow: February 5, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

So long as this nation is threatened by external foes and internal subversion we shall have with us the problem of the loyalty and reliability of people who work for the government. In the past efforts have been made to determine loyalty and reliability by committees, review boards and by Congressional committees. In the process the public mind has been confused, and personal reputations have been destroyed. The policing of the loyalty and reliability of federal employees cannot be adequately done by committees without endangering the reputation and the careers of people who may be wholly innocent of any subversive intent or action. We were reaching the point where anyone fired from government service was liable to be suspected of disloyalty, or worse. Many of us were inclined to forget that an individual can be fired because he is incompetent, fails repeatedly to do his job, doesn't show up for work on time, fails to follow directions, or is just plain not c~~ompetent~~able to do the job he's been assigned.

In his State of the Union message President Eisenhower laid down a "basic principle" which, if it is applied, may prevent in some measure, this process of "suspicion unlimited" whenever anyone is fired from government service. He said: "The primary responsibility for loyalty, efficiency, reliability on the part of government employees rests with the executive branch of the government." In other words, with the head of the department that hires the employee. The President admitted that the application of this principle would be difficult; but he believes that he has sufficient powers under existing laws to carry it out. And if he finds he doesn't have, he will ask the Congress for new legislation. According to President Eisenhower, his security program will be "both fair to the rights of the individual and effective for the safety of the nation." They will "with care and justice apply the basic principle that public employment is not a right but a privilege."

The President is concerned first of all about the security of the nation, and secondly about "clearing the atmosphere of that unreasoned suspicion that accepts rumor and gossip as substitutes for evidence."

The President has laid down a principle to which few people can object. He has also placed a great responsibility upon the heads of government departments and agencies. He has recognized that it is terribly difficult, in some cases impossible for honorable men to determine whether another man is a security risk, or possibly disloyal.

It seems to this reporter that what the President has done is to re-state a principle - a business principle, familiar and long-practised by the members of his Cabinet; that is the right of department heads to hire people, within the limitations of the budget, and their right to fire them. The department head, or his subordinates may fire people for frivolous or capricious ~~propitious~~ reasons - because they drink too much, or talk too much, put their feet on the desk, are not properly respectful, or just because the department head doesn't think they're pulling their weight in the boat, or doesn't like the way they comb their hair. This will be unfortunate for the people who are fired from government service, (just as it is for people who are fired from the service of big corporations.) There will be cases where the friends of the man who is fired will say he got a dirty deal, and it was his boss who really ought to have been fired. (That sort of thing happens in big corporations too.) But under this new "basic principle" - if it works - any individual who is dismissed, while he may have been dismissed without adequate cause, will not automatically fall under suspicion as being disloyal or a poor security risk. Maybe he was just "born tired" and has been resting on the government's time. Moreover, if the new administration carries out its announced plan to reduce drastically the number of government employees both at home and abroad, it will be firing so many people that they couldn't possibly all be suspected of subversive intent.

As President Eisenhower recognized, there is no easy, probably no completely fair way of meeting this problem. But he has at least announced a method which ought to give us as much national security as we have had, and rather less of what he has called "the atmosphere of unreasoned suspicion that accepts rumor and gossip as substitutes for evidence." He has, in effect, made his corps commanders responsible for the efficiency, integrity and loyalty of their own ~~XXXXX~~ troops. He has told them that government employees may be dismissed for the "good of the nation," without any public court-martial. That's the way it's done in big business, and this is a big business man's administration. And it could work. About a year from now we ought to be able to reach a tentative conclusion as to how well it works.

We were talking of loyalty checks on government employees...their need and shortcomings. It would be hard to argue with Publilius Syrus that "no opportunity for security should be let slip." For as Justice Holmes once remarked:"The word 'right' is one of the most deceptive pitfalls. Most rights are qualified." Robert Ingersoll set up a pretty good rule: "Give to every other human being every right that you claim for yourself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today he is satisfied that the United States has no aggressive intentions in the Formosa area. In a debate on President Eisenhower's decision to order the 7th fleet not to "shield" Communist China from the Chinese Nationalists, Mr. Eden said: one should not read anything into the Eisenhower state of the union message. He said he declined to "defend or justify" the President's decision, but is certain that the Administration has no aggressive intentions.

Herbert Morrison, who was foreign secretary under the labor government, accused the President of egging on Chiang Kai Shek to attack the Chinese mainland. He said the President's decision "contains great and considerable dangers and we feel a grave mistake has been made." Mr. Morrison sees a "real risk" of American forces becoming involved with the Chinese on the mainland. He said the "profound emotional hatred" of Americans for Communism is inclined to lead Americans into "risky actions."

Mr. Eden pointed out that there have been 128-thousand American casualties in Korea. He said: "It seems to me the restraint of the Americans has been quite remarkable."

Tonight the British announced the degree of cooperation they are prepared to give to the proposed European army. The British, who refuse to join this army, say they will coordinate air defense with the other European nations, they will agree to joint training and an exchange of air squadrons.

Secretary of State Dulles left Britain this morning saying both of our countries are in "basic accord as to basic aims of peace, security and economic well-being." Then, in West Germany, Mr. Dulles took up the argument he has been impressing on all west European statesmen: they must demonstrate their intentions to form a unified army. Mr. Dulles told the Germans that only through the European army could they contribute to the defenses of the west. Again he warned that there might be a cut in American aid if no progress is made in this direction. German Socialists also met with Mr. Dulles and explained to him that they oppose joining a European army because they think it might mean a perpetual split of East and West Germany.

Tomorrow Mr. Dulles meets with Dutch leaders. And today, although there were four new breaks in the Dutch dike system, officials felt that the worst has passed in their flood crisis. All day airplanes and helicopters continued to pick up persons stranded on Dutch islands. General Ridgeway flew over the area and said: "Its the worst natural disaster I have ever seen."

In Korea today our fighter bombers again attacked enemy bases and front line positions. And both the air force and the Marines, revealed they now are using new jet night fighters. General Taylor, who takes over command of the 8th army from General Van Fleet, visited a South Korean artillery school and told the ROK's to prepare for bigger battles in the North."

In Washington today, House Speaker Martin said he's confident that the President, "working with General MacArthur" can achieve peace in Korea. And Lieut. General Wedemeyer says we should drop atomic bombs on the Chinese mainland and open a ground offensive, with Asiatic troops, if it will help win the war.

The President said today that if we hold to the belief that good government must be based on religious faith, the government cannot help but be preserved. At a Prayer Breakfast in a Washington hotel, the President said: "free government is imbedded in a deeply founded religious faith or it makes no sense."

Secretary of Agriculture Benson said today that he favors price supports for farm products. He plans no immediate sweeping changes in agricultural policy.

The government has lifted price controls on second-hand cars built before 1946. And tomorrow price officials are expected to lift price curbs on restaurant meals.

CIO President Reuther, today asked the President to end all wage controls immediately. He says thousands of workers wages have been frozen, because the Wage Stabilization Board plans no further action on contracts submitted for its approval.

And AFL President Meany says the end of wage controls will cause the immediate reopening of a lot of contracts.

A House committee was told today that Carroll E. Mealey, former alcohol tax chief, spent at least 40-thousand dollars more than his reported income in the five years he served in this job. And Dwight E. Avis, who succeeded Meaney, said "political considerations became an important factor" in making appointments in the tax bureau after Joseph Nunan became tax commissioner in 1944.

A Senate committee was told by John E. Matson, a special agent in the State Department, that his report on a "suspected Communist", employed by the department has disappeared from secret files. Matson said that on several occasions he found documents missing from the files.

Here in New York, striking tugboat crewmen set up picket lines today. AFL Longshoremen refused to cross the lines and as a result 83 of this city's 143 piers were sealed off.

A fire broke out at the Brooklyn Navy yard tonight in a metal building. Five alarms were turned in as flames and smoke shot hundreds of feet into the air. More than 200 city firemen, and two fireboats have joined the Navy yard's fire-fighters.

So long as this nation is threatened by external foes and internal subversion we shall have with us the problem of the loyalty and reliability of people who work for the government. In the past, efforts have been made to determine loyalty and reliability by committees, review boards and by Congressional committees. In the process the public mind has been confused, and personal reputations have been destroyed. The policing of the loyalty and reliability of federal employees cannot be adequately done by committees, without endangering the reputation and the careers of people who may be wholly innocent of any subversive intent or action. We were reaching the point where anyone fired from government service was liable to be suspected of disloyalty, or worse. Many of us were inclined to forget that an individual can be fired because he is incompetent, fails repeatedly to do his job, doesn't show up for work on time, fails to follow directions, or is just plain not able to do the job he's been assigned.

In his State of the Union message President Eisenhower laid down a "basic principle" which, if it is applied, may prevent in some measure this process of "suspicion unlimited," whenever anyone is fired from government service. He said: "The primary responsibility for loyality, efficiency, reliability on the part of government employees rests with the executive branch of the government." In other words, with the head of the department that hires the employee. The President admitted that the application of this principle would be difficult, but he believes that he has sufficient powers under existing laws to carry it out. And if he finds he doesn't have, he will ask the Congress for new legislation. According to President Eisenhower, his security program will be "both fair to the rights of the individual and effective for the safety of the nation." They will, "with care and justice apply the basic principle that public employment is not a right but a privilege."

The President is concerned first of all about the security of the nation, and secondly about "clearing the atmosphere of that unreasoned suspicion that accepts rumor and gossip as substitutes for evidence."

The President has laid down a principle to which few people can object. He has also placed a great responsibility upon the heads of government departments and agencies. He has recognized that it is terribly difficult, in some cases impossible for honorable men to determine whether another man is a security risk, or possibly disloyal.

It seems to this reporter that what the President has done is to restate a principle - business principle, familiar and long-practiced by the members of his Cabinet; that is the right of department heads to hire people, within the limitations of the budget, and their right to fire them. The department head, or his subordinates may fire people for frivolous or capricious reasons - because they drink too much, or talk too much, put their feet on the desk, are not properly respectful, or just because the department head doesn't think they're pulling their weight in the boat, or doesn't like the way they comb their hair. This will be unfortunate for the people who are fired from government service, (just as it is for people who are fired from the service of big corporations.) There will be cases where the friends of the man who is fired will say he got a dirty deal, and it was his boss who really ought to have been fired. (That sort of think happens in big corporations too.) But under this new "basic principle" - if it works - any individual who is dismissed, while he may have been dismissed without adequate cause, will not automatically fall under suspicion as being disloyal or a poor security risk. Maybe he was just "born tired," and has been resting on the government's time. Moreover, if the new administration carries out its announced plan to reduce drastically the number of government employees both at home and abroad, it will be firing so many that they couldn't possibly all be suspected of subversive intent.

As President Eisenhower recognized, there is no easy, probably no completely fair way of meeting this problem. But he has at least announced a method which ought to give us as much national security as we have had, and rather less of what he has called "the atmosphere of unreasoned suspicion that accepts rumor and gossip as substitutes for evidence." He has, in effect, made his corps commanders responsible for the efficiency, integrity and loyalty of their own troops. He has told them that government employees may be dismissed for the "good of the nation," without any public courtmartial. That's the way it's done in big business, and this is a big business man's administration. And it could work. About a year from now, we ought to be able to reach a tentative conclusion as to how well it works. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today; now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of loyalty checks on government employees - their need and shortcomings. It would be hard to argue with Publilius Syrus that "no opportunity for security should be let slip. For as Justice Holmes Holmes once remarked: "The word "right" is one of the most deceptive pitfalls. Most rights are qualified." Robert Ingersoll set up a pretty good rule: "Give to every other human being every right that you claim for yourself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday Feb. 6, 1953

This is the news:

The President today ordered an immediate end to all wage controls and certain price controls. The price controls will end on: all meat products...all apparrel..all furniture..all restaurant prices..and nearly all items sold in department stores. But price controls will be kept, for awhile, on such items as: bakery products..new cars...milk..aluminum, steel and copper... farm equipment and major household items. The end of all wage controls means that some 10-thousand contracts now before the Wage Stabilization Board may be put into effect immediately. Estimates on how many workers will be affected run from "hundreds of thousands" to "a million." The President said he took these actions today because: supply and demand are approaching a practicable balance...an early return to free collective bargaining will strengthen our economy and thereby the national security.. its "not now necessary" to control wages and salaries for defense purposes. An Associated Press poll of merchants in various sections of the country indicates that there is no prospect of "early" price increases for consumers goods. But if new wage increases are passed on to the consumers, then prices are expected to go up.

Some members of Congress said today that Admiral Radford, our Pacific fleet commander, has told them that President Eisenhower is considering a naval blockade of the Communist China mainland. The President is said to be waiting to see how our allies react to his decision to order our 7th fleet not to prevent Nationalist raids on the Communists. White House Secretary Hagerty asked about the possibilities of a naval blockade said:" I have no answer to that question and that does not imply a ..yes.. or a..no."

Chairman Short of the House Armed Services committee..one of two who have heard Admiral Radford testify in secret..says most members of his committee favor a blockade. He quotes Radford as saying; if we blockade the Communist coast his 7th fleet will need more ships to do the job...he doesn't think such a blcokade would result in any grave danager of enlarging the war.

A number of Democratic senators questioned this today. Senator Sparkman of Alabama said: The American people are entitled to know what we are planning to do..whether the FIRST order to the 7th fleet may lead to another world war. He also wants to know: how much can Chiang Kai Shek do now?...how much military aid does President Eisenhower propose to give Chiang? Republican Senator Knowland charged that the Democrats are protesting to embarrass the new Administration. He said the Administration cannot telegraph its decision in advance "as was done by the Truman administration."

But Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey says that his special committee, dealing with Far Eastern affairs, is going to question Secretary of State Dulles on far eastern matters when Mr. Dulles returns home.

There was very little activity in Korea today.. beacuse of snow and low-hanging clouds.

Mr. Dulles conferred with Dutch officials as the President announced a four man committee to study what help we can give the Netherlands. Mr. Stassen, the mutual security administrator, Defense Secretary Wilson, Agriculture Secretary Benson will serve with him. Today, Mr. Dulles epxressed his heartfelt sympathy to the Dutch people. And Dutch officials told him that with a fourth of their food-producing land under water, and crop production probably ruined, at least until 1954, they may not be able to meet their committments to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Dutch had pledged 500-millions dollars to defense this year. Now they estimate the FLOOD damages to their country and [redacted] repairs will cost more than that.

Before he left West Germany earlier today Mr. Dulles announced that Chancellor Adenauer has accepted an invitation to visit Washington. And Adenauer said that Mr. Dulles has set an April first deadline for the [redacted] European countries to produce " clear and visible" signs that they will ratify a European army treaty.. (that date is about three weeks earlier than the date Mr. Dulles is reported to have given the British and French.)

In Washington, the Senate has completed congressional action on a bill giving President Eisenhower the same powers former President Truman had to reoganize the government. The Senate also approved Dr. James B. Conant to be our high commissioner to west Germany and General Walter Bedell Smith to be undersecretary of the State Department.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee released some testimony it recently took from General Smith. Among other things he said: he knows of only two Communists who have been in the State Department...he thinks a secret project for Communist China, devised by John Paton Davies, "could very well be productive"...he considers Davies no way sympathetic to Communism.. he fears that because of congressional criticism, some diplomats may decide to play it safe for a while, and temper their diplomatic reports from abroad to eliminate any views which might be "unpalatable."

Today, Vladimir Toumanoff, who works in the State Department's personnel measurements section, said "it is a good idea" to hold back from promotion boards, the knowledge that a candidate for promotion is a homosexual. Later the State Department said that since 1947 it has considered homosexuals to be security risks.

A House committee was told that a New York man who contibuted five thousand dollars to the Democratic state committee, received a liquor license a few days later, although he has previsouly been denied a license on three occassions. Tax Agent John McGinnity said the permit was issued to Louis Pokrass.

The Army has issued an April draft call for 53-thousand men..same as for March.

David L. Cole, director of the federal mediation service, today called for a quick end to the waterfront strike, that has tied up shipping here in New York, in Philadelphia and at Norfolk, Virginia.

Edward R. Murrow: February 6, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Certainly not all, and probably not much of the penetrating comment about our relations with the rest of the world, appears in newspapers or on the radio. // I should like to read you a few sentences from the Antioch Review. They were written by S. Grover Rich, an assistant professor of Political Science, at the University of Utah. / He is writing about the psychological problem that is involved in our foreign policy. He says we are being asked to do something few other people in history have been able to do - prepare for war, and then sue for peace. / A nation's capacity for compromise decreases as its re-armament increases, until the climate of opinion will no longer support give-and-take negotiations. / Mr. Rich contends it is useless to produce tanks and ships, if our people are not prepared to fight. Yet in seeking to create the will to fight, do we not thereby destroy our ability to negotiate. We are reaching a point where negotiation is thought of as appeasement, in the public mind. / Once the public's hatred of Russian Communism has reached a white heat, it will take a very brave Secretary of State to advocate, yet alone try to conduct, a compromise settlement with Russia. / The term ~~XXXXXXXXXXXX~~X negotiation implies compromise; painful concessions on the part of both parties. But the only alternative to diplomatic negotiation is eventual war. There is a decided difference between negotiation and dictation. Any attempt to dictate to the Russians could lead to only one conclusion, for big powers of relatively equal strength simply do not dictate to each other - they fight.

Unless the necessity of compromise is made clear to our people we may needlessly cause a war we seek to avoid. There is a very grave danger that Russia will also reach a point where she is unable to negotiate. She may well have reached it already. Russian leaders may be the cool and calculated schemers they are usually pictured to be. On the other hand, they may be merely a handful of desperate men with their backs to the wall, willing to take any step, however drastic, which might save them from destruction.

On practically every major issue on which the United States and Russia are in disagreement effective settlement will involve the most fundamental concessions on the part of both. In every geographic area and upon every principle where there is conflict, neither party can back down without a severe loss of prestige, military and territorial advantage, or both.

Assuming the improbable, if Stalin should announce tomorrow that he is sincerely ready to negotiate a world-wide settlement of our differences, what could we say? What are we prepared to give up? And if we confess the inability of our own statesmen to compromise on these vital issues, we must also recognize the difficulties facing the Kremlin.

Professor Rich contends that big wars are often started by small countries. And he says that goaded on by Russia or the United States a belligerent Turkish diplomat, or Hungarian Army officer could easily, by some irresponsible act, begin a chain of events which would lead us all into the morass of World War III, if the attack on South Korea has not already done so.

In the matter of armament races, alliance systems and balances of power history is on the side of the sceptic. Professor Rich if not a sceptic is certainly no optimist, but he agrees that a refusal to meet the challenge would be national suicide; would mean not only war but defeat. Our policy is not wrong but only dangerous, far more dangerous than the public has yet realised. He believes that as a nation we are entering a sort of psychological no-man's-land, quite unlike anything we have ever known before. At best we face a twenty-year war of nerves, and the only foreseeable alternative to armed war is an armed stalemate. This situation is unique to Americans, one in which history provides few guide posts. Past experiences leave us totally unprepared to meet the problems we must face, many of them as yet unknown. Our national habit of assuming that there is always a quick and easy answer, our characteristic impatience, our traditional ideas about what we continue to miscall war and peace are perhaps as dangerous to us as Stalin himself. This is assuredly no time for cold feet, but cool heads will help considerably.

I have quoted at such length this article by Professor Grover Rich of the University of Utah, because I agree with what he says, and he said it rather better than I could have done.

If the new administration hopes to pursue an effective foreign policy it will require the support of the American people. Such a policy has to be spelled out. For as Sir Arthur Conan Doyle once noted:"Men usually scorn what they don't understand." Of course, in the end, it's pretty much as John Galsworthy said:"The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today ordered an immediate end to all wage controls and certain price controls. The price controls will end on: all meat products, all apparrel, all furniture, all restaurant prices, and nearly all items sold in department stores. But price controls will be kept, for awhile, on such items as: bakery products, new cars, milk, aluminum, steel and copper, farm equipment and major household items. The end of all wage controls means that some 10-thousand contracts now before the Wage Stabilization Board may be put into affect immediately. Estimates on how many workers will be affected run from "hundreds of thousands" to "a million." The President said he took these actions today because: supply and demand are approaching a practicable balance, an early return to free collective bargaining will strengthen our economy and thereby the national security, and its "not now necessary" to control wages and salaries for defense purposes. An Associated Press poll of merchants in various sections of the country indicates that there is no prospect of "early" price increases for consumers goods. But if new wage increases are passed on to the consumers, then prices are expected to go up.

Some members of Congress said today that Admiral Radford, our Pacific fleet commander, has told them that President Eisenhower is considering a naval blockade of the Communist China mainland. The President is said to be waiting to see how our allies react to his decision to order our 7th fleet not to prevent Nationalist raids on the Communists. White House Secretary Hagerty, asked about the possibilities of a naval blockade: "I have no answer to that question, and that does not imply a "yes" or a "no."

Chairman Short of the House Armed Services committee, one of two who has heard Admiral Radford testify in secret, says most members of his committee favor a blockade. He quotes Radford as saying: if we blockade the Communist coast his 7th fleet will need more ships to do the job; he doesn't think such a blockade would result in any grave danger of enlarging the war.

A number of Democratic senators questioned this today. Senator Sparkman of Alabama said: The American people are entitled to know what we are planning to do, whether the first order to the 7th fleet may lead to another world war. He also wants to know: how much can Chiang Kai Shek do now? How much military aid does President Eisenhower propose to give Chiang? Republican Senator Knowland charged that the Democrats are protesting to embarrass the new Administration. He said the Administration cannot telegraph its decision in advance "as was done by the Truman administration."

But Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey says that his special committee, delaing with Far Eastern affairs, is going to question Secretary of State Dulles on far eastern matters when Mr. Dulles returns home.

There was very little activity in Korea today, because of snow and low-hanging clouds.

Mr. Dulles conferred with Dutch officials as the President announced a four man committee to study what help we can give the Netherlands. Mr. Stassen, the mutual security administrator, Defense Secretary Wilson, Agriculture Secretary Benson will serve with him. Today, Mr. Dulles expressed his heartfelt sympathy to the Dutch people. And Dutch officials told him that with a fourth of their food-producing land under water, and crop production probably ruined at least until 1954, they may not be able to meet their committments to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Dutch had pledged 500-millions dollars to defense this year. Now they estimate the flood damages to their country and repairs will cost more than that.

Before he left West Germany earlier today, Mr. Dulles announced that Chancellor Adenauer has accepted an invitation to visit Washington. And Adenauer said that Mr. Dulles has set an April first deadline for the European countries to produce "clear and visible" signs that they will ratify a European army treaty (that date is about three weeks earlier than the date Mr. Dulles is reported to have given the British and French.)

In Washington, the Senate has completed congressional action on a bill giving President Eisenhower the same powers former President Truman had to reorganize the government. The Senate also approved Dr. James B. Conant to be our high commissioner to West Germany and General Walter Bedell Smith to be Under-Secretary of the State Department.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee released some testimony it recently took from General Smith. Among other things he said: he knows of only two Communists who have been in the State Department. He thinks a secret project for Communist China, devised by John Paton Davies, "could very well be productive" he considers Davies no way sympathetic to Communism. He fears that because of congressional criticism some diplomats may decide to play it safe for a while and temper their diplomatic reports from abroad to eliminate any views which might be "unpalatable."

Today, Vladimir Toumanoff, who works in the State Department's personnel measurements section, said "it is a good idea" to hold back from promotion boards, the knowledge that a candidate for promotion is a homosexual. Later the State Department said that since 1947 it has considered homosexuals to be security risks.

A House committee was told that a New York man who contributed five thousand dollars to the Democratic state committee received a liquor license a few days later, although he has previously been denied a license on three occasions. Tax Agent John McGinnity said the permit was issued to Louis Pokrass.

The Army has issued an April draft call for 53-thousand men, same as for March.

David L. Cole, director of the federal mediation service, today called for a quick end to the waterfront strike that has tied up shipping here in New York, in Philadelphia and at Norfolk, Virginia.

Certainly not all, and probably not much of the penetrating comment about our relations with the rest of the world appears in newspapers or on the radio. I should like to read you a few sentences from the Antioch Review. They were written by S. GroverRich, an assistant professor of Political Science at the University of Utah. He is writing about the psychological problem that is involved in our foreign policy. He says we are being asked to do something few other people in history have been able to do - prepare for war and then sue for peace. A nation's capacity for compromise decreases as its rearmament increases, until the climate of opinion will no longer support give-and-take negotiations. Mr. Rich contends it is useless to produce tanks and ships if our people are not prepared to fight. Yet in seeking to create the will to fight, do we not thereby destroy our ability to negotiate. We are reaching a point where negotiation is thought of as appeasement in the public mind. Once the public's hatred of Russian Communism has reached a white heat, it will take a very brave Secretary of State to advocate, yet alone try to conduct a compromise settlement with Russia. The term negotiation implies compromise; painful concessions on the part of both parties. But the only alternative to diplomatic negotiation is eventual war. There is a decided difference between negotiation and dictation. Any attempt to dictate to the Russians could lead to only one conclusion, for big powers of relatively equal strength simply do not dictate to each other - they fight.

Unless the necessity of compromise is made clear to our people we may needlessly cause a war we seek to avoid. There is a very grave danger that Russia will also reach a point where she is unable to negotiate. She may well have reached it already. Russian leaders may be the cool and calculated schemers they are usually pictured to be. On the other hand, they may be merely a handful of desperate men with their backs to the wall, willing to take any step, however drastic, which might save them from destruction.

On practically every major issue on which the United States and Russia are in disagreement effective settlement will involve the most fundamental concessions on the part of both. In every geographic area and upon every principle where there is conflict, neither party can back down without a severe loss of prestige, military and territorial advantage, or both.

Assuming the improbable, if Stalin should announce tomorrow that he is sincerely ready to negotiate a world-wide settlement of our differences, what could we say? What are we prepared to give up? And if we confess the inability of our own statesmen to compromise on these vital issues, we must also recognize the difficulites facing the Kremlin.

Professor Rich contends that big wars are often started by small countries. And he says that goaded on by Russia or the United States a belligerent Turkish diplomat, or Hungarian Army officer could easily, by some irresponsible act, begin a chain of events which would lead us all into the morass of World War III, (if the attack on South Korea has not already done so.)

In the matter of armament races, alliance systems and balances of power, history is on the side of the sceptic. Professor Rich if not a sceptic, is certainly no optimist, but he agrees that a refusal to meet the challenge would be national suicide; would mean not only war but defeat. Our policy is not wrong but only dangerous, far more dangerous than the public has yet realized. He believes that as a nation we are entering a sort of psychological no-man's-land, quite unlike anything we have ever known before. At best we face a twenty-year war of nerves, and the only foreseeable alternative to armed war is an armed stalemate. This situation is unique to Americans, one in which history provides few guide posts. Past experiences leave us totally unprepared to meet the problems we must face, many of them as yet unknown. Our national habit of assuming that there is a quick and easy answer, our characteristic impatience, our traditional ideas about what we continue to miscall war and peace are perhaps as dangerous to us as Stalin himself. This is assuredly no time for cold feet, but cool heads will help considerably.

I have quoted at such length this article by Professor Grover Rich of the University of Utah, because I agree with what he says, and he said it rather better I could have done.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: If the new administration hopes to pursue an effective foreign policy it will require the support of the American people. Such a policy has to be spelled out. For as Sir Arthur Conan Doyle once noted: "Men usually scorn what they don't understand." Of course, in the end, it's pretty much as John Galsworthy said: "The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

mon. 2/9/53

This is the news:

Senator Taft came out of the White House today and told reporters: the Administration is "apparently not considering" a frontal attack on the enemy in Korea. Later, he explained this subject was not discussed with President Eisenhower; that he feels personally such an attack is not being considered because of the known depth of the enemy's strength. [redacted] Senator Taft favors a blockade of the Communist China coast..he realizes this is difficult to work out with our allies. [redacted]

Democratic Senator Russel of Georgia says we should "press vigorously" in the United Nations for [redacted] a naval blockade. Republican Senator Knowland would do this without the U.N.--if necessary.

And General Bradley is reported to have told a Senate committee that he believes we could stop ships bound for Red China, and force them to unload their war materials elsewhere. He believes this would be "short of war".. as long as we did not "attack" any ships determined to reach China against our wishes. [redacted]

Lieut. General Almond, who, before he retired, headed the 10th corps in Korea, tells United States News and World Report that he favors a bloackde of Communist China.. bombing of the enemy's railroad lines in machuria, and attacks on the Chinese mainland by the Nationalists. [redacted]

The official news agency of Nationalist China urges us to blockade the enemy coast. The Chinese say this wouldn't expand the Korean war "on the contrary, would serve as a necessary step toward ending it."

And today, Moscow's PRAVDA took note of President Eisenhower's decision to permit the Nationalists to attack the Chinese mainland [redacted] whenever they want to. Pravda says we don't want to end the Korean war.. we want to expand the fighting in the Far East.

And a spokesman for the British foreign office today took the unusual step of commenting on a hypothetical question: what would the British attitude be if the United States were to blockade Red China? The spokesman [redacted] listed these objections to a blockade: it may delay the end of the Korean war by extending the area of conflict with Communist China. Two: it might lead to dangerous "incidents" involving Russia's submarines and shipping. Three: it would not subtantially affect the war potential of Red China because the Communists [redacted] now get less than one-fourth of their foreign trade through the sea..most of it comes over land from the Soviet Union. The British spokesman said a blockade of Communist China also might alienate such countries as India, Indonesia and Burma..who trade with China. [redacted] And FIFTH, it might lead to retaliation against Britain's Hong Kong. The British believe this to be the best listening post for what's going on inside China. They would also lose a business with China that is estimated to run to millions of dollars a month.

In Korea today our fighter bombers again attacked enemy industrial positions near the port of Chinnampo. And General Van Fleet, completing his last tour of the front said today: "My only regret is that we didn't finish the job."

~~In New Delhi today, the United States and India signed agreements whereby we would provide almost 2-million dollars to irrigation and valley projects and the education of Indian workers.~~

~~And in answer to Soviet charges that we and the British are exploiting Asians, a representative of Pakistan said today: the Russians must recognize that we [illegible] of Asia have come of age and the Russian bogeyman of "monopoly capitalists" cannot easily frighten us."~~

Secretary of State Dulles returned TO WASHINGTON TODAY from his 10-day tour of Europe. ~~today and~~ He told newsmen that he and Mutual Security Administrator Stassen are "encouraged" by what West Europe's leaders told them.

The President today met with his congressional leaders and agreed upon a legislative program for the next five months. Senator Taft said he agrees with the President that tax cuts must wait until the budget is cut. He predicts that the excess profits tax..scheduled to expire on July first.. will be retained through 1953. Senator Taft said: "I am confident that in the end we shall reduce taxes. But just how and when it shall be done" must be left for future consideration.

The President and the Congressional leaders listed these subjects for action before the fourth of July: all appropriation bills... statehood for Hawaii...reorganization of several departments...amendments to the Taft Hartley law...extension of some controls, (like rent controls.). extension of the reciprocal trade act.. action on a tidelands oil bill... simplification of customs procedure...extension of old age and survivors insurance benefits...extension of aid to schools in critical areas..and the addition of two more District of Columbia commissioners.

~~Over the week-end the President announced that he will nominate Clare Boothe Luce to be ambassador to Italy. And today a group called "Protestants and other Americans united for separation of Church and state" demanded to know whether Mrs. Luce also will serve as presidential contact with the Vatican. This group says: "Mrs. Luce should go to Rome only as our ambassador to Italy--or else she should not go at all."~~

~~In Washington, Michael W. Straus left his job as reclamation commissioner saying: "Reclamation pospered as a bi-partisan effort under the Square deal..the new Deal and the Fair Deal..and it is now~~

[redacted]

The Supreme Court today upheld the North Carolina property and poll tax lists for the selection of juries. There are a few Negro names on both lists. The court, by a six-to-three vote, rejected the appeals of four Negroes, sentenced to death, who [redacted] claimed Negroes had been improperly excluded from their grand jury and trial jury.

[redacted]

The American Federation of Labor said today the Taft-Hartley law can be made satisfactory to labor by amendments..instead of outright appeal. President Meany added: "Then we can go on from there." The union's executive council also said it is gravely concerned by the continuing decline in the prices received by the nation's farmers.

In Chicago, wheat future prices dropped today, to their lowest point since the Korean war started. Experts said its because "there's just too much wheat in the world."

[redacted]

~~Not stopping the decline of farm prices.~~

A Senate committee said today that forged documents ~~were~~ apparently were used in the election campaign against Vice President Nixon. The committee offered no details..but asked the F.B.I. to investigate. #

~~The Federal Communications Commission today~~ approved a merger of the American Broadcasting Company and United Paramount Theaters, Incorporated. A.B.C. asked for the merger to strengthen its financial position and to offer more competition to CBS and NBC.

The army announced today that Lieut. General Eddy, our ~~mmmm~~ army commander in Europe, will retire at the end of March. He has completed more than 35 years service.

The Romanian government today put on trial 23 former employes of British and American firms in the Ploesti ~~mmm~~ oil fields..they were charged with high treason.

The Hungarian government says ot has fired the boss of its powerful state police.

In Tel Aviv, three persons were injured by an explosion in front of the Soviet legation.

Edward R. Murrow: February 9, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Here in New York a 23-year-old young man named Minot Frazier Jelke III, who is due to inherit a lot of money is on trial - a nine-count indictment charging compulsory prostitution, living off the proceeds of vice, and conspiracy. If convicted Mr. Jelke could get penalties amounting to 146 years in prison. This is a sordid and sensational case which has already received considerable publicity. It has not been reported in this program before, and is not likely to be again. Mention is made of it now because Judge Francis Valenti, who is hearing the case, has decided to bar the public and the press from the courtroom. The editors of New York's seven daily newspapers, and the three major press associations have protested the judge's decision, contending that suppression of any testimony would"lead to many rumors, some unfounded and unjustified, and perhaps damaging to innocent persons".

Today Judge Valenti gave his reasons for barring the press and the public. He said: "For weeks I have watched with growing uneasiness the mushrooming public anticipation of lurid and salacious details. Frankly, the reaction of this court to this symptom of social illness is revolting nausea..... We find it competing with the President's message on the State of the Union.... such extensive press coverage as to a case of this kind is catering to vulgar sensationalism if not actual depravity...the court is led to believe that the testimony in this case will be steeped in filth. The indiscriminate release of the obscene and sordid details can serve no constructive purpose, in fact it might well be a positive disservice to our youth." The judge deemed it his duty "in the interests of justice and good morals to draw the curtain on the offensive obscenity of this already over-publicized trial. Public decency", he said, "compels it."

An attorney for the New York Times told Judge Valenti that he was setting himself up as a censor in ruling what the public should or should not hear and read from a courtroom. And the Times attorney said: "Setting up court censorship in this case will undoubtedly lead to a star chamber and the decree of censorship by other judges not ruled by such high motives as your Honor."

In this case the judge based his ruling, not upon the law but upon a personal nausea and extensive press coverage catering to "vulgar sensationalism if not actual depravity." New York's senior Judge of General Sessions said he did not recall a precedent for Judge Valenti's decision in barring the press and the public.

In this reporter's opinion there is no question that the XXX judge's description of the case is accurate; His condemnation of certain sections of the press fully warranted. But he has raised a question that goes rather beyond the future of Mr. Jelke, or the hopes of circulation managers and their desire to profit from the printing of what Judge Valenti called "lurid and salacious details." This is, undoubtedly, a sordid and filthy case. But the question is whether the judge should decide that it is so vulgar, such a ~~XXX~~ symptom of social illness that the trial should not be reported; or whether the city's seven newspapers and the three national press associations should decide what to report and what not to report. The chances are that all ten of these agencies would not report the proceedings in exactly the same fashion. And, as I said a moment ago, the chances are that this program would not report it at all, hoping to find more significant material with which to deal until, perhaps, the verdict was announced. However, it seems to me that the lawyer for the Times was on solid ground when he contended that it is no part of a judge's function to act as a censor in ruling what the public should and should not hear and read from a courtroom. In the absence of any law which gives to a judge that power in a case of this sort, that decision is a function reserved to the editors of newspapers, magazines and radio. Those editors may not be possessed of impeccable judgment. They may print or utter lurid or salacious details offensive to their readers or listeners. If they do, the individual citizen can refuse to read or listen. The real question here is who shall exercise editorial judgment.

Having no interest in the fate of young Mr. Jelke - having no belief in the infallible good taste of editors, including this one - but believing that in the absence of law to the contrary court proceedings should be open to reporters; it would seem to this one that the judge, revolted as he obviously is by the sordid details of this case, did not produce legal basis for excluding reporters. And the law, historically at least, is more important than the fate of Mr. Jelke, or public decency, or a possible disservice to our youth. The fact that radio and newspapers have in the past, and probably will in the future, be insensitive to some of these considerations cannot be regarded as ample reason for secret judicial proceedings.

Judge Valente, in barring the press and public from the Jelke trial, might well turn to St. Thomas Aquinas who said:"Justice is a certain rectitude of mind, whereby a man does what he ought to do, in the circumstances confronting him." The argument of the press would seem to pretty well follow this observation by Montaigne:"No human judgement is so vigilant, that it does not nod at times."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senator Taft came out of the White House today and told reporters: the Administration is "apparently not considering" a frontal attack on the enemy in Korea. Later, he explained this subject was not discussed with President Eisenhower; that he feels personally such an attack is not being considered because of the known depth of the enemy's strength. Senator Taft favors a blockade of the Communist China coast; he realizes this is difficult to work out with our allies. Democratic Senator Russel of Georgia says we should "press vigorously" in the United Nations for a naval blockade. Republican Senator Knowland would do this without the U.N. - if necessary.

And General Bradley is reported to have told a Senate committee that he believes we could stop ships bound for Red China, and force them to unload their war materials elsewhere. He believes this would be "short of war" as long as we did not "attack" any ships determined to reach China against our wishes.

Lieut. General Almond, who, before he retired headed the 10th corps in Korea, tells United States News and World Report that he favors a blockade of Communist China, bombing of the enemy's railroad lines in Manchuria and attacks on the Chinese mainland by the Nationalists.

The official news agency of Nationalist China urges us to blockade the enemy coast. The Chinese say this wouldn't expand the Korean war;"on the contrary, would serve as a necessary step toward ending it."

And today, Moscow's Pravda took note of President Eisenhower's decision to permit the Nationalists to attack the Chinese mainland whenever they want to. Pravda says we don't want to end the Korean war; we want to expand the fighting in the Far East.

And a spokesman for the British foreign office today took the unusual step of commenting on a hypothetical question: what would the British attitude be if the United States were to blockade Red China? The spokesman listed these objections to a blockade: it may delay the end of the Korean war by extending the area of conflict with Communist China. Two: it might lead to dangerous "incidents" involving Russia's submarines and shipping. Three: it would not substantially affect the war potential of Red China because the Communists now get less than one fourth of their foreign trade through the sea; most of it comes over land from the Soviet Union. The British spokesman said a blockade of Communist China also might alienate such countries as India, Indonesia and Burma, who trade with China. And fifth: it might lead to retaliation against Britain's Hong Kong. The British believe this to be the best listening post for what's going on inside China. They would also lose a business with China that is estimated to run to millions of dollars a month.

In Korea today our fighter bombers again attacked enemy industrial positions near the port of Chinnampo. And General Van Fleet, completing his last tour of the front said today: "My only regret is that we didn't finish the job."

Secretary of State Dulles returned to Washington today from his 10-day tour of Europe. He told newsmen that he and Mutual Security Administrator Stassen are "encouraged" by what West Europe's leaders told them.

The President today met with his congressional leaders and agreed upon a legislative program for the next five months. Senator Taft said he agrees with the President that tax cuts must wait until the budget is cut. He preducts that the excess profits tax, scheduled to expire on July first, will be retained through 1953. Senator Taft said: "I am confident that in the end we shall reduce taxes. But just how and when it shall be done" must be left for future consideration.

The President and the Congressional leaders listed these subjects for action before the fourth of July: all appropriation bills, statehood for Hawaii, reorganization of several departments, amendments to the Taft Hartley law, extension of some controls, (like rent controls) extension of the reciprocal trade act, action on a tidelands oil bill, simplification of customs procedure, extension of old age and survivors insurance benefits, extnesion of aid to schools in critical areas, and the addition of two more District of Columbia commissioners.

The Supreme Court today upheld the North Carolina property and poll tax lists for the selection of juries. There are a few Negro names on both lists. The court, by a six to three vote, rejected the appeals of four Negroes, sentenced to death, who claimed Negroes had been improperly excluded from their grand jury and trial jury.

The American Federation of Labor said today the Taft-Hartley law can be made satisfactory to labor by amendments, instead of outright appeal. President Meany added: "Then we can go on from there." The Union's executive council also said it is gravely concerned by the continuing decline in the prices received by the nation's farmers.

In Chicago, wheat future prices dropped today to their lowest point since the Korean war started. Experts said its because "there's just too much wheat in the world."

A Senate committee said today that forged documents apparently were used in the election campaign against Vice President Nixon. The committee offered no details, but asked the F.B.I. to investigate.

In Tel Aviv, three persons were injured by an explosion in front of the Soviet legation.

Here in New York a 23-year-old young man named Minot Frazier Jelke III, who is due to inherit a lot of money is on trial - a nine-count indictment charging compulsory prostitution, living off the proceeds of vice, and conspiracy. If convicted Mr. Jelke could get penalties amounting to 146 years in prison. This is a sordid and sensational case which has already received considerable publicity. It has not been reported in this program before, and is not likely to be again. Mention is made of it now because Judge Francis Valenti, who is hearing the case, has decided to bar the public and the press from the courtroom. The editors of New York's seven daily newspapers, and the three major press associations have protested the judge's decision, contending that suppression of any testimony would "lead to many rumors, some unfounded and unjustified, and perhaps damaging to innocent persons".

Today Judge Valenti gave his reasons for barring the press and the public. He said: "For weeks I have watched with growing uneasiness the mushrooming public anticipation of lurid and salacious details. Frankly, the reaction of this court to this symptom of social illness is revolting nausea. We find it competing with the President's message on the State of the Union, such extensive press coverage as to a case of this kind is catering to vulgar sensationalism if not actual depravity, the court is led to believe that the testimony in this case will be steeped in filth. The indiscriminate release of the obscene and sordid details can serve no constructive purpose, in fact it might well be a positive disservice to our youth." The judge deemed it his duty "in the interests of justice and good morals to draw the curtain on the offensive obscenity of this already over-publicized trial. Public decency", he said, "compels it."

An attorney for the New York Times told Judge Valenti that he was setting himself up as a censor in ruling what the public should or should not hear and read, from a courtroom. And the Times attorney said: "Setting up court censorship in this case will undoubtedly lead to a star chamber and the decree of censorship by other judges not ruled by such high motives as your Honor."

In this case the judge based his ruling, not upon the law but upon a personal nausea and extensive press coverage catering to "vulgar sensationalism if not actual depravity." New York's senior Judge of General Sessions said he did not recall a precedent for Judge Valenti's decision in barring the press and the public.

In this reporter's opinion there is no question that the Judge's description of the case is accurate. His condemnation of certain sections of the press fully warranted. But he has raised a question that goes rather beyond the future of Mr. Jelke, or the hopes of circulation managers, and their desire to profit from the printing of what Judge Valenti called "lurid and salacious details." This is, undoubtedly, a sordid and filthy case. But the question is whether the judge should decide that it is so vulgar, such a symptom of social illness that the trial should not be reported; or whether the city's seven newspapers and the three national press associations should decide what to report and what not to report. The chances are that all ten of these agencies would not report the proceedings in exactly the same fashion. And, as I said a moment ago, the chances are that this program would not report it at all, hoping to find more significant material with which to deal until, perhaps, the verdict was announced. However, it seems to me that the lawyer for the Times was on solid ground when he contended that it is no part of a judge's function to act as a censor in fuling what the public should and should not hear and read from a courtroom. In the absence of any law which gives to a judge that power in a case of this sort, that decision is a function reserved to the editors of newspapers, magazines and radio. Those editors may not be possessed of impeccable judgment. They may print or utter lurid or salacious details offensive to their readers or listeners. If they do, the individual citizen can refuse to read or listen. The real question here is who shall exercise editorial judgment.

Having no interest in the fate of young Mr. Jelke - having no belief in the infallible good taste of editors, including this one - but believing that in the absence of law to the contrary court proceedings should be open to reporters; it would seem to this one that the judge, revolted as he obviously is by the sordid details of this case, did not produce legal basis for excluding reporters. And the law, historically at least, is more important than the fate of Mr. Jelke, or public decency, or a possible disservice to our youth. The fact that radio and newspapers have in the past, and probably will in the future, be insensitive to some of these considerations cannot be regarded as ample reason for secret judicial proceedings.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Judge Valente, in barring the press and public from the Jelke trial, might well turn to St. Thomas Aquinas who said: "Justice is a certain rectitude of mind whereby a man does what he ought to do in the circumstances confronting him." The argument of the press would seem to pretty well follow this observation by Montaigne: "No human judgment is so vigilant that it does not nod at times."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday Feb. 10 1953

This is the news:

The President has made no decision on a naval blockade of Communist China./ Secretary of State Dulles told Senators today: the Administration has no "immediate plans to blockade China".. bomb Manchuria, or use an atomic bomb in Korea./Its plan is to keep the enemy guessing./The whole situation in the Far East is wide open for any action./Senator ~~Chairman~~ Wiley told reporters that Mr. Dulles, in reporting on his recent European tour, said he thought he had satisfied European leaders about our course in the Far East./Mr. Dulles also said he found them disposed to move ahead with the ratification of the European Defense Community.. but all were reluctant to take the first step./Mr. Dulles is reported to have said if the Europeans do not move along towards unity "we will be faced with a very serious question on what our own future course will be."

I should like to examine the possibilities in a few minutes.

The Senators later heard from General Bradley, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. He said the question of a naval blockade of Red China is a "high policy matter" to be determined by the President."/Senators say he reported that aid to the Chinese Nationlists is being "stepped up."/ In answer to questions he said it would need more money and more manpower if we are to adopt any of several "alternative" courses for ending the Korean war. Democratic senators who heard his testimony say the General still holds that a naval blockade of China would "materially increase" the chances of another world war.

In Korea today, the retiring General Van Fleet, in an interview and statement to his troops, said he is "certain" a general offensive in Korea now would be successful. He feels we twice lost the opportunity for victory; once when the enemy was over-extended in May of 1951. And later that year when we cracked the Communist defense. The General has faith that "President Eisenhower will find a way to bring peace to Korea as well as to the rest of the world." ~~"Authoritative sources" in Korea are quoted as saying that [illegible] for more than a year General Van Fleet could not order a single battalion to attack without the [illegible] Tokyo.~~

There was little fighting in Korea today. And from Koje island comes word of another riot by enemy prisoners of war. One was killed..38 wounded after allied troops used grenade and rifle fire to end the prisoners demonstration. The commander calls it a "deliberate attempt to test our strength and create another incident."

In Indonesia today, a second Asian country praised America and Great Britain for their aid.. and denied Soviet charges that the western powers are exploiting the countries of Asia. Pakistan defended the West yesterday and today Burma challenged the Soviet propaganda.

And for a second day in Britain, a high official made it clear that the British oppose a blockade of Communist China. The Marquess of Reading told the House of Lords the government would view such an action with "concern."

And in the House of Commons, when Laborites demanded a reduction in Britain's two-year compulsory military service period, Prime Minister Churchill said, "This would spread despondency throughout Europe and make many of our relations with the United States even more difficult than they are."

The British sent their "best wishes" to the new Schuman Plan organization that went into effect today. They are not in it. Jean Monnet, the chief executive of the plan, told the 155-million persons of six countries that they can now build a unified economy, such as that of the United States and Russia. Monnet said this pooling of steel AND coal offers West Europeans, for the first time, an opportunity for true mass production and higher standards of living. He said this [redacted] is "the beginning of a common European market."

Both the British and Dutch have new flood warnings. Heavy gales hit Britain's west coast with gusts ranging up to 100 miles an hour. The Air Ministry expects the gale to swing around to the flood stricken eastern part of the country. And [redacted] heavy rains hit the Dutch coast and made repair work more difficult. ~~[redacted] All Dutch political parties paid tribute to flood aid received from abroad. Except the Communists, their leader said the government should stop putting money into defense at the expense of maintaining Holland's dikes.~~

West Germany today banned the 2-thousand member Free Corps of Germany and arrested four leaders of the Nazi-like organization. This was the second such group broken up in less than a month. The British arrested seven former high Nazis on January 15. Today's action came as our new high commissioner..Dr Connant.. arrived in Bonn. And my colleague Richard C. Hottelet cables from Bonn [redacted] that the West German government's attack on the Free Corps [redacted] may be regarded as a move to show the British that the Germans have the will and the means to prevent a revival of Nazi-ism.. It may also be part of a plan to discredit extremists in this German election year, so that voters will rally to moderate parties.

In Isreal, Premier Ben Gurion told his Parliament that a nation-wide manhunt is underway for the terrorists who bombed the Soviet legation in Tel Aviv last night. The wife of the Russian minister and three other Russians were injured. Ben Gurion called the bombing "a senseless crime that profanes the honor of Isreal, and besmirches the good name of the Jewish nation."

In Washington today, responsible congressional sources say the Eisenhower Administration fears it may be unable to balance the budget IN FISCAL 1954 and may have to postpone tax cuts, scheduled to be made in the next 12 months. Nevertheless, Republicans on the House Ways and Means committee are going ahead with their plans to cut personal income taxes by ten per cent, at the end of June.

The President today met with leaders of the American Farm Bureau Federation. They say they advised him against trying to solve farm problems by fixing prices.

Robert C. Sprague of Massachusetts said today that he has declined nomination as undersecrteraty of air, because he is unwilling to sell his stock in a family concern that has defense contracts.

The Senate Internal Security subcommittee today heard four members of the New York City school system refuse to say whether they have ever been Communists. The witnesses were: Oscar Shaftel...Joseph Bressler... Hyman Gold and Richard Austin. They claimed possible self-incrimination. Chairman Jenner said the committee has evidence of "hundreds of teachers" organized in a secret Communist underground operation.

Here in the East, a settlement has been reached in the ten-day old tugboat strike .

Edward R. Murrow: February 10, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

In all of the current discussion of our foreign policy, our relations with Europe, what to do about Formosa and Korea, we are in some danger of losing sight of what the diplomats like to call "the basic document"; that is the Atlantic Defense Treaty signed in 1949. It was our first major, dangerous peacetime alliance. It was signed, after prolonged public debate, (and no one has claimed that it has any secret clauses or agreements.) In essence it provides that the countries of Western Europe and the United States agree that an armed attack against one or more of them in Europe or in North America shall be considered as an attack against them all. That is our promise, and our problem. The member nations agreed to unite their efforts for collective defense, and for the preservation of peace and security. After the treaty has been in force for ten years, or at any time thereafter, any nation can ask for a meeting to review and revise the treaty, but the agreement lasts for twenty years; and under its terms no nation can get out before then.

You will notice that this treaty, this basic document, does not say that we and our European partners are bound always to pursue the same policy in Asia, or in Europe either for that matter. It does not say that there shall be no trade with countries behind the Iron Curtain. The treaty does not state how much or what kind of aid we are obliged to supply to our allies. It does not say that they must always agree with us, or we with them. The treaty does not say that there must be a unified European Army under a single command. It does not state that we are obliged to approve and applaud every action taken by our allies; and they are, likewise, under no obligation to approve procedures we may suggest or recommend. Nothing in the treaty limits the right of the contracting nations to criticize or condemn each other.

In signing this treaty the nations involved gave up only one basic sovereign right, and that is the right to decide whether they will or will not resist an armed attack against a member nation. # We in this country may, from time to time, "re-think" our foreign policy; the other member nations may do likewise. / We may decide to give more or less aid to the members of the alliance. / We may prod them or try to persuade them toward greater unity or greater efforts toward the common good. But one thing we cannot re-think, re-decide or re-evaluate is that solemn commitment which still has [redacted] 17 years to run. # We may contend that the French aren't doing all they should to bring the Germans into the European Army; that the British aren't contributing all they should to European unity; that the Belgians, the Dutch or the Norwegians, or any other member nation could do more than they are now doing. But the fact remains that if any of those nations should be attacked, we are automatically at war, whether we like it or not. Our problem, therefore, in our relations with Europe is complicated by this hostage given to the future. We cannot say to them: "Follow our lead in Asia, or else." "Create a European Army, or else"; for the "or else" has already been taken care of. The treaty has been signed. It was signed under the imminent threat of Russian aggression - that threat is still present. When the pressure is relaxed, allies tend to fall to quarreling among themselves. The Russians in recent months have relaxed the pressure, have predicted that the quarreling will increase in intensity, to the point where the Western alliance will come unstuck and we shall find ourselves alone.

I suppose our problem is to see that that doesn't happen, while remembering that the Atlantic Treaty is a mutual defense agreement and contains no pledge of unanimity, except when it comes to fighting. No nation involved in it gave up its right to act independently, to argue, to be stubborn or unwise. And in spite of current bickerings, every condition that caused this country and the nations of Western Europe to enter into this agreement still exists.

The Atlantic Defense Treaty is based upon a single goal: collective security. And while the member nations may have their disagreements, they would all do well to bear in mind Disraeli's advice:"The secret of success is constancy of purpose." For after all, it's much as Oliver Wendell Holmes once said:"The real thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President has made no decision on a naval blockade of Communist China. Secretary of State Dulles told Senators today: the Administration has no "immediate plans to blockade China", bomb Manchuria or use an atomic bomb in Korea. Its plan is to keep the enemy guessing. The whole situation in the Far East is wide open for any action. Senator Wiley told reporters that Mr. Dulles, in reporting on his recent European tour, said he thought he had satisfied European leaders about our course in the Far East. Mr. Dulles also said he found men disposed to move ahead with the ratification of the European Defense Community, but all were reluctant to take the first step. Mr. Dulles is reported to have said if the Europeans do not move along towards unity "we will be faced with a very serious question on what our own future course will be." I should like to examine the possibilities in a few minutes.

The Senators later heard from General Bradley, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. He said the question of a naval blockade of Red China is a "high policy matter to be determined by the President." Senators say he reported that aid to the Chinese Nationalists is being "stepped up." In answer to questions he said it would need more money and more manpower if we are to adopt any of several "alternativd" courses for ending the Korean war. Democratic senators who heard his testimony say the General still holds that a naval blockade of China would "materially increase" the chances of another world war.

In Korea today, the retiring General Van Fleet, in an interview and statement to his troops, said he is "certain" a general offensive in Korea now would be successful. He feels we twice lost the opportunity for victory; once when the enemy was over-extended in May of 1951. And later that year when we cracked the Communist defense. The General has faith that "President Eisenhower will find a way to bring peace to Korea as well as to the rest of the world.

There was little fighting in Korea today. And from Koje island comes word of another riot by enemy prisoners of war. One was killed, 38 wounded, after allied troops used grenade and rifle fire to end the prisoners demonstration. The commander calls it a "deliberate attempt to test our strength and create another incident."

In Indonesia today, a second Asian country praised America and Great Britain for their aid, and denied Soviet charges that the western powers are exploiting the countries of Asia. Pakistan defended the West yesterday and today Burma challenged the Soviet propaganda.

And for a second day in Britain, a high official made it clear that the British oppose a blockade of Communist China. The Marquess of Reading told the House of Lords the government would view such an action with "concern."

And in the House of Commons, when Laborites demanded a reduction in Britain's two-year compulsory military service period, Prime Minister Churchill said: "This would spread despondency throughout Europe and make many of our relations with the United States even more difficult than they are."

The British sent their "best wishes" to the new Schuman Plan Organization that went into effect today. They are not in it. Jean Monnet, the chief executive of the plan, told the 155-million persons of six countries that they can now build a unified economy such as that of the United States and Russia. Monnet said this pooling of steel, and coal, offers West Europeans, for the first time, an opportunity for true mass production and higher standards of living. He said this is "the beginning of a common European market."

Both the British and Dutch have new flood warnings. Heavy gales hit Britain's west coast with gusts ranging up to 100 miles an hour. The Air Ministry expects the gale to swing around to the flood stricken eastern part of the country. And heavy rains hit the Dutch coast and made repair work more difficult.

West Germany today banned the 2-thousand member Free Corps of Germany and arrested four leaders of the Nazi-like organization. This was the second such group broken up in less than a month. The British arrested seven former high

Nazis on January 15. Today's action came as our new high commissioner, Dr. Conant, arrived in Bonn. And my colleague Richard C. Hottelet cables from Bonn that the West German government's attack on the Free Corps may be regarded as a move to show the British that the Germans have the will and the means to prevent a revival of Nazi-ism. It may also be part of a plan to discredit extremists in this German election year so that voters will rally to moderate parties. In Israel, Premier Ben Gurion told his Parliament that a nation-wide manhunt is underway for the terrorists who bombed the Soviet legation in Tel Aviv last night. The wife of the Russian minister and three other Russians were injured. Ben Gurion called the bombing "a senseless crime that profanes the honor of Israel and besmirches the good name of the Jewish nation."

In Washington today, responsible congressional sources say the Eisenhower Administration fears it may be unable to balance the budget in fiscal 1954 and may have to postpone tax cuts scheduled to be made in the next 12 months. Nevertheless, Republicans on the House Ways and Means committee are going ahead with their plans to cut personal income taxes by ten per cent at the end of June.

The President today met with leaders of the American Farm Bureau Federation. They say they advised him against trying to solve farm problems by fixing prices.

Robert C. Sprague of Massachusetts said today that he has declined nomination as undersecretary of air because he is unwilling to sell his stock in a family concern that has defense contracts.

The Senate Internal Security subcommittee today heard four members of the New York City school system refuse to say whether they have ever been Communists. The witnesses were: Oscar Shaftel, Joseph Bressler, Hyman Gold and Richard Austin. They claimed possible self-incrimination. Chairman Jenner said the committee has evidence of "hundreds of teachers" organized in a secret Communist underground operation.

Here in the East, a settlement has been reached in the ten-day old tugboat strike.

In all of the current discussion of our foreign policy, our relations with Europe, what to do about Formosa and Korea, we are in some danger of losing sight of what the diplomats like to call "the basic document." that is the Atlantic Defense Treaty signed in 1949. It was our first major, dangerous peace-time alliance. It was signed, after prolonged public debate, and no one has claimed that it has any secret clauses or agreements. In essence it provides that the countries of Western Europe and the United States agree that an armed attack against one or more of them in Europe or in North America shall be considered as an attack against them all. That is our promise, and our problem. The member nations agreed to unite their efforts for collective defense, and for the preservation of peace and security. After the treaty has been in force for ten years, or at any time thereafter, any nation can ask for a meeting to review and revise the treaty, but the agreement lasts for twenty years; and under its terms no nation can get out before then.

You will notice that this treaty, this basic document, does not say that we and our European partners are bound always to pursue the same policy in Asia, or in Europe either for that matter. It does not say that there shall be no trade with countries behind the Iron Curtain. The treaty does not state how much or what kind of aid we are obliged to supply to our allies. It does not say that they must always agree with us, or we with them. The treaty does not say that there must be a unified European Army under a single command. It does not state that we are obliged to approve and applaud every action taken by our Allies; and they are, likewise, under no obligation to approve procedures we may suggest or recommend. Nothing in the treaty limits the right of the contracting nations to criticize or condemn each other.

In signing this treaty, the nations involved gave up only one basic sovereign right, and that is the right to decide whether they will or will not resist an armed attack against a member nation. We in this country may, from time to time, "re-think" our foreign policy; the other member nations may do likewise. We may decide to give more or less aid to the members of the alliance. We may prod them or try to persuade them toward greater unity or greater efforts toward the common good. But one thing we cannot re-think, re-decide or re-evaluate is that solemn committment which still has 17 years to run. We may contend that the French aren't doing all they should to bring the Germans into the European Army; that the British aren't contributing all they should to European unity; that the Belgians, the Dutch or the Norwegians, or any other member nation could do more than they are now doing. But the fact remains that if any of those nations should be attacked, we are automatically at war, whether we like it or not. Our problem, therefore, in our relations with Europe is complicated by this hostage given to the future. We cannot say to them: "Follow our lead in Asia, or else." "Create a European Army, or else"; for the "or else" has already been taken care of. The treaty has been signed. It was signed under the imminent threat of Russian aggression - that threat is still present. When the pressure is relaxed, allied tend to fall to quarreling among themselves. The Russians in recent months have relaxed the pressure, have preducted that the quarreling will increase in intensity, to the point where the Western alliance will come unstuck and we shall find ourselves alone.

I suppose our problem is to see that that doesn't happen, while remembering that the Atlantic Treaty is a mutual defense agreement and contains no pledge of unanimity, except when it comes to fighting. No nation involved in it gave up its right to act independently, to argue, to be stubborn or unwise. And in spite of current bickerings, every condition that caused this country and the nations of Western Europe to enter into this agreement still exists.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Atlantic Defense Treaty is based upon a single goal: collective security. And while the member nations may have their disagreements, they would all do well to bear in mind Disraeli's advice: "The secret of success is constancy of purpose." For after all, it's much as Oliver Wendell Holmes once said: "The real thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wed. Feb 11, 1953

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will not interfere with the death sentences of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies. In a statement tonight he said: he has carefully reviewed the case. He is satisfied the ROSENBERGS HAVE been accorded a full measure of justice. He feels the nature of their crime far exceeds the murder of another individual. He says:" It involves the deliberate betrayal of the entire nation, and could very well result in the death of many, many thousands of innocenet citizens. By their act, these two individuals have in fact betrayed the cause of freedom, for which free men are fighting and dying at this very hour." The President goes on to say, a jury of their fellow citizens found ROSENBERGS guilty, and he feels it is his duty "in the interest of the people of the United States not to set aside the verdict of their representatives."

The Rosenbergs heard this decision over the radio in the Sing Sing death house. They had no comment. Their attorney says he will ask the Supreme Court to stay their execution, while he makes another appeal. Twice, the Supreme Court has refused to consider the case. Now, within the next five days Federal Judge Kaufman will set the execution date for the first persons ever to be executed in this country for espionage in peactime.

The President today met for an hour and a half with top congressional leaders. Senator Taft says they reviewed international trade problems.

House Speaker Martin said today he is reconciled to committee approval of a tax cut. Chairman Allen of the Rules Committee says he will hold up such a bill until at least the first of May. But Chairman Reed of the Ways and Means Committee says: "the President and other Republican candidates campaigned on a promise to cut taxes and the party now has an obligation to keep faith with the people."

Representative Kean, of a tax scandal investigating committee, says his group is going to reveal the names of any congressmen or senators who used "pressure" to help get jobs for "unfit" persons in the alcohol tax unit.

The C.I.O. today called for seven basic changes in the Taft-Hartley law and said: "Justice and fairness are all we ask." The union still wants repeal of the law but it says that "because of the realities of the situation" it is ready to co-operate with amendments to eliminate union-busting and other anti-labor provisions."

Secretary of Agriculture Benson says in St. Paul tonight that government farm price supports should be used as "disaster insurance" and not to encourage "uneconomic production leading to big surpluses and subsidies." Secretary Benson says farmers should not be placed in the position of working for government bounty, rather than producing for a free market. He believes relief programs should be operated "as such" and not as an aid to the entire agricultural industry.

The President today named James F. Brownlee, a New York investment banker, to be government consultant on price and other controls. This is taken to mean that there will be no one-stroke killing of remaining price controls. Control officials say, that before the week is over milk and butter... poultry, eggs, soap and shortening will be free of controls.

Senator Margaret Chase Smith hinted today that the AIR force may have made "big mistakes" in its overseas air base program. The Senate Armed Services Committee is hearing such charges in secrecy. Today Senator Smith told reporters "The defense program is a tremendously large one. When mistakes are made they are usually big mistakes, because the programs are big." Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana says the Air Force has been giving "inadequate" answers to the charges of waste,

The Pentagon announced today that we suffered another 395 casualties in Korea last week: 59 killed...8 missing...the rest wounded. The fighting today was confined to patrol activitiy as Lieut. General Maxwell D. Taylor took over control of the 8th army. General Van Fleet flew to Tokyo and told reporters the United Nations could launch an offensive and break the military deadlock which, he says, was one of our own choosing and not imposed by the enemy.

In India, President Prasad told his parliament that India is gravely concerned by President Eisenhower's decision to de-neutralize Formosa. He added: "I trust that any tendency towards extension of the war, which has already brought disaster in its train, will be checked." And the Prime Minister of Pakistan says that "there is every likelihood" that a United Nations blockade of Communist China would lead to an extension of the Korean war. He says Pakistan wants to sell cotton to the Chinese..and any blockade "would create quite a serious problem."

The British made it clear today that they will not join in repudiating the Yalta agreement..(if that's what President Eisenhower refered to when he told Congress we should not recognize secret agreements.) Lord Reading, Britain's undersecretary for foreign affairs, told the House of Lords that Britain "does not intend to depart from international agreements [redacted] awarding the former Japanese territories of Sakhalin and the [redacted] Kurile islands to Russia.. THAT WAS DONE AT YALTA.

Authoritative British sources in London say Britain and Egypt have reached an agreement on the future of the Sudan: Under it, the Sudan would have immediate self-government, leading to self-determination in three years.

In Isreal today, more than 20 persons were injured in Tel Aviv [redacted] fights between Communists and non-Communists. And the Moscow Radio says the recent bombing of the Soviet legation in Tel Aviv was carried out "with the clear connivance" of Isreali police. Moscow says the bombing was preceeded by" a campaign of slander against the Soviet union, with the participation of official personages in Isreal."

Edward R. Murrow: February 11, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The whole postwar history of relations between this country and the Soviet Union, has been a series of challenges by one side, and responses by another. This is the classic pattern of relations between powerful nations. The Russians challenged, with a civil war in Greece; we responded with the Truman Doctrine and military aid. The Russians challenged again when they took over Czechoslovakia; we responded with the Marshall Plan. They challenged again with the blockade of Berlin; we replied with the Air Lift. They challenged again with the invasion of Korea; and we responded by deciding to fight.

Each challenge and response involved a highly sensitive area, far removed from the centre of power.

LAST WEEK, [redacted], in accordance with the classic pattern we "challenged" the Russians by de-neutralizing Formosa, thereby creating a threat - though a minor one - on the Communist flank. / Today it would appear that the Communists have made their response to that challenge. Again it involves an exposed position, far from Moscow or Washington. It is Berlin again. The Soviet Army newspaper there printed today, an unusually bold and blunt manifesto. It threatens further isolation of Berlin if West Germany ratifies the European Defense Treaty. It says that the ratification of this treaty by the government in Bonn, will immediately threaten the existence of the population of West Berlin. The Communists say, that trouble can be avoided only if the West is prepared to negotiate with the Russians for the withdrawal of all troops from Berlin, the abolition of all sector boundaries, and the banning of what they call "all terror organisations", (by which they mean all anti-Communist groups.)

The Communists have started erecting new barbed wire barricades. The elevated railroad, which serves all of Berlin, is being supplied with new tracks and switches, which would permit the isolation of the Western sector of the city. Another fifteen hundred refugees crossed over into the Western zone today.

The manifesto printed today says that the Western powers have turned West Berlin into "a bridgehead of profit-thirsty American imperialism." It claims that we have broken the four-power agreement on Berlin. This charge could be the prelude to another blockade. The Communists also printed an appeal to the people of West Berlin to "overthrow" their city government under Mayor Reuter. And the Communists said they would support such a movement "with all means."

Today's manifesto could be just more propaganda, but American authorities in Berlin are disposed to take it seriously. / The Russians hold Berlin as a hostage, but their interest is not primarily the city itself; their primary concern is to keep West Germany out of the Western alliance. / This new threat to Berlin will give added ammunition to the West German Socialists, who want no part of that alliance. / There is no doubt at all that the Russians can isolate Berlin again, as they did before. They can, if they choose, present us with the same challenge that they posed before; either to take the risk of going through on the ground, or to take to the air.

And so it seems that Berlin, is in part at least, the response to Formosa.

During the past few years we have done more responding than challenging - have been running about putting out fires started by the Communists. # The Eisenhower administration is committed to the proposition, that we can peacefully take the offensive against the Communist empire, and devise a policy that we can pursue consistently, in company with our allies, without being obliged to "respond", or to improvise an answer, to each new Russian challenge. This policy has not yet been defined, except in vague and general terms, and it would not be reasonable to expect that it should be at this early date.

Distinguished historians, including Britain's Professor Toynbee, contend that the whole history of the rise and fall of civilizations can be told in terms of this process of challenge and response. Future historians will note one thing about the history of the last six years - the interval, the passage of time between the challenge and the response becomes shorter and shorter.

Murrow: Feb. 11, 1953. WORD FOR TODAY

There was a time before this planet became such a crowded, intimate sort of place, when citizens of many nations felt themselves secure - safe behind ocean or mountain barriers. But today, as one studies the news it would seem that most nations have adopted the words of Constance Wagner, who said: "The problem is how to avoid safety; the very word has a mean sound."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will not interfere with the death sentences of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies. In a statement tonight he said: he has carefully reviewed the case. He is satisfied the Rosenbergs have been accorded a full measure of justice. He feels the nature of their crime far exceeds the murder of another individual. He says: "It involves the deliberate betrayal of the entire nation and and could very well result in the death of many, many thousands of innocent citizens. By their act, these two individuals have in fact betrayed the cause of freedom, for which free men are fighting and dying at this very hour." The President goes on to say a jury of their fellow citizens found the Rosenbergs guilty and he feels it is his duty "in the interest of the people of the United States not to set aside the verdict of their representatives."

The Rosenbergs heard this decision over the radio in the Sing Sing death house. They had no comment. Their attorney says he will ask the Supreme Court to stay their execution while he makes another appeal. Twice, the Supreme Court has refused to consider the case. Now, within the next five days Federal Judge Kaufman will set the execution date for the first persons ever to be executed in this country for espionage in peacetime.

The President today met for an hour and a half with top congressional leaders. Senator Taft says they reviewed international trade problems.

House Speaker Martin said today he is reconciled to committee approval of a tax cut. Chairman Allen of the Rules Committee, says he will hold up such a bill until at least the first of May. But Chairman Reed of the Ways and Means Committee says: "the President and other Republican candidates campaigned on a promise to cut taxes and the party now has an obligation to keep faith with the people."

Representative Kean, of a tax scandal investigating committee, says his group is going to reveal the names of any congressmen or senators who used "pressure" to help get jobs for "unfit" persons in the alcohol tax unit.

The CIO today called for seven basic changes in the Taft-Hartley law and said: "Justice and fairness are all we ask. "The union still wants repeal of the law, but it says that "because of the realities of the situation" it is ready to cooperate with amendments "to eliminate unionbusting and other anti-labor provisions."

Secretary of Agriculture Benson says in St. Paul tonight that government farm price supports should be used as "disaster insurance" and not to encourage "uneconomic production leading to big surpluses and subsidies." Secretary Benson says farmers should not be placed in the position of working for government bounty, rather than producing for a free market. He believes relief programs should be operated "as such" and not as an aid to the entire agricultural industry.

The President today named James F. Brownlee, a New York investment banker, to be government consultant on price and other controls. This is taken to mean that there will be no one-stroke killing of remaining price controls. Control officials say that before the week is over milk and butter, poultry, eggs, soap and shortening will be free of controls.

Senator Margaret Chase Smith hinted today that the Air Force may have made "big mistakes" in its overseas air base program. The Senate Armed Services Committee is hearing such charges in secrecy. Today Senator Smith told reporters: "The defense program is a tremendously large one. When mistakes are made they are usually big mistakes, because the programs are big." Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana says the Air Force has been giving "inadequate" answers to the charges of wast.

The Pentagon announced today that we suffered another 395 casualties in Korea last week: 59 killed, 8 missing, the rest wounded. The fighting today was confined to patrol activity as Lieut. General Maxwell D. Taylor took over control of the 8th army. General Van Fleet flew to Tokyo and told reporters the United Nations could launch an offensive and break the military deadlock which, he says, was one of our own choosing and not imposed by the enemy.

In India, President Prasad told his parliament that India's gravely concerned by President Eisenhower's decision to de-neutralize Formosa. He added: "I trust that any tendency towards extension of the war, which has already brought disaster in its train, will be checked." And the Prime Minister of Pakistan says that "there is every likelihood" that a United Nations blockade of Communist China would lead to an extension of the Korean war. He says Pakistan wants to sell cotton to the Chinese, and any blockade "would create quite a serious problem."

The British made it clear today that they will not join in repudiating the Yalta agreement (if that's what President Eisenhower referred to when he told Congress we should not recognize secret agreements.) Lord Reading, Britain's undersecretary for foreign affairs, told the House of Lords that Britain "does not intend to depart from international agreements" awarding the former Japanese territories of Sakhalin and the Kurile islands to Russia. That was done at Yalta.

Authoritative British sources in London say Britain and Egypt have reached an agreement on the future of the Sudan: Under it, the Sudan would have immediate self-government, leading to self-determination in three years.

In Israel today, more than 20 persons were injured in Tel Aviv fights between Communists and non-Communists. And the Moscow Radio says the recent bombing of the Soviet legation in Tel Aviv was carried out "with the clear connivance" of Israeli police. Moscow says the bombing was preceded by "a campaign of slander against the Soviet union, with the participation of official personages in Israel."

The whole postwar history of relations between this country and the Soviet Union has been a series of challenges by one side and responses by another. This is the classic pattern of relations between powerful nations. The Russians challenged with a civil war in Greece; we responded with the Truman Doctrine and military aid. The Russians challenged again when they took over Czechoslovakia; we responded with the Marshall Plan. They challenged again with the blockade of Berlin; we replied with the Air Lift. They challenged again with the invasion of Korea; and we responded by deciding to fight.

Each challenge and response involved a highly sensitive area far removed from the centre of power.

Last week, in accordance with the classic pattern we "challenged" the Russians by de-neutralizing Formosa, thereby creating a threat - though a minor one - on the Communist flank. Today it would appear that the Communists have made their response to that challenge. Again it involves an exposed position, far from Moscow or Washington. It is Berlin again. The Soviet Army newspaper there printed today an ususually bold and blunt manifesto. It threatens further isolation of Berlin if West Germany ratifies the European Defense Treaty. It says that the ratification of this treaty by the government in Bonn will immediately threaten the existence of the population of West Berlin. The Communists say that trouble can be avoided only if the West is prepared to negotiate with the Russians for the withdrawal of all troops from Berlin, the abolition of all sector boundaries, and the banning of what they call "all terror organizations", (by which they mean all anti-Communist groups.)

The Communists have started erecting new barbed wire barricades. The elevated tailroad which serves all of Berlin is being supplied with new tracks and switches which would permit the isolation of the Western sector of the city. Another fifteen hundred refugees crossed over into the Western zone today.

The manifesto printed today says that the Western powers have turned West Berlin into "a bridgehead of profit-thirsty American imperialism." It claims that we have broken the four-power agreement on Berlin. This charge could be the prelude to another blockade. The Communists also printed an appeal to the people of West Berlin to "overthrow" their city government under Mayor Reuter. And the Communists said they would support such a movement "with all means."

Today's manifesto could be just more propoganda, but American authorities in Berlin are disposed to take it seriously. The Russians hold Berlin as a hostage, but their interest is not primarily the city itself; their primary concern is to keep West Germany out of the Western alliance. This new threat to Berlin will give added ammunition to the West German Socialists who want no part of that alliance. There is no doubt at all that the Russians can isolate Berlin again, as they did before. They can, if they choose, present us with the same challenge that they posed before; either to take the risk of going through on the ground, or to take to the air. And so it seems that Berlin, is in part at least, the response to Formosa.

During the past few years we have done more responding than challenging - have been running about putting out fires started by the Communists. The Eisenhower administration is committed to the proposition that we can peacefully take the offensive against the Communist empire, and devise a policy that we can pursue consistently in company with our allies, without being obliged to "respond", or to improvise an answer to each new Russian challenge. This policy has not yet been defined, except in vague and general terms, and it would not be reasonable to expect that it should be at this early date.

Distinguished historians, including Britain's Professor Toynbee, contend that the whole history of the rise and fall of civilizations can be told in terms of this process of challenge and response. Future historians will note one thing about the history of the last six years - the interval, the passage of time between the challenge and the response becomes shorter and shorter.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There was a time before this planet became such a crowded, intimate sort of place, when citizens of many nations felt themselves secure - safe behind ocean or mountain barriers. But today, as one studies the news, it would seem that most nationa have adopted the words of Constance Wagner, who said: "The problem is how to avoid safety; the very word has a mean sound."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Feb. 12, 1953

This is the news:

The government today ended price controls on eggs, poultry, soap, most fats and oils, tires, and other rubber products. The orders go into effect at midnight. They also end price controls on gasoline and crude oil. And Price Stabilizer Freehill, says crude oil and gasoline prices will probably go up considerably. He also expects an increase in PRICES FOR soaps, cleansers and detergents. The government decided not to lift controls on milk at this time. Freehill says there will be another package of de-control orders, within a few days.

In Cairo today, the British and the Egyptians, reached an agreement on the future of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan: that million square miles of territory, with 8 million people, that the two countries have administered jointly since 1899. The new agreement provides, that within three years, the Sudanese people will have the right to decide whether they want to join Egypt..the British Commonwealth..or become an independent nation. British Foreign Secretary Eden says this is "a reasonable settlement of a question which has long bedevilled British-Egyptian relations." Howard Smith cables from London, that the British now feel chances are much improved for having Egypt join the proposed Allied Middle East Defense Command. Today's agreement may also lead to a settlement of the dispute over the Suez Canal. Egypt's Premier Naguib says "the door is now wide open for such an understanding.." with the British withdrawing their troops from Suez. Our State Department says the Sudan decision is "an event of great importance...It demonstrates the fruits of moderation, patience and understanding."

There is much less enthusiasm in the western world over Russia's decision to break diplomatic relations with Isreal. Moscow claims this was done because Isreali leaders incited hostile action against the Soviet Union. The Isreali government says the Kremlin's [redacted] real purpose is to intimidate Jewish people in the Soviet Union... "the CULMINATION [redacted] of a campaign of virulent slander and outpsoken hostility against Isreal, the Zionist movement, Jewish organizations and Jews as such."

Western diplomats believe the Russians NOW may also step-up their campaign [redacted] to win friends among the Arab nations.

In West Germany today, Dr. James Conant, our new high commissioner, said the United States and Russia have made no secret agreements covering Germany. To Germans who wondered about the meaning of President Eisenhower's statement that we will repudiate secret agreements, Dr. Conant said his understanding is that Mr. Eisenhower's statement does not affect Germany.

Tonight, Secretary of State Dulles reports on his recent European trip. He SPEAKS over many of these stations at 10;30 p.m. eastern standard time.

Three Congressional committess today expressed an interest [redacted] QUESTIONING [redacted] General Van Fleet when he returns to this country. They were interested primarily in the General's answer to THIS question: [redacted] "Do you think a general offensive in Korea can be successful at this time?" The retiring 8th army commander answered:"Certainly." But in Honolulu today, on his way home, General Van Fleet said he never said the present United Nations forces in Korea could mount a winning offensive. He feels that would depend on a number of factors and circumstances.

EARLIER, A number of congressmen, in both parties, [redacted] pointed out that Van Fleet's apparent belief, that an offensive now could be successful--with the forces on hand--did not jibe with [redacted] General Bradley's views that such an offensive might need twice the force now available.

Generalissimo Chiank Kai Shek said from Formosa today that his Nationalist forces could invade Red China whenever they want to..without the approval of the United Nations. But, he said, while he feels such an offensive cannot wait "until we are fully prepared", it will take some time until his forces are "adequately" equipped. He said he needs air and naval weapons, and ammunition. Chiang believes many Chinese on the mainland would rally to his Nationalist forces, should an invasion be undertaken.

In Washington, Democratic Senator Ellender of Louisiana urged the Administration to try to find out whether the Chinese on the mainland want Chiang as their leader--before we undertake to help him in his fight against the Communists.

In Korea today the ground fighing saw a number of small raids, and continued patrol action. Our fighter bombers attacked troop concentrations in the western front.

President Eisenhower today laid a wreath at the base of the statue of Abraham Lincoln.. [redacted].. on this 144th anniversary of [redacted] Lincoln's birth.

In Boston, Commerce Secretary Weeks, in a Lincoln Day speech, said the new Administration has found the "mess" IN WASHINGTON "is worse than the public thought", [redacted] Mr. Weeks says the challenge facing the Eisenhower Administration is "to make a peace economy more profitable, than a cold war production boom." He calls on businessmen to demonstrate statesmanship.. including recognition that good management-labor relations and reciprocal trade are needed."

The U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington today unanimously upheld the appeal of George L. Bowers, a Chicago and Miami gambling figure, against a contempt of congress conviction. One of the questions Bowers refused to answer was whether he knew a certain man. The court held that in a sense, the Senate Crime investigating committee "seems to have accused Bowers of guilt through "casual acquaintance" which is even worse than guilt by association."

In Dallas, 12 men..some of them residents of Mexico..have been indicted on charges of shiping more than 50-thousand dollars worth of arms to Mexico.. in violation of the neutrality act

And here in New York, former Army Sergeant Provoo, convicted of treason, faces a sentence that could be anything from five years in prison to death.

Edward R. Murrow: February 12, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

This is the season of the year for Lincoln and Jefferson-Jackson Day political speeches. There is a lot of evidence about that we have made a great deal of material and physical progress since the days of those politicians, but the quality of the ~~[illegible]~~ speech-making has not improved. Indeed, some of the things said then could not with safety be said now; and it should be remembered that when they were said originally the times were not exactly tranquil. Imagine what would have happened had President Eisenhower in his Inaugural Address said what Mr. Lincoln said: "This country with its institutions belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it, or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it."

Mr. Lincoln also gave some counsel that is applicable to the current time. He said: "If there ever could be a proper time for mere catch arguments, that time is surely not now. In times like the present men should utter nothing for which they would not willingly be responsible through time and eternity." And in 1861 Mr. Lincoln said: "If we ever have a government on the principles we profess we should remember, while we exercise our opinion, that others have also rights to the exercise of their opinions; and that we should endeavour to allow those rights and act in such a manner as to create no bad feeling."

Mr. Lincoln kept going back time after time, (and not just at the end of his speeches,) to his God and the constitution of his nation. In speaking of foreigners in this country he said: "If they look back through this history to trace their connection with those days by blood, they find they have none. They cannot carry themselves back into that glorious epoch and make themselves feel that they are part of us. But when they look through that old Declaration of Independence they find that those old men say "that we hold these truths to be self-evident," that all men are created equal." And then they feel that that moral sentiment taught in that day evidences their relation to those men; that it is the father of all moral principle in them; and that they have a right to claim it as though they were blood of the blood and flesh of the flesh of the men who wrote that Declaration. And so they are. That is the electric chord in that Declaration that links the hearts of patriotic and liberty-loving men together; that will link those patriotic hearts as long as the love of freedom exists in the minds of men throughout the world." It may be that Mr. Lincoln had a harsh and abrasive voice, but no one in recent time has marshalled words and made them march with such grandeur. And he took the Declaration of Independence literally, not as "mere rubbish, old wadding left to rot on the battlefield after the victory is won."

The speakers at Lincoln and Jefferson-Jackson Day dinners do not often quote the words of the men whose memory they honor. That could prove embarrassing to both parties. But still some of what the old-timers said has current significance. Abraham Lincoln held that: "The world has never had a good definition of the word liberty. And the American people just now are much in need of one. We all declare for liberty, but in using the same word we do not all mean the same thing. With some the word liberty may mean for each man to do as he pleases, with himself and the product of his labor. While with others the same word may mean for some men to do as they please with other men and the product of other men's labor. Here are two, not only different but incompatible things called by the same name - liberty. And it follows that each of the things is by the respective parties called by two different and incompatible names - liberty and tyranny."

And again referring to that phrase, "All men are created equal", Lincoln said: "The men who wrote it meant it to be a stumbling block to all those who in after times might seek to turn a free people back into the hateful paths of despotism. They knew the proneness of prosperity to breed tyrants. And they meant, when such should reappear in this fair land and commence their vocation, they should find left for them at least one hard nut to crack." They did, too.

We have quoted Lincoln at length ~~-- mainly because what he said made sense~~.. and because we agree with Goethe's observation that:"the best thing that history yields us is the enthusiasm it generates." On the other hand, Longfellow may have been right when he said:"Look not mournfully into the past. Wisely improve the present. It is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy Future, without fear and with a manly heart."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The government today ended price controls on eggs, poultry, soap, most fats, and oils, tire, and other rubber products. The orders go into effect at midnight. They also end price controls on gasoline and crude oil. And Price Stabilizer Freehill says crude oil and gasoline prices will probably go up considerably. He also expects an increase in prices for soaps, cleansers and detergents. The government decided not to lift controls on milk at this time. Freehill says there will be another package of de-control orders within a few days.

In Cairo today, the British and the Egyptians reached an agreement on the future of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan: that million square miles of territory, with 8 million people, that the two countries have administrerd jointly since 1899. The new agreement provides that within three years, the Sudanese people will have the right to decide whether they want to join Egypt, the British Commonwealth, or become an independent nation. British Foreign Secretary Eden says this is "a reasonable settlement of a question which has long bedevilled British-Egyptian relations." Howard Smith cables from London that the British now feel chances are much improved for having Egypt join the proposed Allied Middle East Defense Command. Today's agreement may also lead to a settlement of the dispute over the Suez Canal. Egypt's Premier Naguib says "the door is now wide open for such an understanding" with the British withdrawing their troops from Suez. Our State Department says the Sudan decision is "an event of great importance; it demonstrates the fruits of moderation, patience and understanding."

There is much less enthusiasm in the western world over Russia's decision to break diplomatic relations with Israel. Moscow claims this was done because Israeli government says the Kremlin's real purpose is to intimidate Jewish people in the Soviet Union "the culmination of a campaign of virulent slander and outspoken hostility against Israel, the Zionist movement, Jewish organization, and Jews as such.

Western diplomats believe the Russians now may also step-up their campaign to win friends among the Arab nations.

In West Germany today, Dr. James Conant, our new high commissioner, said the United States and Russia made no secret agreements covering Germany. To Germans who wondered about the meaning of President Eisenhower's statement that we will repudiate secret agreements, Dr. Conant said his understanding is that Mr. Eisenhower's statement does not affect Germany.

Tonight, Secretary of State Dulles reports on his recent European trip. He speaks over many of these stations at 10:30 p.m. eastern standard time.

Three Congressional committees today expresed an interest in questioning General Van Fleet when he returns to this country. They were interested primarily in the General's answer to this question: "Do you think a general offensive in Korea can be successful at this time?" The retiring 8th army commander answered: "Certainly." But in Honolulu today, on his way home, General Van Fleet said he never said the present United Nations forces in Korea could mount a winning offensive. He feels that would depend on a number of factors and circumstances.

Earlier, a number of congressmen, in both parties, pointed out that Van Fleet's apparent belief that an offensive now could be successful, with the forces on hand, did not jobe with General Bradley's views that such an offensive might need twice the force now available.

Generalissimo Chiang Kai Shek said from Formosa today that his Nationalist forces could invade Red China whenever they want to, without the approval of the United Nations. But, he said, while he feels such an offensive cannot wait "until we are fully prepared", it will take some time until his forces are "adequately" equipped. He said he needs air and naval weapons and ammunition. Chiang believes many Chinese on the mainland would rally to his Nationalist forces should an invasion be undertaken.

In Washington, Democratic Senator Ellender of Louisiana urged the Administration to try to find out whether the Chinese on the mainland want Chiang as their leader, before we undertake to help him in his fight against the Communists.

In Korea today the ground fighting saw a number of small raids and continued patrol action. Our fighter bombers attacked troop concentrations in the western front.

President Eisenhower today laid a wreath at the base of the statue of Abraham Lincoln, on this 144th anniversary of Lincoln's birth.

In Boston, Commerce Secretary Weeks in a Lincoln Day speech said the new Administration has found the mess in Washington is worse than the public thought,". Mr. Weeks says the challenge facing the Eisenhower Administration is "to make a peace economy more profitable than a cold war production boom." He calls on businessmen to demonstrate statesmanship, including recognition that good management-labor relations and reciprocal trade are needed."

The U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington today unanimously upheld the appeal of George L. Bowers, a Chicago and Miami gambling figure, against a contempt of congress conviction. One of the questions Bowers refused to answer was whether he knew a certain man. The court held that in a sense, the Senate Crime investigating committee "seems to have accused Bowers of guilt through "casual acquaintance," which is even worse than guilt by association."

In Dallas, 12 men, some of them residents of Mexico, have been indicted on charges of shipping more than 50-thousand dollars worth of arms to Mexico - in violation of the neutrality Act.

And here in New York, former Army Sergeant Provoo, convicted of treason, faces a sentence that could be anything from five years in prison to death.

This is the season of the year for Lincoln and Jefferson-Jackson Day political speeches. There is a lot of evidence about that we have made a great deal of material and physical progress since the days of those politicians, but the quality of the speech-making has not improved. Indeed, some of the things said then, could not with safety be said now; and it should be remembered that when they were said originally, the times were not exactly tranquil. Imagine what would have happened had President Eisenhower in his Inaugural Address said what Mr. Lincoln said: "This country with its institutions belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it, or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it."

Mr. Lincoln also gave some counsel that is applicable to the current time. He said: "If there ever could be a proper time for mere catch arguments, that time is surely now now. In times like the present men should utter nothing for which they would not willingly be responsible through time and eternity." And in 1861 Mr. Lincoln said: "If we ever have a government on the principles we profess we should remember, while we exercise our opinion, that others have also rights to the exercise of their opinions; and that we should endeavor to allow those rights and act in such a manner as to create no bad feeling."

Mr. Lincoln kept going back time after time, (and not just at the end of his speeches,) to his God and the constitution of his nation. In speaking of foreigners in this country he said: "If they look back through this history to trace their connection with those days by blood, they find they have none. They cannot carry themselves back into that glorious epoch, and make themselves feel that they are part of us. But when they look through that old Declaration of Independence they find that those old men say "that we hold these truths to be self-eviden," that all men are created equal." And then they feel that that moral sentiment taught in that day, evidences their relation to those men; that it is the father of all moral principle in them; and that they have a right to claim it as though they were blood of the blood and flesh of the flesh of the men who wrote that Declaration. And so they are. That is the electric chord in that Declaration that links the hearts of patriotic and liberty-loving men together; that will link those patriotic hearts as long as the love of freedom exists in the minds of men throughout the world." It may be that Mr. Lincoln had a harsh and abrasive voice, but no one in recent time has marshalled words and made them march with such grandeur. And he took the Declaration of Independence literally, not as "mere rubbish, old wadding left to rot on the battlefield after the victory is won."

The speakers at Lincoln and Jefferson-Jackson Day dinners do not often quote the words of the men whose memory they honor. That could prove embarrassing to both parties. But still, some of what the old-timers said has current significance. Abraham Lincoln held that: "The world has never had a good definition of the word liberty. And the American people just now are much in need of one. We all declare for liberty, but in using the same word we do not all mean the same thing. With some the word liberty may mean for each man to do as he pleases, with himself and the product of his labor. While with others the same word may mean for some men to do as they please with other men and the product of other men's labor. Here are two, not only different but incompatible things called by the same name - liberty. And it follows that each of the things is by the respective parties called by two different and incompatible names - liberty and tyranny."

And again referring to that phrase, "All men are created equal," Lincoln said: "The men who wrote it meant it to be a stumbling block to all those who in after times might seek to turn a free people back into the hateful paths of despotism. They knew the proneness of prosperity to breed tyrants. And they meant, when such should reappear in this fair land and commence their vocation, they should find left for them at least one hard nut to crack." They did, too.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We have quoted at length because we agree with Goethe's observation that: "the best thing that history yields us, is the enthusiasm it generates." On the other hand, Longfellow may have been right when he said: "Look not mournfully into the past. Wisely improve the present. It is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy Future, without fear and with a manly heart."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, Feb. 13, 1953

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles told a Senate committee today, that we are not now considering any action in the Far East, that might cause another world war. The Secretary testified in secret before a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee. He requested the secrecy..so he could talk frankly. But some of the Senators who heard him, told reporters that Mr. Dulles said: we will not undertake a blockade of China OR a major offensive in Korea, unless the Administration first consults with the leaders of Congress, and our allies. Mr. Dulles said General Van Fleet's view, that an offensive in Korea now could break the deadlock there,.is not the Administration's view. The General was speaking for himself. And in Honolulu today an aide told reporters Van Fleet will have nothing more to say on the Korean question, until he returns to Washington.

In Korea today, allied troops stopped seven Communist attacks.. and killed or wounded at least 200 enemy soldiers.

Prime Minister Nehru of India, says the President's recent order de-neutralizing Formosa has caused widespread fear in Asia, that the situation in the Far east may get worse. Nehru says "its not clear" just what the fleet orders mean. But, he says: "There is no doubt that the general impression in many countries is that it might lead to a worsening of the situation."

At the United Nations, the 15 nation Asian-African bloc that has worked towards mediation of the Korean war, met today and decided that the President's new Formosa policy has put an entirely "new light" on the Korean issue. They said: "It must be looked upon as part of a larger picture encompassing the whole far East..with larger dimensions and greater importance."

British Prime Minister Churchill and French Premier Mayer agreed in London today to work together to prevent an extension of the war in the Far East. But after two days of conferences the two premiers announced they have failed to agree on a French plan to link the British with the European Defense Community "as closely as possible." A decision has been postponed. A communique issued after today's meeting said the British proposals to back a European army are considered "insufficient" by the French. It was this European army project that Secretary of State Dulles encouraged in his recent European tour.

The Russians announced today that they have found what they call "a small, base group of Jewish bourgeois nationalist zionists" at Odessa University. And the Moscow radio says Lev Mekhlis, 64, one of the two Jewish members of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist party, has died. Moscow says death occurred after what's called "a long and serious illness."

Isreal's ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, has called on the United States and other democracies to aid Isreal in "its hour of peril." He said Russia's breaking off diplomatic relations with Isreal was "a dark event for us." [redacted]

The Polish radio announced today that its communist government has taken over control of the Polish Roman Catholic church. Hereafter, all church appointments and all transfers must be approved in advance by the government. All officials of the church in Poland must take an oath of loyalty to the government. Vatican sources says this is another step in a Communist drive to bring the church under complete government control.

[redacted]

IN WASHINGTON,

The government today relaxed controls on steel, copper and aluminum. Hereafter when top priorities have been met, mills may sell these basic metals to manufacturers on a "free market" basis. Government spokesmen say this means that the production ceilings on automobiles are now ended. An automobile maker MAY turn out as many cars as he can with the extra metals he can buy.

Senate Democrats today opened an attack on the recent speech by Agriculture Secretary Benson. Senator Gillette of Iowa said it was "UNFORTUNATE" that the Secretary had referred to the agriculture program as "disaster insurance." The Senator said the price support law was passed "to protect the farmers from disaster" not "to pay them insurance after disaster has occured." ~~And Senator Eastland of Mississippi accused the Administration of adopting a "do-nothing attitude" toward falling farm prices. He said gloom prevails in the nation's farm areas. Another~~ A number of Democratic senators spoke along similar lines. There was no reply from the Republicans.

Here in New York today, Senator Mc Carthy charged that "certain people" in the State Department's Voice of America program, ARE doing "a fairly good job of sabotaging Dulles' and Eisenhower's foreign policy program." The Senator said there are "some very questionable people" and a "vast number of good Americans" in the Voice of America program. [redacted]

And Mc Carthy told reporters:

"The fact that a person has been accused by someone else is, of course, no reason to assume that he is guilty."

The government's parole board today turned down the parole applications of Frank Costello, who is doing time for contempt of Congress, and two of the top eleven Communist leaders: Irving Potash and Benjamin Davis. [redacted]

In Mexico City, William O'Dwyer, the former ambassador and former mayor of New York, announced that he has become a Mexican immigrant. He will permently settle in that country and work as an adviser to a law firm. O'Dwyer says he is "flat broke" and is [redacted] "very happy to be able to remain" in [redacted] Mexico.

Edward R. Murrow: February 13, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The execution date for the condemned atom spies, Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, will be set on Monday. Federal Judge Irving Kaufman said today he didn't believe anything can be accomplished in too long a delay, "except bringing upon the prisoners mental anguish, by instilling false hopes in them." Counsel for the Rosenbergs asked that the executions be delayed for a month or two. The Judge said he had been harrassed more than ever by various groups, since the President denied the Rosenbergs' appeal for clemency. He said: "It is as if a signal had been given. I have received many telephone calls, and telegrams, and letters."

It was revealed in Rome today that last December Pope Pius XII intervened in the Rosenberg case. No details of how the Pope's intervention had been carried out were divulged by the Vatican newspaper. The White House spokesman said the President had not received any request from the Pope; neither had the State Department. (Former President Truman had no comment.) Later in the day the ~~APXXXX~~ Apostolic Delegation in Washington stated, that last December, it had communicated to the Department of Justice, the fact that the Holy Father had received numerous and urgent appeals for intervention in the case; and without being able to enter into the merits of the case, His Holiness felt it appropriate to bring the matter to the attention of the U.S. civil authorities." The statement added that His Holiness never refuses his interest when it is requested to save human life, because of the higher motives of charity proper to his apostolic ministry.

Judge Kaufman said the protests reaching him "seemed like a signal had been given;" and Alexander Kendrick cables from Vienna that today the whole Communist world opened an unbridled attack on the Eisenhower administration in connection with the Rosenberg case. All Communist newspapers and radio stations called for world-wide agitation from what they called "democratic forces." All satellite newspapers and all Communist papers in West Europe led their front pages with the President's rejection of the clemency plea. The Communist line was that the Eisenhower administration had started its term with a "cold-blooded double murder." One Vienna Communist paper said that the Jelke vice trial here in New York was being deliberately staged by the administration in order to detract attention from the Rosenberg case. All stories reported, as a matter of fact, that the Rosenbergs are innocent, and were convicted on framed testimony.

In France the Communist papers of course followed suit, but the conservative and non-communist papers were also highly critical. One said:

"The correctness of Eisenhower's decision may not be questioned; but its wisdom is something else again. We had all hoped for clemency that would demonstrate democratic justice tempered by mercy." Another highly influential non-communist French paper, Le Monde, front-pages an editorial saying: "A measure of clemency would not have endangered American security. The execution will not frighten Communist fanatics, who consider they have a holy mission to perform. It will only give them an extra theme of propaganda to exploit." The same paper headlines a story from its Washington correspondent: "Wave of Nationalism Made Clemency Difficult."

Judge Kaufman was obviously correct; a signal has been given; totalitarian states, whether Communist or Fascist, know how to create and make use of martyrs. The Russians are using the Rosenbergs as expendable weapons of political warfare. And the Rosenbergs, who have refused to talk, are apparently still willing instruments of the conspiracy they once served. There has been no responsible claim here that the two defendants have not received every consideration and every opportunity provided under American law. No new evidence has been produced since their conviction.

Most people familiar with Communist tactics of political warfare would probably agree that the Rosenbergs dead will be of more use to the Russians than they would be alive. Dead they can be made a symbol; alive they might one day talk. But it seems to this reporter that there is here involved something more important than a small skirmish in propaganda warfare. There is a law - it provides certain penalties. There was a trial, complete and open, conducted under the law. A verdict was reached by a jury. A sentence was imposed. And, as President Eisenhower concluded in one of the best written statements to come from the White House in a long time, he feels it his duty in the interests of the people of the United States not to set aside the verdict of their representatives.

This case will, already has, damaged us abroad. But a departure from that principle might damage us fatally.

The Rosenbergs were given every privlege to which they were entitled under American law. And as James Russell Lowell once pointed out:"Justice is commonly more merciful in the long run than pity, for it tends to foster in men those stronger qualities which make good citizens." Theodore Roosevelt summed it up when he said:"No man is above the law and no man is below it; nor do we ask any man's permission when we require him to obey it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles told a Senate committee today that we are not now considering any action in the Far East that might cause another world war. The Secretary testified in secret before a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee. He requested the secrecy, so he could talk frankly. But some of the Senators who heard him told reporters that Mr. Dulles said: we will not undertake a blockade of China or a major offensive in Korea unless the Administration first consults with the leaders of Congress and our allies. Mr. Dulles said General Van Fleet's view that an offensive in Korea now could break the deadlock there, is not the Administration's view. The General was speaking for himself. And in Honolulu today an aide told reporters Van Fleet will have nothing more to say on the Korean question until he returns to Washington.

In Korea today, allied troops stopped seven Communist attacks, and killed or wounded at least 200 enemy soldiers.

Prime Minister Nehru of India says the President's recent order de-neutralizing Formosa has caused widespread fear in Asia that the situation in the Far east may get worse. Nehru says "its not clear" just what the fleet orders mean. But, he says: "There is no doubt that the general impression in many countries is that it might lead to a worsening of the situation."

At the United Nations, the 15 nation Asian-African bloc that has worked towards mediation of the Korean war, met today and decided that the President's new Formosa policy has put an entirely "new light" on the Korean issue. They said: "It must be looked upon as part of a larger picture, encompassing the whole far East, with larger dimensions and greater importance."

British Prime Minister Churchill and French Premier Mayer agreed in London today to work together to prevent an extension of the war in the Far East. But after two days of conferences the two premiers announced they have failed to agree on a French plan to link the British with the European Defense Community "as closely as possible." A decision has been postponed. A communique issued after today's meeting said the British proposals to back a European army are considered "insufficient" by the French. It was this European army project that Secretary of State Dulles encouraged in his recent European tour.

The Russians announced today that they have found what they call a "small, base group of Jewish bourgeois nationalist zionists" at Odessa University. And the Moscow radio says Lev Mekhlis, 64, one of the two Jewish members of the central committee of the Soviet Communist party, has died. Moscow says death occurred after what's called "a long and serious illness."

Israel's ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, has called on the United States and other democracies to aid Israel in "its hour of peril." He said Russia's breaking off diplomatic relations with Israel was "a dark event for us."

The Polish radio announced today that its communist government has taken over control of the Polish Roman Catholic church. Hereafter, all church appointments and all transfers must be approved in advance by the government. All officials of the church in Poland must take an oath of loyalty to the government. Vatican sources say this is another step in a Communist drive to bring the church under complete government control.

In Washington, the Government today relaxed controls on steel, copper and aluminum. Hereafter when top priorities have been met, mills may sell these basic metals to manufacturers on a "free market" basis. Government spokesmen say this means that the production ceilings on automobiles are not ended. An automobile maker may turn out as many cars as he can with the extra metals he can buy.

Senate Democrats today opened an attack on the recent speech by Agriculture Secretary Benson. Senator Gillette of Iowa said it was "unfortunate" that the Secretary had referred to the agriculture program as "disaster insurance." The Senator said the price support law was passed "to protect the farmers from "disaster" not "to pay them insurance after disaster has occured." A number of Democratic senators spoke along similar lines. There was no reply from the Republicans.

Here in New York today, Senator McCarthy charged that "certain people" in the State Department's Voice of America program, are doing "a fairly good job of sabotaging Dulles' and Eisenhower's foreign policy program." The Senator said there are "some very questionable people" and a "vast number of good Americans" in the Voice of America program. And McCarthy told reporters: "The fact that a person has been accused by someone else is, of course, no reason to assume that he is guilty."

The government's parole board today turned down the parole applications of Frank Costello, who is doing time for contempt of Congress, and two of the top eleven Communist leaders: Irving Potash and Benjamin Davis.

In Mexico City, William O'Dwyer, the former ambassador and former mayor of New York, announced that he has become a Mexican immigrant. He will permanently settle in that country and work as an adviser to a law firm. O'Dwyer says he is "flat broke" and is "very happy to be able to remain" in Mexico.

The execution date for the condemned atom spies, Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, will be set on Monday. Federal Judge Irving Kaufman said today he didn't believe anything can be accomplished in too long a delay, "except bringing upon the prisoners mental anguish by instilling false hopes in them." Counsel for the Rosenbergs asked that the executions be delayed for a month or two. The Judge said he had been harrassed more than ever by various groups since the President denied the Rosenbergs' appeal for clemency. He said: "It is as if a signal had been given. I have received many telephone calls and telegrams and letters."

It was revealed in Rome today that last December Pope Pius XII intervened in the Rosenberg case. No details of how the Pope's intervention had been carried out were divulged by the Vatican newspaper. The White House spokesman said the President had not received any request from the Pope; neither had the State Department. (Former President Truman had no comment.) Later in the day the Apostolic Delegation in Washington stated that last December it had communicated to the Department of Justice the fact that the Holy Father had received numerous and urgent appeals for intervention in the case; and without being able to enter into the merits of the case, His Holiness felt it appropriate to bring the matter to the attention of the U.S. civil authorities." The statement added that His Holiness never refuses his interest when it is requested to save human life, because of the higher motives of charity proper to his apostolic ministry.

Judge Kaufman said the protests reaching him "seemed to him like a signal had been given;" and Alexander Kendrick cables from Vienna that today the whole Communist world opened an unbridled attack on the Eisenhower administration, in connection with the Rosenberg case. All Communist newspapers and radio stations called for world-wide agitation from what they called "democratic forces." All satellite newspapers and all Communist papers in West Europe led their front pages with the President's rejection of the clemency plea. The Communist line was that the Eisenhower administration had started its term with a "cold-blooded double murder." One Vienna Communist paper said that the Jelke vice trial here in New York was being deliberately staged by the administration in order to detract attention from the Rosenberg case. All stories reported, as a matter of fact, that the Rosenbergs are innocent, and were convicted on framed testimony.

In France the Communist papers of course followed suit, but the conservative and non-Communist papers were also highly critical. One said: "The correctness of Eisenhower's decision may not be questioned; but its wisdom is something else again. We had all hoped for clemency that would demonstrate democratic justice tempered by mery." Another highly influential non-communist French paper, Le Monde, front-pages an editorial saying: "A measure of clemency would not have endangered American security. The execution will not frighten Communist fanatics, who consider they have a holy mission to perform. It will only give them an extra theme of propaganda to exploit." The same paper headlines a story from its Washington correspondent: "Wave of Nationalism Made Clemency Difficult."

Judge Kaufman was obviously correct; a signal has been given; totalitarian states, whether Communist or Fascist, know how to create and make use of martyrs. The Russians are using the Rosenbergs as expendable weapons of political warfare. And the Rosenbergs, who have refused to talk, are apparently still willing instruments of the conspiracy they once served. There has been no responsible claim here that the two defendants have not received every consideration and every opportunity provided under American law. No new evidence has been produced since their conviction.

Most people familiar with Communist tactics of political warfare would probably agree that the Rosenbergs dead will be of more use to the Russians than they would be alive. Dead they can be made a symbol; alive they might one day talk. But it seems to this reporter that there is here involved something more important than a small skirmish in propaganda warfare. There is a law - it provides certain penalties. There was a trial, complete and open, conducted under the law. A verdict was reached by a jury. A sentence was imposed. And, as President Eisenhower concluded in one of the best written statements to come from the White House in a long time, he "feels it his duty in the interests of the people of the United States not to set aside the verdict of their representatives." This case will, already has, damaged us abroad. But a departure from that principle might damage us fatally.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Rosenbergs were given every privilege to which they were entitled under American law. And as James Russell Lowell once pointed out: "Justice is commonly more merciful in the long run than pity, for it tends to foster in men those stronger qualities which make good citizens." Theodore Roosevelt summed it up when he said: "No man is above the law and no man is below it; nor do we ask any man's permission when we require him to obey it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday Feb. 16 1953

This is the news:

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a bill to cut personal income taxes on June 30. The bill calls for a 10 per cent cut on income taxes for the last half of the year. It was approved by a vote of 21 to 4. But almost immediately, Chairman Allen of the Rules Committee said nothing will happen to this bill at least until May first. [President Eisenhower has made it clear that he wants NO reduction of taxes until steps are taken to balance the budget.]

The House Appropriations Committee today voted to cut 60 per cent of the funds requested by the Truman Administration from a supplemental appropriation bill. The biggest reduction was one billion 200-million, to keep the Defense Department running until the end of June. Defense and other departments were told to trasnfer money they have on hand to cover the additional needs. Democrats suggest that this may be more of a book-keeping operation than an economy move.. because it will be necessary later to approve funds to replace the money TRANSFERRED now.

Democratic Representative McClelland of Arkansas says he feels the seven point six billions requested by the Truman administration for foreign aid, can be cut in half.

The White House announced today that C.D. Jackson, the publisher of Fortune magazine, has been named TO assist the President "with special reponsibilities in the cold war planning of the Administration." [Mr. Jackson was deputy chief of psychological warfare under General Eisenhower in the North African and European campaigns of the last war.]

The President and other Administration leaders today met [redacted] with officials of the atomic energy program, for a general briefing.

And in a meeting with congressional leaders, the President started work on a plan to make Oveta Culp Hobby, the federal security administrator, a member of the cabinet.

This group also discussed a resolution to cancel any INTERNATIONAL [redacted] agreements made in the past that might be construed [redacted]--as Senator Taft put it--" "to limit the freedom of people for self-determination." Senator Taft said Yalta was not the only agreement discussed; the resolution would apply to parts of other agreements. The Senator said he is not aware of any secret agreements that have not been made public.

In Great Britain, Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons that he has made it clear to Washington that the British object to any plan to scrap parts of the Yalta agreement. He said a one-sided repudiation of an international agreement would not be a good thing; it would set a bad precedent which Russia might copy, particularly in Berlin. And Mr. Eden said again that Washington knows London must be consulted before any major war policy changes are made.

In Korea today, our Sabrejets shot down 3 Migs and damaged 7 others. And 200-fighter-bombers attacked a Communist troop supply area near Pyongyang. Our pilots say 96 buildings were destroyed.

On the ground--with the temperature below zero--there were more small raids and patrol clashes.

The air Force says our radar system in Japan spotted two Russian-type fighter planes over northeastern Hokkaido, the northernmost Japanese island. American Thunderjets damaged one of the enemy propeller-driven planes. We broke off the battle when the Communist planes flew back to Russian-held territory.

~~The South Korean government today proclaimed a state of emergency as a result of a very big hike in prices. The government has announced a new currency reform program.~~

The army today denied that General Van Fleet HAS urged a United Nations offensive in Korea now. The Army also says the General has not urged the use of atomic artillery in Korea.

In India, Prime Minister Nehru says the failure to recognize Communist China is "a fundamental breach of the spirit of the United Nations charter." He feels that to act as if Red China does not exist, and instead "to regard some small island off the coast of China as the real thing" is an extraordinary act.

~~In Indo China, former French political leader Reynaud said today Indo-china needs more native troops, and not more Frenchmen, to fight the Communist-led enemy. He said: "The main burden of the war must be fought by the Viet Nam because the war is being fought for them.~~

In Berlin, the U.S. high commissioner's office says it has "reliable reports" that the Communist have taken steps to complete the isolation of west Berlin from the surrounding Soviet occupation zone.

And in Denmark there are reports of a number of protests by Danish troops who do not want their draft service extended from 12 to 18 months.

Isreal's premier Ben-Gurion says his country is not going to take

Russia's "slanders" of Jewish people lying down. He says Moscow's reasons for breaking off diplomatic relations with Isreal lack any "basis in fact."

~~Democratic Senator Murray of Montana has asked the Senate to denounce Soviet propaganda of lies.~~

IN WASHINGTON,

Senator Mc Carthy charged today that a witness before his committee has been demoted because of testimony he gave. The Senator says John E. Matson, a State Department security officer, has been assigned to a less important job. But Samuel J. Boykin, Matson's superior, and ACTING head of the department's security Bureau, says Matson was not demoted. He told the committee: "Foreign service personnel are scared to death. They are afraid of Senator Mc Carthy, of the committee staff.. They are worried. They are afraid of Matson. They couldn't do their jobs." Senator Mc Carthy says the action against Mr. Matson is a REPRISAL [redacted].. he has called on Secretary of State Dulles for displinary action against Mr. Boykin.

Attorney General [redacted] Brownell ruled today that the executive order former President Truman issued shortly before he left the White House, does not make the tidelands a naval petroleum base..within the meaning of the law. Mr. Brownell says the Truman order merely transferred authority over these lands from the Interior Department to the navy department.

Here in New York, Federal Judge Kaufman set the week of March ninth as the period for the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies.

Edward R. Murrow: February 16, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

There are times when the business of diplomacy becomes transparent - when relations between nations can be followed as easily as the play on the football field. What has happened in the last few weeks in the relations between us and our allies is that we have caught our own punt, or if you prefer, we are now in a position to kick again after a double lateral pass from our Secretary of State Dulles to the French Foreign Minister Bidault, to the British Foreign Secretary Eden and then back to Mr. Dulles. Mr. Dulles first passed the ball, or the buck to the French Foreign Minister Bidault, when he told him he couldn't ask our Congress for continued and massive aid to Europe if the French failed to ratify the treaty creating a European Army. On Saturday Monsieur Bidault threw a long pass across the English Channel to Britain's Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden. To the ball or the buck he attached a note telling Mr. Eden that he might get the French Parliament to agree to the treaty, if the British would guarantee to maintain troops on the Continent as long as might be necessary. Mr. Bidault added that this was a reasonable request, since the French are being asked to re-arm "those dangerous Germans," and since a fellow team mate of Mr. Eden's, by name of Winston Churchill, had originated the idea of a European Army.

The French think they can get the treaty ratified, but if they can't, they want the British to take a fair share of the blame for fumbling, particularly in American eyes.

So over the week-end the British had the ball, or the buck. But the British are old hands at this kind of diplomatic ball-handling. So today the Foreign Office in London hinted broadly in inspired stories that Britain might indeed keep troops on the Continent alongside the French and the Germans, if of course America would also make such commitments to the defense of Western Europe. This means that the British have thrown a long lateral across the Atlantic, right back into the arms of Mr. Dulles, who threw the first pass. #This is a case of the ball, or the buck coming home to roost. #Mr. Dulles still has the ball, or the buck; but after some very clever handling - artful, scientific and for high stakes - it's back where it started.

The British have an expression, "the ball is at your feet", which as I understand it means that you can kick it, run with it, or fall over it. The ball appears to be again at Mr. Dulles's feet. # of dead men to play on their team. Today the so-called World Peace Council, a Communist organization in Prague, announced that this year its millions of adherents throughout the world will celebrate four new cultural anniversaries. This organization will bestow appropriate Communist honors on four of the latest Communist heroes who would be fighters for peace if they were alive today. In other words, they would be Communists. Last year the Communists took over the anniversaries of Leonardo da Vinci and Victor Hugo. This year the Communist fighters for peace will celebrate and propagandize the centenary of Van Gogh the Dutch painter; the quadri-centenary of Rabelais, the French writer; also the quadri-centenary of Coppernicus the Polish astronomer; and the sesqui-centennial of Emerson the American essayist. All of these men will be characterized as fighters for peace before their time. In other words, premature Communists. This may sound ridiculous to us, but we are not the ones at whom this propaganda is aimed.

Anyone who watches Russian political warfare must conclude that they do not often fumble the ball. They are now engaged in summoning the ghosts

But the Communists do not overlook the present. Today in Hungary Communist newspapers charge that Cardinal Mindzenty, who has been in jail for three years, was a notorious Zionist, and that the Vatican and Israel are joined in a great conspiracy against the Soviet Union and its satellites.

These communist newspapers have discovered two main threads of opposition to Communism, the Vatican and Israel, "joined together in a rope fashioned by the hands of American spy chiefs and hate merchants." This blast is obviously the prelude to the virtual nationalization of the Church in Hungary, similar to that which occurred in Poland over the week end. There is no evidence that either the Jews or the Catholics threaten the stability or the continuance of the Communist Empire as of now. These new moves can only be regarded as an effort to eliminate, or to tighten the controls upon doubtful or dissident groups for the testing time that the men in the Kremlin feel lies ahead.

The Russians are finding new heroes from the past (because it's pretty easy to pin any sort of label on a dead man.) Samuel Johnson once remarked: "Nothing can be of less importance, than the fortune of those who have been long lost in the grave, and from whom nothing can be feared." It would be difficult for the Russians to understand Robert Bland's observation:"Speak only what is true of the living, and honorable of the dead."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a bill to cut personal income taxes on June 30. The bill calls for a 10 per cent cut on income taxes for the last half of the year. It was approved by a vote of 21 to 4. But almost immediately, Chairman Allen of the Rules Committee said nothing will happen to this bill at least until May first. President Eisenhower has made it clear that he wants no reduction of taxes until steps are taken to balance the budget.

The House Appropriations Committee today voted to cut 60 per cent of the funds requested by the Truman Administration from a supplemental appropriation bill. The biggest reduction was one billion 200-million, to keep the Defense Department running until the end of June. Defense and other departments were told to transfer money they have on hand to cover the additional needs. Democrats suggest that this may be more of a book-keeping operation than an economy move, because it will be necessary later to approve funds to replace the money transferred now.

Democratic Representative McClelland of Arkansas says he feels the seven point six billions requested by the Truman Administration for foreign aid, can be cut in half.

The White House announced today that C.F. Jackson, the publisher of Fortune Magazine, has been named to assist the President "with special responsibilities in the cold war planning of the Administration." Mr. Jackson was deputy chief of psychological warfare under General Eisenhower in the North African and European campaigns of the last war.

The President and other Administration leaders today met with officials of the atomic energy program for a general briefing.

And at a meeting with congressional leaders the President started work on a plan to make Oveta Culp Hobby, the federal security administrator, a member of the cabinet. This group also discussed a resulution to cancel any international agreements made in the past that might be construed as Senator Taft put it, "to limit the freedom of people for self-determination." Senator Taft said Yalta was not the only agreement discussed; the resolution would apply to parts of other agreements. The Senator said he is not aware of any secret agreements that have not been made public.

In Great Britain, Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons that he has made it clear to Washington that the British object to any plan to scrap parts of the Yalta agreement. He said a one-sided repudiation of an international agreement would not be a good thing; it would set a bad precedent which Russia might copy, particularly in Berlin. And Mr. Eden said again that Washington knows London must be consulted, before any major war policy changes are made.

In Korea today, our Sabrejets shot down 3 Migs and damaged 7 others. And 200-fighter-bombers attacked a Communist troop supply area near Pyongyang. Our pilots say 96 buildings were destroyed. On the ground, with the temperature below zero, there were more small raids and patrol clashes.

The Air Force says our radar system in Japan spotted two Russian-type fighter planes over northeastern Hokkaido, the northernmost Japanese island. American Thunderjets damaged one of the enemy propeller-driven planes. We broke off the battle when the Communist planes flew back to Russian-held territory.

The army today denied that General Van Fleet has urged a United Nations offensive in Korea now. The Army also says the General has not urged the use of atomic artillery in Korea.

In India, Prime Minister Nehru says the failure to recognize Communist China is "a fundamental breach of the spirit of the United Nations Charter." He feels that to act as if Red China does not exist, and instead "to regard some small island off the coast of China as the real thing" is an extraordinary act.

In Berlin, the U.S. high commissioner's office says it has "reliable reports" that the Communist have taken steps to complete the isolation of west Berlin from the surrounding Soviet occupation zone.

And in Denmark there are reports of a number of protests by Danish troops who do not want their draft service extended from 12 to 18 months.

Israel's premier Ben-Gurion says his country is not going to take Russia's "slanders" of Jewish people lying down. He says Moscow's reasons for breaking off diplomatic relations with Israel lack any "basis in fact."

In Washington, Senator McCarthy charged today that a witness before his committee has been demoted because of testimony he gave. The Senator says John E. Matson, a State Department security officer, has been assigned to a less important job. But Samuel J. Boykin, Matson's superior, and acting head of the department's security Bureau, says Matson was not demoted. He told the committee: "Foreign service personnel are scared to death. They are afraid of Senator McCarthy, of the committee staff. They are worried. They are afraid of Matson. They couldn't do their jobs." Senator McCarthy says the action against Mr. Matson is a reprisal. He has called on Secretary of State Dulles for disiplinary action against Mr. Boykin.

Attorney General Brownell ruled today that the executive order former President Truman issued shortly before he left the White House, does not make the tidelands a naval petroleum base, within the meaning of the law. Mr. Brownell says the Truman order merely transferred authority over these lands from the Interior Department to the Navy Department. Here in New York, Federal Judge Kaufman set the week of March ninth as the period for the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies.

There are times when the business of diplomacy becomes transparent - when relations between nations can be followed as easily as the play on the football field. What has happened in the last few weeks in the relations between us and our allies is that we have caught our own punt, or if you prefer, we are now in a position to kick again after a double lateral pass - from our Secretary of State Dulles to the French Foreign Minister Bidault, to the British Foreign Secretary Eden and then back to Mr. Dulles. Mr. Dulles first passed the ball, or the buck to the French Foreign Minister Bidault, when he told him he couldn't ask our Congress for continued and massive aid to Europe if the French failed to ratify the treaty creating a European Army. On Saturday Monsieur Bidault threw a long pass across the English Channel to Britain's Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden. To the ball, or the buck he attached a note telling Mr. Eden that he might get the French Parliament to agree to the treaty, if the British would guarantee to maintain troops on the Continent as long as might be necessary. Mr. Bidault added that this was a reasonable request, since the French are being asked to re-arm "those dangerous Germans," and since a fellow team mate of Mr. Eden's, by name of Winston Churchill, had originated the idea of a European Army.

The French think they can get the treaty ratified, but if they can't, they want the British to take a fair share of the blame for fumbling particularly in American eyes.

So over the week end the British had the ball, or the buck. But the British are old hands at this kind of diplomatic ball-handling. So today the Foreign Office in London hinted broadly in inspired stories that Britain might indeed keep troops on the Continent alongside the French and the Germans, if of course America would also make such commitments to the defense of Western Europe. This means that the British have thrown a long lateral across the Atlantic, right back into the arms of Mr. Dulles, who threw the first pass. This is a case of the ball, or the buck coming home to roost. Mr. Dulles still has the ball, or the buck; but after some very clever handling - artful, scientific and for high stakes - it's back where it started.

The British have an expression, "the ball is at your feet," which as I understand it means that you can kick it, run with it, or fall over it. The ball appears to be again at Mr. Dulles's feet.

Anyone who watches Russian political warfare must conclude that they do not often fumble the ball. They are now engaged in summoning the ghosts of dead men to play on their team. Today the so-called World Peace Council, a Communist organization in Prague, announced that this year its millions of adherents throughout the world will celebrate four new cultural anniversaries. This organization will bestow appropriate Communist honors on four of the latest Communist heroes who would be fighters for peace if they were alive today. In other words, they would be Communists. Last year the Communists took over the anniversaries of Leonardo da Vinci and Victor Hugo. This year the Communist fighters for peace will celebrate and propagandize the centenary of Van Gogh the Dutch painter; the quadri-centenary of Rabelais, the French writer; also the quadri-centenary of Coppernicus the Polish astronomer; and the Sesqui-centennial of Emerson the American essayist. All of these men will be characterized as fighters for peace before their time. In other words, premature Communists. This may sound ridiculous to us, but we are not the ones at whom this propaganda is aimed.

But the Communists do not overlook the present. Today in Hungary, Communist newspapers charge that Cardinal Mindzenty, who has been in jail for three years, was a notorious Zionist, and that the Vatican and Israel are joined in a great conspiracy against the Soviet Union and its satellites.

These communist newspapers have discovered two main threads of opposition to Communism, the Vatican and Israel, "joined together in a rope fashioned by the hands of American spy chiefs and hate merchants." This blast is obviously the prelude to the virtual nationalization of the Church in Hungary, similar to that which occurred in Poland over the week end. There is no evidence that either the Jews or the Catholics threaten the stability, or the continuance of the Communist Empire as of now. These new moves can only be regarded as an effort to eliminate, or to tighten the controls, upon doubtful or dissident groups for the testing time that the men in the Kremlin feel lies ahead.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Russians are finding new heroes from the past (because it's pretty easy to pin any sort of label on a dead man.) Samuel Johnson once remarked:

Tuesday Feb. 17, 1953

This is the news:

President Eisenhower held his first presidential news conference today, and told reporters he is opposed to any tax cut now. The President had a number of things he wanted to get on the record, and answered a number of questions. Bill Costello, our White House correspondent, covered this first news conference for us. Bill..how did it go?

(5 mins ending: "and that, ed, is how the president's first news conference went today)

After meeting with reporters, the President had 20 members of the Congress into the White House for lunch. With them was Adlai Stevenson. Mr. Stevenson spent part of the morning at the State Department, "talking over old times" with Secretary of State Dulles. The former guernor of Illinois was offered all the facilities of the department, on the six months world tour he starts next month. After the White House luncheon, Mr. Stevenson said the President was very cordial, offered him any assistance he needs. [Stevenson said he was somewhat reassured to learn that the the President, Like himself, had some moments during the recent political campaign, when he felt he couldn't get through another day of campaigning.]

Secretary Dulles told the House Foreign Affairs committee today that he did not issue any ultimatum to our European allies during his recent tour of Europe. Mr. Dulles also said that during this trip "no concrete promises or pledges were given or received".

Mutual Security Administrator Harold Stassen says the President's attitude toward our allies in the free world "will be neither unilateral bullying nor multilateral milquetoast in nature." He said the Administration's policy will be "constructive and courageous..thoughtful and thorough."

The President's candidate to be ambassador to ITALY ..Mrs. Clare Booth Luce..told the Senate Foreign Relations committee today that as ambassador she could have no relations with the Vatican..."formal or informal, open or secret." Mrs. Luce, a convert to Catholicism, told the Senators:"I will follow state department directives. And I will report back as precisely and objectively and I can."

Democratic Senator Mc Clelland of Arkansas says the management of the Voice of America program is "rotten on the face of it." The Senator raises the question whether the Voice's overseas propaganda broadcasts have been "sabotaged."

The State Department revealed today that we are building a 20-million dollar rent-free housing project for American employes in west Germany. Representative Miller, New York Republican, says these quarters.. with seperate maids' rooms in each apartment..make Washington living conditions "uncivilized" by comparison.

Here in New York, Federal Judge Noonan today sentenced John D. Provoo to spend the rest of his life in prison. Provoo, a former army srgeant, was recently found guilty of wartime treason. (He told the court today that he loves this country.)

And the United States Appeals court, in this city, today stayed the execution of Atomic Spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg until at least the end of March. [They had been scheduled to die in the electric chair the week of March 9th.] The three-man court ordered the stay, to give the attorney for the Rosenbergs, time to appeal to the Supreme Court to review the case for a third time. The court said it could not, in good conscience, deny the Rosenbergs a final appeal to the Supreme Court.

In Chicago today, Henry Ford the second, called on this country to lead the free world toward freer trade, by eliminating all tariffs, and other import barriers. Mr. Ford said: American businessmen constantly applaud competition and private enterprise."So," he said," let's practise what we preach, where it will do us and our allies some real good. Lets give our friends a fair crack at the American market."

W. Rogers Herod, the president of the International General Electric Company, said in New York: "it would be a mistake to open the doors of our markets on an unselective basis to all products competing with our own, from countries having anything from one-third to one-fifth of the wage rates we have here."

In Korea today, allied forces stopped nine small Communist attacks along the front. Our Sabrejets report that they shot down another Mig. And President Rhee of South Korea says he does not want Nationalist Chinese soldiers fighting in Korea. He says:"The Chinese should try to save themselves before trying to save us. We don't want the Chinese civil war to be fought on Korean soil."

The Chinese Communist radio says 48 American planes attacked Chinese territory above the Yalu river on Sunday. There is no comment from our air force.

The Moscow Radio says Prime Minister Stalin met for a half hour

today with the Indian ambassador to Moscow. An Indian spokesman says the meeting was friendly." Presumably, the Indian ambassador brought up the question of an armistice in Korea. Last fall, Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky rejected a compromise Indian truce proposal at the United Nations General Assembly.

The British and Egyptian governments disagree on the interpretation of their recent agreement on the future of the Sudan. Last night, Egyptian Premier Naguib said the Sudanese, after three years, can chose independence, or unity with Egypt. He said "any attempt to make the Sudan a Commonwealth, will make the agreement void." But Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today that the Sudanese can request membership in the Commonwealth, if they want to.

Moscow's "Literary gazette" today accused Isreal of practising racial discrimination against Arabs: establishing a ghetto for them, and subjecting them to "intolerable conditions."

And in Washington, diplomats from seven Arab countries conferred with Undersecretary of State Smith, and then told reporters: they believe that if the United States gives Isreal any more help "of any sort" it might endanger the security of the Middle East. The Isreal government recently appealed to Washington for moral and material aid--because the Russians have broken diplomatic relations with Isreal. But a spokesman for the Arab nations says any such aid would "amount to throwing oil on a smoldering fire." He accused the Isreali government of "exploiting" the diplomatic break with Moscow to try to get more aid from America.

Here in New York, the state supreme court ruled that it has no power to decide whether a lower court judge was correct or incorrect in ordering the public and reporters banned from the Jelke trial. The Supreme Court said the proper place to decide the issue is in the Appeals Court..the highest court in New York state.

A news conference gives the reporter an opportunity to distinguish between fact and fiction. Julian Huxley once put it this way:"To speculate without facts is to attempt to enter a house of which one has not the key, by wandering aimlessly around and around, searching the wall and now and then peeping through the windows. Facts are the key." For, as Emerson said:" A little fact is worth a whole limbo of dreams."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Tuesday, February 17, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Bill Costello, our White House correspondent, covered this first news conference for us. Bill, how did it go?

COSTELLO: President Eisenhower ran off his first news conference this morning, Ed, with the adroitness of a circus ring master. While avoiding all the more obvious political pitfalls, he, nevertheless, dealt firmly with such tricky domestic issues as taxes, farm prices, price controls and with such sensitive foreign issues as atom bombs, Korea, a Chinese embargo, and secret agreements. He had a lot to say. And he said it with no more evasiveness than is considered proper for the office of the presidency.

When he entered the old treaty room, there was a two minute interval while flash bulbs twinkled furiously. And heused this interval to size up his audience, with quick, roving glances of appraisal; leaning forward with an air of alert expectancy. Then he took command of the conference.

He said he had another appointment in half an hour. Casually dismissed speculation that he had ever felt any antagonism toward the press. And announced that he had four subjects of immediate concern which could stand a bit of discussion.

There had been a faintly perceptible air of tension when he started. But all that evaporated in the next eighteen minutes as the President outlined his ideas and the reporters raced to take notes. What he had to say then and in a ten minute question period, which brought the conference to a crisp climax, boils down to something likethis: President Eisenhower said he personally has never promised a reduction in taxes; what he has said is that tax reduction is a very necessary objective in government but that it must come in the proper order, and that it hinges on a balanced budget.

In explaining the theory behind that policy, the President said we cannot have a stable currency while we have deficits; and without a stable currency, the result would be catastrophe.

He went even further and indicated that if the excess profits tax is eliminated in June, he would want a substitute of some kind to make up the lost revenue. And he admitted without quibbling that his administration is already thinking along those lines.

On the subject of farm prices, he stood firmly behindthe views expressed, last week, by Secretary of Agriculture Benson. Expressing sympathy for the farmer who has suffered from recent price declines, he argued that the removal of price and grading controls has already helped cattle men. And he revealed he has asked the Armed Services to support the market now by maximum purchases.

In what may be a hint of forthcoming decisions on export policy, he pointed out that surpluses on the farms today would have an even more depressing effect on the market if it were not for our subsidy of the international wheat pool and our food shipments in foreign aid programs.

On a third/domestic economic subject, price controls, he once again expressed confidence in the natural workings of economic law; said that with the gradual removal of controls, the situation will take care of itself and revealed that he will not ask for emergency stand-by controls, but at the same time will not hesitate to ask Congress for new powers if the decontrol program works badly.

In general, he reiterated his faith that business, labor and others will not try to take advantage of an uncontrolled economy to gouge or do anything unreasonable which would require action by Congress. But he did leave the implied threat that if his faith is disappointed, he will not hesitate either to try new remedies.

When he turned to a discussion of foreign issues, President Eisenhower tried to clear up a couple of misunderstandings. He touched briefly on Soviet Russia's possession of the atom bomb, and endorsed a recent statement of the Atomic Energy Commission saying there is no doubt Russia has a supply of atomic weapons.

On the subject of secret agreements, his attempt to clarify was not wholly successful. He said that personally he has discovered no secret agreements. At the same time he said some agreements were necessarily secret at the time of their adoption, and the only aspect of secrecy now lies in the fact that they were never submitted to the Senate for ratification as treaties. He definitely would not repudiate everything that was agreed upon, but he feels that some pronouncement must be made to assert that this government never agreed to the enslavement of any people.

Finally, Ed, the President hoisted a 'go slow' signal on the Far East. He said he is not officially considering any blockade or embargo of the Red China coast, although others in government may be. And in no case will he take action without consulting congressional leaders.

In Korea - the President said United Nations troops will not be removed while the situation remains dangerous. The South Koreans will take over the front lines when they can be armed, organized and provided with leaders, but that the timing of any such changeswill have to be decided by the military authority.

And that, Ed, is howthe President's news conference went today.

MURROW: After meeting with reporters, the President had twenty members of the Congress into the White House for lunch. With them was Adlai Stevenson.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower held his first presidential news conference today and told reporters he is opposed to any tax cut now. The President had a number of things he wanted to get on the record and answered a number of questions. Bill Costello, our White House correspondent, covered this first news conference for us. Bill, how did it go?

COSTELLO: President Eisenhower ran off his first news conference this morning, Ed, with the adroitness of a circus ring master. While avoiding all the more obvious political pitfalls, he, nevertheless, dealt firmly with such tricky domestic issues as taxes, farm prices, price controls and with such sensitive foreign issues as atom bombs, Korea, a Chinese embargo, and secret agreements. He had a lot to say. And he said it with no more evasiveness than is considered proper for the office of the presidency.

When he entered the old treaty room, there was a two minute interval while flash bulbs twinkled furiously. And heused this interval to size up his audience, with quick, roving glances of appraisal; leaning forward with an air of alert expectancy. They he took command of the conference. He said he had another appointment in half an hour. Casually dismissed speculation that he had ever felt any antagonism toward the press. And announced that he had four subjects of immediate concern which could stand a bit of discussion.

There had been a faintly perceptible air of tension when he started. But all that evaporated in the next eighteen minutes as the President outlined his ideas and the reporters raced to take notes. What he had to say then and in a ten minute question period, which brought the conference to a crisp climax, boils down to something like this: President Eisenhower said he personally has never promised tax reduction; what he has said is that tax reduction is a very necessary objective in government but that it must come in the proper order, and that it hinges on a balanced budget. In explaining the theory behind that policy, the Presidont said we cannot have a stable currency while we have deficits; and without a stable currency, the result would be catastrophe.

He went even further and indicated that if the excess profits tax is eliminated in June, he would want a substitute of some kind to make up the lost revenue. And he admitted without quibbling that his administration is already thinking along those lines.

On the subject of farm prices, he stood firmly behind the views expressed, last week, by Secretary of Agriculture Benson; expressing sympathy for the farmer who has suffered from recent price declines, he argued that the removal of price and grading controls has already helped cattle men. And he revealed he has asked the Armed Services to support the market now by maximum purchases.

In what may be a hint of forthcoming decisions on export policy, he pointed out that surpluses on the farms today would have an even more depressing effect on the market if it were not for our subsidy of the international wheat pool and our food shipments in foreign aid programs.

On a third domestic economic subject, price controls, he once again expressed confidence in the natural workings of economic law; said that with the gradual removal of controls, the situation will take care of itself and revealed that he will not ask for emergency stand-by controls, but at the same time will not hesitate to ask Congress for new powers if the decontrol program works badly. In general, he reiterated his faith that business, labor and others will not try to take advantage of an uncontrolled economy to gouge or do anything unreasonable which would require action by Congress. But he did leave the implied threat that if his faith is disappointed, he will not hesitate either to try new remedies.

When he turned to a discussion of foreign issues, President Eisenhower tried to clear up a couple of misunderstandings. He touched briefly on Soviet Russia's possession of the atom bomb, and endorsed a recent statement of the Atomic Energy Commission saying there is no doubt Russia has a supply of atomic weapons.

On the subject of secret agreements, his attempt to clarify was not wholly successful. He said that personally he has discovered no secret agreements. At the same time he said some agreements were necessarily secret at the time of their adoption, and the only aspect of secrecy now lies in the fact that they were never submitted to the Senate for ratification as treaties. He definitely would not repudiate everything that was agreed upon, but he feels that some pronouncement must be made to assert that this government never agreed to the enslavement of any people. Finally, Ed, the President hoisted a 'go slow' signal on the Far East. He said he is not officially considering any blockade or embargo of the Red China coast, although others in government may be. And in no case will he take action without consulting congressional leaders.

In Korea - the President said United Nations troops will not be removed while the situation remains dangerous. The South Koreans will take over the front lines when they can be armed, organized and provided with leaders, but that the timing of any such changes will have to be decided by the military authority. And that, Ed, is how the President's news conference went today.

MURROW: After meeting with reporters, the President had 20 members of the Congress into the White House for lunch. With them was Adlai Stevenson. Mr. Stevenson spent part of the morning at the State Department, "talking over old times" with Secretary of State Dulles. The former governor of Illinois was offered all the facilities of the department on the six months world tour he starts next month. After the White House luncheon, Mr. Stevenson said the President was very cordial, offered him any assistance he needs. Stevenson said he was somewhat reassured to learn that the President, like himself, had some moments during the recent political campaign when he felt he couldn't get through another day of campaigning.

Secretary Dulles told the House Foreign Affairs committee today that he did not issue any ultimatum to our European allies during his recent tour of Europe. Mr. Dulles also said that during this trip "no concrete promises or pledges were given or received". Mutual Security Administrator Harold Stassen says the President's attitude toward our allies in the free world "will be neither unilateral bullying nor multilateral milquetoast in nature." He said the Administration's policy will be "constructive and courageous, thoughtful and thorough."

The President's candidate to be ambassador to Italy, Mrs. Clare Booth Luce told the Senate Foreign Relations committee today that as ambassador she could have no relations with the Vatican "formal or informal, open or secret." Mrs. Luce, a convert to Catholicism, told the Senators: "I will follow state department directives. And I will report back as precisely and objectively as I can."

Democratic Senator McClelland of Arkansas says the management of the Voice of America program is "rotten on the face of it." The Senator raises the question whether the Voice's overseas propaganda broadcasts have been "sabotaged."

The State Department revealed today that we are building a 20-million dollar rent-free housing project for American employees in West Germany. Representative Miller, New York Republican, says these quarters, with separate maids' rooms in each apartment, make Washington living conditions "uncivilized" by comparison.

Here in New York, Federal Judge Noonan today sentenced John D. Provoo to spend the rest of his life in prison. Provoo, a former army Sergeant, was recently found guilty of wartime treason. He told the court today that he loves this country.

And the United States Appeals court, in this city, today stayed the execution of atomic spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg until at least the end of March. They had been scheduled to die in the electric chair the week of March 9th. The three-man court ordered the stay to give the attorney for the Rosenbergs time to appeal to the Supreme Court to review the case for a third time. The court said it could not, in good conscience, deny the Rosenbergs a final appeal to the Supreme Court.

In Chicago today, Henry Ford the second, called on this country to lead the free world toward freer trade by eliminating all tariffs and other import barriers. Mr. Ford said: American businessmen constantly applaud competition and private enterprise. "So," he said, "let's practice what we preach, where it will do us and our allies some real good. Let's give our friends a fair crack at the American market."

W. Rogers Herod, the president of the International General Electric Company, said in New York: "It would be a mistake to open the doors of our markets on an unselective basis to all products competing with our own, from countries having anything from one-third to one-fifth of the wage rates we have here."

In Korea today, allied forces stopped nine small Communist attacks along the front. Our Sabrejets report that they shot down another Mig. And President Rhee of South Korea says he does not want Nationalist Chinese soldiers fighting in Korea. He says: "The Chinese should try to save themselves before trying to save us. We don't want the Chinese civil war to be fought on Korean soil."

The Chinese Communist radio says 48 American planes attacked Chinese territory above the Yalu river on Sunday. There is no comment from our air force.

The Moscow Radio says Prime Minister Stalin met for a half hour today with the Indian ambassador to Moscow. An Indian spokesman says "the meeting was friendly." Presumably, the Indian ambassador brought up the question of an armistice in Korea. Last fall, Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky rejected a compromise Indian truce proposal at the United Nations General Assembly.

The British and Egyptian governments disagree on the interpretation of their recent agreement on the future of the Sudan. Last night, Egyptian Premier Naguib said the Sudanese, after three years, can chose independence, or unity with Egypt. He said "any attempt to make the Sudan a Commonwealth will made the agreement void." But Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today that the Sudanese can request membership in the Commonwealth if they want to.

Moscow's "Literary gazette" today accused Israel of practicing racial discrimination against Arabs: establishing a ghetto for them and subjecting them to "intolerable conditions."

And in Washington, diplomats from seven Arab countries conferred with Undersecretary of State Smith and then told reporters: they believe that if the United States gives Israel any more help "of any sort" it might endanger the security of the Middle East. The Israel government recently appealed to Washington for moral and material aid, because the Russians have broken diplomatic relations with Israel. But a spokesman for the Arab nations, says any such aid would "amount to throwing oil on a smoldering fire." He accused the Israeli government of "exploiting"the diplomatic break with Moscow to try to get more aid from America.

Here in New York, the state supreme court ruled that it has no power to decide whether a lower court judge was correct or incorrect, in ordering the public and reporters banned from the Jelke trial. The Supreme Court said the proper place to decide the issue is in the Appeals Court, the highest court in New York State.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: A news conference gives the reporter an opportunity to distinguish between fact and fiction. Julian Huxley once put it this way: "To speculate without facts is to attempt to enter a house of which one has not the key, by wandering aimlessly around and around, searching the wall and now and then peeping through the windows. Facts are the key." For, as Emerson said: "A little fact is worth a whole limbo of dreams."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday, February 18

This is the news:

The government today ended price controls on milk, butter, ice cream and other dairy products. In its third de-control order, the government said price controls will also be dropped on drugs, cosmetics, coal, lumber, farm machinery AND a number of other items, ranging from toothpaste to locomotives.

Secretary of State Dulles said today that his department is studying all possible moves, to bring pressure on the Chinese Communists. This includes a naval blockade.. action to cut the flow of strategic materials to Communist China.. and an embargo on all trade with this enemy. Mr. Dulles says the problem of cutting off war materials bound for China has been studied in the department ever since the Korean war began. ~~And he told reporters that what the President wants to do by way of repudiating certain agreements made in the past is to dramatically register a protest against Russia's breaches of agreements in the past. The administration also wants a dramatic expression of American hopes for the liberation of enslaved peoples. Mr. Dulles says he hopes that when the resolution finally comes before Congress it will receive almost unanimous approval.~~

In India today, Prime Minister Nehru told his parliament that President Eisenhower's decision TO de-neutralize Formosa "has caused grave concern all over the world." Nehru said he doesn't YET know the significance of the order to the 7th fleet..but, whatever it means, he has no doubt it has created a bad impression ..that it has seriously increased "the fear psychosis of the world." Mr. Nehru also said that talk of a blockade of China, or other such steps, is "obviously not talk of peace." And then, without mentioning any names, he said this to his parliament:"A soldier is a very fine person, in his own domain. But the intrusion of the military mentality into the chanceries of the world, represents a very great danger." The Indian leader added:"We are becoming enveloped by the military mentality. Statesmanship is being more and more governed by the military factors." Mr. Nehru also said that history will show whether democracy or totalitarianism is better. He is convinced that ultimately democracy will pay higher dividends, not only to the country involved but to the whole world.

In Korea today our Sabrejets shot down five enemy Migs and forced two others to crash. The air battles came when the Jets were supporting some 400 fighter-bombers that made a heavy attack on a Communist tank and infantry training center near Pyongyang.

The Pentagon reports that the Korean casualty list has now passed 130-thousand. Another 274 names were listed this week: 46 killed..5 missing... 223 wounded.

Democratic Representative Price of Illinois charged today that the President's proposals--so far--to end the Korean stalemate have been "a sham and little more than campaign politics." In the most outspoken attack yet made on the new Administration, Price said the President's Korean references in his state of the union meesage were merely "window dressing."

A special citizens committee that has been studying waste in the defense department, reports that military manpower, money and material can be cut "at least" ten per cent..at a savings of at least 5-billions a year, without hurting the strength of the armed forces. This commission, headed by David Sarnoff, board chairman of Radio Corporation of America, was appointed by former Defense Secretary Lovett to study military waste. It estimates that the armed forces can dismiss 500-thousand civilian and military personnel.

Representative Rayburn of Texas, former speaker of the House.. today called on the Administration to submit its own budget. He said the Truman budget has been "kicked and scuffed about." Republican Representative Halleck of Indiana said its not fair to demand a detailed budget of the administration that took office on January 20th.

And in the Senate, Senator Taft said the Democrats have nerve to criticize the Republicans because of falling farm prices - WHEN THEY'VE [redacted] been falling for two years..under the Truman administration. Democratic Senator Fulbright noted that Republican senators, too, are complaining about recent statements by Agriculture Secretary Benson. Republican Senator Aiken of Vermont said Mr. Benson is "honest as the sun..and he's going to win out in spite of well-organized attacks against him."

The House Ways and Means Committee today reported its tax cutting bill to the House and insisted a tax reduction must be the first order of business in Congress..despite the President's arguments that the budget should be balanced first.

~~Mr. Eisenhower has asked the Tariff Commission to make a further study of import duties in low priced brier pipes. The Commission had recommended that the duties be raised. But the President, noting that this case is typical of the whole tariff problem, told Congress we must preserve our economic strength while being helpful to others.~~

Secretary of State Dulles today accepted the resignation of Dr. Wilson Compton, the state department official responsible for the Voice of America. Mr. Dulles says Dr. Compton offered his resignation on the first of the year..he's being replaced in line with the Administration's desire to get new people. The resignation was announced as Senator Mc Carthy's committee..studying Voice of America operations.. heard Howard Fast, the author, refuse to say whether he is or has been a Communist. Senator Mc Carthy said Mrs. Roosevelt once helped circulate some of Fast's writings. Mrs. Roosevelt, in Ohio, says she has no idea what Mc Carthy is talking about.

The House un-American activities committee today started its investigation of communist in the nation's colleges. Two witnesses were questioned in private. Chairman Velde said today he has no comment to make now on charges by Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer of Washington that he deliberately lied..when he charged she had written a letter to Pravda expressing admiration for the Russian people. Mrs. Meyer, wife of the chairman of the Board of the Washington Post, says the letter was written by a Mrs. Mayer of Canada..and, she says, Representative Velde has refused to withdraw his charge.

C.I.O. President Reuther told the American Association of School Administrators today that "the plight of our schools has deteriorated from a national scandal to a national tragedy." He said if we can afford billions for defense, we can afford an adequate school system.

In Berlin today, Dr. Conant, our new high commissioner for western Germany warned the Russians: we will never abandon Berlin.. we will maintain our rights there.. and we will oppose any move to close the east-west border inside Berlin. [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: February 18, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Last November six European countries, France, Belgium, Holland, West Germany, Italy and Luxembourg, were to have ratified a treaty. It was called the European Defense Community, a mutual defense project which would have brought about a half-million West Germans into a single European Army under a single command. To date none of the six nations has ratified the treaty. This is our chosen instrument for the defense of Western Europe. This is the treaty that Mr. Dulles has been prodding, threatening and cajoling the European nations to get on with. (Tonight the prospects are a little worse than they have been during recent weeks.

Well-informed members of the French Parliament say they "probably" won't get around to the treaty before June. The French want some changes made before they agree to the treaty. The Germans contend that the French are trying to change the whole meaning and design of the treaty. The changes the French propose have not yet been published officially, but they are known, and the Germans don't like them. The French are demanding that their armaments industry and their troops remain under French national control. (That wasn't the original idea.) The French also demand that their occupation troops in Germany retain certain of their special privileges.

The French want permission to withdraw their troops from Europe, if they should be needed in Indo-China or North Africa. The Germans are prepared to go part way in meeting this request. / But the French also want an economic union with the Saar before they will ratify the treaty. The French are either putting forward maximum demands for trading purposes, or they are misjudging the political climate in Germany.

Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn tonight that the Germans feel they're being asked to come in as second-class partners, while bearing the biggest part of the burden.

West German Chancellor Adenauer faces a general election next September, and if he were to accept the French proposals, it might amount to political suicide. / Most of the French proposals are unacceptable to the German politicians of all Parties; and most of the German press finds these proposals presumptuous and capricious. / Chancellor Adenauer's opposition is berating him for having pursued a policy of concessions to the French, which led only to demands for more concessions. / And if Chancellor Adenauer should be unseated in the next election, West Germany would be ruled by an administration that is opposed to the whole concept of the Western Alliance.

The Germans are increasingly of the opinion that the French are trying to torpedo the whole European Army plan, while putting the blame for the sinking on the Germans. This plan was and is the basis of our European policy.

The Germans are no longer a cowering, defeated and desperate people. West Germany is again the power house of Europe, increasingly aware of its bargaining position. Chancellor Adenauer is still determined to follow the policy of European integration on a basis of equality. If he fails, as a result of this revival of French-German suspicion and mistrust, his successors in Germany will certainly demand a higher price before agreeing to join the West. And we shall have to cast about in an effort to find another policy and another program.

Western Europe has made more progress toward unity in the last five years than in the last five hundred. But neither history nor hatreds can be wiped out with dollars or exhortation. I remember riding up to the Maginot Line in 1939 with a young French captain. He pointed to a ridge line behind a small church, and he said: "My grandfather was killed on one side of that church; my father was killed on the other, both by Germans." The young captain was, I think, also killed, not far from that church and also by Germans.

I suppose one trouble is that nations act like people. But it becomes increasingly clear that the unification of Western Europe is going to be a much slower process than many of us had thought, and than ~~MMMX~~ some of us still think.

There are many obstacles to be overcome in making a united Western Europe a reality. For as Samuel Butler once remarked:"Actions are not always true sons of great and mighty resolutions." A half century ago, George Gissing put it another way:"It is because nations tend to stupidity and baseness that mankind moves so slowly; it is because individuals have a capacity for better things that it moves at all."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The government today ended price controls on milk, butter, ice cream and other dairy products. In its third de-control order, the government said price controls will also be dropped on drugs, cosmetics, coal, lumber, farm machinery and a number of other items ranging from toothpaste to locomotives.

Secretary of State Dulles said today that his department is studying all possible moves to bring pressure on the Chinese Communists. This includes a naval blockade, action to cut the flow of strategic materials to Communist China, and an embargo on all trade with this enemy. Mr. Dulles says the problem of cutting off war materials bound for China has been studied in the department ever since the Korean war began.

In India today, Prime Minister Nehru told his parliament that President Eisenhower's decision to de-neutralize Formosa "has caused grave concern all over the world." Nehru said he doesn't yet know the significance of the order to the 7th fleet, but whatever it means, he has no doubt it has created a bad impression that it has seriously increased "the fear psychosis of the world." Mr. Nehru also said that talk of a blockade of China, or other such steps, is "obviously not talk of peace." And then, without mentioning any names, he said this to his parliament: "A soldier is a very fine person in his own domain. But the intrusion of the military mentality into the chanceries of the world represents a very great danger." The Indian leader added: "We are becoming envelopped by the military mentality. Statesmanship is being more and more governed by the military factors." Mr. Nehru also said that history will show whether democracy or totalitarianism is better. He is convinced that ultimately democracy will pay higher dividends, not only to the country involved but to the whole world.

In Korea today our Sabrejets shot down five enemy Migs and forced two others to crash. The air battles came when the Jets were supporting some 400 fighter-bombers that made a heavy attack on a Communist tank and infantry training center near Pyongyang.

The Pentagon reports that the Korean casualty list has now passed 130-thousand. Another 274 names were listed this week: 46 killed, 5 missing, 223 wounded.

Democratic Representative Price of Illinois charged today that the President's proposals - so far - to end the Korean statemate have been "a sham and little more than campaign politics." In the most outspoked attack yet made on the new Administration, Price said the President's Korean references in his state of the union message were merely "window dressing."

A special citizens committee that has been studying waste in the defense department, reports that military manpower, money and material can be cut "at least" ten percent at a savings of at least 5-billions a year, without hurting the strength of the armed forces. This commission, headed by David Sarnoff, board chairman of Radio Corporation of America, was appointed by former Defense Secretary Lovett to study military waste. It estimates that the armed forces can dismiss 500-thousand civilian and military personnel.

Representative Rayburn of Texas, former speaker of the House, today called on the Administration to submit its own budget. He said the Truman budget has been "kicked and scuffed about." Republican Representative Halleck of Indiana said its not fair to demand a detailed budget of the Administration that took office on January 20th.

And in the Senate, Senator Taft said the Democrats have nerve to criticize the Republicans because of falling farm prices when they've been falling for two years, under the Truman administration. Democratic Senator Fulbright noted that Republican senators, too, are complaining about recent statements by Agriculture Secretary Benson. Republican Senator Aiken of Vermont said Mr. Benson is "honest as the sun, and he's going to win out, in spite of well-organized attacks against him."

The House Ways and Means Committee today reported its tax cutting bill to the House and insisted a tax reduction must be the first order of business in Congress, despite the President's arguments that the budget should be balanced first.

Secretary of State Dulles today accepted the resignation of Dr. Wilson Compton, the state department official responsible for the Voice of America. Mr. Dulles says Dr. Compton offered his resignation on the first of the year, he's being replaced in line with the Administration's desire to get new people. The resignation was announced as Senator McCarthy's committee, studying Voice of America operations, heard Howard Fast, the author, refuse to say whether he is or has been a Communist. Senator McCarthy said Mrs. Roosevelt once helped circulate some of Fast's writings. Mrs. Roosevelt, in Ohio, says she has no idea what McCarthy is talking about.

The House un-American activities committee today started its investigation of communism in the nation's colleges. Two witnesses were questioned in private. Chairman Velde said today he has no comment to make now on charges by Mrs. Agnes Meyer of Washington that he deliberately lied, when he charged she had written a letter to Pravda expressing admiration for the Russian people. Mrs. Meyer, wife of the chairman of the Board of the Washington Post, says the letter was written by a Mrs. Mayer of Canada, and, she says, Representative Velde has refused to withdraw his charge.

CIO President Reuther told the American Association of School Administrators today that "the plight of our schools has deteriorated from a national scandal to a national tragedy." He said if we can afford billions for defense, we can afford an adequate school system.

In Berlin today, Dr. Conant, our new high commissioner for Western Germany warned the Russians: we will never abandon Berlin. We will maintain our rights there, and we will appose any move to close the east-west border inside Berlin.

Last November, six European countries, France, Belgium, Holland, West Germany, Italy and Luxembourg, were to have ratified a treaty. It was called the European Defense Community, a mutual defense project which would have brought about a half-million West Germans into a single European Army under a single command.

To date none of the six nations has ratified the treaty. This is our chosen instrument for the defense of Western Europe. This is the treaty that Mr. Dulles has been prodding, threatening and cajoling the European nations to get on with. Tonight the prospects are a little worse than they have been during recent weeks.

Well-informed members of the French Parliament say they "probably" won't get around to the treaty before June. The French want some changes made before they agree to the treaty. The Germans contend that the French are trying to change the whole meaning and design of the treaty. The changes the French propose have not yet been published officially, but they are known, and the Germans don't like them. The French are demanding that their armaments industry and their troops remain under French national control. (That wasn't the original idea.) The French also demand that their occupation troops in Germany retain certain of their special privileges.

The French want permission to withdraw their troops from Europe, if they should be needed in Indo-China or North Africa. The Germans are prepared to go part way in meeting this request. But the French also want an economic union with the Saar before they will ratify the treaty. The French are either putting forward maximum demands for trading purposes, or they are misjudging the political climate in Germany.

Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn tonight that the Germans feel they're being asked to come in as second-class partners, while bearing the biggest part of the burden.

West German Chancellor Adenauer faces a general election next September, and if he were to accept the French proposals it might amount to political suicide. Most of the French proposals are unacceptable to the German politicians of all Parties; and most of the German press finds these proposals presumptuous and capricious. Chancellor Adenauer's opposition is berating him for having pursued a policy of concessions to the French, which led only to demands for more concessions. And if Chancellor Adenauer should be unseated in the next election, West Germany would be ruled by an Administration that is opposed to the whole concept of the Western Alliance. The Germans are increasingly of the opinion that the French are trying to torpedo the whole European Army plan, while putting the blame for the sinking on the Germans. This plan was and is the basis of our European policy.

The Germans are no longer a cowering, defeated and desperate people. West Germany is again the power house of Europe, increasingly aware of its bargaining position. Chancellor Adenauer is still determined to follow the policy of European integration on a basis of equality. If he fails, as a result of this revival of French-German suspicion and mistrust, his successors in Germany will certainly demand a higher price before agreeing to join the West. And we shall have to cast about in an effort to find another policy and another program.

Western Europe has made more progress toward unity in the last five years than in the last five hundred. But neither history nor hatreds can be wiped out with dollars or exhortation. I remember riding up to the Maginot Line in 1939 with a young French captain. He pointed to a ridge line behind a small church, and he said: "My grandfather was killed on one side of that church; my father was killed on the other; both by Germans." The Young captain was, I think, also killed, not far from that church and also by Germans.

I suppose one trouble is that nations act like people. But it becomes increasingly clear that the unification of Western Europe is going to be a much slower process than many of us had thought, and than some of us still think.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are many obstacles to be overcome in making a united Western Europe a reality. For as Samuel Butler once remarked: "Actions are not always true sons of great and mighty resolutions." A half century ago, George Gissing put it another way: "It is because nations tend to stupidity and baseness that mankind moves so slowly; it is because individuals have a capacity for better things that it moves at all."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday, Feb. 19, 1953

This is the news:

Twnety-five top Democrats and Republicans were briefed on the world situation at the White House today. Later most agreed: "the picture is grim." After a 90-minute conference, and discussions led by General Bradley, and Budget director Dodge, Senator Bridges of New Hampshire said: "It was a pretty grim picture. We must face up to the grim facts of life." House Speaker Martin said: "The outlook is grim. I feel we'll make out all right, over the long pull." Senator Millikan of Colorado said: "It didn't make you feel any better." Republican House Floor Leader Halleck said: "Everybody knows its a grim picture. Its a burden on the economy." The Democrats who attended the meeting had no comment. ~~But all seemed agreed that there no new or startling facts were presented. [illegible] unidentified representative at the conference [illegible] "You might say we're in shell of a fix."~~

The House today over-rode its appropriations committee, and agreed to provide 20 and a half million dollars to aid schools in defense areas. The President had requested these funds. The House went along with a committee decision, to cut more than a billion dollars from an additional request by the Defense department.

Defense Secretary Wilson today named a 7-man committee to recommend ways to streamline the defense department and cut down on military spending. Nelson Rockefeller will head the committee. And former Defense Secretary Lovett will be one of its members. The committee is to report to Mr. Wilson by May first.

Mutual Security Administrator Stassen told a House committee today that we must step up our military expenditures in Europe.. so that the West European nations can make more of the" hardware", we will need for the combined defense program.

And in Paris, Lord Ismay, the secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty organization, says the NATO council has now agreed to give General Ridgeway a little more than the 428-million dollars he had asked for a construction program: air bases, jet fuel pipelines, communications and headquarters installations. Last December, the NATO council cut the Ridgeway request in half, suggesting that the emphasis be put on quality rather than quantity in building Europe's defenses. Now, Lord Ismay says the Council has approved 448-millions. But no decision has been made on who contributes how much. Ismay says:"We are trying to avoid the sordid business of bargaining around the table."

The British announced today that they plan to spend four and a half billion dollars in the next budget year for their defenses. .. a new high for a peacetime defense program. They hope to get 392 million dollars worth of defense aid from us. At the same time Defense Minister Lord Alexander says it will take Britain five years to complete her present arms program. It was originally supposed to be finished by 1954.

British sources say they have cleared up a misunderstanding with Egypt on the future of the Sudan. The British say Egypt now agrees, that if the Sudanese want to join the Commonwealth in three years.. they may do so.

Queen Elizabeth today awarded the George medal to American Airman Reis Leming of Washington state, who rescued 27 persons during the recent flood. The George medal, one of Britain's highest civilian decorations, has never before been given to a foreigner in peacetime.

Here in New York today, Ambassador Lodge told our allies about diplomatic steps we are planning to deal with the Korean war. He insisted this be kept secret, and told reporters:"actions will speak louder than words."

In Korea, our planes again attacked the enemy tank repair and troop center near Pyongyang. A Fifth air force spokesman says that aside from railroad and road supply lines there is now "a scarcity of lucrative air targets in North Korea."

In Moscow the Indian ambassador denies that he discussed Korea in his recent meeting with Stalin.

In Washington, Senator Mc Carthy's committee investigating the Voice of America produced a document..said to be a confession by a Chinese Communist spy. This spy charged that the policy chief of the Voice of America..W. Bradley Connors..leaked secrets to the Communists during his postwar service in China. Mr. Connors testified: there is no truth to the charge..he has never been a Communist or a fellow traveller... he never favored the Communist regime in China.

The State Department has ordered a ban on the use over the Voice of material by "any controversial authors, communists or fellow travellers."

Attorney General Brownell says the Justice Department will stop the practise of delaying prosecution in criminal tax fraud cases just because the defendent pleads ill-health. Mr. Brownell says the courts will be asked to decide whether defendents are in good enough shape to stand trial.

A Senate committee charged today that it found "a sordid pattern of racketeering, coercion, payroll padding and other types of vice" at a New Jersey loading terminal used to ship supplies to overseas air base projects. The committee says the Claremont Terminal in Jersey City was used as a dumping ground for criminals.

A ~~grand jury in Jersey City today indicted two longshoremen on charges of accepting money from a stevedoring company to prevent strikes.~~

And New York's Democratic Congressmen Powell told the House of Representatives today that gambling and protitution are rampant in this city and top police officials may be getting a pay-off. Powell charged that Police Commissioner Monaghan is involved in a criminal conspiracy to keep the F.B.I. from investigating brutality by New York policemen,

The White House announces that Val Peterson, the former governor of Nebraska, recently named a White House assistant, will now be nominated to head the federal civil defense administration.

Chairman Velde of the House un-American activities committee said today he made "an honest mistake" when he accused Mrs. Agnes E. Myers of Washington of writing a pro-Russian letter to Pravda. He blamed it on difficulties in translating the Russian language.

Edward R. Murrow: February 19, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

That is probably the end of the news of national significance. As happens so frequently these days, it was again a recitation of rather dreary doings reflecting a ~~rather~~ somewhat ominous undertone of apprehension. # There are times when a reporter wearies of recording these little bits of history as they occur. Apparently certain listeners share this view, for upon occasion they write and say: "Can you not find something agreeable, encouraging and hopeful to report?" We can but try.

Last week a little village in Iran, called Turud - mostly mud huts - was knocked flat by an earthquake. The precise number of casualties is not yet known; but the next day an American Navy plane was over what was left of the village, flying at about 150 feet. It was dropping bread - 23 sacks of bread weighing about 100 pounds each - hot out of ovens in Teheran. As the sacks of bread went down, the "bomb line" had to be extended in order that this "manna" should not bombard the survivors who rushed out to collect it. It was a small gift from the United States.

The story was written by an old friend of mine, E.C. Daniel, for the New York Times. # Having watched high explosives and napalm and rockets and men go down from aircraft, I envied him the opportunity to write the story. What a wonderful thing it would be to see bread, instead of men or bombs, going out the door or through the bomb bay.

There's been another good story this week, too - also in the ~~XXXXX~~ Times. It has to do with a little place in Jordan, in the Middle East, ~~which this reporter had never heard of~~ - called Amman. The story of 100 acres of grass, right in the middle of a desert; country that has been wasteland for centuries. Some of our Point Four technical people, did it as a demonstration. A man by the name of Norman French, from Caspar, Wyoming, was in charge of the project. The grass is about eight inches tall and it's still growing. This grass was grown by a system that is called "water spreading". Earth dykes that hold back the run-off from cloud bursts, long enough for the water to soak into the ground. This has been practised in Montana and Wyoming for years. # Dry areas generally get one or two cloud bursts a year. The water penetrates only an inch or two, and the rest of it runs off into the gullies. But small earthen dykes can hold the water long enough, so that it soaks into the soil. Our Point Four people figure that the dykes would last thirty to forty years in the desert, and there green grass is more important than service stations in this country.

The neighboring Arab states are studying this system, hoping that it will help them reclaim the desert wasteland. (This is a minor miracle in the desert.) Arab tribesmen visit this 100 acres of grass by the score. The Government of Jordan has placed troops around the plot, to prevent grazing.

This is a small green oasis in a dry, brown land. But it worked, thanks to a man from Caspar, Wyoming, and the imagination and vision behind the Point Four Program. This one small demonstration has aroused a certain amount of hope in the Arab world, that their barren soil can be made to produce.

The atomic scientists tell us that there is at least a hope, that through the use of tracers, it may be possible to discover ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ the cause of disease in plants, and to eliminate the disease. # If this should happen, the simple and staggering result, would be that there wouldn't be any more hungry people in the world. #

This is, in all truth, a sombre and serious world. There is no guarantee that humans, having devised a method of destroying humanity, will not proceed to use it. The preparations for ultimate collision with the Soviet Union go on apace. The weight of history is on the side of the prophets of disaster. It may be that the mind of man cannot devise and carry through peaceful solutions that will ~~lead~~ Leave this complex and mechanised civilisation intact. We do not know; it is an experiment. But whatever happens, we shall need bread and grass. And that is why these two stories - one humanitarian and the other technical - seemed to come under the heading of good news.

This surely is not the best of all possible worlds in ~~which we live.~~ And it is all too infrequent that we have something encouraging to report...like the news from Iran and Jordan. There's a line from the Old Testament that sums up the picture:"As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." For the moment, at least, Cervantes was right when he said: "There is still sunshine on the wall."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Twenty-five top Democrats and Republicans were briefed on the world situation at the White House today. Later most agreed: "the picture is grim." After a 90-minute conference, and discussions led by General Bradley, and Budget director Dodge, Senator Bridges of New Hampshire said: "It was a pretty grim picture. We must face up to the grim facts of life." House Speaker Martin said: "The outlook is grim. I feel we'll make out all right, over the long pull." Senator Millikan of Colorado said: "It didn't make you feel any better. Republican House Floor Leader Halleck said: "Everybody knows its a grim picture. Its a burden on the economy." The Democrats who attended the meeting had no comment.

The House today over-rode its appropriations committee and agreed to provide 20 and a half million dollats to aid schools in defense areas. The President had requested these funds. The House went along with a committee decision to cut more than a billion dollars from an additional request by the Defense Department.

Defense Secretary Wilson today named a 7-man committee to recommend ways to streamline the defense department and cut down on military spending. Nelson Rockefeller will head the committee. And former Defense Secretary Lovett will be one of its members. The committee is to report to Mr. Wilson by May first.

Mutual Security Administrator Stassen told a House committee today that we must step up our military expenditures in Europe, so that the West European nations can make more of the "hardware", we will need for the combined defense program.

And in Paris, Lord Ismay, the secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty organization, says the NATO council has now agreed to give General Ridgeway a little more than the 428-million dollars he had asked, for a construction program: air bases, jet fuel pipelines, communications and headquarters installations. Last December, the NATO council cut the Ridgeway request in half, suggesting that the emphasis be put on quality rather than quantity in building Europe's defenses. Now, Lord Ismay says the Council has approved 448-millions. But no decision has been made on who contributes how much. Ismay says: "We are trying to avoid the sordid business of bargaining around the table."

The British announced today that they plan to spend four and a half billion dollars in the next budget year for their defenses, a new high for a peacetime defense program. They hope to get 392 million dollars worth of defense aid from us. At the same time Defense Minister Lord Alexander says it will take Britain five years to complete her present arms program. It was originally supposed to be finished by 1954.

British sources say they have cleared up a misunderstanding with Egypt on the future of the Sudan. The British say Egypt now agrees that if the Sudanese want to join the Commonwealth in three years, they may do so.

Queen Elizabeth today awarded the George medal to American Airman Reis Leming of Washington state who rescued 27 persons during the recent flood. The George medal, one of Britain's highest civilian decorations, has never before been given to a foreigner in peacetime.

Here in New York today, Ambassador Lodge told our allies about diplomatic steps we are planning to deal with the Korean war. He insisted this be kept secret and told reporters: "actions will speak louder than words."

In Korea, our planes again attacked the enemy tank repair and troop center near Pyongyang. A Fifth air force spokesman says that aside from railroad and road supply lines there is now "a scarcity of lucrative air targets in North Korea."

In Moscow the Indian ambassador denies that he discussed Korea in his recent meeting with Stalin.

In Washington, Senator McCarthy's committee investigating the Voice of America produced a document, said to be a confession by a Chinese Communist spy.

This spy charged that the policy chief of the Voice of America, W. Bradley Connors, leaked secrets to the Communists during his postwar service in China. Mr. Connors testified: there is no truth to the charge, he has never been a Communist or a fellow traveller, he never favored the Communist regime in China.

The State Department has ordered a ban on the use over the "Voice" of material by "any controversial authors, communists or fellow travellers."

Attorney General Brownell says the Justice Department will stop the practice of delaying prosecution in criminal tax fraud cases, just because the defendent pleads ill-health. Mr. Brownell says the courts will be asked to decide whether defendents are in good enough shape to stand trial.

A Senate committee charged today that it found "a sordid pattern of racketeering, coercion, payroll padding and other types of vice" at a New Jersey loading terminal used to ship supplies to overseas air base projects. The committee says the Claremont Terminal in Jersey City was used as a dumping ground for criminals.

And New York's Democratic Congressmen Powell told the House of Representatives today that gambling and prostitution are rampant in this city and top police officials may be getting a payoff. Powell charged that Police Commissioner Monaghan is involved in a criminal conspiracy to keep the FBI from investigating brutality by New York policemen.

The White House announces that Val Peterson, the former governor of Nebraska, recently named a White House assistant, will not be nominated to head the federal civil defense administration.

Chairman Velde of the House un-American activities committee said today he made "an honest mistake" when he accused Mrs. Agnes E. Myers of Washington of writing a pro-Russian letter to Pravda. He blamed it on difficulties in translating the Russian language.

That is probably the end of the news of "national significance." As happens so frequently these days, it was again a recitation of rather dreary doings reflecting a womewhat onomous undertone of apprehension. There are times when a reporter wearies of recording these little bits of history as they occur. Apparently certain listeners share this view, for upon occasion they write and say: "Can you not find something agreeable, encouraging and hopeful to report?" We can but try.

Last week a little village in Iran, called Turud - mostly mud huts - was knocked flat by an earthquake. The precise number of casualties is not yet known; but the next day an American Navy plane was over what was left of the village, flying at about 150 feet. It was dropping bread - 23 sacks of bread weighing about 100 pounds each - hot out of ovens in Teheran. As the sacks of bread went down, the "bomb line" had to be extended in order that this "manna" should not bombard the survivors who rushed out to collect it. It was a small gift from the United States.

The story was written by an old friend of mine, E.C. Daniel, for the New York Times. Having watched high explosives and napalm and rockets and men go down from aircraft, I envied him the opportunity to write the story. What a wonderful thing it would be to see bread, instead of men or bombs, going out the door or through the bomb bay.

There's been another good story this week, too - also in the Times. It has to do with a little place in Jordan, in the Middle East, called Amman. The story of 100 acres of grass, right in the middle of a desert; country that has been wasteland for centuries. Some of our Point Four technical people did it as a demonstration. A man by the name of Norman French, from Gaspar, Wyoming, was in charge of the project. The grass is about eight inches tall and it's still growing. This grass was grown by a system that is called "water spreading." Earth dykes that hold back the run-off from cloud bursts long enough for the water to soak into the ground. This has been practiced in Montana and Wyoming for years. Dry areas generally get one or two cloud bursts a year. The water penetrates only an inch or two, and the rest of it runs off into the gullies. But small earthen dykes can hold the water long enough so that it soaks into the soil. Our Point Four people figure that the dykes would last thirty to forty years in the desert, and there green grass is more important than service stations in this country.

The neighboring Arab states are studying this system, hoping that it will help them reclaim the desert wasteland. This is a minor miracle in the desert. Arab tribesmen visit this 100 acres of grass by the score. The Government of Jordan has placed troops around the plot, to prevent grazing.

This is a small green oasis in a dry-brown land. But it worked, thanks to a man from Caspar, Wyoming, and the imagination and vision behind the Point Four Program. This one small demonstration has aroused a certain amount of hope in the Arab world, that their barren soil can be made to produce.

The atomic scientists tell us that there is at least a hope that through the use of tracers it may be possible to discover the cause of disease in plants, and to eliminate the disease. If this should happen, the simple and staggering result would be that there wouldn't be any more hungry people in the world.

This is, in all truth, a sombre and serious world. There is no guarantee that humans, having devised a method of destroying humanity, will not proceed to use it. The preparations for ultimate collision with the Soviet Union go on apace. The weight of history is on the side of the prophets of disaster. It may be that the mind of man cannot devise and carry through peaceful solutions that will leave this complex and mechanized civilization intact. We do not know; it is an experiment. But whatever happens, we shall need bread and grass. And that is why these two stories - one humanitarian and the other technical - seemed to come under the heading of good news.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob DIXON.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: This surely is not the best of all possible worlds. And it is all too infrequent that we have something encouraging to report - like the news from Iran and Jordan. There's a line from the Old Testament that sums up the picture: "As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." For the moment, at least, Cervantes was right when he said: "There is still sunshine on the wall."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, Feb. 20, 1953

This is the news:

The President today asked Congress to join him in repudiating any international agreements "which have been perverted to bring about the subjugation of free people." In the proposed resolution, (promised in his State of the Union message.) President Eisenhower mentioned no specific treaty..although some Republicans have long been calling for repudiation of the Yalta agreement, which recognized Russia's right to islands off Japan. The President's resolution says in part, that he hopes Congress will join him, in declaring that we reject any interpretation, or application, of any World War two international agreements or understandings, if such agreements have been "perverted to bring about the subjugation of free people." The President also hopes Congress will join him in expressing the "hope" that captives of Soviet despotism shall again enjoy the right to determine their own kind of government, in accordance with the pledge of the Atlantic charter.

In Britain today a very high source told reporters, that the British hear a "rumbling" in the Kremlin.. a fight for power among possible successors to Stalin, when he dies. This British source says the British are puzzled about what is really happening, but they feel all is not going well in Moscow. Therefore, the British think it is particularly important that the United States take no precipitate action in the Far East, that might increase the danger of another world war. This British source also says that his country has warned the French, that they are making unacceptable demands on Germany, which might wreck the whole plan for a European army.

In Korea today our fighter-bombers again attacked enemy supply areas and roads. And the 8th army acknowledged that planes "presumed to be allied" mistakenly bombed allied troops behind their own lines. There were eight casualties.

Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana said in Washington today, that he is informed that Russian officers are active in Indo-China.. he feels this indicates a Soviet move in Indo-China "is in the making." Senator Mansfield believes the Russians will act there to counter the President's recent orders to the 7th fleet OFF FORMOSA

The House Ways and Means Committee..which recently approved a tax bill, against the President's desire.. today rejected the President's request for quick action on expanding the coverage for old age insurance.

The committee named a subcommittee to make a broad "deep-digging" study of the whole social security set-up.

The Federal Reserve Bank tonight reduced the margin requirements on stock market transactions from 75 per cent to 50 per cent. It goes into effect immediately. This means that if you buy stock you have to post only half its value with your broker or bank..instead of 75 per cent of the value.

Senator Taft said today we should follow the example of Canada.. which is cutting income taxes by 11 per cent..by cutting government expenses in order to pave the way for an American tax reduction.

And the Senator said he objects to a proposal by Republican Senator Ives of New York to eliminate the injunction provision from the Taft-Hartley law. Taft says he "certainly would not abandon" this. But Senator Ives proposes that the law be amended so that if [redacted] a strike that affects the national welfare cannot be settled, the President eventually would come to Congress and request an emergency law to deal with the situation.

A House committee recommended to Agriculture Secretary Benson that his Department buy beef and DONATE [redacted] it to the school lunch program-- in order to help support cattle prices. The committee also wants the military to step-up its beef buying program. AND IT wants a law to strengthen the credit available to cattlemen.

The Justice Department says it is reviewing all OF its files relating to civil rights cases in the New York city area. There have been charges that the Department and New York police had a special agreement on how to handle cases growing out of police brutality charges.

The Justice Department also says that a deportation warrant will be issued against Gambler Joe Adonis. He claims he's an American-born citizen. The government charges he is an unnaturalized Italian. Adonis is now doing two to three years in prison for gambling.

In Trenton, New Jersey, the five-year-old "Trenton Six" murder case came to an end TODAY when one of the six Negroes accused of murdering a second-hand dealer pleaded no defense...said he was in the store the night of the crime and identified the other five defendents as having been with him. Four of the others have been acquitted. One died in prison. Today, the last defendent, Ralph Cooper, was sentenced to six to 10 years in prison. He could be paroled in less than a year.

In St. Louis, August A. Busch, owner of the Anheuser-Busch brewery, today bought the St. Louis Cardinals baseball team for three and three-quarter million dollars. The sale was announced by Fred Sigh, the former owner who has been sentenced to prison for [redacted] tax evasion.

In West Germany today the upper house of Parliament approved an agreement to pay Israel the equivalent of 822 million dollars as a form of restitution to Jews persecuted by the Nazis. And in Berlin, Soviet border guards today fired at refugees as they fled from the Communist sector to West Berlin. This could be part of a Soviet plan to "shoot to kill" any Germans who try to reach freedom in the west.

The three western high commissioners today made public a letter to Chancellor Adenauer saying the allies expect Germany to continue paying occupation costs after June 30th.

Edward R. Murrow: February 20, 1953. 7.45. p.m.

XXXXXXXX

Senator McCarthy's committee is investigating alleged waste and mismanagement in the Voice of America. / Probably few citizens will doubt that this is a legitimate area for enquiry by a Senate Committee, for the Voice of America is the principal instrument, through which we tell our side of the story to the rest of the world. / It speaks not only for Senators, but for all citizens. And it would undoubtedly be useful if more of us knew more of what the Voice is saying, and how it is being run. # But the evidence produced so far is not very illuminating, and certainly not conclusive. / One employee asserts that his scripts were "watered down" by three employees whom he "believed to be friendly to the Communist cause." Another employee of the Voice of America, who was dismissed, says that in her opinion the anti-Communist broadcasts aimed at France, were as detrimental as could be to the welfare of our country. Another employee in the French section says, "It should be called the Voice of Moscow." Many broadcasts tended to discredit the United States, and to favor the Communist cause. One employee alleged that her boss had asked her to join some sort of "free love, collectivist, Marixist group".

A minor official in the State Department issued a directive saying that employees of the Voice of America were not to testify, unless in the presence of a Senator. Senator McCarthy said this would make his task ten times more difficult, and expensive. But this afternoon, after a ~~XXXXXXXX~~ fifty-minute closed session with Senator McCarthy, Under Secretary of State General Bedell Smith promised full cooperation in the investigation.

The Voice of America speaks on behalf of all of us. Like any big organization it probably has its share of dismissed, or disgruntled employees. Moreover, there are no listener ratings behind the Iron Curtain, or in friendly nations to which the Voice broadcasts. The result is that it is difficult, if not impossible, to tell how effective the broadcasts are, or how many people listen to them. // But if the Committee is interested in content, in what is said, the evidence is readily available. The scripts are there in the files; in many cases recordings are available, and can be listened to. The record of what has been said, how the news and information has been handled, is all there.

It would seem to this reporter that the important thing about any broadcasting operation, is what comes out of the loudspeaker. If that reflects disloyalty, or subversive intent, then it should be relatively easy to identify the individuals responsible for that content.

I am not suggesting that there are or are not disloyal persons, either now or in the past employed by the Voice of America. I do not know; and the evidence produced by the committee so far is insufficient to warrant any conclusions on this score. And the evidence, by its very nature, may in the end leave the individual citizen confused and in doubt as to the reliability and effectiveness of the Voice of America. The important thing is the end product - what comes out of the loudspeaker. The personal relationships, natural or otherwise, the private behavior or beliefs of the individuals producing the programs are of secondary importance. If some of the allegations made are true, it should be easy to document them with scripts or records. Our legitimate and primary concern should be with what is being said in our name. The arguments, the personal jealousies, the differences in news judgment that are inevitably involved in the preparation of any broadcast are of secondary importance.

This administration is making wide and apparently intelligent use of committees and study groups. It would be possible for a group of professional news men and information specialists to study the output of the Voice of America over a period of weeks or months, and to make an informed report regarding the accuracy and reliability of the reports being broadcast. Evidence of distortion, or of broadcasts prejudicial to the interests of this country could be uncovered, if it exists. Such a study of contents of the Voice of America programs would either revalidate the credentials of the people who are now running this important operation, or it would result in producing sufficient evidence to warrant their replacement. In any event, we are all entitled to know more than we now know about what is being said in our name to the rest of the world.

It would seem that the investigation of the Voice of America's operations might proceed at a more productive pace if it took into account this observation by William Sumner:"Motives and purposes are in the brain and heart of man. Consequences are in the world of fact." Of course, in the end, Richard Steele set up the ultimate goal when he said:"The noblest motive is the public good."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today asked Congress to join him in repudiating any international agreements "which have been perverted to bring about the subjugation of free people." In the proposed resolution, promised in his State of the Union message, President Eisenhower mentioned no specific treaty, although some Republicans have long been calling for repudiation of the Yalta agreement which recognized Russia's right to islands off Japan. The President's resolution says in part that he hopes Congress will join him in declaring that we reject any interpretation or application of any World War two international agreements or understandings if such agreements have been "perverted to bring about the subjugation of free people." The President also hopes Congress will join him in expressing the "hope" that captives of Soviet despotism shall again enjoy the right to determine their own kind of government in accordance with the pledge of the Atlantic charter.

In Britain today a very high source told reporters that the British hear a "rumbling" in the Kremlin, a fight for power among possible successors to Stalin, when he dies. The British source says the British are puzzled about what is really happening, but they feel all is not going well in Moscow. Therefore, the British think it is particularly important that the United States take no precipitate action in the Far East that might increase the danger of another world war. This British source also says that his country has warned the French that they are making unacceptable demands on Germany which might wreck the whole plan for a European army.

In Korea today our fighter bombers again attacked enemy supply areas and roads. And the 8th army acknowledged that planes "presumed to be allied" mistakenly bombed allied troops behind their own lines. There were eight casualties.

Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana said in Washington today that he is informed that Russian officers are active in Indo-China; he feels this indicates a Soviet move in Indo-China "is in the making." Senator Mansfield believes the Russians will act there to counter the President's recent orders to the 7th fleet off Formosa.

The House Ways and Means Committee, which recently approved a tax bill against the President's desire, today rejected the President's request for quick action on expanding the coverage for old age insurance. The committee named a subcommittee to make a broad "deep-digging" study of the whole social security set-up.

The Federal Reserve Bank tonight reduced the margin requirements on stock market transactions from 75 per cent to 50 per cent. It goes into effect immediately. This means that if you buy stock you have to post only half its value with your broker or bank, instead of 75 per cent of the value.

Senator Taft said today we should follow the example of Canada, which is cutting income taxes by 11 per cent, by cutting government expenses in order to pave the way for an American tax reduction.

And the Senator said he objects to a proposal by Republican Senator Ives of New York to eliminate the injunction provision from the Taft-Hartley law. Taft says he "certainly would not abandon" this. But Senator Ives proposes that the law be amended so that if a strike that affects the national welfare cannot be settled, the President eventually would come to Congress and request an emergency law to deal with the situation.

A House committee recommended to Agriculture Secretary Benson that his Department buy beef and donate it to the school lunch program in order to help support cattle prices. The committee also wants the military to step-up its beef buying program and it wants a law to strengthen the credit available to cattlemen.

The Justice Department says it is reviewing all of its files relating to civil rights cases in the New York city area. There have been charges that the Department and New York police had a special agreement on how to handle cases growing out of police brutality charges.

The Justice Department also says that a deportation warrant will be issued against Gambler Joe Adonis. He claims he's an American-born citizen. The government charges he is an unnaturalized Italian. Adonis is now doing two to three years in prison for gambling.

In Trenton, New Jersey, the five-year-old "Trenton Six" murder case came to an end today when one of the six Negroes accused of murdering a second-hand dealer pleaded no defense, said he was in the store the night of the crime and identified the other five defendents as having been with him. Four of the others have been acquitted. One died in prison. Today, the last defendent, Ralph Cooper, was sentenced to six to 10 years in prison. He could be paroled in less than a year.

In St. Louis, August A. Busch, owner of the Anheuser, Busch brewery, today bought the St. Louis Cardinals baseball team for three and three-quarter million dollars. The sale was announced by Fred Sigh, the former owner who has been sentenced to prison for tax evasion.

In West Germany today the upper house of Parliament approved an agreement to pay Israel the equivalent of 822 million dollars as a form of restitution to Jews persecuted by the Nazis. And in Berlin, Soviet border guards today fired at refugees as they fled from the Communist sector to West Berlin. This could be part of a Soviet plan to "shoot to kill" any Germans who try to reach freedom in the west.

The three western high commissioners today made public a letter to Chancellor Adenauer saying the allies expect Germany to continue paying occupation costs after June 30th.

Senator McCarthy's committee is investigating alleged waste and mismanagement in the Voice of America. Probably few citizens will doubt that this is a legitimate area for enquiry by a Senate Committee, for the Voice of America is the principal instrument through which we yell our side of the story to the rest of the world. It speaks not only for Senators, but for all citizens. And it would undoubtedly be useful if more of us knew more of what the Voice is saying, and how it is being run. The evidence produced so far is not very illuminating, and certainly not conclusive. One employee asserts that his scripts were "watered down" by three employees whom he "believed to be friendly to the Communist cause." Another employee of the Voice of America, who was dismissed, says that in her opinion the anti-Communist broadcasts aimed at France were as detrimental as could be to the welfare of our country. Another employee in the French section says, "It should be called the Voice of Moscow." Many broadcasts tended to discredit the United and to favor the Communist cause. One employee alleged that her boss had asked her to join some sort of "free love, collectivist, Marxist group."

A minor official in the State Department issued a directive saying that employees of the Voice of America were not to testify unless in the presence of a Senator. Senator McCarthy said this would make his task ten times more difficult, and expensive. But this afternoon, after a fifty-minute closed session with Senator McCarthy, under Secretary of state General Bedell Smith promised full cooperation in the investigation.

The Voice of America speaks on behalf of all of us. Like any big organization it probably has its share of dismissed or disgruntled employees. Moreover, there are no listener ratings behind the Iron Curtain, or in friendly nations to which the Voice broadcasts. The result is that it is difficult if not impossible to tell how effective the broadcasts are, or how many people listen to them. But if the Committee is interested in content, in what is said, the evidence is readily available. The scripts are there in the files; in many cases recordings are available and can be listened to. The record of what has been said, how the news and information has been handled, is all there.

It would seem to this reporter that the important think about any broadcasting operation is what comes out of the loudspeaker. If that reflects disloyalty, or subversive intent, then it should be relatively easy to identify the individuals responsible for that content.

I am not suggesting that there are or are not disloyal persons, either now or in the past employed by the Voice of America. I do not know; and the evidence produced by the committee so far is insufficient to warrant any conclusions on this score. And the evidence, by its very nature, may in the end leave the individual citizen confused and in doubt as to the reliability and effectiveness of the Voice of America. The important thing is the end product - what comes out of the loudspeaker. The personal relationships, natural or otherwise, the private behavior or beliefs of the individuals producing the programs are of secondary importance. If some of the allegations made are true, it should be easy to document them with scripts or records. Our legitimate and primary concern should be with what is being said in our name. The arguments, the personal jealousies, the differences in news judgment that are inevitably involved in the preparation of any broadcast are of secondary importance.

This administration is making wide and apparently intelligent use of committees and study groups. It would be possible for a group of professional news men and information specialists to study the output of the Voice of America over a period of weeks or months, and to make an informed report regarding the accuracy and reliability of the reports being broadcast. Evidence of distortion, or of broadcasts prejudicial to the interests of this country could be uncovered, if it exists. Such a study of contents of the Voice of America programs would either revalidate the credentials of the people who are now running this important operation, or it would result in producing sufficient evidence to warrant their replacement. In any event, we are all entitled to know more than we now know about what is being said in our name to the rest of the world. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that the investigation of the Voice of America's operations might proceed at a more productive pace if it took into account this observation by William Sumner: "Motives and purposes are in the brain and heart of man. Consequences are in the world of fact." Of course, in the end, Richard Steele set up the ultimate goal when he said: "The noblest motive is the public good."

Good Nite and Good Luck.

Monday, Feb. 23, 1953

This is the news:

Senator Taft said today that there is no present solution for the war in Korea "except to maintain a very strong position, in the situation where it is almost impossible to win." In a speech at Ohio Wesyleyan university, Senator Taft said he does not think the Russians are going to start another world war. He feels they are now in a position, "where they can make some gains without fighting. If they risk all in another world war, they may find their brand of communism wiped out."

Over the week-end, the Senator said in Chicago, that he would be against firing a Communist professor, unless he was sure the teacher was successfully peddling Communism to his students.

In Washington today, Chairman Jenner of a committee that's investigation communism in colleges, called Senator Taft's remarks "naive." He said: "In other words the evidence, when we complete our hearings, will be a complete answer."

Senator Mc Carthy..head of a committee investigating the Voice of America..charged today that those he called "left wing writers and commentators" are trying to make it appear that his investigation is an attack on the new Administration. Senator McCarthy said this is not so....

He said Secretary of State Dulles has done a fine job of house-cleaning in the State Department so far. McCarthy feels the trouble comes from keye aides left behind by former Secretary Acheson. He feels his committee's work is "doing Dulles a great service."

Mr. Dulles today asked Robert L. Johnson, the president of Temple University in Philadelphia, to take over the direction of the Voice of America and other State Department information activities. [redacted] Johnson made no final decision.

The White House announces that the President will nominate Charles Bohlen to succeed George F. Kennan as ambassador to Russia. And Francis White, [redacted] an assistant secretary of state when he left the department in 1933, will be named Ambassador to Mexico succeeding William O'Dwyer who resigned. No new assignment was announced for Mr. Kennan who recently returned to this country after the Russians said he was unacceptable as ambassador.

~~The President used the holiday to get in another round of golf and in both houses of Congress there was the traditional reading of George Washington's farewell address.~~

Chairman Bridges of the Senate Appropriations Committee told his colleagues TODAY that the President now wants money to keep a Council of Economic Advisors in existence. Last week the House voted to drop these funds, after Representative Taber said the President had no objection.

Chairman Hope of the House Agriculture Committee says he thinks beef prices are going to drop again. He feels additional credit facilities should be provided for cattlemen. But Republian Senator Aiken of Vermont feels "the peril point has been passed on farm prices." Agricultural experts say the Department of agriculture is considering an emergency beef buying program for the school lunch program. The Department is also considering trying to develop more foreign outlets for American farm commodities.

Interior Secretary Mc Kay today urged Congress to grant Hawaii statehood immediately. He said: the people of Hawaii want it.. they have served a long apprenticeship as a territory... a just regard for the basic right of self-government calls for prompt action.. and such action would help us to win friends among the peoples of the Far East and other areas where the idea of colonialism is bitterly resented.

~~Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama urged the Senate Interior Committee to divide among all the states the revenue from off shore oil. Both the C.I.O. and Americans for Democratic Action said Kennedy~~

~~Oil interests are trying to get the lands for their states. Senator Hill wants the revenue to be used for educational purposes. [illegible] Republican Senator Kuchel of California says the Library of Congress estimates that only 2 million dollars a year could be realized from the known petroleum reserves for the nation's schools.~~

House Speaker Martin said today he expects the House to approve the President's resolution attacking Russia's violation of world war two agreements. Speaker Martin expects no changes.

The Chinese Nationalist government today repudiated its 1945 treaty with the Soviet Union. American officials say this is largely a gesture for purposes of morale and for the diplomatic record.

In Korea today, our fighter bombers attacked the enemy's front-line positions. And the 8th army beat back three small Communist probing attacks on the central front.

The new chief of staff of Russia's armed forces--Marshal Sokolovsky--said today that "American imperialists, possessed by the mania of world domination, are striving to organize a new brigand attack on Russia and her allies." Sokolovsky made his statement in a Pravda article on the 35th anniversary of the organization of the Red Army.

Soviet Ambassador Gromyko called on Prime Minister Churchill in London today. Gromyko was invited to receive Mr. Churchill's thanks for a 252-thousand dollar contribution the Russians made for the relief of victims of the recent flood. Western diplomats noted that AS part of a new "friendship campaign" the Russians [redacted] recently contributed cash for flood sufferers in Holland and victims of an earthquake in Iran.

Mr. Churchill also announced that in celebration of the coronoation of Queen Elizabeth the government was granting a general amnesty for all world war two DEGERTERS. [redacted]

In Egypt today, Colonel Nasser, the acting army chief of staff, said in a radio broadcast that the British must either pull out of the Suez Canal area or "fight for their lives." He added: "We will fight [redacted] to the death in every possible field if our sacred rights are denied us."

More than 35-hundred residents of East Germany managed to escape to West Germany today..a new record for a single day. So far this month almost 30-thousand East Germans have managed to leave their communist-ruled homeland.

Final results from yesterday's general election in Austria show that the small Communist party lost ground.. and the Austraian Socialists rolled up their first popular vote plurality since 1930.

In Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito charges that the Soviet Union and the Vatican are trying to split the world into two hostile camps.

In Washington, Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia predicts that the Administration will have difficulty in cutting spending by more than a half billion dollars. He says the Administration could cut 10-billions from military spending but he doesn't know how much defense we'd have after that.

Edward R. Murrow: February 23, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Well —
That's the News —

This is a holiday in honor of George Washington. / For a nation that prides itself on its efficiency, we have allowed our holiday situation to fall into a deplorable ~~state.~~ mess. Different holidays in different states; no consistency, no efficiency; (and no holidays at all for people in the news business.) / In spite of this chaotic condition, we should like to propose, half seriously, and in a holiday mood, yet another holiday. / This would be a holiday - (it could be either in winter or summer) - which would be very appropriate in these times, when we don't know where we're going. For This holiday would be designed to remind us where we've been - of what the "good old days", were like. There being nothing small about this project it would, of course, be a national holiday. The provisional working title for this holiday would be: "Let's Leave Each Other Alone". / On this one day no one would work, except firemen, and skeleton hospital staffs. There would be no electric light, no hot and cold running water. All trains would stand on the sidings; all aircraft would be grounded. No newspapers would be published; radio transmitters would be silent; television screens would be dark. For 24 hours all the telephone exchanges would close down. No mail would be delivered. It would be impossible to buy gasoline, or cigarettes, or soap. Street cars, buses, taxis would be immobilised. As a matter of fact the whole country would be immobilised.

If a Senator made a speech, only those within the sound of his voice could hear him. If the Russians made a threatening gesture we wouldn't know about it till the next day. Important news, such as marriages, divorces, and who was seen dining with whom at what night club would just have to wait for 24 hours, by which time who might have been dining with some other whom wouldn't be news any more.

As a nation we are inclined to take everything for granted - from electric lights, telephones and automobiles to the absolute necessity of having ice cubes with holes in them.

We do not pretend to know what would happen during this "Let's Leave Each Other Alone" holiday; but we would guess that the average citizen could catch up with national and international affairs without much trouble once normal facilities were restored. And in the meantime there would have been that 24 hours of silence, immobility and perhaps contemplation. A few families might have become acquainted again. Some letters might have been written, with attention to style and detail. Parents might have remembered stories to tell their children. Some conversation might have grown where there had been no conversation for years. There might have developed an increased appreciation of the wonders of light and movement, and drugstores. A few people would have discovered a good book, even by candlelight. Others would have discovered that they can walk a few blocks, or climb a few stairs - the postman and the electrician, the taxi driver, the pilot and the engineer would be held in new regard. In the eyes of the younger generation the men and the industries that created these marvels that we take for granted would increase in stature.

This could be a day for the taking of a personal mental and spiritual audit, when the individual could take counsel with his conscience, his family and his neighbors. The secondary and superficial distractions would not be there. There would be enough hardship and inconvenience to send him back the next day into this civilisation of steam, scurry and scamper, with an improved appreciation of the mechanical aids available to him for either use or abuse. It would be a time for remembrance, for the counting of blessings, and for the making of resolutions which would probably be forgotten when the light and the water and the television and the radio came on again. For some the waiting time would be hard; but probably the strongest argument against our proposal for a holiday called,

"Let's Leave Each Other Alone" is that too many people might come to like it, and be reluctant, as is the case with all holidays, to see it end.

Pending the adoption of our proposal, we hope that you all had a most agreeable Washington's Birthday.

We have suggested a new national holiday which would permit us not only to take stock of ourselves, but also of this bountiful land in which we live. Henry Wadsworth Longfellow seemed to have something similar in mind when he wrote:"The holiest of all holidays are those kept by ourselves,in silence and apart." If we followed this suggestion, we might be able to raise what Thomas Gray called "that still small voice of gratitude."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senator Taft said today that there is no present solution for the war in Korea "except to maintain a very strong position in the situation where it is almost impossible to win." In a speech at Ohio Wesleyan University, Senator Taft said he dows not think the Russians are going to start another world war. He feels they are now in a position "where they can make some gains without fighting. If they risk all in another world war, they may find their brand of communism wiped out."

Over the week-end, the Senator said in Chicago that he would be against firing a Communist professor unless he was sure the teacher was successfully peddling Communism to his students.

In Washington today, Chairman Jenner of a committee that's investigating communism in colleges called Senator Taft's remarks "naive." He said: "In other words the evidence, when we complete our hearings, will be a complete answer."

Senator McCarthy, head of a committee investigating the Voice of America, charged today that those he called "left wing writers and commentators" are trying to make it appear that his investigation is an attack on the new Administration. Senator McCarthy said this is not so He said Secretary of State Dulles has done a fine job of house-cleaning in the State Department so far. McCarthy feels the trouble comes from key aides left behind by former Secretary Acheson. He feels his committee's work is "doing Dulles a great service."

Mr. Dulles today asked Robert L. Johnson, the president of Temple Universit in Philadelphia, to take over the Direction of the Voice of America and other State Department information activities. Johnson made no final decision.

The White House announces that the President will nominate Charles Bohlen to succeed George F. Kennan as ambassador to Russia. And Francis White, an assistant secretary of state when he left the department in 1933, will be named Ambassador to Mexico succeeding William O'Dwyer who resigned. No new assignment was announced for Mr. Kennan who recently returned to this country after the Russians said he was unacceptable as ambassador.

Chairman Bridges of the Senate Appropriations Committee told his colleagues today that the President now wants money to keep a Council of Economic Advisors in existence. Last week the House voted to drop these funds after Representative Taber said the President had no objection.

Chairman Hope of the House Agriculture Committee says he thinks beef prices are going to drop again. He feels additional credit facilities should be provided for cattlemen. But Republican Senator Aiken of Vermont feels "the peril point has been passed on farm prices." Agricultural experts say the Department of agriculture is considering an emergency beef buying program for the school lunch program. The Department is also considering trying to develop more foreign outlets for American farm commodities.

Interior Secretary McKay today urged Congress to grant Hawaii statehood immediately. He said: the people of Hawaii want it; they have served a long apprenticeship as a territory, a just regard for the basic right of self-government calls for prompt action, and such action would help us to win friends among the peoples of the Far East and other areas where the idea of colonialism is bitterly resented.

House Speaker Martin said today he expects the House to approve the President's resolution attacking Russia's violation of world war two agreements. Speaker Martin expects no changes.

The Chinese Nationalist government today repudiated its 1945 treaty with the Soviet Union. American officials say this is largely a gesture for purposes of morale and for the diplomatic record.

In Korea today, our fighter bombers attacked the enemy's front-line positions. And the 8th army beat back three small Communist probing attacks on the central front.

The new chief of staff of Russia's armed forces, Marshal Sokolovsky, said today that "American imperialists, possessed by the mania of world domination, are striving to organize a new brigand attack on Russia and her allies." Sokolovsky made his statement in a Pravda article on the 35th anniversary of the organization of the Red Army.

Soviet Ambassador Gromyko called on Prime Minister Churchill in London today. Gromyko was invited to receive Mr. Churchill's thanks for a 252-thousand dollar contribution the Russians made for the relief of victims of the recent flood. Western diplomats noted that as part of a new "friendship campaign" the Russians recently contributed cash for flood sufferers in Holland and victims of an earthquake in Iran.

Mr. Churchill also announced that in celebration of the coronation of Queen Elizabeth the government was granting a general amnesty for all world war two deserters.

In Egypt today, Colonel Nasser, the acting army chief of staff, said in a radio broadcast that the British must either pull out of the Suez Canal area or "fight for their lives." He added: "We will fight to the death in every possible field if our sacred rights are denied us."

More than 35-hundred residents of East Germany managed to escape to West Germany today, a new record for a single day. So far this month almost 30-thousand East Germans have managed to leave their communist-ruled homeland.

Final results from yesterday's general election in Austria show that the small Communist party lost ground, and the Austrian Socialists rolled up their first popular vote plurality since 1930.

In Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito charges that the Soviet Union, and the Vatican are trying to split the world into two hostile camps.

In Washington, Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia preducts that the Administration will have difficulty in cutting spending by more than a half billion dollars. He says the Administration could cut 10-billions from military spending but he doesn't know hos much defense we'd have after that.

Well, that's the news. This is a holiday in honor of George Washington. For a nation that prides itself on its efficiency we have allowed our holiday situation to fall into a deplorable mess. Different holidays in different states; no consistency, no efficiency; and no holidays at all for people in the news business. In spite of this chaotic condition we should like to propose, half seriously and in a holiday mood, yet another holiday. This would be a holiday (it could be either in winter or summer) which would be very appropriate in these times, when we don't know where we're going. For this holiday would be designed to remind us where we've been - of what the "good old days," were like. There being nothing small about this project it would, of course, be a national holiday. The provisional working title for this holiday would be: "Let's Leave Each Other Alone." On this one day no one would work, except firemen and skeleton hospital staffs. There would be no electric light, no hot and cold running water. All trains would stand on the sidings; all aircraft would be grounded. No newspapers would be published; radio transmitters would be silent; television screens would be dark. For 24 hours all the telephone exchanges would close down. No mail would be delivered. It would be impossible to buy gasoline, or cigarettes, or soap. Street cars, buses, taxis would be immobilized. As a matter of fact the whole country would be immobilized.

If a Senator made a speech, only those within the sound of his voice could hear him. If the Russians made a threatening gesture we wouldn't know about it till the next day. Important news, such as marriages, divorces, and who was seen dining with whom at what night club would just have to wait for 24 hours, by which time who might have been dining with some other whom and it wouldn't be news any more.

As a nation we are inclined to take everything for granted - from electric lights, telephones and automobiles to the absolute necessity of having ice cubes with holes in them.

We do not pretend to know what would happen during this "Let's Leave Each Other Alone" holiday; but we would guess that the average citizen could catch up with national and international affairs without much trouble, once normal facilities were restored. And in the meantime there would have been that 24 hours of silence, immobility and perhaps contemplation. A few families might have become acquainted again. Some letters might have been written, with attention to style and detail. Parents might have remembered stories to tell their children. Some conversation might have grown where there had been no conversation for years. There might have developed an increased appreciation of the wonders of light and movement, and drugstores. A few people would have discovered a good book, even by candlelight. Others would have discovered that they can walk a few blocks, or climb a few stairs - the postman and the electrician, the taxi driver, the pilot and the engineer would be held in new regard. In the eyes of the younger generation the men and the industries that created these marvels that we take for granted would increase in stature.

This could be a day for the taking of a personal mental and spiritual audit, when the individual could take counsel with his conscience, his family and his neighbors. The secondary and superficial distractions would not be there. There would be enough hardship and inconvenience to send him back the next day into this civilization of steam, scurry and scamper, with an improved appreciation of the mechanical aids available to him for either use or abuse. It would be a time for remembrance, for the counting of blessings, and for the making of resolutions which would probably be forgotten when the light and the water and the television and the radio came on again. For some the waiting time would be hard; but probably the strongest argument against our proposal for a holiday called, "Let's Leave Each Other Alone" is that too many people might come to like it, and be reluctant, as is the case with all holidays, to see it end.

Pending the adoption of our proposal, we hope that you all had a most agreeable Washington's Birthday.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We have suggested a new national holiday which would permit us not only to take stock of ourselves, but also of this bountiful land in which we live. Henry Wadsworth Longfellow seemed to have something similar in mind when he wrote: "The holiest of all holidays are those kept by ourselves, in silence and apart." If we followed this suggestion, we might be able to raise what Thomas Gray called "that still small voice of gratitude."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday Feb. 24, 1953.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower told United Nations delegates today that they have a "great opportunity to advance the cause of peace." In a message read to the opening session of the Assembly by President Pearson, Mr. Eisenhower said: "The U.N. already has accomplished much. I hope it will grow in strength and become increasingly effective as an instrument of peace." He told the delegates the world will watch their deliberations with deep interest and high hopes."

The President's message made no specific reference to Korea where the battlefields were comparatively quiet today after allied tank and infantry raiders broke out of a Communist trap. Our force was surrounded by the enemy for five hours before it managed to break free on the western front.

In Tokyo, General Mark Clark charged that the enemy's latest stories about U.N. germ warfare are "fantastic and utterly false charges." And the General accused the enemy of forcing captured Americans to make "confessions" about germ warfare.

The head of our military assistance program [redacted] said today that the Chinese Nationlists on Formosa will get their first shipment of jet airplanes this summer. MAJOR General Olmstead, just back from a visit to Formosa, says the Chinese now have 2-thousand good pilots, and 40 of them are in this country learning how to fly jets. The General says the Nationalist army on Formosa consists of 21 divisions.. with a total strength of 225-thousand men in uniform. He says more than three of these 21 divisions are in good fighting trim. As for the Chinese navy.. the General says its "small but responsive to training.

The British announced today that with the help of American military aid they are making their infantrymen one of the hardest-hitting forces in the world. War Minister Antony Head told the House of Commons: infantry batallaions are being equipped with an American rocket launcher, that is now being mass produced in Great Britain. [redacted] The infantry will also be supplied with a powerful anti-tank gun and a small grenade-launcher which can punch holes in big tanks.

British General Sir Richard Dale said in Germany today that American experts are now training British, Belgian and Dutch troops in both defensive and offensive atomic warfare. The General says a "certain quantity of atomic weapons will be available" to these forces in the North Atlantic army.

In Rome today, the French told the foreign ministers of five other nations that they want no basic changes in the proposed European army treaty.. just some "clarifying protocols." And West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer told the ministers they must create a European army--with a half million German troops--without delay. He said the world situation has "become worse."

Germany's Field Marshal Von Rundstedt died in Hannover today. He was 77.. and during the last war directed many of Hitler's major military campaigns.

In Washington, the Senate Banking committee was told today that the Administration hopes the international situation will not require bigger government spending in the next year. Secretary of State Dulles is reported to have told the Senators: that because of world tensions it will not be possible to make any drastic cut-backs in defense or foreign aid spending. Senator Capehart says Mr. Dulles made it clear that "the fiscal situation is not pleasant.. we have tremendous committments."

Interior Secretary McKay today urged congress to "restore" to the coastal states the title to the disputed off-shore submerged lands. In most states these lands go out for three miles.. although it runs to about 10 miles off Texas and the west coast of Florida. As for the submerged lands from there on out [redacted] to the edge of the continental shelf.. Mr. McKay would have Congress declare this to be the property of the government. The states would be entitled to oil royalties from their off-shore lands.. the federal government to the lands beyond that.

The House today approved a 300-thousand dollar appropriation for its Un-American activities committee. The vote, [redacted] 315 to two , came after committee members promised that their investigation of communism in colleges will not be a "witch hunt."

A Senate committee investigating communism in colleges was told today that Communist teachers do their worst damage outside classrooms. Dr. William Withers of Queens College, New York, said he knows at least 20 young Americans whose lives have been ruined by Communist teachers..two are under the care of psychiatrists. Two Brooklyn College instructors--Elton Gustafson and Murray Young--refused to tell the Senators whether they have ever been Communists.

Methodist Bishop G. Promley Oxnam said today the committees investigating communism in education are using methods that are deplorable .. he called them a threat not only to freedom of educational instiutions but to the freedom of the church as well. ~~He said educators are disturbed because they feel they are "about to be subjected to attacks by men who have sought political advantage in an hour of hysteria, by capitalizing upon fear and, in the name of Americanism, by attacking our institutions, discrediting our leaders and dividing our people."~~

The White House says the President will leave Washington Thursday afternoon for a long week-end of golf at Augusta, Georgia. He returns to the White House late Sunday.

In Washington today, former Senator Robert M. LaFollette, Junior, of Wisconsin, committed suicide by shooting himself in the HEAD AT HIS home. He left no notes.

The White House says Dr. Robert L. Johnson, president of Temple University, has been named acting chief of the State Department's overseas information service..which includes the Voice of America.

Edward R. Murrow: February 24, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The PRESENT ACTING head of the Voice of America, Alfred H. Morton, has been suspended. His suspension is said to be temporary, pending the results of an investigation. Mr. Morton is not accused of doing or thinking anything subversive. Apparently what happened was that Mr. Morton sent a memorandum to other officials of the Voice of America, saying that he disagreed with a directive from the State Department forbidding the use of any material from Communist or fellow-traveller sources. This directive, if literally applied, would mean that the Voice of America in its broadcasts abroad could not refute allegations made by Vishinsky at the United Nations, could not contradict articles published in Moscow claiming that we are employing germ warfare in Korea. For in order to refute it is necessary to quote, and the Department's directive forbids that.

The Voice of America is our primary instrument for reaching the peoples behind the Iron Curtain. It is not perfect; some exaggerated claims have been made about its effectiveness. (It is frequently the habit of broadcasters to over-estimate the size of their audience.) But the Russians consider this effort serious enough so that they devote about a thousand transmitters and the efforts of more than ten thousand men to jamming it.

In tomorrow's New York Herald Tribune Ed Barrett, who was engaged in Psychological Warfare at General Eisenhower's Headquarters during the war, and who later spent two years as assistant Secretary of State, in charge, among other things, of the Voice of America, has an interesting article. He says that a weapon such as the Voice of America cannot be constructed, or reconstructed overnight. Skilled personnel cannot be developed on short notice. "The constructive course is hardly that of a daily televised procession of hand-picked witnesses, consisting almost entirely of disgruntled persons who have been fired, demoted or passed over; (the kind of malcontents to be found in any large organization). Mr. Barrett contends that "an enquiry, devoted solely to the lurid testimony of the disgruntled, would make any agency or private business seem disgraceful. He does not contend that the organization is perfect; and he thinks he knows the source of most of the trouble - the inability to hire enough first-rate executives and engineers, because of their fear of being slandered, and because of low pay - the complexities and frictions that inevitably exist in any organisation which is broadcasting daily in 46 languages. Also the regulations and red tape that impede the recruiting of personnel and the general administration. Mr. Barrett feels that another difficulty is the fact that Voice of America officials have always been forced to spend more time combatting irresponsible charges of non-existent faults than they could give to the correction of real faults.

Mr. Barrett believes that a responsible investigation should examine whether there are ways to improve the effectiveness of the broadcasts; whether the transmitters are properly placed; whether effective broadcasts to Communist audiences must persistently and stridently denounce all communists; or whether it is childish to antagonise at the outset those one seeks to win over.

It seems to this reporter that the current investigation fails to concern itself with the final product, namely what is actually being broadcast. The Russians apparently regard it as a serious threat. Most reasonable men would agree that the product could be improved. Maybe the whole operation should be taken out of the hands of the State Department. But the current investigation is not concerned with the product. These broadcasts are either effective or they aren't. They are either subversive or they aren't. They are accurate or inaccurate. There are simple methods of reaching conclusions on these matters. But it does not appear that the Committee is interested in this type of information upon which informed judgment could be based.

This business of transmitting information across oceans is not simple. For example a French tax expert told government officials in Paris today that our system of withholding income taxes is "taxation with joy". He explained that the employer withholds weekly a little more than the taxpayer would normally have to pay; then at the year end the Company balances the figures and sends him a check. Thus instead of making the taxpayer fork over a big sum each year, which makes him very unhappy, we make all our taxpayers happy by paying them back a little bit of what has been withheld. Just a natural misunderstanding, no doubt.

With all of our modern methods of communication there is still nothing to compensate for the human factor of understanding...or misunderstanding - as in the case of the French tax story. The English Novelist We-da once observed:"Stories run on wheels, and every hand oils the wheels as they run." All the world would possibly be better off if it followed the advice of the New Testament:"Be swift to hear,slow to speak, slow to wrath."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday, Feb. 25, 1953.

This is the news:

Ambassador Lodge told the United Nations today: Russia started the Korean war.. Russia is continuing it.. and the Russians can end it, any time they want to. [I'd like to review the Ambassador's speech to the political committee, in a few minutes.]

General Van Fleet, the former 8th army commander, returned from Korea to San Fransisco today. After a parade through packed streets he said: "If Korea is lost, Japan and the rest of Asia would follow suit, and the Pacific ocean would become a Communist highway." The General called on all American to trust the leadership of "our new and greatest president.. General Eisenhower."

[redacted]

In Korea, our fighter-bombers again attacked an enemy factory area near Manchuria. And our jets shot down two enemy Migs. The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 228 casualties in Korea last week: 40 killed in action.. 192 wounded.. the rest missing.

The President held his second news conference today and described Korea as "a fairly major war". He said he didn't see how we could start a universal military training program on top of the draft program we now have to get men for Korean service.

The President also said, in answer to questions, that he would be willing to meet Stalin if: it would further the cause of peace.. be consistent with what Americans expected of their President and if any agreements the two men reached were self-enforcing.. that is, if they held safeguards against possible violations. The President also made it clear that we would be in an "awkward" position if we tried to repudiate all the secret war-time agreements. Some Republicans in Congress have been talking along these lines.

Mr. Eisenhower told the reporters its going to be "terrifically" hard to balance next year's budget. Or else--he said--it would have been done long ago.

And he said he is opposed to allowing Communists to be employed as teachers. The President said Congress must fix the rules for its own investigations. Its dangerous to limit this power. But he cautioned the Congress to use self-restraint to protect American liberties.

The Ford Foundation today made a 15-million-dollar grant to the Fund for the Republic. The money is to be used to determine whether our civil liberties are threatened by the present methods of combatting Communism.

Paul Hoffman, the former president of the Ford Foundation, is chairman of the Fund for the Republic.. [redacted] The Fund's board of directors says it will study: restrictions and assaults on academic freedom.. due process of law and the equal protection of laws.. the protection of minority rights.. censorship, boycotts and blacklisting by private groups.. and the principles of guilt by association and its application in this country today.

The State Department today named Robert McLeod, a former F.B.I. agent, to head its security program.. to find and punish disloyal or dangerous employes of the department.

And the Senate Rules committee recommends a loyalty check of each of the 18-hundred employes of the Senate.

The House un-American activities Committee today heard Robert G. DAVIS, [redacted] professor of English at Smith College, say that he was a Communist from 1937 to 1939. He says he joined during the depression when he felt it was "inolerable that men should be unemployed and food destroyed while people were hungry." He says he left the party because he soured on it. Professor Davis feels the Communist influence among teachers today is very slight. He gave the committee the names of 21 persons he said were Communists when he was a member at Harvard 15 years ago.

The North Carolina state supreme court today over-ruled the conviction of a Negro share-cropper on a charge of "assault by leer." A Lower court found him guilty of frightening a white girl by "leering" at her from his car. The supreme court held today that a person cannot be convicted of a criminal offense "solely for what may have been on his [redacted] mind. Human law does not reach that far."

#5

[redacted]t.

The State Department today reinstated Alfred H. Morton, the chief of the Voice of America. He was suspended yesterday. Undersecretary of State Bedell Smith says he is convinced Morton did not deliberately intend to disobey an order, saying that the Voice could not use the writings of Communists, even if such writings might be helpful to our propaganda. Mr. Smith has reprimanded Mr. Morton for what's called "lack of administrative control."

The government today ended price controls on cigarets, almost all groceries, copper, aluminum, and a number of other items. Some c[redacted] cigaret manufacturers immediately announced a price increase, which will come to a penny a pack. The nation's two largest copper producers also said their prices are going up.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has approved a resolution accusing the Soviet Union, and its satellites, of conducting "viscious and inhauman campaigns" ~~and~~ against religious and other minorities.

Six west European foreign ministers concluded a two-day meeting in Rome today, agreeing in principle that they will urge their governments to hurry the approval of a European army treaty. The ministers made it clear that French-Germany differences still exist and need "further study." Secretary of State Dulles recently urged the ministers to make some definite progress by the first of April. Italian Premier De Gasperi says: "if all goes well, the six nations may ratify the treaty before summer."

But in France today, General De Gaulle spoke up against the whole proposal. He told a news conference: "A European army treaty would be an instrument of American global policy.. it would not be a European army... but a force under the direction of the American government and under the command of an American general...(the supreme commander of the North Atlantic Treaty organization, presently is General Ridgeway) De Gaulle urged the French to reject any such army..to "refuse to serve under a foreign power"..meaning the United States.

This creates a new problem for the French government..inasmuch as the vote of deGaullists in the French parliament was necessary to confirm Rene Mayer as premier. French Socialists insist they will oppose the army plan unless the British join or pledge the closest association with the other powers.

In Czechoslovakia today, Communist leaders marked the 5th anniversary of the day when they seized power with new attacks on Edward Benes, one of the founders of the Czah republic. Communist Premier Gottwald accused the late Mr. Benes of once having tried to liquidate the Communist party.

And in Greece, the Greeks, Turkey and Yugoslavia initalied a "little balkans treaty".. for defense of their area of the Mediterranean.

Edward R. Murrow: February 25, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, in his first speech before the United Nations, said there isn't much use in trying to draw up new truce proposals in Korea, so long as the Soviet Union is determined to continue the war. Russia's Foreign Minister Vishinsky wanted the U.N. to invite the North Koreans here to argue about the war, but his proposal was voted down. Lodge contended that the rulers of the Soviet Union can "stop the war whenever they want to", and he said Mr. Vishinsky knows it.

The Lodge indictment of the Soviet Union was contained in ten points. He said the Russians planned the original aggression, and then maintained it, with aircraft, artillery, tanks and automatic weapons - after the North Korean forces were virtually destroyed they were screened by the Chinese Communists, and later returned to the battlefield, equipped with weapons made in Russia - the flow of Soviet equipment is constant and steady, and accounts for the increase of combat effectiveness of the enemy, over the past year. The Chinese started the fight with light equipment, and are now using heavy gear, supplied by the Russians. We have picked up a lot of mines and others have been washed ashore, all made in Russia. The aircraft we encounter over North Korea are of Russian make. The Chinese and North Korean Air Force now number some twenty-five hundred aircraft, all of them Russian. We figure that the Russians have supplied more than four thousand four hundred aircraft to fight against the U.N. in Korea. The ack-ack guns, many of them radar controlled, were made in Russia.

Mr. Vishinsky reserved his reply until he has had a chance to study the text of the Lodge speech. Nothing that happened at the U.N. today is likely to shorten the war in Korea. At one point Mr. Lodge said: "Apparently the Soviet Union, with its own special brand of magnanimity and generosity, is determined to carry on the war to the last Chinese." If Mr. Lodge is right it will be a long war, for the U.N. forces in Korea aren't killing very many Chinese. If anyone at the United Nations has any hope of solid accomplishment at this session, he is remaining silent.

Occasionally, and generally from Alex Kendrick in Vienna, we receive small but revealing stories of what's happening behind the Iron Curtain. For example, in Prague, to commemmorate the fifth anniversary of the Communist seizure of that country, there is being erected a gigantic statue of Stalin that will dominate the whole city. Stalin is in slightly pink granite. He will be surrounded by a peasant, a factory worker, a soldier and, according to the official announcement, a policeman with machine pistol and faithful police dog." This is probably the first time a police state will be so frankly, accurately and permanently portrayed in sculpture. The buttons on Stalin's military uniform will be the size of a loaf of bread. The whole monument will be a hundred feet high, will weigh eighteen thousand tons. Stalin's boots will be five-and-a-half feet high.

And the word from Hungary is that great success has been scored in a dancing vigilance campaign, by the abolition of what is called "Jampac". This is the Hungarian term for jitterbugging. Jampac is officially described as "a sly method of disseminating concealed American opium by way of the dance." So jitterbugging is really the opium of the people. Originally Jampac in Hungarian meant only "to shuffle along", but now it means "Surrender to the West".

These two stories from behind the Iron Curtain aren't of any real importance. But they do serve to indicate the mentality of the men who now rule those two proud countries.

Now that the United Nations is again in session, we will undoubtedly be hearing considerable oratory. Thomas Carlyle contended that "talk that does not end in any kind of action is better suppressed altogether." But Oliver Wendell Holmes took a more moderate view when he said:"Talking is like playing on the harp; there is as much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their vibration as in twanging them to bring out their music."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Ambassador Lodge told the United Nations today: Russia started the Korean war, Russia is continuing it, and the Russians can end it any time they want to. I'd like to review the Ambassador's speech to the political committee in a few minutes.

General Van Fleet, the former 8th army commander, returned from Korea to San Francisco today. After a parade through packed streets he said: "If Korea is lost, Japan and the rest of Asia would follow suit, and the Pacific ocean would become a Communist highway." The General called on all America to trust the leadership of "our new and greatest president, General Eisenhower."

In Korea, our fighter-bombers again attacked an enemy factory area near Manchuria. And our jets shot down two enemy Migs. The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 228 casualties in Korea last week: 40 killed in action, 192 wounded, the rest missing.

The President held his second news conference today and described Korea as "a fairly major war." He said he didn't see how we could start a universal military training program on top of the draft program we now have to get men for Korean service.

The President also said, in answer to questions, that he would be willing to meet Stalin if: it would further the cause of peace, be consistent with what Americans expected of their President and if any agreements the two men reached were self-enforcing; that is, if they held safeguards against possible violations. The President also made it clear that we would be in an "ackward" position if we tried to repudiate all the secret war-time agreements. Some Republicans in Congress have been talking along these lines.

Mr. Eisenhower told the reporters its going to be "terrifically" hard to balance next year's budget. Or else, he said, it would have been done long ago.

And he said he is opposed to allowing Communists to be employed as teachers. The President said Congress must fix the rules for its own investigations. It's dangerous to limit this power. But he cautioned the Congress to use self-restraint to protect American liberties.

The Ford Foundation today made a 15-million-dollar grant to the "Fund for the Republic." The money is to be used to determine whether our civil liberties are threatened by the present methods of combatting Communism, at home. Paul Hoffman, the former president of the Ford Foundation, is chairman of the Fund for the Republic. The Fund's board of directors says it will study: restrictions and assaults on academic freedom, due process of law and the equal protection of laws, the protection of minority rights, censorship, boycotts and blacklisting by private groups, and the principles of guilt by association and its application in this country today.

The State Department today named Robert McLeod, a former F.B.I. agent, to head its security program, to find and punish disloyal or dangerous employees of the department. And the Senate Rules Committee recommends a loyalty check of each of the 18-hundred employees of the Senate.

The House Un-American activities Committee today heard Robert G. Davis, professor of English at Smith College, say that he was a Communist from 1937 to 1939. He says he joined during the depression when he felt it was "intolerable that men should be unemployed and food destroyed while people were hungry." He says he left the party because he soured on it. Professor Davis feels the Communist influence among teachers today is very slight. He gave the committee the names of 21 persons he said were Communists when he was a member at Harvard 15 years ago.

The North Carolina state supreme court today over-ruled the conviction of a Negro share-cropper on a charge of "assault by leer." A Lower court found him guilty of frightening a white girl by "leering" at her from his car. The Supreme Court held today that a person cannot be convicted of a criminal offense "solely for what may have been on his mind. Human law does not reach that far."

The State Department today reinstated Alfred H. Morton, the chief of the Voice of America. He was suspended yesterday. Undersecretary of State Bedell Smith says he is convinced Morton did not deliberately intend to disobey an order saying that the Voice could not use the writings of Communists (even if such writings might be helpful to our propaganda.) Mr. Smith has reprimanded Mr. Morton for what's called "lack of administrative control."

The government today ended price controls on cigarrets, almost all groceries, copper, aluminim and a number of other items. Some cigarette manufacturers immediately announced a price increase which will come to a penny a pack. The nation's two largest copper producers also said their prices are going up.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has approved a resolution accusing the Soviet Union and its satellites of conducting "viscious and inhuman campaigns" against religious and other minorities.

Six West European foreign ministers concluded a two-day meeting in Rome today agreeing in principle that they will urge their governments to hurry the approval of a European army treaty. The ministers made it clear that French-Germany differences still exist and need "further study." Secretary of State Dulles recently urged the ministers to make some definite progress by the first of April. Italian Premier DeGasperi says: "If all goes well, the six nations may ratify the treaty before summer."

But in France today, General DeGaulle spoke up against the whole proposal. He told a news conference: a European army treaty would be an instrument of American global policy, it would not be a European army, but a force under the direction of the American government and under the command of an American general, (the supreme commander of the North Atlantic Treaty organization, presently is General Ridgeway) DeGaulle urged the French to reject any such army to "refuse to serve under a foreign power" - meaning the United States.

This creates a new problem for the French government, inasmuch as the vote of deGaullists in the French parliament was necessary to confirm Rene Mayer as premier. French Socialists insist they will oppose the army plan unless the British join or pledge the closest association with the other powers.

In Czechoslovakia today Communist leaders marked the 5th anniversary of the day when they seized power with new attacks on Edward Benes, one of the founders of the Czech republic. Communist Premier Gottwald accused the late Mr. Benes of once having tried to liquidate the Communist party.

And in Greece, the Greeks, Turkey and Yugoslavia initalied a "little balkans treaty" for defense of their area of the Mediterranean.

Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge in his first speech before the United Nations, said there isn't much use in trying to draw up new truce proposals in Korea so long as the Soviet Union is determined to continue the war. Russia's Foreign Minister Vishinsky wanted the U.N. to invite the North Koreans here to argue about the war, but his proposal was voted down. Lodge contended that the rulers of the Soviet Union can "stop the war whenever they want to," and he said Mr. Vishinsky knows it.

The Lodge indictment of the Soviet Union was contained in ten points. He said the Russians planned the original aggression, and then maintained it with aircraft, artillery, tanks and automatic weapons - after the North Korean forces were virtually destroyed they were screened by the Chinese Communists, and later returned to the battlefield equipped with weapons made in Russia. The flow of Soviet equipment is constant and steady, and accounts for the increase of combat effectiveness of the enemy over the past year. The Chinese started the fight with light equipment, and are now using heavy gear supplied by the Russians. We have picked up a lot of mines and others have been washed ashore, all made in Russia. The aircraft we encounter over North Korea are of Russian make. The Chinese and North Korean Air Force now number some twenty-five hundred aircraft, all of them Russian. We figure that the Russians have supplied more than four thousand four hundred aircraft to fight against the U.N. in Korea. The ack-ack guns, many of them radar controlled, were made in Russia.

Mr. Vishinsky reserved his reply until he has had a chance to study the text of the Lodge speech. Nothing that happened at the U.N. today is likely to shorten the war in Korea. At one point Mr. Lodge said: "Apparently the Soviet Union, with its own special brand of magnanimity and generosity, is determined to carry on the war to the last Chinese." If Mr. Lodge is right it will be a long war, for the U.N. forces in Korea aren't killing very many Chinese. If anyone at the United Nations has any hope of solid accomplishment at this session, he is remaining silent.

Occasionally, and generally from Alex Kendrick in Vienna, we receive small but revealing stories of what's happening behind the Iron Curtain. For example, in Prague, to commemorate the fifth anniversary of the Communist seizure of that country, there is being erected a gigantic statue of Stalin that will dominate the whole city. Stalin is in slightly pink granite. He will be surrounded by a peasant, a factory worker, a soldier and, according to the official announcement, a policeman with machine pistol and faithful police dog." This is probably the first time a police state will be so frankly, accurately and permanently portrayed in sculpture. The buttons on Stalin's military uniform will be the size of a loaf of bread. The whole monument will be hundred feet high, will weigh eighteen thousand tons. Stalin's boots will be five-and-a-half feet high.

And the word from Hungary is that great success has been scored in a dancing vigilance campaign, by the abolition of what is called "Janmpac." This is the Hungarian term for jitterbugging. Janmpac is officially described as "a sly method of disseminating concealed American opium by way of the dance." So jitterbugging is really the opium of the people. Originally Janmpac in Hungarian meant only "to shuffle along," but now it means "Surrender to the West."

These two stories from behind the Iron Curtain aren't of any real importance But they do serve to indicate the mentality of the men who now rule those two proud countries.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Now that the United Nations is again in session, we will undoubtedly be hearing considerable oratory. Thomas Carlyle contended that "talk that does not end in any kind of action, is better suppressed altogether." But Oliver Wendell Holmes took a more moderate view when he said: "Talking is like playing on the harp; there is as much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their vibration as in twanging them to bring out their music."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Feb. 26, 1953

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles today asked Congress to approve the President's resolution condemning Russia's violations of war-time agreements. (I'd like to review his appeal in a few minutes.) And Mr. Dulles also said an Eisenhower-Stalin meeting is "entirely in the realm of conjecture."

~~While Mr. Dulles was explaining his views on a possible Eisenhower-Stalin meeting, both the British and the French made it clear that should such a meeting eventually take place they believe they should be represented. And the~~ Russian censors TODAY permitted American correspondents in Moscow to cable home stories saying "foreign observers" in Moscow believe the Russians [redacted] welcome the President's willingness to discuss peace with the Soviet boss. These dispatches also speculate that "Berlin" could be the meeting place.

~~The K[redacted]sky what he is to say in reply to an attack on the Soviet Union made by Ambassador Lodge yesterday. Mr. Lodge told the United Nations the Russians started the Korean war and they can end it. Today,~~ At the United Nations today, Australia's delegate, Sir Percy Spender, told the Russians the world is sick and tired of propaganda speeches .. the world wants from Russia a real and constructive approach to Korea. Then the U.N. postponed the Korean debate until Monday because most of the delegates preferred not to speak until Mr. Vishinsky speaks.

Ambassador Lodge told another U.N. group today that the Administration will honor a pledge of almost 15 million dollars, made last year, for United Nations technical assistance. The pledge was made by the Truman administration.

In Korea today, allied raiders moved almost up to the main Communist line on the western front. They killed an estimated 200 Chinese. And again our fighter bombers attacked enemy supply and troop areas.

~~On Formosa, Chinese officials who are described as having access to Chiang Kai Shek's secret briefings, told American reporters~~ that the ~~Communists on the mainland are not shifting troops from Korea to the Chinese coast. Instead, they are bringing up troops from the interior and generally reinforcing their coastal defenses.~~

~~In Europe today, West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer and~~ French ~~Foreign Minister~~ Bidault spent 75 minutes discussing the future ~~of the Saar. The German leader is said to have suggested that France give up her economic rights in the Saar and permit all six Schuman plan nations to share in the products of the rich industrial valley.~~

~~The State Department says that we are going to sign an agreement with the West Germans tomorrow under which they will pay~~

~~and three quarter billion dollars to the Treasury and to private American holders of defaulted German bonds. This is supposed to help restore Germany to a place in the financial community of nations and help her increase world trade.~~

In Washington today, Senator Taft predicted that Congress will make a deep cut in military spending. And Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate committee he thinks the military budget can be cut "without diminishing the striking power of the armed services."

The President met today with Congressional leaders and some state governors, to consider ways of eliminating the duplication and waste in taxation, and other fields, now shared by both the federal and state governments. The President will set up a commission to work out changes in the law. This afternoon, Mr. Eisenhower flew to Augusta, Georgia, for a week-end golfing holiday. His four-engined plane, the Columbine, took two hours and 16 minutes for the trip.

~~Secretary of Agriculture Benson says the government is considering everything it can possibly do to help stabilize falling beef prices without using what he called "government gratuity." Mr. Benson says the cattle industry does not want controls or price supports.~~

The House-UNAmerican Activities Committee today heard Daniel J. Boorstin, a university of Chicago history professor, testify that he was a Communist before 1939. And Granville Hicks, a freelance writer, said he was a party member from 1934 until 1939. Wendell H. FURRY, [redacted], a Harvard physics professor, refused to tell the committee whether he has ever been a communist. Later he issued a statement saying he is not a member of the party and has no personal knowledge whether there is or is not any Communist party activity at Harvard or anywhere else.

~~And a report in the files of the clerk of the House of Representatives shows that Dana C. Smith, a California lawyer, collected 25-thousand dollars in campaign funds to help Vice President Nixon win the election. Mr. Smith handled the controversial 18-thousand dollar expense account that figured in the Nixon campaign. In a report to the House, Smith said he turned over most of the 25-thousand dollars he collected to Republican political committees.~~

In Los Angeles tonight, Adlai Stevenson attacks Republican leaders who [redacted] want to extend the Korean war to the Chinese Communist mainland. And he warns Democrats against trying to goad the Eisenhower administration into "quick miracles and dazzling successes." Mr. Stevenson said again: "there are no quick and easy solutions in Korea." And he TOLD DEMOCRATS: [redacted]: "Let us never sow division when it is so important to harvest unity."

Edward R. Murrow: February 26, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles had a busy day. He was trying to persuade Congress to pass, as is, the administration's resolution asserting that this country "rejects any interpretations or implications of any international agreements or understandings which have been perverted to bring about the subjugation of free peoples." The resolution also "hopes" that the people who have been subjected to captivity ~~of~~ and Soviet despotism shall again enjoy the right of self-determination.

Mr. Dulles also told the Congressmen that he did not "have any great faith" in the word of the present rulers of Soviet Russia. Any possibility of a meeting between Eisenhower and Stalin is "entirely in the realm of conjecture. Nothing whatsoever has been set up."

The Secretary of State was pressing for unanimous action on the resolution, saying that a close vote would be "worse than useless." We have recorded for you the essence of Secretary Dulles' appeal.

TAPE: (RUNS 2:33) RETURN CUE:"...LET US NOT ON THIS OCCASION DEBATE THE PAST;LET'S UNITEDLY MOVE ON TO MOLD THE FUTURE"

Mr Dulles and Pres Eisenhower both write speeches

Both President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles are urging Congress not to re-write this resolution, in an effort to blame such agreements as Yalta and Potsdam on previous Democratic administrations. Some Republicans have been pressing for this; but the President and his Secretary of State have taken the position that they don't want to rake up the dead ashes of the past. They want to avoid controversy over whether the Roosevelt and Truman administrations were guided by short-term expediency, exceeded their power, or did not act in accordance with proper constitutional procedure. If these charges were written into the resolution Many Democrats would vote against it, and the impression would be created abroad that only part of the Congress, and by a narrow majority, desired freedom for the enslaved peoples.

This resolution provides for nothing more than was agreed to in the Atlantic Charter. It costs neither men nor weapons; and its effect on the Russians and on the satellite peoples will not be immediate or considerable. Mr. Dulles warned the Congressmen not to expect "immediate tangible results from the resolution;" but he thinks it will "over the coming years revive XXXX the inherent longing for freedom which persists within the captive peoples, so that that longing becomes a mounting spiritual power which will eventually overcome the material power of Soviet dictatorship to rule what it has or to subjugate more."

This is an interesting thesis. It could happen; but in similar circumstances in history it has never happened. It would be rather difficult to imagine those men and women willing to die for freedom in Poland and Czechoslovakia, debating with any urgency the fate of this resolution before the Congress. # This administration is committed to the proposition that the people of the satellite countries must be liberated without war. Mr. Dulles believes that the longing for freedom and the spiritual power of the enslaved people will eventually overthrow the material power of the Soviet dictatorship. (Such an achievement would certainly be a remarkable victory for the free world.)

Today's testimony by Mr. Dulles differed in language but not in objective from the position previously taken by Mr. Truman and Mr. Acheson. Mr. Acheson held that in the satellite states the desire for freedom, perpetual mobilization and the frictions of the police state would ultimately have a "significant effect" on Russian power. Mr. Dulles thinks these factors will eventually overcome Russian dictatorship. Mr. Acheson thought these factors might bring about a change in the Soviet system; Mr. Dulles thinks they will.

This resolution is essentially a denunciation of Russia for breaking agreements, and a proclamation of hope -(that is the word used)- hope - that the captive peoples shall "have all their sovereign rights of self-government restored to them, all in accordance with the Atlantic Charter." The Atlantic Charter, you will remember, was signed at sea, before this country entered the late war. When it was announced in London, where the nights were rather noisy, a tired British journalist, with a great knowledge of history said: "It reads like a report from our yachting correspondent." Resolutions do not weigh heavily in the balance of power.

We were speaking of the administration's approach to the peoples locked behind the iron curtain. Part of our policy, it would seem, is based on Thomas Fuller's contention that "hope is as cheap as despair." Fortunately, as Homer wrote in the Illiad: "The fates have given man an enduring soul." But Thomas Reed summed up the whole problem when he said: "The only justification of rebellion is success."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, February 26, 1953
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, had a very busy day. He was trying to persuade the Congress to pass, as is, the Administration's resolution, the resolution asserting that this country rejects any interpretations or implications of any international agreements or understandings which have been perverted to bring about the subjugation of free peoples. This resolution also hopes that the people who have been subjected to captivity and Soviet despotism shall again enjoy the right of self-determination. Mr. Dulles also told the congressmen that he did not have any great faith in the word of the present rulers of Soviet Russia and he said any possibility of a meeting between Eisenhower and Stalin is entirely in the realm of conjecture, nothing whatsoever has been set up. The Secretary of State was pressing for unanimous action on the resolution, saying that a close vote would be worse than useless. We have recorded for you the essence of Secretary Dulles' appeal.

DULLES: The captive peoples feel that they have no choice but to be passive victims, allowing themselves to be made the tools of further aggression. If we want to maintain and stimulate the spirit of freedom, which eventually will peacefully frustrate the oppressive designs of Soviet despotism and disintegrate that over-extend despotism, the first and indispensable step is to make clear on the highest authority of the President and the Congress, that, one, the United States does not countenance the violations by which Soviet leadership has perverted past agreements and understandings of the chains of bondage. (?-original recording defective) That is a result which the American people never intended and which they will never accept. Two - the United States will never be a party to any international deal or trade confirming the rule of Soviet despotism over the alien peoples it dominates in Europe and Asia. Three - the United States seeks as one of its peaceful goals that these enslaved national groups of Europe and Asia shall recover genuine independence. That is the purpose of the resolution now before you. This resolution is no call to bloody and senseless revolution. On the other hand, it is no idle gesture. It is an act of great historical importance and many consequences will stem from it. As its purposes become more and more widely understood, it will over the coming years revive the inherent longing for freedom which persists within the captive peoples so that that longing becomes a mounting spiritual power which will eventually overcome the material power of Soviet dictatorship to rule what it has and to subjugate more. What the President seeks is a solemn act of dedication for the future. It is an act which needs, and deserves, the support of both great Parties. It will provide the indispensable foundation upon which future foreign policies can again build a structure of peace, justice, and freedom, therefore, I beg, let us not on this occasion divis (sic) the ... debate the past. Let us unitedly move on to mold the future.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles today asked Congress to approve the President's resolution condemning Russia's violations of war-time agreements. (I'd like to review his appeal in a few minutes.) And Mr. Dulles also said an Eisenhower-Stalin meeting is "entirely in the realm of conjecture."

Russian censors today permitted American correspondents in Moscow to cable home stories saying "foreign observers" in Moscow believe the Russians welcome the President's willingness to discuss peace with the Soviet boss. (These dispatches also speculate that Berlin could be the meeting place.

Australia's delegate, Sir Percy Spender, told the Russians the world is sick and tired of propaganda speeches; the world wants from Russia a real and constructive approach to Korea. Then the U.N. postponed the Korean debate until Monday because most of the delegates preferred not to speak until Mr. Vishinsky speaks.

Ambassador Lodge told another U.N. group today that the Administration will honor a pledge of almost 15 million dollars made last year for United Nations technical assistance. The pledge was made by the Truman Administration.

In Korea today allied raiders moved almost up to the main Communist line on the western front. They killed an estimated 200 Chinese. And again our fighter bombers attacked enemy supply and troop areas.

In Washington today, Senator Taft predicted that Congress will make a deep cut in military spending. And Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate committee he thinks the military budget can be cut "without diminishing the striking power of the armed services."

The President met today with Congressional leaders and some state governors to consider ways of eliminating the duplication and waste in taxation, and other fields, now shared by both the federal and state governments. The President will set up a commission to work out changes in the law. This afternoon, Mr. Eisenhower flew to Augusta, Georgia, for a week-end golfing holiday. His four-engined plane, the Columbine, took two hours and 16 minutes for the trip.

The House-Un-American Activities Committee today heard Daniel J. Boorstin, a University of Chicago history professor, testify that he was a Communist before 1939. And Granville Hicks, a freelance writer, said he was a party member from 1934 until 1939. Wendell H. Furry, a Harvard physics professor, refused to tell the committee whether he has ever been a Communist. Later he issued a statement saying he is not a member of the party and has no personal knowledge whether there is or is not any Communist party activity at Harvard or anywhere else.

In Los Angeles tonight, Adlai Stevenson attacks Republican leaders who want to extend the Korean war to the Chinese Communist mainland. And he warns Democrats against trying to goad the Eisenhower administration into "quick miracles and dazzling successes." Mr. Stevenson said again: "There are no quick and easy solutions in Korea." And he told Democrats: "Let us never sow division when it is so important to harvest unity."

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles had a busy day. He was trying to persuade Congress to pass, as is, the administration's resolution asserting that this country "rejects any interpretations or implications of any international agreements or understandings which have been perverted to bring about the subjugation of free peoples." The resolution also "hopes" that the people who have been subjected to captivity and Soviet despotism shall again enjoy the right of self-determination.

Mr. Dulles also told the Congressmen that he did not "have any great faith" in the word of the present rulers of Soviet Russia. Any possibility of a meeting between Eisenhower and Stalin is "entirely in the realm of conjecture. Nothing whatsoever has been set up."

The Secretary of State was pressing for unanimous action on the resolution, saying that a close vote would be "worse than useless." We have recorded for you the essence of Secretary Dulles' appeal.

DULLES: The captive peoples feel that they have no choice but to be passive victims, allowing themselves to be made the tools of further aggression. If we want to be passive victims, allowing themselves to be made the tools of further aggression. If we want to maintain and stimulate the spirit of freedom, which eventually will peacefully frustrate the oppressive designs of Soviet despotism and disintegrate that over-extended despotism, the first and indispensable step is to make clear on the highest authority of the President and the Congress, that, one, the United States does not countenance the violations by which Soviet leadership has perverted past agreements and understandings of the chains of defective bondage. That is a result which the American people never intended and which they will never accept. Two - the United States will never be a party to any internatio deal or trade confirming the rule of Soviet despotism over the alien peoples it dominates in Europe and Asia. Three - the United States seeks as one of its peaceful goals that these enslaved national groups of Europe and Asia shall recover genuine independence. That is the purpose of the resolution now before you. This resolution is no call to bloody and senseless revolution. On the other hand, it is no idle gesture. It is an act of great historical importance and many consequences will stem from it. As its purposes become more and more widely understood, it will over the coming years revive the inherent longing for freedom which persists within the captive peoples so that that longing becomes a mounting spiritual power which will eventually overcome the material power of Soviet dictatorship to rule what it has and to subjugate more. What the President seeks is a solemn act of dedication for the future. It is an act which needs, and deserves, the support of both great Parties. It will provide the indispensable foundation upon which future foreign policies can again build a structure of peace, justice, and freedom; therefore, I beg, let us unitedly move on to mold the future.

MURROW: Mr. Dulles said President Eisenhower helped write the resolution. Both President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles are urging Congress not to rewrite this resolution, in an effort to blame such agreements as Yalta and Potsdam on previous Democratic administrations. Some Republicans have been pressing for this; but the President and his Secretary of State have taken the position that they don't want to rake up the dead ashes of the past. They want to avoid controversy over whether the Roosevelt and Truman administrations were guided by short-term expediency, exceeded their power, or did not act in accordance with proper constitutional procedure. If these charges were written into the resolution many Democrats would vote against it, and the impression would be created abroad that only part of the Congress, and by a narrow majority, desired freedom for the enslaved peoples.

This resolution provides for nothing more than was agreed to in the Atlantic Charter. It costs neither men nor weapons; and its effect on the Russians and on the satellite peoples will not be immediate or considerable. Mr. Dulles warned the Congressmen not to expect "immediate tangible results from the resolution;" but he thinks it will "over the coming years revive the inherent longing for freedom which persists within the captive peoples, so that that longing becomes a mounting spiritual power which will eventually overcome the material power of Soviet dictatorship to rule what it has or to subjugate more."

This is an interesting thesis. It could happen; but in similar circumstances in history it has never happened. It would be rather difficult to imagine those men and women willing to die for freedom in Poland and Czechoslovakia debating with any urgency the fate of this resolution before the Congress. This administration is committed to the proposition that the people of the satellite countries must be liberated without war. Mr. Dulles believes that the longing for freedom and the spiritual power of the enslaved people will eventually overthrow the material power of the Soviet dictatorship. Such an achievement would certainly be a remarkable victory for the free world.

Today's testimony by Mr. Dulles differed in language but not in objective from the position previously taken by Mr. Truman and Mr. Acheson. Mr. Acheson held that in the satellite states the desire for freedom, perpetual mobilization and the frictions of the police state would ultimately have a "significant effect" on Russian power. Mr. Dulles thinks these factors will eventually overcome Russian dictatorship. Mr. Acheson thought these factors might bring about a change in the Soviet system; Mr. Dulles thinks they will.

This resolution is essentially a denunciation of Russia for breaking agreements, and a proclamation of hope (that is the word used) hope that the captive peoples shall "have all their sovereign rights of self-government restored to them, all in accordance with the Atlantic Charter." The Atlantic Charter, you will remember, was signed at sea before this country entered the late war. When it was announced in London, where the nights were rather noisy, a tired British journalist with a great knowledge of history said: "It reads like a report from our yachting correspondent." Resolutions do not weigh heavily in the balance of power.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of the administration's approach to the peoples locked behind the iron curtain. Part of our policy, it would seem, is based on Thomas Fuller's contention that "hope is as cheap as despair." Fortunately, as Homer wrote in the Illiad: "The fates have given man an enduring soul." But Thomas Reed summed up the whole problem when he said: "The only justification of rebellion is success."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday - Feb. 27, 1953

This is the news:

The Department of Agriculture reports that prices received by farmers, dropped one and a half per cent during the month ending February 15th. #

This was the sixth consecutive month in which farm prices dropped. And they're now at the lowest level in more than 11 years. The latest drop resulted principally because of lower cattle, potato, wheat, corn, milk and egg prices. Today, Secretary of Agriculture Benson said the department will continue for another year, to support the prices of dairy products at 90 per cent of parity.. a price designed to be fair to farmers in relation to the prices they must pay. In the past this program has required heavy government buying of butter and cheese. Since late November--for example--the government has bought 88 million pounds of butter, and 27 million pounds of cheese. Secretary Benson says he made the decision to support dairy products, at 90 per cent of parity, after he was assured by the dairy industry, that during the year it will work out a program requiring less government aid.

Republican Senator Bridges of New Hampshire said today that he is against new legislation that would require "compulsory price supports for certain commodities." He said it would be a disservice to the [redacted] country, to force the Secretary of agriculture to support additional commodities. Presumably he was refering to some suggestions that beef prices be supported by the government.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that the cost of living index dropped two tenths of one per cent in the month ending in the middle of January. The lower cost of food and clothing prices were responsible for the drop in the new index.

Republican Senator Carlson of Kansas, a close friend of the President, said today that taxes can be cut this year because he feels spending can be cut by [redacted] eight billion dollars or more. The Senator told his colleagues: "the people expect a tax cut of us." # The President is opposed to any tax reduction until he is sure the budget can be balanced. And Chairman Allen of the House Rules Committee says he isn't sure taxes can be cut this year.. first, he wants "positive proof that OUR [redacted] financial house is in order."

On the floor of the Senate, Republican Senator Williams of Delaware charged today that the internal revenue bureau has settled tax claims for more than 5 million dollars for about ten cents on the dollr.

The Senator said these settlements...all arising out of alcohol tax claims.. are "perfectly ridiculous and unjustified..if ~~they~~ The Taxes were valid in the first place."

The House un-American activities committee today voted unanimously to cite Professor Barrows Dunham for contempt. Dunham appeared before the committee in a secret session and is reported to have refused to answer any questions except his name and address. He teaches philosophy at Temple University in Philadelphia. And the president of Temple-- Dr. Robert L. Johnson, the new State Department information director--says the school is "vitally concerned" over Professor Dunham's position. Dunham is the author of "Man against myth."

Attorney General Brownell today ordered all new United States attorneys, and their assistants, to give up their outside law practises as soon as they take the oath of office. The President today named new U.S. attorneys for southern New York..Massachusetts and Minnesota.

Democratic Senator Kefauver said today that if the Congress gives coastal states the right to off-shore submerged oil lands, other states can claim title to FEDERAL national parks within their borders. He says the tidelands oil bill is a "step toward a policy of giving away our national resources."

The House Foreign Affairs Committee today unanimously approved the President's resolution condemning Russia's subjugation of free people by violating war time agreements. No changes were made..[redacted]

The Senate today approved by a vote of 79 to nothing a resolution condemning Russia's viscious attacks on Jews..Roman Catholic priests.. Greek Orthodox congregations.. and some Protestant denominations and Moslem communities. This resolution has no legal effect..does not require House or presidential approval.

From West Germany today my colleague Richard C. Hottelet cables that before the week-end is over a total of 40-thousand refugees from East Germany will have arrived in west Berlin [redacted] since the first of February. Hottelet points out that the problem of housing these people could delay the formation of a German army.. because the barracks originally intended for the new German troops are now being filled up with refugees.

In Korea, our jets attacked a Communist training center just three minutes flying time from the enemy's big Mig base, across the Yalu in Manchuria. The Communists made no attempt to interfere with our raid.

Here in New York, Assistant United States Attorney Greenberg said Police Commissioner MONAGHAN told him he had an agreement with the Justice Department not to question city policemen charged with brutality in violation of civil rights. Commissioner Monaghan has repeatedly denied such an agreement.

And the Jelke jury tonight found Mickey Jelke guilty of two counts of compulsory prostitution. He faces a maximum sentence of 40 years in prison. But the jury recommended mercy.

In Augusta, Georgia, President Eisenhower played 18 holes of golf. His news secretary says:"The President did not shoot under 90."

Edward R. Murrow: February 27, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Senator McCarthy said today that "the morale of really good Americans in the State Department was at an all-time high. / He said he was referring to those "who have been opposed to Soviet Russia, and the Acheson policies." "The only people whose morale is low are those who have something to fear, and who don't want to see the light approaching their dark corner."

At his news conference today Secretary of State Dulles said the policies of his Department were not being dictated by Senator McCarthy, or other Congressional investigators. / Mr. Dulles welcomed any disclosures which would make his Department "more competent, loyal and secure." He thinks the State Department, with about 42 thousand employees at home and abroad, is overstaffed; some of its methods are cumbersome. / He thinks it will take six months or more before he gets things in satisfactory shape, but he's confident he can do it. / Mr. Dulles had no evidence of low morale or disloyalty, but said his personal contact so far had been limited to a dozen or so top officials. / Speaking of Congressional investigations Mr. Dulles said the responsibility for government personnel rests squarely upon the executive branch. / He will defend what he knows to be sound and defensible, but he is not prepared blindly to defend a situation which was created by his predecessors. Mr. Dulles made it clear that he intends to co-operate with Congressional investigating committees.

Asked whether he thought Senator McCarthy was encroaching upon the executive responsibility, Mr. Dulles said he was not in his job to give lessons to Congress. Congress has broad powers to investigate, which must be respected; and so far as Mr. Dulles is concerned they will be respected.

Under our system, conflict between the White House and the executive departments on the one hand, and the Congress on the other, has become traditional. President Eisenhower, through frequent meetings with Congressional leaders, is attempting to avoid this conflict, trying to act as a "Chairman of the Board," a function which he has exercised with great skill in the past. His Cabinet officers are leaning over backwards to display their willingness to work with Congress. Historically, the Congress has generally been eager to push those who lean over backwards. (That may or may not happen in this case; it's much too early to tell.) So far as Senator McCarthy's investigations are concerned, the record so far merely indicates that neither President Eisenhower nor Secretary Dulles are prepared to criticize or condemn, either his objectives or his tactics.

There have been periods in our history when a strong Congress has dominated the executive branch of the government. And there have been other times when a strong President has dominated the Congress. President Eisenhower is trying to avoid, through tact, persuasion and compromise, an open conflict between the two branches of the government. The President and Mr. Dulles are also avoiding open conflict with Senator McCarthy. This may be wise or unwise, permanent or temporary. It is merely what the record reveals so far.

Today the official organ of the Czechoslovakian Communist Party revealed for the first time an open revolt by Czech workers against the government's labor discipline. It is revealed that on December 28th of last year, the workers in eighteen factories in one district, and in several factories in other districts refused to report for work, although they were ordered to do so by local government authorities. The fact that eighteen factories in a single district could act so concertedly indicates a growing organisation and strength of opposition against the Communist regime. The Czech Government has re-activated the armed workers' militia in the factories. President Gottwald has been named their Commander-in-Chief. This is an admission that industrial rebellion is so threatening that the security police and the Czech military forces must be augmented by the armed workers' militia to cope with unrest in individual factories.

The workers militia represented the chief instrument used by the Communists when they seized power in Prague in February of '48. Since then they have been kept in the background. Now they have been re-activated, to take over what is called the job of "vigilance and defense." This information, which reaches us from Alex Kendrick in Vienna, must be regarded as a confession of widespread disaffection and rebellion, by factory workers in Czechoslovakia. #The Czechs and Slovaks, from decades of bitter experience, know how to make ~~XXXXXXX~~ trouble for their oppressors; but their factories still work for the Soviet Union.

The most effective government rests on a good working relationship between the President and the Congress. A certain amount of compromise is essential. But as James Russell Lowell once remarked:"Compromise is a temporary expedient, often wise in party politics, almost sure to be unwise in statesmanship." But perhaps Walter Landor came closer to the point when he said:"We talk on principle, but we act on interest."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS:
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Department of Agriculture reports that prices received by farmers, dropped one and a half per cent during the month ending February 15th. This was the sixth consecutive month in which farm prices dropped. And they're now at the lowest level in more than 11 years. The latest drop resulted principally because of lower cattle, potato, wheat, corn, milk and egg prices. Today, Secretary of Agriculture Benson said the department will continue for another year to support the prices of dairy products at 90 per cent of parity, a price designed to be fair to farmers in relation to the prices they must pay. In the past this program has required heavy government buying of butter and cheese. Since late November, for example, the government has bought 88 million pounds of butter and 27 million pounds of cheese. Secretary Benson says he made the decision to support dairy products at 90 percent of parity after he was assured by the dairy industry that during the year it will work out a program requiring less government aid.

Republican Senator Bridges of New Hampshire said today that he is against new legislation that would "require compulsory price supports for certain commodities." He said it would be a disservice to the country to force the Secretary of agriculture to support additional commodities. Presumable he was referring to some suggestions that beef prices be supported by the government.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that the cost of living index dropped two tenths of one per cent in the month ending in the middle of January. The lower cost of food and clothing prices were responsible for the drop in the new index.

Republican Senator Carlson of Kansas, a close friend of the President, said today that taxes can be cut this year because he feels spending can be cut by eight billion dollars or more. The Senator told his colleagues: "the people expect a tax cut of us." The President is opposed to any tax reduction until he is sure the budget can be balanced. And Chairman Allen of the House Rules Committee says he isn't sure taxes can be cut this year; first, he wants "positive proof that our financial house is in order."

On the floor of the Senate, Republican Williams of Delaware charged today that the internal revenue bureau has settled tax claims for more than 5 million dollars for about ten cents on the dollar. The Senator said these settlements, all arising out of alcohol tax claims, are "perfectly ridiculous and unjustified if the taxes were valid in the first place."

The House un-American activities committee today voted unanimously to cite Professor Barrows Dunham for contempt. Dunham appeared before the committee in a secret session and is reported to have refused to answer any questions except his name and address. He teaches philosophy at Temple University in Philadelphia. And the President of Temple, Dr. Robert L. Johnson, the new State Department information director, says the school is "vitally concerned" over Professor Dunham's position. Dunham is the author of "Man against Myth."

Attorney General Brownell today ordered all new United States Attorneys, and their assistants, to give up their outside law practices as soon as they take the oath of office. The President today named new U.S. attorneys for Southern New York, Massachusetts and Minnesota.

Democratic Senator Kefauver said today that if the Congress gives coastal states the right to off-shore submerged oil lands, other states can claim title to federal national parks within their borders. He says the tidelands oil bill is a "step toward a policy of giving away our national resources."

The House Foreign Affairs Committee today unanimously approved the President's resolution condemning Russia's subjugation of free people by violating wartime agreements. No changes were made.

The Senate today approved by a vote of 79 to nothing a resolution condemning Russia's viscious attacks on Jews, Roman Catholic priests, Greek Orthodox congregations, and some Protestant denominations and Moslem communities. This resolution has no legal effect, does not require House or presidential approval.

From West Germany today my colleague Richard C. Hottelet cables that before the weekend is over a total of 40-thousand refugees from East Germany will have arrived in West Berlin since the first of February. Hottelet points out that the problem of housing these people could delay the formation of a German army, because the barracks originally intended for the new German troops are now being filled up with refugees.

In Korea, our jets attacked a Communist training center just three minutes flying time from the enemy's big Mig base, across the Yalu in Manchuria. The Communists made no attempt to interfere with our raid.

Here in New York, Assistant United States Attorney Greenberg said Police Commissioner Monaghan told him he had an agreement with the Justice Department not to question city policemen charged with brutality in violation of civil rights. Commissioner Monaghan has repeatedly denied such an agreement.

And the Jelke jury tonight found Mickey Jelke guilty of two counts of compulsory prostitution. He faces a maximum sentence of 40 years in prison. But the jury recommended mercy.

In Augusta, Georgia, President Eisenhower played 18 holes of golf. His news secretary says: "The President did not shoot under 90."

Senator McCarthy said today that "the morale of really good Americans in the State Department was at an all-time high. He said he was referring to those "who have been opposed to Soviet Russia and the Acheson policies." "The only people whose morale is low are those who have something to fear and who don't want to see the light approaching their dark corner."

At his news conference today Secretary of State Dulles said the policies of his Department were not being dictated by Senator McCarthy or other Congressional investigators. Mr. Dulles welcomed any disclosures which would make his Department "more competent, loyal and secure." He thinks the State Department, with about 42 thousand employees at home and abroad, is overstaffed; some of its methods are cumbersome. He thinks it will take six months or more before he gets things in satisfactory shape, but he's confident he can do it. Mr. Dulles had no evidence of low morale or disloyalty, but said his personal contact so far had been limited to a dozen or so top officials. Speaking of Congressional investigations Mr. Dulles said the responsibility for government personnel rests squarely upon the executive branch. He will defend what he knows to be sound and defensible, but he is not prepared blindly to defend a situation which was created by his predecessors. Mr. Dulles made it clear that he intends to cooperate with Congressional investigating committees.

Asked whether he thought Senator McCarthy was encroaching upon the executive responsibility, Mr. Dulles said he was not in his job to give lessons to Congress. Congress has broad powers to investigate, which must be respected; and so far as Mr. Dulles is concerned they will be respected.

Under our system conflict between the White House and the executive departments on the one hand, and the Congress on the other, has become traditional. President Eisenhower, through frequent meetings with Congressional leaders, is attempting to avoid this conflict, trying to act as a "Chairman of the Board," a function which he has exercised with great skill in the past. His Cabinet officers are leaning over backwards to display their willingness to work with Congress. Historically, the Congress has generally been eager to push those who lean over backwards. That may or may not happen in this case; it's much too early to tell. So far as Senator McCarthy's investigations are concerned, the record so far merely indicates that neither President Eisenhower nor Secretary Dulles are prepared to criticize or condemn either his objectives or his tactics.

There have been periods in our history when a strong Congress has dominated the executive branch of the government. And there have been other times when a strong President has dominated the Congress. President Eisenhower is trying to avoid, through tact, persuasion and compromise, an open conflict between the two branches of the government. The President and Mr. Dulles are also avoiding open conflict with Senator McCarthy. This may be wise or unwise, permanent or temporary. It is merely what the record reveals so far.

Today the official organ of the Czechoslovakian Communist Party revealed for the first time an open revolt by Czech workers against the government's labor discipline. It is revealed that on December 28th of last year, the workers in eighteen factories in one district, and in several factories in other districts refused to report for work, although they were ordered to do so by local government authorities. The fact that eighteen factories in a single district could act so concertedly indicates a growing organization and strength of opposition against the Communist regime. The Czech Government has re-activated the armed workers' militia in the factories. President Gottwald has been named their Commander-in-Chief. This is an admission that industrial rebellion is so threatening that the security police and the Czech military forces must be augmented by the armed workers' militia to cope with unrest in individual factories.

The workers militia represented the chief instrument used by the Communists when they seized power in Prague in February of '48. Since then they have been kept in the background. Now they have been re-activated, to take over what is called the job of "vigilance and defense." This information, which reaches us from Alex Kendrick in Vienna, must be regarded as a confession of widespread disaffection and rebellion by factory workers in Czechoslovakia. The Czechs and Slovaks, from decades of bitter experience, know how to make trouble for their oppressors; but their factories still work for the Soviet Union.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The most effective government rests on a good working relationship between the President and the Congress. A certain amount of compromise is essential. But as James Russell Lowell once remarked: "Compromise is a temporary expedient, often wise in party politics, almost sure to be unwise in statesmanship." But perhaps Walter Landor came closer to the point when he said: "We talk on principle, but we act on interest."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday March 2, 1953

This is the news:

Ambassador Lodge charged today that the Russians are using Asians as cannon fodder in the Korean war. Mr. Lodge replied briefly to AN HOUR AND A HALF [redacted] speech Andrei Vishinsky made before the United Nations political committee. #

Vishinsky's main line was that the United States, under its new Administration wants to expand the Korean war and is planning to do just that. He paid brief mention to what he called "the Truman-Acheson type of government" and then took out after Republicans. He said the Republican party is not for peace but for war..he sees "clear evidence" that the UNITED STATES [redacted] wants to expand the war... [redacted] Vishinsky said American "merchants of death" want Asians to fight Asians..they believe it will be cheaper in the long run. He says we are raising blocs of troops in Japan, the Philippines, Burma for attacks on Communist China. Vishinsky charged that the basis of American foreign policy is to make cannoon fodder of Asian boys." It was to this part of Vishinsky's speech that Mr. Lodge quickly replied. He said that by supplying arms for the enemy in Korea and by not using any Russian soldiers in Korea..the Russians are actually using Chinese and North Koreans as cannon fodder. Vishinsky said Russia is sending arms to Communist China in return for raw materials-- under the terms of a treaty between the two countries. Mr. Lodge said Vishinsky thereby admits that his country is supporting those whom the U.N. has labelled the aggressor in Korea. Vishinsky summed up his speech, by saying that as long as American boys are to be replaced by Asian boys "there can be no peaceful program" in Korea.

General Bradley, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, today outlined the military courses of action that are open to us in Korea. I'd like to summarize his views in a few minutes.

Lieutenant General Taylor, the new 8th army commander, said in Seoul today, that his troops are in the strongest entrenched positions of any army since World War one. He feels the Communists will tire "sooner or later". Right now, he said, allied forces are "sitting, waiting, and it may take a long time, to win."

Today, Chinese forces tried to crack our main line at Little Gibraltar on the western front. But they RETREATED after one-third of their attacking force was killed or wounded.

Mutual Security Administrator Stassen said today that the Administration has a new program to choke off strategic shipments to all Communist nations.

~~"Capitalists [illegible] of carrying on underground trade with Communists [illegible] profit, Mr. Stassen has named General William Donovan, as his special consultant. Donovan was the wartime chief of the Office of Strategic Services.~~

In Japan today, the House of Representatoves voted to censure Prime Minister Yoshida, who yesterday called a member of parliament a "stupid idiot." Yoshida quickly apologized...said it was just a slip of the tongue. But today, with his own party splitting its vote, the ~~prime minister~~ Japanese House voted to censure its prime minister.

~~In London, Prime Minister Churchill said he would be willing to meet with the President and Stalin at any time, under the terms recently laid down by Mr. Eisenhower: that he would agree to such a meeting only if our allies knew about it and the resultant agreements were self-enforcing.~~

In Iran today, premier Mossadegh broadcast a message to his people, urging them to end ~~[illegible]~~ what he called their "general holiday" of the last two days. Mossadegh referred to street fighting between his own and the Shah's supporters. He told his people that if the need comes he will call on them for help. Today's demonstrations saw ~~[illegible]~~ SHOUTING Communist mobs calling for "Yankees to go home."

In Washington, President Eisenhower received the foreign minister of Saudi Arabia and then issued a statement expressing [redacted] concern over what he called some evidence of "a deterioration in relations between the Arab nations and the United States." He hopes to restore a spirit of confidence and trust [redacted] with the Arabs.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today heard Charles E. Bohlen testify that the Yalta agreement had little effect on the map of Eastern Europe.. and did not help the Russians take over control of Poland. Bohlen, nominated to be ambassador to Moscow, was the interpreter at Yalta and other war-time conferences. He said the trouble with the Yalta agreement was not the interpretation of it, but Russia's violations of it.

Attorney General Brownell told another Senate committee he is opposed to giving states "blanket" title to their offshore lands. He wants the federal government to keep control of defense, navigation and foreign affairs matters. But he would give the states "such authority as required" to "administer and develop" natural resources of the so-called tidelands.

John Cocutz, in charge of Voice of America broadcasts to Romania, told the McCarthy tommittee today, that a superior official once told him the man in charge of the Voice's religious brodcasts, did not believe in god. [redacted] Roger Lyons, the religious broadcast director, flew to Washington from New York and told the committee: Cocutz's testimony is absolutely false. He said: I do believe in god." The other official concerned, Edwin Kretzman said he has no knowledge of Lyons' "specific religious adhrenence, and doesn't think its important."

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today cancelled a one year ban on imports of Canadian meats and livestock.. a ban imposed because of an outbreak of disease among some Canadian cattle. Then the President ordered a lid on the number of cattle that may be imported to this country, at special [redacted] low-duty rates.

And James McInerney, former Justice Department official, said today he never had an agreement with New York officials to block F.B.I. investigations of alleged brutality by New York City police.

Edward R. Murrow: March 2, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

General Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, made a speech in Palm Beach this afternoon. This thoughtful and lucid soldier feels that "the war by satellite technique which Communism has adopted, is the most irritating, frustrating method it could use. It causes the free nations of the world to expend lives and resources without getting to the real cause of trouble, the fundamental source of communist power."

General Bradley believes that from a strictly military viewpoint we have four courses of military action open to us in Korea. We can get out, which would mean that "communist tyranny would spread like a plague across all of Asia, to include our friends in south-east Asia, and India and Pakistan. Second: we can go on as we are, keeping our casualties to a minimum while killing as many of the enemy as we can. Third: we can look about for opportunities of applying additional pressure, hoping that the Chinese might get tired and quit. The fourth course of action is to try for a military decision. and face the prospect that it might mean all-out war with China; that it would tie down the bulk of our military power on the mainland of Asia; and could eventually develop into World War III.

General Bradley was reporting, not recommending. And then he went on to talk about a subject that is widely misunderstood - the function of the Joint Chiefs of Staff - the highest brass of the Army, Navy and Air Force, over which he presides. He explained how the Military Establishment functions in relation to the creation of foreign policy. The President receives recommendations from the State Department; he considers domestic political advice, including guidance from the Congress and existing laws. He studies the economic and psychological aspects of the policy. He gets military advice from the Defense Department in connection with the proposed policy. The function of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is to tell the President what our capabilities are, and as far as the Joint Chiefs know, what risks are being taken when we pursue either this course or that course. It is not the function of the Joint Chiefs to recommend specifically which course of action the government should take, but merely to point out the military implications and the military capabilities. The proper role of the military leaders is not to recommend the policy they would prefer, but rather to supply to the supreme civilian authority the best estimates they can of what the military can do in support of a given policy.

General Bradley was not speaking in academic terms, but rather as a soldier. He said: "Our pleas for peace are measured, not by the sincerity with which they are spoken but by the strength we can array to enforce them.

We dare not forget that there is nothing man can invent with his science, nothing man can devise from his knowledge, nothing man can create by his genius, that war, if it comes, cannot destroy. / The nation with strength, is the nation with the power of persuasion, the power of purchase, and the power to bargain. / We must recognise that it is even more difficult to avert wars, than to win them. / The achievement of peace in this shattered world is a task requiring greater intellect, more daring, and perhaps even a sterner sacrifice, than we showed in helping to win World War II."

General Bradley concluded: "Even after World War II we had not learned that a nation as great as ours cannot be weak. / We still had some idea that the United States had been given a special privilege among nations; that we could travel the sea lanes of the world, travel the airways of the world, influence the actions of all of the free nations of the world, and aid them to resist communism, without establishing and maintaining the military strength to back up the world leadership, which had become our role."

General Bradley, as befits a military man, spoke of strength. No commander ever had as much of that as he wanted. / Bradley, unlike other generals, has no sure-fire solution for the Korean war; but also unlike other generals, he understands the constitutional and traditional relationship between the civilian and military authority in this country. Our military strength is increasing; and we are fortunate, in one reporter's opinion, to have at the head of this Military Establishment, an officer who recognises that the final determination of policy remains a civilian function.

General Bradley has spelled out some of the problems that lie ahead. And it would seem that Harry Allen Overstreet put his finger on it when he said: "Where there is no maturity, there is no vision. The evils of our life come not from deep evils within us, but from ungrown-up respohses to life. Our obligation then is to grow up. This is what our time requires of us. This is what may yet be the saving of us."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 2, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Ambassador Lodge charged today that the Russians are using Asians as cannon fodder in the Korean war. Mr. Lodge replied briefly to an hour and a half speech Andrei Vishinsky made before the United Nations political committee. Vishinsky's main line was that the United States, under its new Administration, wants to expand the Korean war and is planning to do just that. He paid brief mention to what he called "the Truman-Acheson type of government" and then took out after Republicans. He said the Republican party is not for peace but for war; he sees clear evidence" that the United States wants to expand the war. Vishinsky said American "merchants of death" want Asians to fight Asians. They believe it will be cheaper in the long run. He says we are raising blocs of troops in Japan, the Philippines, Burma for attacks on Communist China. Vishinsky charged that the basis of American foreign policy is to make cannon fodder of Asian boys." It was to this part of Vishinsky's speech that Mr. Lodge quickly replied. He said that by supplying arms for the enemy in Korea and by not using any Russian soldiers in Korea, the Russians are actually using Chinese and North Koreans as cannon fodder. Vishinsky said Russia is sending arms to Communist China in return for raw materials under the terms of a treaty between the two countries. Mr. Lodge said Vishinsky thereby admits that his country is supporting those whom the U.N. has labelled the aggressor in Korea. Vishinsky summed up his speech, by saying that as long as "American boys are to be replaced by Asian boys, there can be no peaceful program" in Korea.

General Bradley, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, today outlined the military courses of action that are open to us in Korea. I'd like to summarize his views in a few minutes.

Lieutenant General Taylor, the new 8th army commander, said in Seoul today that his troops are in the strongest entrenched positions of any army since World War one. He feels the Communists will tire "sooner or later." Right now, he said, allied forces are "sitting, waiting and it may take a long time to win."

Today, Chinese forces tried to crack our main line at Little Gibraltar on the western front. But they retreated, after one-third of their attacking force was killed or wounded.

Mutual Security Administrator Stassen said today that the Administration has a new program to choke off strategic shipments to all Communist nations.

In Japan today, the House of Representatives voted to censure Prime Minister Yoshida who yesterday called a member of parliament a "stupid idiot." Yoshida quickly apologized, said it was just a slip of the tongue. But today, with his own party splitting its vote, the Japanese House voted to censure its prime minister.

In Iran today, Premier Mossadegh broadcast a message to his people, urging them to end what he called their "general holiday" of the last two days. Mossadegh referred to street fighting between his own and the Shah's supporters. He told his people that if the need comes he will call on them for help. Today's demonstrations saw shouting Communist mobs calling for "Yankees to go home."

In Washington, President Eisenhower received the foreign minister of Saudi Arabia and then issued a statement expressing concern over what he called some evidence of "a deterioration in relations between the Arab nations and the United States." He hopes to restore a spirit of confidence and trust with the Arabs.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today heard Charles E. Bohlen testify that the Yalta agreement had little effect on the map of Eastern Europe, and did not help the Russians take over control of Poland. Bohlen, nominated to be ambassador to Moscow, was the interpreter of Yalta and other war-time conferences. He said the trouble with the Yalta agreement was not the interpretation of it, but Russia's violations of it.

Attorney General Brownell told another Senate committee he is opposed to giving states "blanket" title to their offshore lands. He wants the federal government to keep control of defense, navigation and foreign affairs matters. But he would give the states "such authority as required" to "administer and develop" natural resources of the so-called tidelands.

John Cocutz, in charge of Voice of America broadcasts to Romania, told the McCarthy committee today that a superior official once told him the man in charge of the Voice's religious broadcasts did not believe in God. Roger Lyons, the religious broadcast director, flew to Washington from New York and told the committee: Cocutz's testimony is absolutely false. He said: "I do believe in God." The other official concerned, Edwin Kretzman said he has no knowledge of Lyons' "specific religious adherence and doesn't think its important."

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today cancelled a one year ban on imports of Canadian meats and livestock, a ban imposed because of an outbreak of disease among some Canadian cattle. Then the President ordered a lid on the number of cattle that may be imported to this country at special low-duty rates.

And James McInerney, former Justice Department official, said today he never had an agreement with New York officials to block F.B.I. investigations of alleged brutality by New York City police.

General Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, made a speech in Palm Beach this afternoon. This thoughtful and lucid soldier, feels that "the war by satellite technique which Communism has adopted, is the most irritating, frustrating method it could use. It causes the free nations of the world to expend lives and resources without getting to the real cause of trouble, the fundamental source of Communist power."

General Bradley believes that from a strictly military viewpoint we have four courses of military action open to us in Korea. We can get out, which would mean that "Communist tyranny would spread like a plague across all of Asia, to include our friends in south-east Asia, and India and Pakistan. Second: we can go on as we are, keeping our casualties to a minimum while killing as many of the enemy as we can. Third: we can look about for opportunities of applying additional pressure, hoping that the Chinese might get tired and quit. The fourth course of action is to try for a military decision; and we face the prospect that it might mean all-out war with China; that it would tie down the bulk of our military power on the mainland of Asia; and could eventually develop into World War III.

General Bradley was reporting, not recommending. And then he went on to talk about a subject that is widely misunderstood - the function of the Joint Chiefs of Staff - the highest brass of the Army, Navy and Air Force, over which he presides. He explained how the Military Establishment functions in relation to the creation of foreign policy. The President receives recommendations from the State Department; he considers domestic political advice, including guidance from the Congress and existing laws. He studies the economic and psychological aspects of the policy. He gets military advice from the Defense Department in connection with the proposed policy. The function of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is to tell the President what our capabilities are, and as far as the Joint Chiefs know, what risks are being taken when we pursue either this course or that course. It is not the function of the Joint Chiefs to recommend specifically which course of action the government should take, but merely to point out the military implications and the military capabilities. The proper role of the military leaders is not to recommend the policy they would prefer, but rather to supply to the supreme civilian authority the best estimates they can of what the military can do in support of a given policy.

General Bradley was not speaking in academic terms, but rather as a soldier. He said: "Our pleas for peace are measured, not by the sincerity with which they are spoken but by the strength we can array to enforce them. We dare not forget that there is nothing man can invent with his science, nothing man can devise from his knowledge, nothing man can create by his genius that war, if it comes, cannot destroy. The nation with strength is the nation with the power of persuasion, the power of purchase, and the power to bargain. We must recognize that it is even more difficult to avert wars than to win them. The Achievement of peace in this shattered world is a task requiring greater intellect, more daring, and perhaps even a sterner sacrifice than we showed in helping to win World War II."

General Bradley concluded: "Even after World War II we had not learned that a nation as great as ours cannot be weak. We still had some idea that the United States had been given a special privilege among nations; that we could travel the sea lanes of the world, travel the airways of the world, influence the actions of all of the free nations of the world and aid them to resist communism without establishing and maintaining the military strength to back up the world leadership which had become our role."

General Bradley, as befits a military man, spoke of strength. No commander ever had as much of that as he wanted. Bradley, unlike other generals has no sure-fire solution for the Korea war; but also unlike other generals he understands the constitutional and traditional relationship between the civilian and military authority in this country. Our military strength is increasing; and we are fortunate, in one reporter's opinion, to have at the head of this Military Establishment an officer who recognizes that the final determination of policy remains a civilian function.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General Bradley has spelled out some of the problems that lie ahead. And it would seem that Harry Allen Overstreet put his finger on it when he said:"Where there is no maturity there is no vision. The evils of our life come not from deep evils within us, but from ungrown-up responses to life. Our obligation then is to grow up. This is what our time requires of us. This is what may yet be the saving of us." - Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, March 3, 1953

This is the news:

Senate Republicans and Democrats appear to be heading for their first showdown, under the new Administration./The battle concerns the President's request for a resolution, condemning Russia's perversion of war-time treaties, and Russia's enslavement of free peoples./Secretary of State Dulles had asked the Congress to accept the resolution as is..he warned against any changes, that would stir up political battles in this country. He warned too, that a close vote, on the resolution, would be "worse than useless."/The House Foreign Affairs committee approved it unanimously./But today the Senate Foreign Relations committee decided to amend it..adding a sentence saying that approval of the resolution would not express any opinion as to the validity, or invalidity of war-time agreements. (.some 40 in all.) The vote in comittee was 8 to 6..(Democratic Senator Gillette of IOWA voting with the Republican majority.) Democrats who oppose the amendment, charge that it would make the whole resolution meaningless./They SAY THAT IN one breath WE WOULD BE accusing the Russians of violating agreements and at the same time we would say we are not passing on the validity. (But Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey acknowledged that many Republicans had campaigned against the Yalta and Potsdam agreements.. and they don't want to appear,now, as favoring the agreements worked out by former Democratic Presidents Roosevelt and Truman. After the committee vote, the Senate Republican Policy committee unanimously approved the revision. And Chairman Knowland of California said it was a reasonable approach.. should get support from both Democrats and Republicans.. [redacted] But a contrary suggestion came quickly from Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas. He said: "All Americans should be able to rally behind the President on this issue without introducing partisan considerations that can only serve to divide us in the face of the enemy." Senator Johnson says he'll oppose any "partisan amendments."

A House committee today approved a Hawaii statehood bill but, by one vote, refused to consider Alaska's bid for statehood. Democratic Representative Bentsen of Texas said he wondered whether the Republicnas hope to add ~~to~~ TWO new Republican Senators from Hawaii to their slim Senate margin.

Senator McCarthy today posed a problem for the Eisenhower Administration: will it go along with former President Truman's order to keep loyalty files from congressional committees, or will it make such files available to investigators? The issue arose when the acting chief of the Voice of America--Reed Harris--said two employes of our high commissioners office in Germany had been cleared for loyalty. But the Mc Carthy committee also heard Jack Tate, the state department legal adviser, ~~say the two men had~~ he DID NOT KNOW IF [redacted] been cleared. Senator Mc Carthy then asked two other State Department officials to consult their superiors, and produce the files in question. Earlier, Reed Harris accused the committee of trying to publicly wring HIS [redacted] neck for a book Harris wrote 20 years ago. He said he had been cleared in two full F.B.I. investigations. Chairman Mc Carthy said that is not true.

General Van Fleet returned to Washington from Korea today. He met with the President, [redacted], received ANOTHER [redacted] medal [redacted] for "exceptionally meritorious service in a duty of great responsibility," and prepared to meet with the House Armed Services Committee tomorrow.

In Korea today, there was comparatively little ground action as our fighter-bombers attacked an enemy communications center just south of [redacted] the Yalu.

At the United Nations, Brazil and Ecuador were thinking of proposing a resolution asking the Communists to reconsider their rejection of the Indian truce plan. But Ambassador Lodge told them he thinks "the time is not right " for such a move.

In Iran today, Premier Mossadegh warned all Americans to stay off the streets of Teheran... because of the continuing riots. There are some 300 Americans in the city. Mossadegh also ordered tank-supported troops to end the riots by Communist mobs who oppose his rule. (and have turned part of their opposition into an anti-American campaign) More than 200 Communists were arrested today.

In Washington, A.F. of L. President Meany told a House committee that the Taft-Hartley law is "unjustifiably [redacted] oppressive." He wants the closed shop legalized... an end to all injunctions called for in the law...approval of some types of secondary boycotts..and an end to the non-Communist oath required of union leaders. He also wants unions to be allowed to make political contributions.

Miss Tima D. Ludins, a former New York teacher, today refused to tell the Jenner committee whether she has ever been a Communist. But Miss Ludins told the committee it has "assailed her name and blackened her charecter", by using what she called "cloak and daggger" tactics to depict her as a mystery woman in a Communist underground.

Federal Security Administrator Hobby told a House committee today that because of civil service rules she has the power to appoint only one or two personal assistants in the agency with more than 37-thousand workers. She said she must depend on hold-over officials to help her formulate new policies.

Edward R. Murrow: March 3, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Ten thousand East German refugees have fled into West Berlin since Sunday morning. / The three commercial airlines flying from Berlin to the Western zone of Germany, cannot handle the traffic. / The West German Government has asked the allies for military transport - planes to help lift these refugees, / About seventy thousand of them have come across, in Berlin alone, since the first of the year. / There are now some eighty-five refugee camps in West Berlin. Most of these refugees appear to feel that they must get out now, before it is too late.

The Communists are doing nothing to stop this flood, although they could quite easily seal the frontier. / The West German Government is doing what it can to meet the social and economic threat posed by this rising tide of refugees. / The West Germans are also beginning to wonder, whether this may represent a Communist Trojan horse. / As reported here earlier, barracks that had been earmarked for German troops as part of the European Army are already being occupied by refugees. # With such numbers, it is impossible to set up a security check to determine how many of them are real refugees, and how many may be Communist agents.

The Communists had started a rumor that they would clamp down on the frontier on March 1st, but they didn't. The flow of refugees in the last three days has assumed the character of an immigration rather than an escape. The Communists could stop it by closing down on the subway traffic in Berlin, and by establishing road blocks on the border between east and west Berlin. But they have not done so. # Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn that the West German Government wonders increasingly why this is not done. Those who come across represent largely young men, workers and farmers; three classes of citizens vital for the industry, re-armament and food supply of the Soviet zone. The Communists cannot regard their loss with equanimity. The loss of thousands of good farmers threatens serious consequences for the next harvest. Young men who escape will not carry guns in the Communist army now building in the East. Still the Communists do nothing to hinder the flow.

West German officials are now considering the possibility that the Communists are tolerating this exodus as a deliberate act of policy - wondering increasingly whether many of the so-called refugees are being sent over for subversion and the creation of unrest. The West German Minister of Labor reported today that one sizeable group of refugees had refused to work unless they were given the same scale of wages prevailing in the Communist zone of Germany. This could have been the result of their ignorance, but it could also have been an act of provocation.

The way the refugees are piling up in hastily improvised reception centers in Berlin also suggests the possibility of another danger. A very high percentage of the refugees are young men. It is conceivable that they might act, at a given signal, to start riots in these refugee centers, similar to what was undertaken by North Korean and Chinese prisoners of war on Kojee Island. It would be infinitely more difficult to put down such demonstrations in ~~XXXXXX~~ Berlin, which is surrounded by Communist territory. The West German authorities consider it a foregone conclusion that the Communists have inserted trained agents in the refugee stream, in order to enlarge their network in Western Germany. The West Germans are considering ways and means of establishing a secondary screening process, and the isolation of suspicious characters.

But entirely apart from the dangers of conspiracy and subversion, the West German authorities must cope with the problem of sheer human mass. Before the current flood began West Germany had absorbed more than ten million refugees. They have their own political parties, their own newspapers, and they will be a significant factor in the next national German election. Many of these earlier refugees cannot be said to have settled. For example, out of a quarter of a million farmers, only about fifty thousand are working on the land. This new flood multiplies the existing difficulties, and adds to the political and social strains and tensions in West Germany.

No one can be sure whether this is a direct act of policy on the part of the Russians. No one would wish to cast doubt, without evidence, upon the motives of those men and women who leave everything behind them, and flee to the West. But the fact remains that this movement of peoples - ten thousand in three days - could easily be stopped by the Communist authorities, and they have made no effort to stop it. The Communist borders with the West, except for Berlin, are pretty well sealed; but they are permitting refugees to pour through into Berlin at an increasing rate. (Their reasons for doing so are not likely to be humanitarian.) But their real objective in permitting this human flood to flow so freely, remains obscure.

No one can be certain how many - Russian agents are among the refugees fleeing into western Germany. Perhaps, at the moment, it's as Samuel Johnson once said:"We are inclined to believe those whom we do not know because they have never deceived us." But La Rochefoucauld took a sterner view, we would do well to keep in mind:"The surest way to be deceived is to think one's self more clever than others."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senate Republicans and Democrats appear to be heading for their first showdown under the new Administration. The battle concerns the President's request for a resolution condemning Russia's perversion of war-time treaties and Russia's enslavement of free peoples. Secretary of State Dulles had asked the Congress to accept the resolution as is. He warned against any changes that would stir up political battles in this country. He warned too, that a close vote, on the resolution would be "worse than useless." The House Foreign Affairs committee approved it unanimously. But today the Senate Foreign Relations committee decided to amend it, adding a sentence saying that approval of the resolution would not express any opinion as to the validity or invalidity of war-time agreements, (some 40 in all.) The vote in committee was 8 to 6, Democratic Senator Gillette of Iowa voting with the Republican majority. Democrats who oppose the amendment charges that it would make the whole resolution meaningless. They say that in one breath we would be accusing the Russians of violating agreements and at the same time we would say we are not passing on their validity. But Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey acknowledged that many Republicans had campaigned against the Yalta and Potsdam agreements, and they don't want to appear, now, as favoring the agreements worked out by former Democratic Presidents Roosevelt and Truman. After the committee vote, the Senate Republican Policy committee unanimously approved the revision. And Chairman Knowland of California said it was a reasonable approach, should get support from both Democrats and Republicans. But a contrary suggestion came quickly from Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas. He said: "All Americans should be able to rally behind the President on this issue without introducing partisan considerations that can only serve to divide us in the face of the enemy." Senator Johnson says he'll oppose any "partisan amendments."

A House committee today approved a Hawaii statehood bill, but, by one vote, refused to consider Alaska's bid for statehood. Democratic Representative Bentsen of Texas said he wondered whether the Republicans hope to add two new Republican Senators from Hawaii to their slim Senate margin.

Senator McCarthy today posed a problem for the Eisenhower Administration: will it go along with fromer President Truman's order to keep loyalty files from congressional committees, or will it make such files available to investigators? The issue arose when the acting chief of the Voice of America, Reed Harris, said two employees of our high commissioners office in Germany had been cleared for loyalty. But the McCarthy committee also heard Jack Tate, the state department legal adviser, say he did not know if the two men had been cleared. Senator McCarthy then asked two other State Department officials to consult their superiors, and produce the files in question. Earlier, Reed Harris, accused the committee of trying "to publicly wring his neck" for a book Harris wrote 20 years ago. He said he had been cleared in two full F.B.I. investigations. Chairman McCarthy said that is not true.

General Van Fleet returned to Washington from Korea today. He met with the President, received another medal, for "exceptionally meritorious service in a duty of great responsibility," and prepared to meet with the House Armed Services Committee tomorrow.

In Korea today, there was comparatively little ground action as our fighter-bombers attacked an enemy communications center just south of the Yalu.

At the United Nations, Brazil and Ecuador were thinking of proposing a resolution asking the Communists to reconsider their rejection of the Indian truce plan. But Ambassador Lodge told them he thinks "the time is not right" for such a move.

In Iran today, Premier Mossadegh warned all Americans to stay off the streets of Teheran, because of the continuing riots. There are some 300 Americans in the city. Mossadegh also ordered tank-supported troops to end the riots by Communist mobs who oppose his rule, and have turned part of their opposition into an anti-American campaign. More than 200 Communists were arrested today.

In Washington, A.F.L. President Meany told a House committee that the Taft-Hartley law is "unjustifiably oppressive." He wants the closed shop legalized, an end to all unjunctions called for in the law, approval of some types of secondary boycotts, and an end to the non-Communist oath required of union leaders. He also wants unions to be allowed to make political contributions.

Miss Tima D. Ludins, a former New York teacher, today refused to tell the Jenner committee whether she has ever been a Communist. But Miss Ludins told the committee it has "assailed her name and blackened her character" by using what she called "cloak and dagger" tactics to depict her as a mystery woman in a Communist underground.

Federal Security Administrator Hobby told a House committee today that because of civil service rules she has the power to appoint only one or two personal assistants in the agency with more than 37-thousand workers. She said she must depend on hold-over officials to help her formulate new policies.

Ten thousand East German refugees have fled into West Berlin since Sunday morning. The three commercial airlines flying from Berlin to the Western zone of Germany cannot handle the traffic. The West German Government has asked the allies for military transport - planes to help lift these refugees. About seventy thousand of them have come across in Berlin alone since the first of the year. There are now some eighty-five refugee camps in West Berlin. Most of these refugees appear to feel that they must get out now, before it is too late.

The Communists are doing nothing to stop this flood, although they could quite easily seal the frontier. The West German Government is doing what it can to meet the social and economic threat posed by this rising tide of refugees. The West Germans are also beginning to wonder whether this may represent a Communist Trojan horse. As reported here earlier, barracks that had been earmarked for German troops as part of the European Army are already being occupied by refugees. With such numbers it is impossible to set up a security check to determine how many of them are real refugees, and how many may be Communist agents.

The Communists had started a rumor that they would clamp down on the frontier on March 1st, but they didn't. The flow of refugees in the last three days has assumed the character of an immigration rather than an escape. The Communists could stop it by closing down on the subway traffic in Berlin, and by establishing road blocks on the border between east and west Berlin. But they have not done so. Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn that the West German Government wonders increasingly why this is not done. Those who come across represent largely young men, workers and farmers; three classes of citizens vital for the industry, re-armament and food supply of the Soviet zone. The Communists cannot regard their loss with equanimity. The loss of thousands of good farmers threatens serious consequences for the next harvest. Young men who escape will not carry guns in the Communist army now building in the East. Still the Communists do nothing to hinder the flow.

West German officials are now considering the possibility that the Communists are tolerating this exodus as a deliberate act of policy -wondering increasingly whether many of the so-called refugees are being sent over for subversion and the creation of unrest. The West German Minister of Labor reported today that one sizeable group of refugees had refused to work unless they were given the same scale of wages prevailing in the Communist zone of Germany. This could have been the result of their ignorance, but it could also have been an act of provocation.

The way the refugees are piling up in hastily improvised reception centers in Berlin also suggests the possibility of another danger. A very high percentage of the refugees are young men. It is conceivable that they might act, at a given signal, to start riots in these refugee centers, similar to what was undertaken by North Korean and Chinese prisoners of war on Kojee Island. It would be infinitely more difficult to put down such demonstrations in Berlin, which is surrounded by Communist territory. The West German authorities consider it a foregone conclusion that the Communists have inserted trained agents in the refugee stream, in order to enlarge their network in Western Germany. The West Germans are considering ways and means of establishing a secondary screening process, and the isolation of suspicious characters.

But entirely apart from the dangers of conspiracy and subversion, the West German authorities must cope with the problem of sheer human mass. Before the current flood began West Germany had absorbed more than ten million refugees. They have their own political parties, their own newspapers, and they will be a significant factor in the next national German election. Many of these earlier refugees cannot be said to have settled. For example, out of a quarter of a million farmers only about fifty thousand are working on the land. This new flood multiplies the existing difficulites, and adds to the political and social strains and tensions in West Germany.

No one can be sure whether this is a direct act of policy on the part of the Russians. No one would wish to cast doubt without evidence upon the motives of those men and women who leave everything behind them and flee to the West. But the fact remains that this movement of peoples - ten thousand in three days - could easily be stopped by the Communist authorities, and they have made no effort to stop it. The Communist borders with the West, except for Berlin, are pretty well sealed; but they are permitting refugees to pour through into Berlin at an increasing rate. Their reasons for doing so are not likely to be humanitarian. But their real objective in permitting this human flood to flow so freely remains obscure.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: No one can be certain how many Russian agents are among the refugees fleeing into Western Germany. Perhaps, at the moment, it's as Samuel Johnson once said: "We are inclined to believe those whom we do not know because they have never deceived us." But La Rochefoucauld took a sterner view, we would do well to keep in mind: "The surest way to be deceived is to think one's self more clever than others."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday March 4, 1953

This is the news:

The Pentagon reports that 68 Americans were killed on the battlefields of Korea last week. And the Soviet government reports that its 73-year-old prime minister, Joseph Stalin, is near death, as the result of a paralyzing hemorrhage of the brain.

The Russian news was made public almost 20 hours ago, with a promise of future medical bulletins. But there have been none so far. The Russian story is this: Stalin suffered a stroke Sunday night. Forty-eight hours later, Soviet leaders chose to broadcast a medical report to the world. It says: Stalin has lost consciousness..lost the power of speech..lost the use of his right arm, and his right leg, through paralysis. He has a serious heart disturbance. He is breathing with difficulty. Eight doctors are attending him. Two high Soviet medical officials are "guiding" them. And the whole treatment is "conducted under the constant supervision" of the Central Committee of the Communist party..of which Stalin is secretary-general..and the council of ministers..the cabinet..of which Stalin is prime minister. The carefully worded Soviet announcement says it acknowledges Stalin's "more or less prolonged non-participation" in party and government affairs. It says the party and government leaders have taken into account "all circumstances" connected with Stalin's illness. [redacted] They are confident the party and the people of the Soviet Union will display the greatest unity and cohesion at this time..redouble their energies to build Communism in Russia..rally closer around government leaders.

American correspondents in Moscow..as carefully censored as ever... are permitted to report genuine grief among the people of Moscow...tireless waiting for more NEWS [redacted], by radio and newspaper, of Stalin's condition. These correspondents are permitted no word of speculation.

But all over the allied world there is speculation on a successor: will it be the party secretary Malenkov...secret police chief Beria... deputy premier Molotov. General Bedell Smith, former ambassador to Moscow, NOW UNDERSECRETARY OF STATE, has in the past expressed his view that with Stalin's death power will be divided among all three of these men.

The President today issued a statement saying that the thoughts of America go out to all the people of [redacted] the Soviet Union as they ARE anxiously [redacted] concerned because of the illness of the Soviet ruler. The President says these people are the children of the same God who is the father of all people everywhere. They share our longing for a friendly and peaceful world. Americans pray the Amlighty will watch over the Russian people and bring them an opportunity to live their lives in a world where all people may dwell in peace and comradeship.

Former President Truman is sorry to hear of Stalin's trouble.. says he's never happy when anybody suffers a phsyical breakdown. Prime Minister Churchill sent his secretary to the Soviet embassy in London to express his regrets... offer his sympathy. Vatican sources say the Pope has prayed for Stalin's conversion..and for a better future for the oppressed peoples of Russia.

In Yugoslavia, among Communists who know Russian Communists well, there is a widespread feeling that Stalin is dead. Many others around the world share that view.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer says no one can predict what Stalin's death will mean to the world. He warns:"Remember..after the death of Lenin..there came a Stalin." One of the best informed men in Britain said only 12 days ago that the biggest possibility of a new world war stems from a possible struggle for power inside the Kremlin after Stalin dies. # Senator Wiley of Wisconsin says history may be turning a corner.

Senator George feels Stalin's death may mean a breakup of the Soviet union and a greater hope for peace. A number of Congressmen share the same hope. Senator Sparkman cautions against expecting too much. Senator Fulbright feels we must be careful to make no mistakes.

Italian Communist Leader Togliatti hopes Stalin's life may be preserved for humanity. General Van Fleet who fought Chinese & Korean Communists in Korea feels "the only good Communist is a dead one."

Admiral Standley, a former ambassador to Moscow, predicts a revolution in Russia when Stalin dies.. a mad scramble for power. Earl Browder, the former chief of American communists, thinks Stalin's death increases the chances for another world war.. He feels Stalin restrained "adventurous foreign policy" tendencies among other Russian leaders.

Senators who dined with the President came away with conflicting views. Some say he's concerned over Stalin's successor starting trouble in the Near East and Middle East. Senator Hennings says the Senators agreed nobody knows what will happen next. (He thinks that includes the President.)

I should like to discuss the Stalin story in a few minutes.

In Korea today, South Korean troops recaptured a hill from the enemy after a 23-hour battle. And in Washington, General Van Fleet told a House committee: he doesn't believe the Russians now are interested in a shooting war...he believes only a military victory can end the fighting in Korea..for that the 8th army needs more equipment. And the general would have the draft extended from its present 24 months to 30 or 36 months. He says this will "better prepare our boys to live" through combat. Van Fleet thinks we can win in Korea without broadedning the war. He feels the situation now is a sitdown of our own choice..not a situation imposed by the enemy

The Pentagon says we suffered another 411 casualties in Korea last week: 68 killed..347 wounded. Four missing men have been accounted for.

Secretary of State Dulles today permitted John Carter Vincent to retire from the State Department...with a 9-thousand-dollar a year pension after 29 years of service. Mr. Vincent, 18 months ago, had been accused by Senator Mc Carthy of being a Communist. Secretary Dulles says there is no reasonable doubt of Vincent's loyalty.. the record does NOT show that he is a security risk.. but Mr. Dulles believes his reporting and evaluation of facts in the past fails to meet department standards. Therefore he was permitted to resign.

Senator Mc Carthy said today he has received "a pledge of cooperation" from the State Department in his investigation of the loyalty of two employes. He says the department will give him a memorandum based on their security files. Therefore he says he won't have to subpoena the files.

Former Attorney General Mc Granery told a House committee that an agreement..or experiment.. which barred the F.B.I. from investigating alleged police brutalities in New York was a violation of the law. He cancelled it.

The National Association of Manufacturers has asked Congress to outlaw industry-wide strikes and all forms of "compulsory unionism"..such as the closed shop.

And British Foreign Secretary Eden arrived in Washington today saying he was "asking for nothing".

Edward R. Murrow: March 4, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

At the end of a day of diligent endeavor, study and consultation, we have decided that one of three results may be expected from Stalin's present condition, whatever that may be. Things will either get better, or they will grow worse, or they will remain substantially the same. In short, this reporter is unable to contribute anything substantial to the current confusion. However, it is to be noted that the Russians, as is their custom, are presenting the world with a "production." They are telling us what they want us to know, when they want us to know it, and there are no independent sources of information or evidence. Presumably they will continue to follow that policy.

In such a situation, where the future is completely obscure, the past may offer sound counsel. Nations pursue policies because of their history, their folklore, their mythology, as well as for reasons of geography and economics. The passing of Stalin alters none of these factors so far as Russia is concerned. It removes no divisions from the Red Army; alters no fact of geography or economics; and may well be used to fortify and strengthen the mythology and folklore of the Soviet Union. There is no reason whatever to expect that the removal of Stalin will alter the basic objectives of Soviet Russia. It would be dangerous delusion for us to expect that a nation so recently tested in the fire of battle, will tear itself apart for our convenience, in a struggle for the succession. We must expect a steady diet of rumor and speculation. But those who expect blood in the streets, and mass uprisings in the satellite countries, will probably be disappointed. And those who anticipate that the new rulers of Russia will engage in reckless and fatal adventures abroad are also probably wrong.

The control of a police state, even in the satellite countries, is too tight, to permit of fighting on the barricades. And a great nation does not deny its doctrine and its dogma - reverse its basic policy overnight, because of the death or incapacitation of one man. Stalin, even in ~~HHX~~ death, will remain the major prophet of Communist colonialism. He has charted the course. Much of that course is consistent with Russian aims and ambitions, that existed long before the Communists came to power. There may be jockeying for positions of supreme power amongst the top hierarchy in Moscow. That has happened before. Stalin himself emerged supreme as a result of such maneuvering. But There is now a powerful Red Army, and a secret police, and experience in suppression, that did not exist at the time of Lenin's death. It would be agreeable to contemplate the prospect of the vast Russian empire disintegrating in a quarrel over the succession. But there is little reason to expect this to happen. It is unlikely that the Soviet Union will alter its policies drastically or immediately. It is impossible for the satellite countries to free themselves, except in the process of a general war.

It is true that the Communist high command faces a serious problem in connection with the orderly transfer of power to another man, or men. But it is equally true that until and unless we have hard evidence to the contrary, the position of the free world in relation to the Soviet Union remains exactly what it was.

We actually know ~~little~~ nothing of what is going on inside Russia other than what the Russians want us to know. And under these circumstances, Montaigne was right when he said:"All wholesale judgements are loose and imperfect." The Greek,Hal-i-kar-nas-us, once remarked:"Most men judge the acts of others by what they would have done themselves." This is something we would do well to avoid.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Pentagon reports that 68 Americans were killed on the battlefields of Korea last week. And the Soviet government reports that its 73-year-old prime minister, Joseph Stalin, is near death as the result of a paralyzing hemorrhage of the brain.

The Russian news was made public almost 20 hours ago with a promise of future medical bulletins. But there have been none so far. The Russian story is this: Stalin suffered a stroke Sunday night. Forty-eight hours later Soviet leaders chose to broadcast a medical report to the world. It says: Stalin has lost consciousness, lost the power of speech, lost the use of his right arm and his right leg through paralysis. He has a serious heart disturbance. He is breathing with difficulty. Eight doctors are attending him. Two high Soviet medical officials are "guiding" them. And the whole treatment is "conducted under the constant supervision" of the Central Committee of the Communist party, of which Stalin is secretary-general, and the council of ministers, the cabinet, of which Stalin is prime minister. The carefully worded Soviet announcement says it acknowledges Stalin's "more or less prolonged non-participation" in party and government affairs. It says the party and government leaders have taken into account "all circumstances" connected with Stalin's illness. They are confident the party and the people of the Soviet Union will display the greatest unity and cohesion at this time, redouble their energies to build Communism in Russia, rally closer around government leaders.

American correspondents in Moscow, as carefully censored as ever, are permitted to report genuine grief among the people of Moscow, tireless waiting for more news, by radio and newspaper, of Stalin's condition. These correspondents are permitted no word of speculation.

But all over the allied world there is speculation on a successor: will it be the party secretary Malenkov, secret police chief Beria, deputy premier Molotov. General Bedell Smith, former ambassador to Moscow, now undersecretary of state, has in the past expressed his view that with Stalin's death power will be divided among all three of these men.

The President today issued a statement saying that the thoughts of America go out to all the people of the Soviet Union as they are anxiously concerned "because of the illness of the Soviet ruler." The President says these people are the children of the same God who is the father of all people everywhere. They share our longing for a friendly and peaceful world. Americans pray the Almighty will watch over the Russian people and bring them an opportunity to live their lives in a world where all people may dwell in peace and comradeship.

Former President Truman is sorry to hear of Stalin's trouble, says he's never happy when anybody suffers a physical breakdown. Prime Minister Churchill sent his secretary to the Soviet Embassy in London to express his regrets, offer his sympathy. Vatican sources say the Pope has prayed for Stalin's conversion, and for a better future for the oppressed peoples of Russia.

In Yugoslavia, among Communists who know Russian Communists well, there is widespread feeling that Stalin is dead. Many others around the world share that view.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer says no one can predict what Stalin's death will mean to the world. He warns: "Remember, after the death of Lenin, there came a Stalin." One of the best informed men in Britain, said only 12 days ago that the biggest possibility of a new world war stems from a possible struggle for power inside the Kremlin after Stalin dies. Senator Wiley of Wisconsin says History may be turning a corner.

Senator George feels Stalin's death may mean a breakup of the Soviet Union and a greater hope for peace. A number of Congressmen share the same hope. Senator Sparkman cautions against expecting too much. Senator Fulbright feels we must be careful to make no mistakes.

Italian Communist Leader Togliatti hopes Stalin's life may be preserved for humanity. General Van Fleet who fought Chinese and Korean Communists in Korea feels "the only good Communist is a dead one."

Admiral Standley, a former ambassador to Moscow, predicts a revolution in Russia when Stalin dies, a mad scramble for power. Earl Browder, the former chief of American Communists, thinks Stalin's death increases the chances for another world war. He feels Stalin restrained "adventurous foreign policy" tendencies among other Russian leaders.

Senators who dined with the President came away with conflicting views. Some say he's concerned over Stalin's successor starting trouble in the Near East and Middle East. Senator Hennings says the Senators agreed nobody knows what will happen next. He thinks that includes the President.

I should like to discuss the Stalin story in a few minutes.

In Korea today, South Korean troops recaptured a hill from the enemy after a 23-hour battle. And in Washington, General Van Fleet told a House committee: he doesn't believe the Russians now are interested in a shooting war. He believes only a military victory can end the fighting in Korea, for that the 8th army needs more equipment. And the general would have the draft extended from its present 24 months to 30 or 36 months. He says this will "better prepare our boys to live" through combat. Van Fleet thinks we can win in Korea without broadening the war. He feels the situation now is a sitdown of our own choice, not a situation imposed by the enemy.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 411 casualties in Korea last week: 68 killed, 347 wounded. Four missing men have been accounted for.

Secretary of State Dulles today permitted John Carter Vincent to retire from the State Department, with a 9-thousand-dollar a year pension after 29 years of service. Mr. Vincent, 18 months ago, had been accused by Senator McCarthy of being a Communist. Secretary Dulles says there is no reasonable doubt of Vincent's loyalty. The record does not show that he is a security risk, but Mr. Dulles believes his reporting and evaluation of facts in the past fails to meet department standards. Therefore he was permitted to resign.

Senator McCarthy said today he has received "a pledge of cooperation" from the State Department in his investigation of the loyalty of two employees. He says the Department will give him a memorandum based on their security files. Therefore he says he won't have to subpoena the files.

Former Attorney General McGranery told a House committee that an agreement, or experiment, which barred the F.B.I. from investigating alleged police brutalities in New York was a violation of the law. He cancelled it.

The National Association of Manufacturers has asked Congress to outlaw industry-wide strikes and all forms of "compulsory unionism" such as the closed shop.

And British Foreign Secretary Eden arrived in Washington today saying he was "asking for nothing."

At the end of a day of diligent endeavor, study and consultation we have decided that one of three results may be expected from Stalin's present condition, whatever that may be. Things will either get better, or they will grow worse, or they will remain substantially the same. In short, this reporter is unable to contribute anything substantial to the current confusion. However, it is to be noted that the Russians, as is their custom, are presenting the world with a "production." They are telling us what they want us to know, when they want us to know it, and there are no independent sources of information or evidence. Presumably they will continue to follow that policy.

In such a situation, where the future is completely obscure, the past may offer sound counsel. Nations pursue policies because of their history, their folklore, their mythology, as well as for reasons of geography and economics. The passing of Stalin alters none of these factors so far as Russia is concerned. It removes no divisions from the Red Army; alters no fact of geography or economics; and may well be used to fortify and strengthen the mythology and folklore of the Soviet Union. There is no reason whatever to expect that the removal of Stalin will alter the basic objectives of Soviet Russia. It would be dangerous delusion for us to expect that a nation so recently tested in the fire of battle will tear itself apart for our convenience in a struggle for the succession. We must expect a steady diet of rumor and speculation. But those who expect blood in the streets and mass uprisings in the satellite countries will probably be disappointed. And those who anticipate that the new rulers of Russia will engage in reckless and fatal adventures abroad are also probably wrong.

The control of a police state, even in the satellite countries, is too tight to permit of fighting on the barricades. And a great nation does not deny its doctrine and its dogma - reverse its basic policy overnight, because of the death or incapacitation of one man. Stalin, even in death, will remain the major prophet of Communist colonialism. He has charted the course. Much of that course is consistent with Russian aims and ambitions that existed long before the Communists came to power. There may be jockeying for positions of supreme power amongst the top hierarchy in Moscow. That has happened before. Stalin himself emerged supreme as a result of such maneuvering. But there is now a powerful Red Army and a secret police, and experience in suppression that did not exist at the time of Lenin's death. It would be agreeable to contemplate the prospect of the vast Russian empire disintegrating in a quarrel over the succession. But there is little reason to expect this to happen. It is unlikely that the Soviet Union will alter its policies drastically or immediately. It is impossible for the satellite countries to free themselves, except in the process of a general war.

It is true that the Communist high command faces a serious problem in connection with the orderly transfer of power to another man, or men. But it is equally true that until and unless we have hard evidence to the contrary, the position of the free world in relation to the Soviet Union remains exactly what it was.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We actually know nothing of what is going on inside Russia other than what the Russians want us to know. And under these circumstances, Montaigne was right when he said: "All wholesale judgments are loose and imperfect." The Greek, Halikarnasus, once remarked: "Most men judge the acts of others by what they would have done themselves." This is something we would do well to avoid.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday March 5, 1953

This is the news:

Stalin's condition is "exceedingly grave." Twelve hours ago we had the third report on his condition from Moscow..nothing since. The last report from his ten doctors said: he is now suffering from a failing heart...he is still unconcious..in a deep coma...He has trouble breathing.. his blood condition is not good.. and his general condition, since he suffered a brain hemorrhage Sunday night, is deteriorating. Some [redacted] American and British doctors who have studied the detailed reports from the Kremlin conclude that Stalin must die soon..he has little if any chance of recovery. Today in Moscow, as churches were again crowded with those come to pray for their leader, the newspaper Pravda [redacted] printed an editorial calling for unity, solidarity, firmness, vigilance, and double energy to build Communism in the Soviet Union. The newspaper mentioned Stalin's name.. and the name of Lenin.. and the name of Malenkov (once.) It referred to Malenkov's October speech in which he said the Communist party's plans must be based on Stalin's economic and social principles.

[redacted]

Here in New York today, the Russian delegation to the United Nations announced that Andrie Vishinsky is returning to Moscow..by boat..tomorrow. He will report to the Kremlin and then return to the United Nations. Apparently he dislikes air travel because of a heart ailment.

The President said today that he would gladly go half way around the world to meet Stalin's successor..in the interest of promoting peace. He told reporters: he has no private information on Stalin's condition.. knows only what we all know. He is discussing future possibilities with his advisors but cannot predict what will happen. The President said his position is one of "very definite watchfulness."

~~Undersecretary of State Smith, a former ambassador to Moscow, gave Senators his views behind closed doors. Senator Taft then reported: "we were given personal opinions rather than facts, nobody has the faintest idea of what will happen" in Moscow.~~

Secretary of State Dulles has asked the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to act promptly on the nomination of Charles Bohlen to be our ambassador to Moscow. Chairman Wiley says it will be considered Tuesday.

British Foreign Secretary Eden told reporters in Washington today

Stalin's illness is a grave event.. we must not change our determination "to seek an enduring understanding with all nations." He does not know how events in Moscow will affect the future course of world events.

The world awaits more news from the Kremlin.

The President today announced he is drafting an executive order to oust several hundred or more "holdover" employes from their government jobs. Many Eisenhower cabinet and agency heads have found it difficult to surround themselves with their own policy-making executives.

~~The White House says the new order "will provide the heads of agencies with greater freedom" who should occupy such jobs, many of which are now under civil service protection. News Secretary Hagerty says such an order will make it possible to fire several hundred persons.~~

At his news conference today, the President said he opposes General Van Fleet's proposal to extend the two-year draft to 30 or 36 months. (I'd like to review General Van Fleet's testimony before a Senate committee--in a few minutes.)

The President also told reporters: American business is to be complemented for admirable restraint since price controls were removed. He said there has been no "discernable evidence" of any gouging of consumers.

He made it clear that he feels a close vote on a resolution condemning Russia's enslavement of free people would not be good. But the President feels its entirely up to Congress to decide how to word the resolution.

~~"He does not feel that Stalin's illness should delay action on it. Nevertheless, the House leaders have decided to delay action, and Democratic Senator George says he may not have a this resolution again.~~

In answer to another question, the President said that if Senator Mc Carthy's investigation of the Voice of America should get into an area which might produce damage or misunderstanding, it would be up to the President to try to improve it. Mr. Eisenhower said he will try to avoid such a situation.

Today, Alexander Barmine, the head of the Voice of America's Russian desk, told the Mc Carthy committee, that the State Department's information administration, refused to permit him to use Stalin's illness for propaganda purpose... He wanted to SPECULATE ON the possibilities of what might happen when Stalin dies. State Department officials say they have decided to play the Stalin story "straight"... broadcasting only "balanced speculation" from the press and radio about a successor.

In Korea today our fighter-bombers hit industrial targets 140 miles from Vladivostok. Other planes hit enemy positions along the quiet front.

And in Denmark, allied officials had their first look at an undamaged enemy Mig.. when a Polish air force lieutenant..flew it to the Baltic island of Bornholm. He said he didn't want to live any longer under Poland's present Communist regime. Danish and British air force of ficials are already taking the plane apart. The Polish minister insists it be returned to Poland without delay.

Britain's House of Commons today approved the government's defense program, after Prime Minister Churchill called for a record peace-time defense budget: four and a half billion dollars. Mr. Churchill said of the cold war: "What we are faced with is not a violent jerk, but a prolonged pull." He said Britain's defense effort is the maximum "of which we are capable."

In Washington, the government has ended price controls on bread, new cars, household appliances, laundry and dry cleaning.

~~The Civil Defense Administration reveals we are now making atomic bombs that are only three-fourths as powerful as the ones used at Hiroshima and Nagasaki...presumably for tactical warfare.~~

Dr. Joseph Weinberg..frequently referred to as Scientists X-- has been acquitted of falsely swearing that he never was a Communist party member. Federal Judge Holtzoff said he does not agree with the jury's verdict.

And a House committee heard three F.B.I. agents say that New York City Police Commissioner Monaghan prevented them from investigating alleged police brutality in this city.

Edward R. Murrow: March 5, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

General Van Fleet testified today before a closed door session of the Senate Armed Services Committee. / He is reliably reported to have told the Senators that our forces in Korea have been ~~XXXXXXXX~~ handicapped by a serious shortage of ammunition, even including hand grenades - that this shortage had been continuous since he took command. / General Van Fleet said he lacked sufficient men and supplies to win a victory in Korea. / The 8th Army is only at 89 percent of full battle strength, and in some cases has only thirty percent of the required skills, such as tank commanders. / Van Fleet contends that anything short of a total allied victory in Korea would be a defeat; and he is sure the American people will never accept defeat. "If they are properly aroused they will put into the war what it takes to win." [The General thinks we haven't been doing that in Korea.] We must win a military victory to maintain our prestige, honor and influence in world affairs. He thinks the fact that we are stopped is somewhat of an admission we can't do better.

Van Fleet's testimony today, if he is being accurately quoted by the Senators who heard him, is at considerable variance with his public testimony of yesterday, when he said the 8th Army was the best equipped, best fed, best clothed, best housed and best cared for of any army the United States had ever produced. Yesterday he said there were no serious shortages. His statement about shortage of ammunition today caused Senator Byrd of Virginia to send an urgent message to Defense Secretary Wilson. Senator Byrd said that in "all his twenty years in the Senate he had never been more shocked than he was by Van Fleet's testimony." He wants the Pentagon to punish the officials responsible for what he called "this criminal inefficiency." The Senator wants Wilson to make a thorough examination. And Mr. Wilson's office says the situation has been receiving urgent attention since Mr. Wilson took office. A Factual Reply will be sent to the Senator.

General Van Fleet is an officer who sees no reason in fighting a war, unless you're going to win it. And like all other generals throughout history, he is never satisfied with the men or metal available for his purposes. It may be that his testimony today was somewhat garbled in transmission, and that the discrepancies between what he said yesterday, and today, may be ironed out. # On the matter of ammunition there has been testimony from Generals Bradley, Collins and Ridgway that during 1952 we were firing an average of about 62 thousand rounds per day, while the Communists were expending about 64 hundred rounds per day. In other words we were outshooting them about ten to one; even at times when the communists undertook an offensive with heavy artillery preparation, the rate of fire was almost six to one in our favor.

This whole question of ammunition goes back to ordnance factories that were idling and deteriorating, after the end of the late war. We relied upon our reserve stocks of ammunition, and the expenditure of artillery ammunition has been greater than was anticipated. We have fired almost three times as much in Korea as we did during the late war in Europe. This is part of the price of positional warfare as contrasted to a war of movement. There was a time when our ordnance factories switched over from brass to steel casings, and the attendant technical difficulties resulted in reduced output.

The question raised by General Van Fleet, which has now been placed on Mr. Wilson's doorstep, is not the simple one of whether we are producing enough ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ shells to feed the guns in Korea. We are doing that now. The question is one of pace - whether additional ordinance plants should be reactivated, existing ones put on a two-shift basis, and a huge stockpile of ammunition be built up both here at home, and in the NATO countries overseas. This would mean substantial interference with our domestic economy, additional expense, and a prospect that expanded plant facilities might fall idle once the stockpiling targets had been reached. The alternative is to continue the gradual development,not only of production but of XXXXX standby and readily convertible facilities. In part it's an alternative between the quick spurt of production or the long haul approach, both having built-in dangers. This is the sort of problem that only the President, Mr. Wilson and their advisors can solve - the kind of problem that hinges,not upon our capacity to produce ammunition but rather upon the toughest kind of estimate, which is how much of it we'll need a year from now, or two years from now.

It would seem, on the basis of the information made available, that General Van Fleet has not been completely consistent in his evaluation of the Korean situation. Ambrose Bierce once noted that "to be positive is sometimes like being mistaken at the top of one's voice." This could be the case. But then, as Jeremy Bentham concluded:"The rarest of all human qualities is consistency."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Stalin's condition is "exceedingly grave." Twelve hours ago we had the third report on his condition from Moscow, nothing since. The last report, from his ten doctors said: he is now suffering from a failing heart, he is still unconscious, in a deep coma, he has trouble breathing, his blood condition is not good, and his general condition, since he suffered a brain hemmorrhage Sunday night, is deteriorating. Some American and British doctors who have studied the detailed reports from the Kremlin conclude that Stalin must die soon; he has little if any chance of recovery. Today in Moscow, as churches were again crowded with those come to pray for their leader, the newspaper Pravda printed an editorial calling for unity, solidarity, firmness, vigilance, and double energy to build Communism in the Soviet Union. The newspaper mentioned Stalin's name and the name of Lenin, and the name of Malenkov (once.) It referred to Malenkov's October speech in which he said the Communist party's plans must be based on Stalin's economic and social principles.

Here in New York today, the Russian delegation to the United Nations, announced that Andrie Vishinsky is returning to Moscow by boat, tomorrow. He will report to the Kremlin and then return to the United Nations. Apparently he dislikes air travel because of a heart ailment.

The President said today that he would gladly go half way around the world to meet Stalin's successor in the interest of promoting peace. He told reporters: he has no private information on Stalin's condition, knows only what we all know. He is discussing future possibilities with his advisors but cannot predict what will happen. The President said his position is one of "very definite watchfulness."

Secretary of State Dulles has asked the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to act promptly on the nomination of Charles Bohlen to be our ambassador to Moscow. Chairman Wiley says it will be considered Tuesday.

British Foreign Secretary Eden told reporters in Washington today Stalin's illness is a grave event; we must not change our determination "to seek an enduring understanding with all nations." He does not know how events in Moscow will affect the future course of world events. The world awaits more news from the Kremlin.

The President today announced he is drafting an executive order to oust several hundred or more "holdover" employees from their government jobs. Many Eisenhower cabinet and agency heads have found it difficult to surround themselves with their own policy-making executives.

At his news conference today, the President said he opposes General Van Fleet's proposal to extend the two-year draft to 30 or 36 months. I'd like to review General Van Fleet's testimony before a Senate committee in a few minutes.

The President also told reporters: American business is to be complemented for admirable restraint since price controls were removed. He said there has been no "discernable evidence" of any gouging of consumers. He made it clear that he feels a close vote on a resolution condemning Russia's enslavement of free people would not be good. But the President feels its entirely up to Congress to decide how to word the resolution.

In answer to another question, the President said that if Senator McCarthy's investigation of the Voice of America should get into an area which might produce damage or misunderstanding, it would be up to the President to try to improve it. Mr. Eisenhower said he will try to avoid such a situation.

Today, Alexander Barmine, the head of the Voice of America's Russian desk, told the McCarthy committee, that the State Department's information administration, refused to permit him to use Stalin's illness for propaganda purpose. He wanted to speculate on the possibilities of what might happen when Stalin dies. State Department officials say they have decided to play the Stalin story "straight" broadcasting only "balanced speculation" from the press and radio about a successor.

In Korea today our fighter-bombers hit industrial targets 140 miles from Vladivostok. Other planes hit enemy positions along the quiet front.

And in Denmark, allied officials had their first look at an undamaged enemy Mig, when a Polish air force lieutenant flew it to the Baltic island of Bornholm. He said he didn't want to live any longer under Poland's present Communist regime. Danish and British air force officials are already taking the plane apart. The Polish minister insists it be returned to Poland without delay.

Britain's House of Commons today approved the government's defense program after Prime Minister Churchill called for a record peacetime defense budget: four and a half billion dollars. Mr. Churchill said of the cold war: "What we are faced with is not a violent jerk but a prolonged pull." He said Britain's defense effort is the maximum "of which we are capable."

In Washington, the government has ended price controls on bread, new cars, household appliances, laundry and dry cleaning.

Dr. Joseph Weinberg, frequently referred to as Scientists X has been acquitted of falsely swearing that he never was a Communist party member. Federal Judge Holtzoff said he does not agree with the jury's verdict.

And a House committee heard three F.B.I. agents say that New York City Police Commissioner Monaghan prevented them from investigating alleged police brutality in this city.

General Van Fleet testified today before a closed door session of the Senate Armed Services Committee. He is reliably reported to have told the Senators that our forces in Korea have been handicapped by a serious shortage of ammunition, even including hand grenades - that this shortage had been continuous since he took command. General Van Fleet said he lacked sufficient men and supplies to win a victory in Korea. The 8th Army is only at 89 percent of full battle strength, and in some cases has only thirty percent of the required skills, such as tank commanders. Van Fleet contends that anything short of a total allied victory in Korea would be a defeat; and he is sure the American people will never accept defeat. "If they are properly aroused they will put into the war what it takes to win." The General thinks we haven't been doing that in Korea. We must win a military victory to maintain our prestige, honor and influence in world affairs. He thinks the fact that we are stopped is somewhat of an admission we can't do better.

Van Fleet's testimony today, if he is being accurately quoted by the Senators who heard him, is at considerable variance with his public testimony of yesterday, when he said the 8th Army was the best equipped, best fed, best clothed, best housed and best cared for of any army the United States has ever produced. Yesterday he said there were no serious shortages. His statement about shortage of ammunition today caused Senator Byrd of Virginia to send an urgent message to Defense Secretary Wilson. Senator Byrd said that in "all his twenty years in the Senate he had never been more shocked than he was by Van Fleet's testimony." He wants the Pentagon to punish the officials responsible for what he called "this criminal inefficiency." The Senator wants Wilson to make a thorough examination. And Mr. Wilson's office says the situation has been receiving urgent attention since Mr. Wilson took office. A factual reply will be sent to the Senator.

General Van Fleet is an officer who sees no reason in fighting a war unless you're going to win it. And like all other generals throughout history he is never satisfied with the men or metal available for his purposes. It may be that his testimony today was somewhat garbled in transmission, and that the discrepancies between what he said yesterday and today may be ironed out. On the matter of ammunition there has been testimony from Generals Bradley, Collins and Ridgeway that during 1952 we were firing an average of about 62 thousand rounds per day, while the Communists were expending about 64 hundred rounds per day. In other words we were outshooting them about ten to one; even at times when the Communists undertook an offensive with heavy artillery preparation the rate of fire was almost six to one in our favor.

This whole question of ammunition goes back to ordnance factories that were idle and deteriorating after the end of the late war. We relied upon our reserve stocks of ammunition, and the expenditure of artillery ammunition has been greater than was anticipated. We have fired almost three times as much in Korea as we did during the late war in Europe. This is part of the price of positional warfare as contrasted to a war of movement. There was a time when our ordnance factories switched over from brass to steel casings, and the attendant technical difficulties resulted in reduced output.

The question raised by General Van Fleet, which has not been placed on Mr. Wilson's doorstep, is not the simple one of whether we are producing enough shells to feed the guns in Korea. We are doing that now. The question is one of pace - whether additional ordinance plants should be reactivated, existing ones put on a two-shift basis, and a huge stockpile of ammunition be built up both here at home and in the NATO countries overseas. This would mean substantial interference with our domestic economy, additional expense, and a prospect that expanded plant facilities might fall idle once the stockpiling targets had been reached. The alternative is to continue the gradual development not only of production but of standby and readily convertible facilities. In part it's an alternative between the quick spurt of production or the long haul approach, both having built-in dangers. This is the sort of problem that only the President, Mr. Wilson and their advisors can solve - the kind of problem that hinges, not upon our capacity to produce ammunition but rather upon the toughest kind of estimate, which is how much of it we'll need a year from now, or two years from now.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem, on the basis of the information made available, that General Van Fleet has not been completely consistent in his evaluation of the Korean situation. Ambrose Bierce once noted that "to be positive is sometimes like being mistaken at the top of one's voice." This could be the case. But then, as Jeremy Bentham concluded: "The rarest of all human qualities is consistency."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday March 6, 1953

This is the news:

Georgi Malenkov is the new leader of the Soviet Union. He succeeds Josef Stalin, who died last night. While millions of Russians converged on Moscow for the four-day mounring period, set aside for Stalin, Russia's top men announced their new government. The deputy prime ministers to Prime Minister Malenkov will be Beria.. the secret police chief, who now combines security and internal affairs under him...Molotov who goes back as foreign minister, (the job he held for 10 years).. Marshal Bulganin, who becomes war minister, and Kaganovitch. These five men make up the sort of "cabinet" of the government. Andrie Vishinsky, the former foreign minister, now becomes deputy foreign minister, and permanent Soviet representative to the United Nations. He sailed for home by boat today. ~~apparently unaware of the news from Moscow.~~ Jacob Malik will also continue as a deputy foreign minister. Andrie Gromyko, the ambassador to London, is flying to New York to sit in at the U.N. until Vishinsky returns. In the war department, Marshal Zhukov comes out of "retirement" [redacted] to become a deputy war minister. And Marshal Voroshilov becomes the president of the Soviet Union... (a figure-heads job in the past.) The Moscow announcement mentions no replacement for Stalin as secretary-general of the ruling Communist Party. But Malenkov's name heads the list of new members... a list that includes Molotov, Beria, Voroshilov amd [redacted] BULGANIN among others.

The White House has no comment on these changes in the leadership of the Soviet Union. I'd like to discuss the Moscow announcement in a few minutes.

In Korea today, South Korean soldiers beat off five attacks by Communist troops against a [redacted] hill on the central front. And in Tokyo, General Mark Clark, commenting on Washington testimony by General Van Fleet, said: "Ammunition has been rationed in Korea but there was always enough, whenever we needed to shoot it..in any quantity." General Clark says we have enough ammunition in Korea now to stop any enemy offensive. (And Defense Secretary Wilson, in Washington, repeated that to Senators tonight). But during the day General Van Fleet said again there is a serious shortage of ammunition in Korea. Chairman Saltonstall of the Armed Services Committee has summoned Army Chief of Staff Collins to testify on this next week.

British Foreign Secretary Eden conferred with the President today and said it was "very valuable and instructive" to him. [redacted]

The Senate today voted to have an F.B.I. check made on its 1800 employes. But the Senate shouted down a proposal by Independent Senator Morse of Oregon that the F.B.I. be asked to check the Senators. Morse argued: "The times are so serious, that we should not take a chance even on Senators."

~~Chairman McCarthy of the Senate committee investigating the Voice of America said the group is looking into a note that is said to have been written by Raymond Kaplan of New York. Kaplan, an engineer for the Voice, committed suicide in Massachusetts Wednesday night. The note says he fears he would be the scapegoat for the mistakes made in planning Voice transmissions. It adds: "Once the dogs are set on you, everything you have done since the beginning of time is suspect."~~

A new labor advisory committee , studying the Taft-Hartley law, collapsed today. This group--with five members each from industry, labor and the public--was named by Secretary of Labor Durkin to work out different views on revising the law. The Industry members refused to be "bound" on any changes.

Acting Defense Mobilizer Fleming has called on Democrats in the government who hold "policy-making" or "confidential" positions..to resign. He says those employes who are emotionally or intellectually attached to the last Administration will hurt themselves and the new ADMINISTRATION if they stay on their jobs.

The President today named General George C. Marshal to be his personal representative at the Coronation of Britain's Queen Elizabeth...

Edward R. Murrow: March 6, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The Russians have moved with extraordinary speed to fill the vacuum created by Stalin's death. According to their own announcement, the most important task of the Party and the Government is to "insure uninterrupted and correct direction of the entire life of the country." And the communique says: "This in turn involves the greatest cohesion of leadership, and prevention of any effort of diversion and panic, in order to insure the realization of policy drawn up by our Party and Government, as regards our internal and external affairs."

The top man is Georgi Malenkov. Like most Russian leaders, little is known about him. He is 51 years old; overweight; wax-faced; a man of great drive; can get along without much sleep - a grim and aloof individual, sparing of speech. He's a moderate drinker, a big eater, (fond of pastry and expensive cigarettes.) In recent years he has travelled in an armored car with an escort. Malenkov has been married twice. No one has ever accused him of being an intellectual. He is said to be fond of duck-hunting, and of foul language. Malenkov has never travelled outside the Russian orbit never attended an international conference. Born in the southern Urals he joined the Bolshevik Army in 1917. He became a party member at the age of 18; later became a political commissar; studied mechanical engineering. He became Stalin's secretary, and his trusted stool-pigeon and hatchet man. As Stalin's power increased Malenkov went up with him. Part of Malenkov's job was to run a security check or a loyalty check on Party members. During the late war he was in charge of plane and tank production, and is reported to have done a good job. He is on the record, not once but several times, as believing that the Third World War will become the grave of world capitalism."

Malenkov's appointment is no guarantee that a prolonged struggle for power will not ensue; but it is certainly an effort to prevent it. Malenkov has always operated in Stalin's shadow; but in 1952 he made a few speeches. He said "the United States has decided to wreck the peace - the ruling circles of the United States are determined to dominate the world. The United States has decided to break the peace and prepare a new war. The United States is inspiring plots against Britain and France, and is depriving Italy and Japan of their independence. American bases are being created for criminal purposes. Western Germany and Japan are being militarized for the same kind of purposes." Malenkov in 1952 sounded like Stalin, only less restrained. Back in 1947 Malenkov said: "We believe that the co-existence of two systems, capitalism and socialism, is inevitable for a long period of time." But he hasn't said anything like that in the last couple of years. / For the last 25 years he has shared Stalin's secrets, and may have acquired some of Stalin's caution and cunning. He is a harsh critic of Russian domestic affairs; has said that there is great waste and unproductivity in Russian industry. Transportation and communications are badly organised. He thinks the arts could be improved; and "there is not enough satire." Mr. Malenkov is not likely to be subjected to much satire in his new position. If anything happens to him it is likely to be more lethal than mere satire. / But so far as we can judge the Russians have managed an orderly transfer of power, and there is nothing in the composition of the new government to indicate any substantial change of policy.

The Russian leaders were confronted with a unique problem. Stalin had been made into a god. Every instrument of propaganda was bent to make him even more important than Communism. It took almost thirty years, this effort to deify this man. There was no provision for a successor; a new Communist god could not be created overnight. That takes time, even when all instruments of information are used for the purpose. So they chose Malenkov, Stalin's principal and ruthless disciple, presumably on the assumption that he could rule, in the shadow and with some of the authority of the departed leader. It will take time and ingenuity to legitimize the succession. But while this is going on, Malenkov can act as an echo of Stalin.

The text of the announcement regarding the new administration is very detailed, involves the merging and re-organisation of several ministeries, and does not read like a document that is hastily thrown together or improvised. It is possible that the transfer of power within the Soviet Union may be achieved smoothly. We do not know. But the men in the Kremlin must try to keep the communist empire intact.

Amongst the communists in the satellite countries Stalin's name has been magic. It was the psychological cement which held the satellite communist parties together. Stalin was the leader, the connecting link between ~~MAGYARS~~ Magyars, Czechs, Rumanians and other non-Russian peoples. He was the symbol that made Russianism palatable to people who have a deep historical hatred for all things Russian. In the satellite countries the communists have been in control for only five or six years. ~~THEY~~ Their governments and economic systems have not hardened as in the Soviet Union. The satellite governments do not have 35 years of communist power and mythology behind them to cushion the shock of change. They haven't completed the process of liquidation and butchery, which establishes the Party as the sole, unassailable, monolithic power in the state. These satellite countries are only now passing through the political and economic stage that the Soviet Union passed through 20 years ago. [There are too many men who remember freedom.] The satellites are plagued by sabotage and absenteeism. There have been purges, but nothing like the ones which liquidated opposition in the Soviet Union. Many of the satellite leaders were kept in power by Stalin, rather than by their own party organisations, or their own people.

Nothing may happen on this Russian fringe as a result of Stalin's death, at least for some time. But empires always begin to crumble away at their edges. And if there are to be changes in Stalin's empire as a result of his death, the signs will first be seen in Prague, Budapest and Warsaw, rather than in Moscow. The change may well be only bloodier and more brutal oppression, but the new rulers of the Russian Empire - like all rulers of all empires in history - must worry about their outposts.

The immediate problem confronting the Russian leadership is to maintain a united front. For this purpose, the Stalin myth should prove useful. For as Carlyle once observed:"Men live by believing something, not by debating and arguing about many things." How long this will last is a question. But it is true, as Janius said:"When once a man is determined to believe, the very absurdity of the doctrine does but confirm his faith

Good Nite and Good Luck!

monday, march 9, 1953.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles, says Stalin's death has given the whole world a better chance for peace. Some hours after Russia's new leaders euologized Stalin, and placed his body in the Lenin Tomb in Moscow, Mr. Dulles held his first news conference, as secretary of state, at the United Nations. In a statement, and by answering questions, Mr. Dulles had this to say: The Eisenhower era begins as the Stalin era ends. For ten years, the world was dominated by the malignant power of Stalin. Now, he's dead. And he cannot bequath to anyone his prestige, his dominant personality, his authority, his desire to be a world-wide despot. Mr. Dulles says: as Stalin Dies, General Eisenhower has become president of the United States, with a prestige unmatched in history. A new era begins, one in which the guiding spirit is liberty not enslavement...one in which human relations will be those of fraternity, not one man domination. [redacted]

In this first official American reaction to Stalin's death, Mr. Dulles explained that his reference to a new spirit in this new era, does not mean a new cold war strategy..or new tactics. We plan no policy changes...

We are not going to ask the U.N. do undertake any new actions in Korea at this time. [redacted]. But the death of Stalin--in the Dulles view--has removed a damper on the world's aspirations and hopes. He does not think Malenkov can be as effective a damper, a block, to what all people--including the Russians--really want. That is the reason Mr. Dulles has hopes for the future.

Mr. Dulles made this government's views public after Russia's new bosses..Malenkov....Beria and Molotov...went all out in telling the world that they want peace. Premier Malenkov said: the main task of his government is to preserve peace..the people thirst for peace and curse war.. world peace must be [redacted] based on mutual trust confirmed by facts. Malenkov said that no force in the world can arrest the advance of communism.. [redacted] And he said his whole policy will be based on the Lenin-Stalin premise of "peaceful competition and prolonged co-existence between capitalism and Socialism." Beria, too, spoke of peace. But the chief of the secret police, master of the slave camps, also ridiculed the idea that there could be any "disorder" in the ranks of the new Soviet leaders.. He boasted of the modern equipment the Red Army has..said it will be able to ward off any aggressor. And Foreign Minister Molotov, in the third speech of the day, said his government will follow "an unswerving policy of preservation and coordination of peace." None of the three made the customary Moscow reference to Anglo-American warmongers ....none seemed to speak any new Soviet line.. none mentioned God or offered prayers for their departed leader, their country or their people.

~~In Communist China Mao Tse Tung declared that "the Communist party of the Soviet Union will still be our teacher in the future."~~

On the battlefields of Korea, at 6 p.m.---noon Moscow time... ~~as the Communist and satellite [illegible] anniversary of Stalin,~~ on the EASTERN FRONT allied artillery launched a big barrage during the five minutes of silence marked by Communists the world over.

Our jets destroyed three enemy Migs and damaged possibly five others.

In Washington, Senator Mc Carthy said today that he has been informed that 96 ships, on which the United States holds mortgages, have been engaged in trade with Communist China. Except for four registered in France, the rest are registered in Greece and Italy.

Senator Taft said today he will not press for an investigation of the whole Korean war. The Senator made his suggestion for a broad congressional investigation on Saturday. But many congressmen of both parties objected. Today, the Senator said he has no desire to force such an investigation, because it appears the Senate Armed Services Committee does not want it.

The Senator also told reporters--after a White House conference--that the chances are good for an agreement between Congress and the Administration, on 15 changes in the Taft-Hartley law..some of them "substantial."

Today, the Supreme Court ruled that the Taft-Hartley law does not prevent musicians from being paid [redacted] for standing by, when visiting name bands play a theater.. and it doesn't forbid the setting of "bogus" type by newspaper printers. The printers' union contracts normally call for their men to be paid to set type--which is never used--for advertisements which come to the newspaper plants ready for use.. in the form of engravings.

The Taft-Hartley law says employers cannot be forced to pay for services not performed. But the Court, confining itself to the matter of bogus type, ruled, in effect, that the printers actually do work..even if its not used. The court also upheld the $50 federal gambling stamp tax.

The President today named Lewis L. Strauss, a former member of the Atomic Energy Commission, to be his special assistant on atomic matters. And the Commission announced that it has an atomic furnace capable of producing useful amounts of electric power. At Oak Ridge, Tennessee, it has produced enough electricity to supply 50 five-room homes.

In the House, some Southern Democrats argued against statehood for Hawaii..on the grounds that Caucasians are in the minority there. They fear "a new political philosophy" if Hawaii becomes our 49th state. ~~Hawaii delegate Farrington said: "Hawaiians are glad to be treated with equality in the payment of taxes. They want equality also in other aspects of American life."~~

~~Here in New York,~~ Governor Dewey has accused the city's Democratic administration ~~of playing "Russian roulette"~~ with the city's ~~finances. He says he will step into the financial crisis to keep city~~

Chairman Velde of the House un-American activities committee says the group may investigate Communist infiltration of the clergy..."including some who seem to have devoted more time to politics than they have to the ministry." Velde says this should not be regarded as retaliation against clergymen who have attacked him and his committee for their current investigation of Communism in colleges.

Edward R. Murrow: March 9, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

There are more than 250 generals and admirals Meeting - outside Paris - they come from the 14 North Atlantic Treaty nations. This is probably the greatest collection of Western top military brass, ever assembled in one place. This is a maneuver, to study the plans for defending Western Europe, if Russia should attack. # And in Canada today Lord Ismay, the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, gave what might be called an advance finding on the maneuver. He said our armed strength is not nearly adequate; (we must build it up as fast as possible.) And he added that the whole North Atlantic Treaty Organization aims at a military strength, which is the barest minimum for defense. "There is no margin whatsoever for aggression on our part."

But perhaps more important than this meeting of the top brass, is another session going on in Paris, where the participants are mostly colonels. This is called the French-American-Indo-China Working Group. These French and American officers are trying to draw up recommendations - decide what concrete measures of American support are required, to finish the prolonged war in Indo-China. Our representatives at this meeting include men from the Departments of Defense, State, Army, Navy and the Mutual Security Administration. They and their French counter-parts are talking about how to end a war that is already in progress, while the high brass conducts an exercise about a war that may or may not happen. #

The heads of all the satellite states are in Moscow attending Stalin's funeral. This is the first time that so much Communist high political brass has been gathered in one place. No one knows what conferences will be held, but there must be serious discussion of the future of international communism. The leaders of these various satellite states pledged their allegiance to Stalin. There was no pledge to the Kremlin as such, or to the Russian Communist Party or the Politburo. # It was always a pledge to Stalin in his personal capacity as the spiritual leader of world communism. It appears that the iron machinery of the communist state clanks on in Russia, but there is no provision for a substitute for Stalin in international communism. It will take time for the satellite leaders and their followers to worship Malenkov as they did Stalin. Some new formula may have to be found. Malenkov, at the meeting of the Cominform in Warsaw in 1947, was theoretically no higher than Slansky, Pauka, and Gomoulka - all of them either dead or regarded as traitors. # These communist leaders in Moscow will have to find some new kind of spiritual cement to try to hold world communism together. And the leaders of Poland and Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria must be wondering what fate holds for them and their communist parties at home now that the protection and threat of Stalin has been removed.

One old and truly tested communist is not in Moscow - Marshal Tito is on his way to London. A British naval escort will pick him up off Malta, and authorities in London are taking security measures unprecedented in peacetime. He left Yugoslavia in secret. Not the least interesting thing about this trip is that Tito was due to arrive in London on March 23rd. After Stalin's death the timetable was changed, and he is now scheduled to reach London on March 16th. (The date was advanced at Marshal Tito's own request.) Tito has spent his life in the communist movement; probably knows more than any man outside the Iron Curtain about how the Kremlin works. He owes a large part of his authority in Yugoslavia to the fact that he stayed there and fought during the war, and did not return to his own country in a Russian aircraft after the Germans had been driven out, as did most of the other satellite leaders. He is the only man to take himself and his country out of the grasp of the Russian empire. He has been the focal point of Russian hatred and Russian pressure.

Last week Tito told British correspondents in Belgrade that he might ask for a mutual defense pact with Britain. He has now apparently moved up the date of his arrival in London by a week. # If the new masters in the Kremlin could devise a method of eliminating Tito, and of re-establishing their control over Yugoslavia, they would begin their regime with a smashing victory, and discourage powerfully, those in the satellite countries who would like to imitate Tito's bid for independence. # Tito's estimate of what the new rulers of Russia will do, would probably be nearer the mark than that of any man outside Russia. # He is not likely to give it in public, but his action, in hastening to London, is fairly eloquent evidence that he does not feel that the new government in Russia reduces in any way the threat to Yugoslavia.

The ~~Secretary of State~~, Mr. Dulles, apparently feels that the death of Stalin foreshadows a "new era"...and a hopeful one for the world. This could be so. But it is equally true, as Sir Samuel Tuke once remarked: "We easily persuade ourselves to hope the things we wish." Probably Carlyle set up a pretty good rule to follow when he said:"I [redacted] grow daily to honor facts more and more and theory less and less."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 9, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says Stalin's death has given the whole world a better chance for peace. Some hours after Russia's new leaders euologized Stalin and placed his body in the Lenin Tomb in Moscow, Mr. Dulles held his first news conference as Secretary of State at the United Nations. In a statement and by answering questions, Mr. Dulles had this to say: The Eisenhower era begins as the Stalin era ends. For ten years the world was dominated by the malignant power of Stalin. Now, he's dead. And he cannot bequeath to anyone his prestige, his dominant personality, his authority, his desire to be a world-wide despot. Mr. Dulles says: as Stalin dies, General Eisenhower has become president of the United States with a prestige unmatched in history. A new era begins, one in which the guiding spirit is liberty, not enslavement; one in which human relations will be those of fraternity, not one man domination. In this first official American reaction to Stalin's death, Mr. Dulles explained that his reference to a new spirit in this new era does not mean a new cold war strategy or new tactics. We plan no policy changes. We are not going to ask the U.N. to undertake any new actions in Korea at this time. But the death of Stalin, in the Dulles view, has removed a damper on the world's aspirations and hopes. He does not think Malenkov can be as effective a damper, a block, to what all people, including the Russians, really want. That is the reason Mr. Dulles has hopes for the future.

Mr. Dulles made this government's views public after Russia's new bosses, Malenkov, Beria and Molotov, went all out in telling the world that they want peace. Premier Malenkov said: the main task of his government is to preserve peace, the people thirst for peace and curse war, world peace must be based on mutual trust confirmed by facts. Malenkov said that no force in the world can arrest the advance of Communism. And he said his whole policy will be based on the Lenin-Stalin premise of "peaceful competition and prolonged co-existence between capitalism and Socialism." Beria, too, spoke of peace. But the chief of the secret police, master of the slave camps, also ridiculed the idea that there could be any "disorder" in the ranks of the new Soviet leaders. He boasted of the modern equipment the Red Army has, said it will be able to ward off any aggressor. And Foreign Minister Molotov, in the third speech of the day, said his government will follow "an unswerving policy of preservation and coordination of peace." None of the three made the customary Moscow reference to Anglo-American warmongers, none seemed to speak any new Soviet line; none mentioned God or offered prayers for their departed leader, their country or their people.

On the battlefields of Korea, at 6 p.m., none Moscow time, allied artillery launched a big barrage on the Eastern front during the five minutes of silence marked by Communists the world over.

Our jets destroyed three enemy Migs and damaged possibly five others.

In Washington, Senator McCarthy said today that he has been informed that 96 ships, on which the United States holds mortgages, have been engaged in trade with Communist China. Except for four registered in France, the rest are registered in Greece and Italy.

Senator Taft said today he will not press for an investigation of the whole Korean war. The Senator made his suggestion for a broad congressional investigation on Saturday. But many congressmen of both parties objected. Today, the Senator said he has no desire to force such an investigation because it appears the Senate Armed Services Committee does not want it.

The Senator also told reporters after a White House conference, that the chances are good for an agreement between Congress and the Administration on 15 changes in the Taft-Hartley law, some of them "substantial."

Today, the Supreme Court ruled that the Taft-Hartley law does not prevent musicians from being paid for standing by when visiting name bands play a theater, and it doesn't forbid the setting of "bogus" type by newspaper printers. The printers' union contracts normally call for their men to be paid to set type, which is never used, for advertisements which come to the newspaper plants ready for use in the form of engravings. The Taft-Hartley law says employers cannot be forced to pay for services not performed. But the Court, confining itself to the matter of bogus type, ruled, in effect, that the printers actually do work, even if its not used. The Court also upheld the $50 federal gambling stamp tax.

The President today named Lewis L. Strauss, a former member of the Atomic Energy Commission, to be his special assistant on atomic matters. And the Commission announced that it has an atomic furnace, capable of producing useful amounts of electric power. At Oak Ridge, Tennessee, it has produced enough electricity to supply 50 five-room homes.

In the House, some Southern Democrats argued against statehood for Hawaii, on the grounds that Caucasians are in the minority there. They fear "a new political philosophy" if Hawaii becomes our 49th state.

Chairman Velde of the House un-American activities committee says the group may investigate Communist infiltration of the clergy, "including some who seem to have devoted more time to politics than they have to the ministry." Velde says this should not be regarded as retaliation against clergymen who have attacked him and his committee for their current investigation of Communism in colleges.

There are more than 250 generals and admirals meeting outside Paris, they come from the 14 North Atlantic Treaty nations. This is probably the greatest collection of Western top military brass ever assembled in one place. This is a maneuver to study the plans for defending Western Europe if Russia should attack. And in Canada today Lord Ismay, the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, gave what might be called an advance finding on the maneuver. He said our armed strength is not nearly adequate; we must build it up as fast as possible. And he added that the whole North Atlantic Treaty Organization aims at a military strength which is the barest minimum for defense.

"There is no margin whatsoever for aggression on our part."

But perhaps more important than this meeting of the top brass is another session going on in Paris, where the participants are mostly colonels. This is called the French-American-Indo-China Working Group. These French and American officers are trying to draw up recommendations - decide what concrete measures of American support are required to finish the prolonged war in Indo-China. Our representatives at this meeting include men from the Departments of Defense, State, Navy, Army and the Mutual Security Administration. They and their French counterparts are talking about how to end a war that is already in progress, while the high brass conducts an exercise about a war that may or may not happen.

The heads of all the satellite states are in Moscow attending Stalin's funeral. This is the first time that so much Communist high political brass has been gathered in one place. No one knows what conferences will be held, but there must be serious discussion of the future of international communism. The leaders of these various satellite states pledged their allegiance to Stalin. There was no pledge to the Kremlin as such, or to the Russian Communist Party or the Politburo. It was always a pledge to Stalin in his personal capacity as the spiritual leader of world communism. It appears that the iron machinery of the communist state clanks on in Russia, but there is no provision for a substitute for Stalin in international communism. It will take time for the satellite leaders and their followers to worship Malenkov as they did Stalin. Some new formula may have to be found. Malenkov, at the meeting of the Cominform in Warsaw in 1947, was theoretically no higher than Slansky, Pauka and Gomoulka - all of them either dead or regarded as traitors. These Communist leaders in Moscow will have to find some new kind of spiritual cement to try to hold world communism together. And the leaders of Poland and Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria must be wondering what fate holds for them and their communist parties at home now that the protection and threat of Stalin has been removed.

One old and truly tested communist is not in Moscow - Marshal Tito is on his way to London. A British naval escort will pick hom up off Malta, and authorities in London are taking security measures unprecedented in peacetime. He left Yugoslavia in secret. Not the least interesting thing about this trip is that Tito was due to arrive in London on March 23rd. After Stalin's death the timetable was changed, and he is now scheduled to reach London on March 16th. The date was advanced at Marshal Tito's own request. Tito has spent his life in the communist movement; probably knows more than any man outside the Iron Curtain about how the Kremlin works. He owes a large part of his authority in Yugoslavia to the fact that he stayed there and fought during the war, and did not return to his own country in a Russian aircraft after the Germans had been driven out, as did most of the other satellite leaders. He is the only man to take himself and his country out of the grasp of the Russian empire. He has been the focal point of Russian hatred and Russian pressure.

Last week Tito told British correspondents in Belgrade that he might ask for a mutual defense pact with Britain. He has now apparently moved up the date of his arrival in London by a week. If the new masters in the Kremlin could devise a method of eliminating Tito and of re-establishing their control over Yugoslavia, they would begin their regime with a smashing victory, and discourage powerfully those in the satellite countries who would like to imitate Tito's bid for independence. Tito's estimate of what the new rulers of Russia will do would probably be nearer the mark than that of any man outside Russia. He is not likely to give it in public, but his action in hastening to London is fairly eloquent evidence that he does not feel that the new government in Russia reduces in any way the threat to Yugoslavia. - This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Mr. Dulles, apparently feels that the death of Stalin forshadows a "new era" and a hopeful one for the world. This could be so. But it is equally true, as Sir Samuel Tuke once remarked: "We easily persuade ourselves to hope the things we wish." Probably Carlyle set up a pretty good rule to follow when he said: "I grow daily to honor facts more and more and theory less and less."
Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday March 10, 1953

This is the news:

An American jet plane has been shot down, inside our zone of Germany, by a Mig bearing the markings of the Czech air force. The pilot, Lt. Warren Brown of Colorado, parachuted to safety, escaped with a few scratches. The plane was destroyed. The State Department has ordered our ambassador in Prague to make the "strongest possible protest" to the Czech government. Secretary of State Dulles says we take "a serious view" of the incident. (the fifth time an American plane has been forced down by Russian-made planes since the cold war began.) This is what happened. Two American F-84 jets were on a routine patrol, from their base near Munich, inside our zone of Germany--near Regensberg. When they were at least 15 miles inside our zone, flying in clear weather, two Migs attacked at 12-thousand feet. The F-84 is a much slower plane than the Mig. One of our planes was shot down. The other turned for home and reported the event. We did not fire at the enemy planes. They turned from the engagement and flew into Czechoslovakia. This is the first time one of our planes has been shot down over allied territory...on other occassions, the Russians and the satellites have claimed that our planes were over their territory.

In addition to the State Department protest, U.S. High Commissoner Conant in Germany has issued a statement calling the attack "a grave incident".. "a gross violation of our border"... an outrage. He says he is confident "the air force in Germany will know how to deal with any future incursions of this type."

Four other American jets today were delivered to Yugoslavia... (the first allotted under our military aid program.) Ambassador Allen says the Russians will understand the "impact of this event".

Our jets in Korea were grounded today..by bad weather. But despite a heavy rain that turned the front into [redacted] mud, allied raiders struck Communist (TRENCHES) at two points. And the Navy says two men were killed, 15 wounded, in an explosion aboard the carrier Oriskany last Friday.

The leader of Communist China, Mao Tse Tung, says the Russian-Chinese front is "invincible". He believes "profoundly" that the new Malenkov government in Moscow will continue the work of Stalin.

In Washington, Chairman Saltonstall of the Senate Armed Services Committee says there is no evidence that any American lost his life in Korea because of a lack of ammunition. At the end of a day of secret hearings on General Van Fleet's charge that there have been serious, and sometimes critical ammunition shortages in Korea, the Senator said: "The testimony shows that the ammunition supply in Korea today is adequate and getting much better rapidly." It is his opinion that in the past there were ammunition shortages, and this was "reflected very acutely at the front." Army Chief of Staff Collins testified that our troops have never suffered from a shortage of ammunition. "the ammunition situation in the Far East is generally good." He wants the Communists to take note of this. And Defense Secretary Wilson said there will soon be enough ammunition in Korea for "more active fighting" if that is what the high command wants to do.

The House today passed a Hawaii statehood bill and sent it to the Senate.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee decided to postpone indefinitely any action on the Administration's request for a resolution condemning Russia's enslavement of people. The committee also put off until next week any action on Charles Bohlen's nomination to be ambassador to Moscow. Republican Senator Ferguson of Michigan wants the State Department to furnish some documents concerning the Yalta agreement.

Secretary-General Trygvie Lie told the United Nations General Assembly today that the Russians and their satellites have put the crudest form of pressure on him. (because he has opposed Communist aggression in Korea.) Mr. Lie explained the reasons for his resignation. And he said this Soviet pressure is in violation of the U.N. charter which forbids any interference with the Secretary General by member nations. Gromyko of Russia called the Lie speech "very cheap propaganda." Ambassador Lodge and British Foreign Secretary Eden made a point of shaking hands with Mr. Lie after his speech.

~~In that talk, Lie also said he welcomes the American government's loyalty investigation of Americans employed by the U.N. He will not keep on the U.N. payroll any Americans who refuse to testify about possible Communist connections. He also paid tribute to the United States for its contributions in Korea.~~

In Washington, the government announced that all controls on civilian production and construction will end on June 30. And Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana says the President is "quite favorable" to setting up a standby controls program in law.

Attorney General Brownell has urged the Supreme Court to approve the enforcement of unused laws against racial segregation in Washington restaurants. And Mr. Brownell says a federal grand jury in New York has indicted a city detective on charges of violating the civil rights laws.. by beating up "without provocation" a subway motorman he was arresting.

Dr. Bella Dodd, a former Communist and former New York teacher, told a Senate committee: at one time Communists infiltrated the staffs of the NY city and state education departments and had party members placed in congressional offices, and advisory committees to the President. She praised the committee's investigation of alleged communism in education.

Chairman Velde of the House un-American activities committee explained today that he has no intention of searching for Communists among clergymen. But--he says--it's within the realm of possibility that individual clergymen might be investigated. After a number of his fellow committee members protested, Velde explained: the committee has not discussed any such investigation.. there is no need to consider it now.

Edward R. Murrow: March 10, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Our favorite comment to date on the new Russian administration came today from Mr. Luns, the Netherlands Foreign Minister. He had some conversation with President Eisenhower and said that they had agreed that the free world should not be taken in by the early moves of the new Russian Government, whether they appear to be either more friendly or more bellicose. And then Mr. Luns produced one of those rare sentences which would probably win agreement in both Washington and Moscow. He said: "It is too early even for the Russians to know what is going to happen there." #

Today West German Chancellor Adenauer tried to reassure the French a little about what will happen when and if Germany is rearmed. He said the idea that Germany would start a war with Russia to regain her lost territories in the East was "total nonsense" - no responsible German would risk the destruction of his country by making it a battleground for conflict between the East and West. Chancellor Adenauer said: "We are now striving to make it so that war between France and Germany will be impossible in the future. Thereupon we can build a real Europe." He pointed out that the proposed 12 German divisions could do nothing against the might of the Soviet Union. But the demand for German unity is one that must be made by any politician in Germany who hopes to achieve or retain power. The only ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ country which can give the Germans unity without war is Russia. The Russians know that and so do the Germans. And perhaps more importantly, the Poles know it too.

The Russians in their writings and their broadcasts have never lost sight of the fact that in Europe Germany is the prize for which East and West are contending. And the question of ~~the~~ German policy must be high on the agenda of the new rulers in the Kremlin. # It was just ~~XXXX~~ one year ago today that the Russians launched their major diplomatic offensive on the subject of Germany. They addressed a note to the Western Powers, and indirectly to the Germans, suggesting a peace treaty for Germany, and the withdrawal of all occupation forces. There were four exchanges of notes between Russia and the Western Powers, between March and the end of September. (They were no nearer agreement at the end than at the beginning of the exchange.) # The original Soviet proposal of a year ago amounted to an open bribe to the West Germans to make common cause with Russia against the West. They promised the unification of Germany, the withdrawal of all allied and Russian forces, and the liquidation of all allied military bases within one year after the signing of the peace treaty. The Russians also promised to guarantee all "democratic" rights and freedom of action for democratic parties and organisations. In the language of Russian diplomacy "democratic" must be read to mean "communist".

The Russians also proposed the prohibition of all anti-democratic organisations - equal civil and political rights for all former members of the German Army, including all officers and generals, and all former Nazis, except those convicted of war crimes. The Russian proposal also provided that Germany should have its own national Army, Navy and Air Force, plus the war production needed to support this armed force.

This was an open appeal to revive in Germany exactly what the West does not desire. The proposal struck no responsive chord in the West, but no one can be sure of the propaganda value it may have had in Western Germany. The Western reply insisted on free elections in Germany, both east and west, under international supervision, in order to establish a truly democratic Germany which could then negotiate a peace treaty. The last Western Note on this subject was sent at the end of last September. The Russians ignored it.

But the future of Germany remains the number one problem in Europe. The Stalin approach to the problem was shrewdly conceived, calculated to appeal to large numbers of West Germans and to the refugees from the eastern provinces. If there should be any change in Russian policy, which would presumably be a change in tactics rather than objectives, it is likely to become apparent first in relation to Germany.

Malenkov in his first speech has played upon the theme of peace and plenty. But like Stalin he is confronted with a wealth of opportunities for bringing pressure upon the West. He can do it in Berlin, Yugoslavia, the Middle East, Indo-China or Korea. We remain in the position we have occupied for the past several years, a position of waiting for the next Russian challenge before devising our response.

The Netherlands Foreign Minister is obviously a man of few...but frank and well-chosen words. His comments remind me of something Samuel Butler once said:"If people would dare to speak to one another unreservedly, there would be a good deal less sorrow in the world a hundred years hence." Some years earlier, Benjamin Franklin put it even more simply when he remarked:"There is no wisdom like frankness."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

An American jet plane has been shot down, inside our zone of Germany, by a Mig bearing the markings of the Czech air force. The pilot, Lt. Warren Brown of Colorado, parachuted to safety, escaped with a few scratches. The plane was destroyed. The State Department has ordered our ambassador in Prague to make the "strongest possible protest" to the Czech government. Secretary of State Dulles says we take "a serious view" of the incident (the fifth time an American plane has been forced down by Russian-made planes since the cold war began.) This is what happened. Two American F-84 jets were on a routine patrol, from their base near Munich, inside our zone of Germany near Regensberg. When they were at least 15 miles inside our zone, flying in clear weather, two Migs attacked at 12-thousand feet. The F-84 is a much slower plane than the Mig. One of our planes was shot down. The other turned for home and reported the event. We did not fire at the enemy planes. They turned from the engagement and flew into Czechoslovakia. This is the first time one of our planes has been shot down over allied territory, on other occasions, the Russians and the satellites have claimed that our planes were over their territory. In addition to the State Department protest, U.S. High Commissioner Conant in Germany has issued a statement calling the attack "a grave incident" - "a gross violation of our border" - "an outrage." He says he is confident the air force in Germany will know how to deal with any future incursions of this type."

Four other American jets today were delivered to Yugoslavia (the first allotted under our military aid program.) Ambassador Allen says the Russians will understand the "impact of this event."

Our jets in Korea were grounded today by bad weather. But despite a heavy rain that turned the front into mud, allied raiders struck Communist trenches at two points. And the Navy says two men were killed, 15 wounded, in an explosion aboard the carrier Oriskany last Friday.

The leader of Communist China, Mao Tse Tung, says the Russian-Chinese front is "invincible." He believes "profoundly" that the new Malenkov government in Moscow will continue the work of Stalin.

In Washington, Chairman Saltonstall of the Senate Armed Services Committee says there is no evidence that any American lost his life in Korea because of a lack of ammunition. At the end of a day of secret hearings on General Van Fleet's charge that there have been serious, and sometimes critical ammunition shortages in Korea, the Senator said: "The testimony shows that the ammunition supply in Korea today is adequate and getting much better rapidly." It is his opinion that in the past there were ammunition shortages, and this was "reflected very acutely at the front." Army Chief of Staff Collins testified that our troops have never suffered from a shortage of ammunition "the ammunition situation in the Far East is generally good." He wants the Communists to take note of this. And Defense Secretary Wilson said there will soon be anough ammunition in Korea for "more active fighting" if that is what the high command wants to do.

The House today passed a Hawaii statehood bill and sent it to the Senate.

The Senate Foregin Relations Committee decided to postpone indefinitely any action on the Administration's request for a resolution condemning Russia's enslavement of peoples. The committee also put off until next week any action on Charles Bohlen's nomination to be ambassador to Moscow. Republican Senator Ferguson of Michigan wants the State Department to furnish some documents concerning the Yalta agreement.

Secretary-General Trygvie Lie told the United Nations General Assembly today that the Russians and their satellites have put the crudest form of pressure on him because he has opposed Communist aggression in Korea. Mr. Lie explained the reasons for his resignation. And he said this Soviet pressure is in violation of the U.N. charter which forbids any interference with the Secretary General by member nations. Gromyko of Russia called the Lie speech "very cheap propaganda." Ambassador Lodge and British Foreign Secretary Eden made a point of shaking hands with Mr. Lie after his speech.

In Washington, the government announced that all controls on civilian production and construction will end on June 30. And Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana says the President is "quite favorable" to setting up a standby controls program in law.

Attorney General Brownell has urged the Supreme Court to approve the enforcement of unused laws against racial segregation in Washington restaurants. And Mr. Brownell says a federal grand jury in New York has indicted a city detective on charges of violating the civil rights lawa by beating up, without provocation" a subway motorman he was arresting.

Dr. Bella Dodd, a former Communist and former New York teacher, told a Senate committee: at one time Communists infiltrated the staffs of the New York city and state education departments and had party members placed in congressional offices and advisory committees to the President. She praised the committee's investigation of alleged communism in education.

Chairman Velde of the House un-American activities committee explained today that he has no intention of searching for Communists among clergymen. But he says it's within the realm of possibility that individual clergymen might be investigatec After a number of his fellow committeemembers protested, Velde explained: the committee has not discussed any such investigation, there is no need to consider it now.

Our favorite comment to date on the new Russian administration came today from Mr. Luns, the Netherlands Foreign Minister. He had some conversation with President Eisenhower and said that they had agreed that the free world should not be taken in by the early moves of the new Russian Government, whether they appear to be either more friendly or more bellicose. And then Mr. Luns produced one of those rare sentences which would probably win agreement in both Washington and Moscow. He said: "It is too early even for the Russians to know what is going to happen there."

Today West German Chancellor Adenauer tried to reassure the French a little about what will happen when and if Germany is rearmed. He said the idea that Germany would start a war with Russia to regain her lost territories in the East was "total nonsense" - no responsible German would risk the destruction of his country by making it a battleground for conflict between the East and West. Chancellor Adenauer said: "We are now striving to make it so that war between France and Germany will be impossible in the future. Thereupon we can build a real Europe." He pointed out that the proposed 12 German divisions could do nithing against the might of the Soviet Union. But the demand for German unity is one that must be made by any politician in Germany who hopes to achieve or retain power. The only country which can give the Germans unity without war is Russia. The Russians know that and so do the Germans. And perhaps more importantly, the Poles know it too.

The Russians in their writings and their broadcasts have never lost sight of the fact that in Europe Germany is the prize for which East and West are contending. And the question of a German policy must be high on the agenda of the new rulers in the Kremlin. It was just one year ago today that the Russians launched their major diplomatic offensive on the subject of Germany. They addressed a note to the Western Powers, and indirectly to the Germans, suggesting a peace treaty for Germany, and the withdrawal of all occupation forces. There were four exchanges of notes between Russia and the Western Powers, between March and the end of September. They were no nearer agreement at the end than at the beginning of the exchange. The original Soviet proposal of a year ago amounted to an open bribe to the West Germans to make common cause with Russia against the West. They promised the unification of Germany, the withdrawal of all allied and Russian forces, and the liquidation of all allied military bases within one year after the signing of the peace treaty. The Russians also promised to guarantee all "democratic" rights and freedom of action for democratic parties and organizations. In the language of Russian diplomacy "democratic" must be read to mean "communist."

The Russians also proposed the prohibition of all anti-democratic organizations - equal civil and political rights for all former members of the German Army, including all officers and generals, and all former Nazis, except those convicted of war crimes. The Russian proposal also provided that Germany should have its own national Army, Navy and Air Force, plus the war production needed to support this armed force.

This was an open appeal to revive in Germany exactly what the West does not desire. The proposal struck no responsive chord in the West, but no one can be sure of the propaganda value it may have had in Western Germany. The Western reply insisted on free elections in Germany, both east and west, under international supervision, in order to establish a truly democratic Germany which could then negotiate a peace treaty. The last Western Note on this subject was sent at the end of last September. The Russians ignored it.

But the future of Germany remains the number one problem in Europe. The Stalin approach to the problem was shrewdly conceived, calculated to appeal to large numbers of West Germans and to the refugees from the eastern provinces. If there should be any change in Russian policy, which would presumably be a change in tactics rather than objectives, it is likely to become apparent first in relation to Germany.

Malenkov in his first speech has played upon the theme of peace and plenty. But like Stalin he is confronted with a wealth of opportunities for bringing pressure upon the West. He can do it in Berlin, Yugoslavia, the Middle East, Indo-China or Korea. We remain in the position we have occupied for the past several years, a position of waiting for the next Russian challenge before devising our response.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Netherlands Foreign Minister is obviously a man of few, but frank and well-chosen words. His comments remind me of something Samuel Butler once said: "If people would dare to speak to one another unreservedly, there would be a good deal less sorrow in the world a hundred years hence." Some years earlier, Benjamin Franklin put it even more simply when he remarked: "There is no wisdom like frankness."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

March 11, 1953

WRD

This is the news:

The Czech government admitted today that one of its Russian-made Migs shot down an American jet plane yesterday. We say the attack was made while our plane was over our zone of Germany. The Czechs say the attack was MADE WHEN our plane violated their border.. crossed 25 miles into Czechoslovakia. The American pilot, who parachuted to safety, and our air force officials call the Czech story a fairy tale..just what they expected. Ambassador Wadsworth who lodged a strong protest with the Czechs early today said tonight: "I don't know what will happen next. The move is up to Washington."

In Korea today, heavy rains and snow brought the ground action almost to a standstill. The Pentagon reports we suffered another 260 casualties last week..including 61 dead.

At the United Nations, Gromyko of Russia again charged that American troops are guilty of atrocities and other crimes in Korea. And Ambassador Lodge replied: "The army you sought to smear today is the same army THAT stood beside the Russian army to defeat Naziism in World War two...it is made up of the sons and brothers, and in some cases, the same men, who made up our army during the last war." Ambassador Lodge said the American army was good enough for the Russians from 1942 through 1945, and it would be good enough for Moscow now, if the Soviet government had not changed its position so drastically. He said Russia has lost respect because of its violent deeds and violent words. He said fear seems to motivate everyone in an official position in the Soviet Union. Lodge said this could not be fear of other nations..it must be fear of the Russian people.. "a fear that stems from the tyranny the Soviet rulers attempt to impose on their own people."

The United States today nominated Carlos Romulo of the Philippines to replace Trygvie Lie as secretary-general of the U.N. And at a secret meeting of the Security Council, Denmark nominated Lester Pearson of Canada..the Russians proposed the Polish foreign minister.

In Iran, Premier Mossadegh's adviser on oil problems, says Iran is rejecting the latest British proposals for settling the dispute over the nationalization of Iranian oil.

In Moscow, the newspaper Pravda again called for unity against "external and internal enemies." Pravda says Russia's enemies would like to see "panic and confusion in the ranks of the Soviet people."

In Washington, Representative Roosevelt of New York, introduced a resolution demanding the removal of Chairman Velde of the House Un-American activities committee. Roosevelt says Velde, an Illinois Republican, is guilty of "reckless and unauthorized actions"..particularly by his threatened investigation of Communism among clergymen.. and what Roosevelt called Velde"s "admittedly false and reckless charges" against Mrs. Eugene Meyer of Washington. Velde had accused her of writing a pro-Russian letter..later said it was a mistake due to a committee employe, who misinformed him. Congressmen Velde says Roosevelt's move is an attempt to discredit him personally and impede the progress of his committee.

The National Council of churches of Christ, charged today that "certain methods" of congressional committees investigating communist acitivities in schools are endangering freedom. The General Board, of the organization, representing 35-million members, says: no witness should be denied a fair and dignified treatment. The Board would have witnesses given the right to read uninterrupted initial statements after they have sworn to tell the truth. The Board also opposes the circulation of unsupported and univestigated charges. The group also states:"

"Free ministers in free pulpits preaching to free people the deliberating truth of Christ are a chief bulwark of American freedom and the best guarantee of its future."

A House subcommittee charged today that officials of the Truman Administration collected thousands of dollars in place of leave due them..before they quit. The committee calls this "a flagrant example of executive malpractise." Officials of the civil service commission say that under a law passed in 1944 any employe of the government, when he leaves his job, can collect in a lump sum all accumulated annual and vacation leave.

The army today issued a draft call for 53-thousand men in May..the same number asked for February, March and April.

The President today named seven men as consultants to the National Security Council..the top cold war strategy organization. The consultants include: three business presidents.. a college president.. a lawyer , newspaper executive and a labor union head.

In Washington today, Mrs. Eisenhower held her first White House news conference. And, breaking precedent, she permitted male reporters to join female reporters in asking questions. Among the males was Bill Costello, ~~the~~ our CBS White House correspondent. What was it like, BIll?

9 runs 3;30 ending:

It was another interestong first, for the first lady")

Senator Stuart Symington of Misouri...thinks we ought to be told where we stand in relation to the Russians.#.he wants the brutal truth ..in terms of men,guns,planes and atomic weapons// Senator Symington believes that our national leaders of both parties havent been telling us the truth about the world in which we live.."this failure to tell the truth has already injured us..the continuation of that failure may destroy us"...The [redacted] Senator was speaking before the forum of the Philadelpia Bulletin...He criticised the Truman ~~administra~~ administration for a policy of "plenty of butter."#.even after the Chinese entered the war in Korea..."we were told we could handle this new soviet agression with one hand...while we piled the other hand high with butter and automobiles and television sets"..Symington complains that the new admonstration has not shifted the balance from butter to guns.....he refers to a "wastefully innefficient" defense department...wants the government to tell all of us how we stand now,compared to our position at the begginning of world war two...and the Senator says the administration should give us its estimate on the date when the Soviets may have what they might consider enough atomic weapons to launch a sucesfull attack,by air and submarine against the United States.. Symington wants to know whether we will be ready when that critical day comes. He doesnt think we will be..and the facts if made public would prove it....and if the facts were made public the people would demand a wholesale re~~orginaziti~~

reorganisation of the defense department..so as to get ~~[illegible]~~ more defense for less money..//.Senator Symington is a Democrat,but he criticises the Truman administration...and more than most senators he can be presumed to know what he is talking about on this subject..he was the first air force secretary under the unification of the defense department.//.On his question about when the Russians may feel a ble to strike ..the answer has been given by General Bradley and others..their estimate is sometime in Fifty Four... —2

The Senator seems to feel that time is running out...and that the last administration..and this one..have been misleading us about our strength when it's compared to the Russians...It is rather difficult to see how we can have a great grim crisis in international affairs,and business as usual at home... Either the Crisis isnt so great or our complacency is much too great...Senator Symington may have been stimulted to make some of these remarks by the fact that we had F 84s patrolling the Check border...and one was shot down by a Mig...There is no reason to wonder why ~~the~~ our 84s didnt give combat..they couldnt have caught the Migs... Anyway the Senator has asked some good questions... 30

CBS1989 UGT

NY MAR 11, 1953

MURROW

NEWSROOM WJAS

IT ISNT VERY OFTEN THAT REPORTERS CAN DESCRIBE A NEWS CONFERENCE AS CHARMING. B~~UT THAT SEEMS TO SUM UP MRS EISENHOWERS PERFORMANCE TODAY.~~ SIR JAMES BARRIE ONCE REMARKED .. "CHARM IS A SORT OF BLOOM ON A WOMAN. IF YOU HAVE IT, YOU DONT NEED TO HAVE ANYTHING ELSE, IF YOU DONT HAVE IT, IT DOESNT MUCH MATTER WHAT ELSE YOU HAVE".... TWO OTHER QUOTES WHICH MIGHT FIT THIS GENERAL IDEA.. FROM F.SCOTT FITZGERALD " WOMEN HAVE ONLY ONE ROLE - THEIR OWN CHARM. ALL THE REST IS MIMICRY".... AND, THIS FROM CERVANTES " "(A WOMANS ADVICE IS NOT WORTH MUCH, BUT HE WHO WONT TAKE IT IS A FOOL.") END

AARON

CBS RADIO DIVISION

Mr. Ed. R. Murrow

ED. R. MURROW

Wednesday, March11, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Washington today, Mrs. Eisenhower held her first White House news conference. And, breaking precedent, she permitted male reporters to join female reporters in asking questions. Among the males was Bill Costello, our CBS White House correspondent. What was it like, Bill?

COSTELLO: I suppose, Ed, it was one of the nicest news conferences anyone has ever attended in Washington. Just folksey and friendly and relaxed. And if you were looking for that famous Mamie Eisenhower charm, well, even a blind man could have scooped it up by the barrelful. I can testify that those beetle-browed male correspondents sitting in the back rows, you know the ones who like to toast their victims over a slow fire, were literally smothered with the First Lady's charm. Only one lone male voice was raised with a question. He stayed on fairly safe ground by demanding to know the kind of food served at the Presidential table. No one seemed to care to pursue the subject when Mrs. Eisenhower flashed him one of her sweetest smiles and assured him she personally ordered and paid for and supervised the feeding operation. There didn't seem to be anything more to say then, because, after all, a lady with that much graciousness and poise could certainly be trusted to run her own house without help from a mere outsider and a man at that.

What the girl reporters had to say afterward was very much to that same point. So far as they were concerned, Mamie Eisenhower emerged as a woman's woman, just any and every woman's woman. She came there into the glare of all the camera floodlights looking like something right out of a Park Ave. bandbox. Wearing a light grey wool Spring suit, by a New York-named designer, one of those loose-fitting box-type jackets, which are the very newest thing this Spring. It was a definitely feminine outfit. And the effect was enhanced by a double strand of pearls, drawn tight around her neck; a pair of dainty pearl errings (sic) earrings, the drop kind you know, and a bangly bracelet on her right wrist.

There were a dozen cameramen shooting from every conceivable angle. Calling "This way, Mrs. Eisenhower," and "Say something, Mrs. Eisenhower." And you had a feeling that without strutting or posing or reaching for any Hollywoodish effects, she always managed to strike the perfect womanly pose.

When she sat down behind the big desk to answer questions, she looked even more tiny and feminine. Yes, and really a little out of place. Because she didn't talk about things you do at a desk, she talked about mirv...(sic) moving furniture around in the only five rooms the Presidential family is allowed to tamper with. And about how tired her husbandwas when he came home at night from the office. And about sitting up till maybe ten or ten thirty in the evening watching television. And how she loved the big rooms and the high ceilings. And, in fact, everything about her job of being First Lady. She blushed a very pretty grandmotherly blush when an old acquaintance from the Philippines assured her the years have been most kind to her and it was nice to have a photogenic person in the White House.

With a completely feminine and disarming grace, she danced around the question about the engagement between the Crown Prince of Norway and a commoner. And came out for lower taxes without even rippling either her own poise or the national political scene.

And as for the quaint idea that living in the White House is like living ina gold fish bowl, well, she ticked that right off with the admission that she's getting to 'love every minute of it.'

So, you can see, Ed, it was another interesting and triumphal 'first' for the First Lady.

MURROW: Thank you, Bill Costello.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Wednesday, Marchll, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Washington today, Mrs. Eisenhower held her first White House news conference. And, breaking precedent, she permitted male reporters to join female reporters in asking questions. Among the males was Bill Costello, our CBS White House correspondent. What was it like, Bill?

COSTELLO: I suppose, Ed, it was one of the nicest news conferences anyone has ever attended in Washington. Just folksey and friendly and relaxed. And if you were looking for that famous Mamie Eisenhower charm, well, even a blind man could have scooped up it up by the barrelful. I can testify that those beetle-browed male correspondents sitting in the back rows, you know the ones who like to toast their victims over a slow fire, were literally smothered with the First Lady's charm. Only one lone male voice was raised with a question. He stayed on fairly safe ground by demanding to know the kind of food served at the Presidential table. No one seemed to care to pursue the subject when Mrs. Eisenhower flashed him one of her sweetest smiles and assured him she personally ordered and paid for and supervised the feeding operation. There didn't seem to be anything more to say then, because, after all, a lady with that much graciousness and poise could certainly be trusted to run her own house without help from a mere outsider and a man at that.

What the girl reporters had to say afterward was very much to that same point. So far as they were concerned, Mamie Eisenhower emerged as a woman's woman, just any and every woman's woman. She came there into the glare of all the camera floodlights looking like something right out of a Park Ave. bandbox. Wearing a light greay wool Spring suit, by a New York-named designer, one of those loose-fitting box-type jackets, which are the very newest thing this Spring. It was a definitely feminine outfit. And the effect was enhanced by a double strand of pearls, drawn tight around her neck; a pair of dainty pearl errings (sic) earrings, the drop kind you know, and a bangly bracelet on her right wrist.

There were a dozen cameramen shooting from every conceivable angle. Calling "This way, Mrs. Eisenhower," and "Say something, Mrs. Eisenhower." And you had a feeling that without strutting or posing or reaching for any Hollywoodish effects, she always managed to strike the perfect womanly pose.

When she sat down behind the big desk to answer questions, she looked even more tiny and feminine. Yes, and really a little out of place. Because she didn't talk about things you do at a desk, she talked about mirv...(sic) moving furniture around in the only five rooms the Presidential family is allowed to tamper with. And about how tired her husbandwas when he came home at night from the office. And about sitting up till maybe ten or ten thirty in the evening watching television. And how she loved the big rooms and the high ceilings. And, in fact, everything about her job of being First Lady. She blushed a very pretty grandmotherly blush when an old acquaintance from the Philippines assured her the years have been most kind to her and it was nice to have a photogenic person in the White House.

With a completely feminine and disarming grace, she danced around the question about the engagement between the Crown Prince of Norway and a commoner. And came out for lower taxes without even rippling either her own poise or the national political scene.

And as for the quaint idea that living in the White House is like living ina gold fish bowl, well, she ticked that right off with the admission that she's getting to 'love every minute of it.'

So, you can see, Ed, it was another interesting and triumphal 'first' for the First Lady.

MURROW: Thank you, Bill Costello.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Wednesday, March11, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Washington today, Mrs. Eisenhower held her first White House news conference. And, breaking precedent, she permitted male reporters to join female reporters in asking questions. Among the males was Bill Costello, our CBS White House correspondent. What was it like, Bill?

COSTELLO: I suppose, Ed, it was one of the nicest news conferences anyone has ever attended in Washington. Just folksey and friendly and relaxed. And if you were looking for that famous Mamie Eisenhower charm, well, even a blind man could have scooped up it up by the barrelful. I can testify that those beetle-browed male correspondents sitting in the back rows, you know the ones who like to toast their victims over a slow fire, were literally smothered with the First Lady's charm. Only one lone male voice was raised with a question. He stayed on fairly safe ground by demanding to know the kind of food served at the Presidential table. No one seemed to care to pursue the subject when Mrs. Eisenhower flashed him one of her sweetest smiles and assured him she personally ordered and paid for and supervised the feeding operation. There didn't seem to be anything more to say then, because, after all, a lady with that much graciousness and poise could certainly be trusted to run her own house without help from a mere outsider and a man at that.

What the girl reporters had to say afterward was very much to that same point. So far as they were concerned, Mamie Eisenhower emerged as a woman's woman, just any and every woman's woman. She came there into the glare of all the camera floodlights looking like something right out of a Park Ave. bandbox. Wearing a light greay wool Spring suit, by a New York-named designer, one of those loose-fitting box-type jackets, which are the very newest thing this Spring. It was a definitely feminine outfit. And the effect was enhanced by a double strand of pearls, drawn tight around her neck; a pair of dainty pearl errings (sic) earrings, the drop kind you know, and a bangly bracelet on her right wrist.

There were a dozen cameramen shooting from every conceivable angle. Calling "This way, Mrs. Eisenhower," and "Say something, Mrs. Eisenhower." And you had a feeling that without strutting or posing or reaching for any Hollywoodish effects, she always managed to strike the perfect womanly pose.

When she sat down behind the big desk to answer questions, she looked even more tiny and feminine. Yes, and really a little out of place. Because she didn't talk about things you do at a desk, she talked about mirv...(sic) moving furniture around in the only five rooms the Presidential family is allowed to tamper with. And about how tired her husbandwas when he came home at night from the office. And about sitting up till maybe ten or ten thirty in the evening watching television. And how she loved the big rooms and the high ceilings. And, in fact, everything about her job of being First Lady. She blushed a very pretty grandmotherly blush when an old acquaintance from the Philippines assured her the years have been most kind to her and it was nice to have a photogenic person in the White House.

With a completely feminine and disarming grace, she danced around the question about the engagement between the Crown Prince of Norway and a commoner. And came out for lower taxes without even rippling either her own poise or the national political scene.

And as for the quaint idea that living in the White House is like living ina gold fish bowl, well, she ticked that right off with the admission that she's getting to 'love every minute of it.'

So, you can see, Ed, it was another interesting and triumphal 'first' for the First Lady.

MURROW: Thank you, Bill Costello.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Czech government admitted today that one of its Russian-made Migs shot down an American jet plane yesterday. We say the attack was made while our plane was over our zone of Germany. The Czechs say the attack was made when our plane violated their border, crossed 25 miles into Czechoslovakia. The American pilot, who parachuted to safety, and our air force officials call the Czech story a fairy tale, just what they expected. Ambassador Wadsworth who lodged a strong protest with the Czechs early today said tonight: "I don't know what will happen next. The move is up to Washington."

In Korea today, heavy rains and snow brought the ground action almost to a standstill. The Pentagon reports we suffered another 260 casualties last week, including 61 dead.

At the United Nations, Gromyko of Russia again charged that American troops are guilty of atrocities and other crimes in Korea. And Ambassador Lodge replied: "The army you sought to smear today is the same army that stood beside the Russian army to defeat Naziism in World War two, it is made up of the sons and brothers, and in some cases, the same men, who made up our army during the last war." Ambassador Lodge said the American army was good enough for the Russians from 1942 through 1945 and it would be good enough for Moscow now if the Soviet government had not changed its position so drastically. He said Russia has lost respect because of its violent deeds and violent words. He said fear seems to motivate everyone in an official position in the Soviet Union. Lodge said this could not be fear of other nations, it must be fear of the Russian people, "a fear that stems from the tyranny the Soviet rulers attempt to impose on their own people."

The United States today nominated Carlos Romulo of the Philippines to replace Trygvie Lie as Secretary-General of the U.N. And at a secret meeting of the Security Council, Denmark nominated Lester Pearson of Canada, the Russians proposed the Polish foreign minister.

In Iran, Premier Mossadegh's advisor on oil problems says Iran is rejecting the latest British proposals for settling the dispute over the nationalization of Iranian oil.

In Moscow, the newspaper Pravda again called for unity against "external and internal enemies." Pravda says Russia's enemies would like to see "panic and confusion in the ranks of the Soviet people."

In Washington, Representative Roosevelt of New York introduced a resolution demanding the removal of Chairman Velde of the House Un-American activities committee. Roosevelt says Velde, an Illinois Republican, is guilty of "reckless and unauthorized actions" particularly by his threatened investigation of Communism among clergymen and what Roosevelt called Velde's "admittedly false and reckless charges" against Mrs. Eugene Meyer of Washington. Velde had accused her of writing a pro-Russian letter, later said it was a mistake due to a committee employee who misinformed him. Congressman Velde says Roosevelt's move is an attempt to discredit him personally and impede the progress of his committee.

The National Council of churches of Christ charged today that "certain methods" of congressional committees investigating communist activities in schools are endangering freedom. The General Board of the organization, representing 35-million members, says: no witness should be denied a fair a dignified treatment. The Board would have witnesses given the right to read uninterrupted initial statements after they have sworn to tell the truth. The Board also opposes the circulation of unsupported and uninvestigated charges. The group also states: "Free ministers in free pulpits preaching to free people the deliberating truth of Christ are a chief bulwark of American freedom, and the best guarantee of its future."

A House subcommittee charged today that officials of the Truman Administration collected thousands of dollars in place of leave due them, before they quit. The committee calls this "a flagrant example of executive malpractise."

Officials of the civil service commission say that under a law passed in 1944 any employee of the government, when he leaves his job, can collect in a lump sum all accumulated annual and vacation leave.

The army today issued a draft call for 53-thousand men in May, the same number asked for February, March and April.

The President today named seven men as consultants to the National Security Council, the top cold war strategy organization. The consultants include: three business presidents, a college president, a lawyer, newspaper executive and a labor union head.

In Washington today, Mrs. Eisenhower held her first White House news conference. And, breaking precedent, she permitted male reporters to join female reporters in asking questions. Among the males was Bill Costello, our CBS White House correspondent. What was it like, Bill?

COSTELLO: I suppose, Ed, it was one of the nicest news conferences anyone has ever attended in Washington. Just folksey and friendly and relaxed. And if you were looking for that famous Mamie Eisenhower charm, well, even a blind man could have scooped it up by the barrelful. I can testify that those bettle-browed male correspondents sitting in the back rows, you know the ones who like to toast their victims over a slow fire, were literally smothered with the First Lady's charm. Only one lone male voice was raised with a question. He stayed on fairly safe ground by demanding to know the kind of food served at the Presidential table. No one seemed to care to pursue the subject when Mrs. Eisenhower flashed him one of her sweetest smiles and assured him she personally ordered and paid for and supervised the feeding operation. There didn't seem to be anything more to say then, because, after all, a lady with that much graciousness and poise could certainly be trusted to run her own house without help from a mere outsider and a man at that.

What the girl reporters had to say afterward was very much to that same point. So far as they were concerned, Mamie Eisenhower emerged as a woman's woman, just any and every woman's woman. She came there into the glare of all the camera floodlights looking like something right out of a Park Avenue bandbox. Wearing a light grey wool spring suit, by a New York-named designer, one of those loose-fitting box-type jackets, which are the very newest thing this Spring. It was a definitely feminine outfit. And the effect was enhanced by a double strand of pearls, drawn tight around her neck; a pair of dainty pearl earrings, the drop kind you know, and a bangly bracelet on her right wrist.

There were a dozen cameramen shooting from every conceivable angle. Calling "This way, Mrs. Eisenhower," and "Say something, Mrs. Eisenhower." And you had a feeling that without strutting or posing or reaching for any Hollywood-ish effects, she always managed to strike the perfect womanly pose.

When she sat down behind the big desk to answer questions, she looked even more tiny and feminine. Yes, and really a little out of place. Because she didn't talk about things you do at a desk, she talked about moving furniture around in the only five rooms the Presidential family is allowed to tamper with. And about how tired her husband was when he came home at night from the office. And about sitting up till maybe ten or ten-thirty in the evening watching television. And how she loved the big rooms and the high ceilings. And, in fact, everything about her job of being First Lady. She blushed a very pretty grandmotherly blush when an old acquaintance from the Philippines assured her the years have been most kind to her, and it was nice to have a photogenic person in the White House.

With a completely feminine and disarming grace, she danced around the question about the engagement between the Crown Prince of Norway and a commoner. And came out for lower taxes without even rippling either her own poise or the national political scene.

And as for the quaint idea that living in the White House is like living in a gold fish bowl, well, she ticked that right off with the admission that she's getting to 'love every minute of it.'

So, you can see, Ed, it was another interesting and triumphal 'first' for the First Lady.

MURROW: Thank you, Bill Costello.

Senator Stuart Symington of Missouri thinks we ought to be told where we stand in relation to the Russians. He wants the brutal truth, in terms of men, guns, planes and atomic weapons. Senator Symington believes that our national leaders of both parties haven't been telling us the truth about the world in which we live "this failure to tell the truth has already injured us, the continuation of that failure may destroy us". The Senator was speaking before the forum of the Philadelphia Bulletin. He criticized the Truman administration for a policy of "plenty of butter." Even after the Chinese entered the war in Korea, "we were told we could handle this new Soviet aggression with one hand, while we piled the other hand high with butter and automobiles and television sets." Symington complains that the new administration has not shifted the balance from butter to guns, he refers to a "wastefully inefficient" defense department; wants the government to tell all of us how we stand now, compared to our position at the beginning of world war two and the Senator says the administration should give us its estimate on the date when the Soviets may have what they might consider enough atomic weapons, to launch a successful attack by air and submarine against the United States. Symington wants to know whether we will be ready when that critical day comes. He doesn't think we will be and the facts if made public would prove it; and if the facts were made public the people would demand a wholesale reorganization of the defense department so as to get more defense for less money. Senator Symington is a Democrat, but he criticizes the Truman administration, and more than most senators he can be presumed to know what he is talking about on this subject; he was the first air force secretary under the unification of the defense department. On his question about when the Russians may feel able to strike, the answer has been given by General Bradley and others, their estimate is sometime in Fifty Four. The Senator seems to feel that time is running out and that the last administration and this one, have been misleading us about our strength when its compared to the Russians. It is rather difficult to see how we can have a great grim crisis in international affairs, and business as usual at home. Either the crisis isn't so great, or our complacency is much too great. Senator Symington may have been stimulated to make some of these remarks by the fact that we had F84s patrolling the Czech border, and one was shot down by a Mig. There is no reason to wonder why our 84s didn't give combat, they couldn't have caught the Migs. Anyway the Senator has asked some good questions.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It isn't very often that reporters can describe a news conference as charming. Sir James Barrie once remarked: "Charm is a sort of bloom on a woman. If you have it, you don't need to have anything else, if you don't have it, it doesn't much matter what else you have". Two other quotes which might fit this general idea from F. Scott Fitzgerald, "Women have only one role - their own charm. All the rest is mimicry". And this from Cervantes: "A woman's advice is not worth much, but he who won't take it is a fool."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday, March 12, 1953.

This is the news:

The Russians have shot down a British bomber in western Germany. Fifty-two hours after an American jet was shot down by Mig fighters..with Czech markings..in Bavaria, two Russian Migs attacked the British plane. It was a Lincoln, a world war two night bomber..four-engined..on a routine mission. The two Russian migs came at it in the air corridor that the British use to fly from Hamburg to Berlin. The British crewmen never had a chance to fire back; although they did manage to throw overboard their secret codes and books. A number of German civilians saw the bomber go down. Some say they saw the Russian planes fire at one of the parachuting figures. The British say six of the seven crewmen were killed. The pilot was wounded. The British also tell us that two hours before this attack, other Soviet fighter planes made a mock attack on another British bomber near Kassel..22 miles inside the British zone of Germany. The British government has ordered its high commissioner in Germany to protest this "deliberate attack." The government says it is taking a grave view of the situation..wants an immediate investigation... demands punishment of those responsible for this "OUTRAGE" and due reperations for the men lost and the crashed bomber.

A few hourd after this news reached America we asked Richard C. Hottelet in West Germany to tell us what the top officials there think about these Russian attacks. Here is his recorded report:

(runs 3;30..ending: Now back to erm in NY)

In Washington, a number of Congressmen are urging a "get tough" policy against such future attacks. Chairman Short of the House Armed Servicess committee says: "Its a sad commentary on the previous administration that after all the money Congress voted for defense we now lack either the strength or the will to resist." Representative Short, a Missouri Republican, says the only thing to do in a case of this kind "it to fight fire with fire and get tough....shoot at any Russian planes that cross into our territory and shoot back at Soviet planes that may fire at us from their territory." There is no comment from the White House or the State or Defense Departments. Speaker Martin says: "We cannot let the Russians raid our territory without doing something about it."

[redacted]

[redacted] AND Chairman Saltonstall of the Senate Armed Services Committee said: "This shooting must stop". [redacted]

Senator Saltonstall announced today that his committee has unanimously agreed, that General Van Fleet's complaints about an ammunition shortage in Korea, have been "fully substantiated." Saltonstall has named a five-member sub-committee, to try to find out who or what is responsible for this: the people.. the law, or the economic conditions. He says the committee wants to see "if the shortages resulted from too much butter and not enough guns." The committee reached its unanimous decision, after it heard Van Fleet stick to his story, even though Army

Chief of Staff Collins said: "There has never been an ammunition shortage in Korea, either to repel an attack that actually developed, or to conduct our own operations." The chairman of the Senate sub-committee will be Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine. She says her group will investigate "everything having to do with ammunition..laws affecting government contracts..ordnance..and the unification of the armed services."

In Korea today, strong winds piled snow drifts as high as 15 feet, on the eastern front, and in other areas 48 hours of rain hampered all activity. Yet the Communists launched five small attacks.. which allied troops stopped. (There was no air action.)

At the United Nations here in New York, the political committee appealed to four Soviet satellite nations, for the release of 3-thousand Greek soldiers. They have been kept behind the Iron Curtain since the end of World War Two. And (ELEVEN) nations..(including the United States.).. are sponsoring a resolution urging the free world to unite. The resolution says: "would-be aggressors are tempted to commit aggression, only when they think they can get away with it." (The proposal calls for all members of the U.N. to "continue and intensify" their efforts for a comprehensive plan of military and economic sancations to be used against any aggressor anywhere in the world.

In Washington, the government today ordered an end to price controls on all consumer goods and foods. This will affect coffee, beer AND ale, heating oils on the east coast, among other things. Government experts say coffee prices may go up 10 to 12 cents a pound at retail..making the price about one dollar a pound. The price of a bottle of beer may go up a penny in some areas. INSERT.

The President today asked Congress to approve a plan for a new cabinet position: the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, to be headed by Oveta Culp Hobby, now the federal security administrator. Members of both parties in both houses PREDICT quick approval. The President says the new department will be designed to "improve the well-being of millions of our citizens." And today, the Social Security Administration reported that the most serious failure in the social security system is the lack of adequate protection for those who become ill or disabled.

The House un-American activities committee has voted unanimously to prevent Chairman Velde from starting any new communist

INSERT

Defense Secretary Wilson today ordered the armed services to cut their civilian payrolls by 39-thousand by the end of May. He also ordered the services to trim the number of uniformed personnel holding desk jobs.

investigations without the committee's approval.

The Mc Carthy committee investigating the Voice of America heard conflicting testimony today on a radio transmitter constructed in Vienna. Glenn Gilett, a radio engineer, says Voice officials "emasculated" the transmitter by structural changes that cut its efficiency 75 per cent. But two other engineers..Halbert Cupps, in charge of the Vienna project, and Julius Ross, one of his superiors at the time, denied this. They said the design of the radio tower was changed because of sound planning. They say there was no loss of efficiency. Chairman Mc Carthy says:"I think it was sound planning, but not sound planning for America."

Walter Reuther, the head of the C.I.O., told a House committee today that the Taft-Hartley law has "worsened" labor management relations. He says its also given employers "a new arsenal of weapons with which to beat us over the head." Reuther says "substantial" changes will be needed in the law if the President's pledge of justice and fairness in labor legislation is to be carried out.

The Atomic Energy Commission says that TOMORROW it will open the first hospital in this country specifically designed for atomic treatment of patients. The Argonne Cancer Research Hospital..to be operated by the University of Chicago.. is equipped to offer every known type of radiation thought useful in cancer treatment.

A Federal jury in Washington today convicted Sidney Buchman, former Hollywood writer-producer, on charges of contempt of Congress... refusing to appear before the House un-American activities Committee.

Here in New York, Frank Stanton, the president of CBS, announced that Arthur Godfrey is leaving his radio programs for five or six weeks and his television programs for four months. Godfrey has decided to undergo surgery to repair the effect of injuries to his hips that he suffered in an auto accident 20 years ago.

Governor Dewey today proposed an employer-employe payroll tax as the "honest way" to end New York city's financial difficulties. The tax would come to 10-dollars a year on incomes of 4-thousand dollars.. and 25-dollars a year on 10-thousand dollar incomes. Employers would have to match the contributions of their employes.

The latest incident in the cold war...the Shooting down of. ~~today's attack on~~ that British bomber...is cause for serious concern...but also a degree of level-headedness. The Roman Horace once cautioned: "Always remember to preserve an even mind in adverse circumstance." Ralph Waldo Emerson took an even more practical approach:"A man should study ever to keep cool. He often makes his inferiors his superiors by heat."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, March 12, 1953
7:45-8:00 p.m.

HOTTELET: Ed, the British plane shot down this afternoon was the second Allied plane shot down in two days by fighters operating under the orders of the Soviet Air Force. Both planes were unquestionably shot down over western territory. Authoritative observers here now rule out the possibility that this is mere coincidence. When the attack on the American plane occurred on Tuesday morning experts thought it might have been a trigger-happy bandit, maybe full of Vodka, maybe out on a lark, but that sort of thing does not happen again right away and pretty far removed. Furthermore, we know that Soviet planes are ground-controlled and that radar directors know where they are all the time. In other words, they couldn't be out over western territory by accident. The mystery is - what were they doing there, shooting down western planes in cold blood? One possibility would be that the Russians were getting ready for a big operation, that they're feeling us out, maybe trying to provoke us into giving them a pretext to strike, but there is no evidence to support this theory. There has been no build-up of Soviet strength right behind the Iron Curtain such as there would have to be either on the ground or in the air if an offensive were impending.

These incidents are taking place in a situation which is otherwise stable and unthreatening. There's another hypothesis which experts here (?) take seriously. A few days ago a Polish pilot landed a MIG-15 on Bornholm. The plane is now in Copenhagen being microscopically examined. There's no doubt that Allied engineers are learning a great deal about Soviet plane production from it, - its schedules, its materials, and its design, from this one plane. The Russians must be acutely aware of the treasure which has fallen into western hands. It's not beyond the bounds of possibility that they're trying to get hostages in the form of western planes or pilots to barter off against this MIG, just as they are trying to barter off the young female Malayan partisan against the British George Sanders, who is in prison in Budapest.

Another possibility is that the Russians have become extraordinarily sensitive about their periphery. Stalin, the keystone of Communism, is gone and, although the change-over in the regime seems to be taking place very smoothly, it is still for the Russians a period fraught with uncertainty. In a regime as monstrous as the Soviet system, a new and untried authority has got to get a lot of scores settled and a lot of reins firmly in hand. The Russians always judge other people by themselves. They would consider this a good time to attack if the interregnum were taking place in the west. Since it's happening in Russia, they may be bracing themselves for a western assault and ordering their border guards to be more vigilant than ever before.

But there is (unintelligible) other possibility along the same lines. The Soviet regime has always needed an external enemy; especially now the new regime could use a rallying point or a patriotic diversion for the Soviet people, a demonstration of defiance towards the enemies of the west and a gesture of strength. These incidents could reflect the kind of bluster and truculence which have often gone hand-in-hand with stark fear in Soviet history and which could obviously be extremely dangerous.

This is Richard C. Hottelet in Bonn, Germany. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Russians have shot down a British bomber in western Germany. Fifty-two hours after an American jet was shot down by Mig fighters, with Czech markings, in Bavaria, two Russian Migs attacked the British plane. It was a Lincoln, a world war two night bomber, four-engined on a routine mission. The two Russian migs came at it in the air corridor that the British use to fly from Hamburg to Berlin. The British crewmen never had a chance to fire back; although they did manage to throw overboard their secret codes and books. A number of German civilians saw the bomber go down. Some say they saw the Russian planes fire at one of the parachuting figures. The British say six of the seven crewmen were killed. The pilot was wounded. The British also tell us that two hours before this attack, other Soviet fighter planes made a mock attack on another British bomber near Kassel, 22 miles inside the British zone of Germany. The British government has ordered its high commissioner in Germany to protest this "deliberate attack." The government says it is taking a grave view of the situation, wants an immediate investigation, demands punishment of those responsible for this "outrage" and due reparations for the men lost and the crashed bomber. A few hours after this news reached America we asked Richard C. Hottelet in West Germany to tell us what the top officials there think about these Russian attacks. Here is his recorded report:

HOTTELET: Ed, the British plane shot down this afternoon was the second Allied plane shot down in two days by fighters operating under the orders of the Soviet Air Force. Both planes were unquestionably shot down over western territory. Authoritative observers here now rule out the possibility that this is mere coincidence. When the attack on the American plane occurred on Tuesday morning, experts thought it might have been a trigger-happy bandit, maybe full of Vodka, maybe out on a lark, but that sort of thing does not happen again right away and pretty far removed. Furthermore, we know that Soviet planes are gound-controlled and that radar directors know where they are all the time. In other words, they couldn't be out over western territory by accident. The mystery is - what were they doing there, shooting down western planes in cold blood? One possibility would be that the Russians were getting ready for a big operation, that they're feeling us out, maybe trying to provoke us into giving them a pretext to strike, but there is no evidence to support this theory. There has been no build-up of Soviet strength right behind the Iron Curtain such as there would have to be either on the ground or in the air if an offensive were impending.

These incidents are taking place in a situation which is otherwise stable and unthreatening. There's another hypothesis which experts here take seriously. A few days ago a Polish pilot landed a MIG-15 on Bornholm. The plane is now in Copenhagen being miscroscopically examined. There's no doubt that Allied engineers are learning a great deal about Soviet plane production from it, its schedules, its materials, and its design, from this one plane. The Russians must be acutely aware of the treasure which has fallen into western hands. It's not beyond the bounds of possibility that they're trying to get hostages in the form of western planes or pilots to barter off against this MIG, just as they are trying to barter off the young female Malayan partisan against the British George Sanders, who is in prison in Budapest. Another possibility is that the Russians have become extraordinarily sensitive about their periphery. Stalin, the keystone of Communism, is gone and, although the change-over in the regime seems to be taking place very smoothly, it is still for the Russians, a period fraught with uncertainty. In a regime as monstrous as the Soviet system, a new and untried authority has got to get a lot of scores settled and a lot of reins firmly in hand. The Russians always judge other people by themselves. They would consider this a good time to attack if the interregnum were taking place in the west. Since it's happening in Russia, they may be bracing themselves for a western assault and ordering their border guards to be more vigilant than ever before.

But there is another possibility along the same lines. The Soviet regime has always needed an external enemy; especially now the new regime could use a rallying point or a patriotic diversion for the Soviet people, a demonstration of defiance towards the enemies of the west and a gesture of strength. These incidents could reflect the kind of bluster and truculence which have often gone hand in hand with stark fear in Soviet history and which could obviously be extremely dangerous.

This is Richard C. Hottelet in Bonn, Germany. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Washington, a number of Congressmen are urging a "get tough" policy against such future attacks. Chairman Short of the House Armed Services committee says: "Its a sad commentary on the previous administration that after all the money Congress voted for defense, we now lack either the strength or the will to resist." Representative Short, a Missouri Republican, says the only thing to do in a case of this kind "is to fight fire with fire and get tough, shoot at any Russian planes that cross into our territory and shoot back at Soviet planes that may fire at us from their territory." There is no comment from the White House or the State or Defense Departments. Speaker Martin says: "We cannot let the Russians raid our territory without doing something about it."

Senator Saltonstall announced today that his committee has unanimously agreed that General Van Fleet's complaints about an ammunition shortage in Korea have been "fully substantiated." Saltonstall has named a five-member sub-committee to try to find out who or what is responsible for this: the people, the law or the economic conditions. He says the committee wants to see "if the shortages resulted from too much butter and not enough guns." The committee reached its unanimous decision after it heard Van Fleet stick to his story even though Army Chief of Staff Collins said: "There has never been an ammunition shortage in Korea, either to repel an attack that actually developed or to conduct our own operations." The chairman of the Senate sub-committee will be Senator Margaret

Chase Smith of Maine. She says her group will investigate "everything having to do with ammunition, laws affecting government contracts, ordnance, and the unification of the armed services."

In Korea today, strong winds piled snow drifts as high as 15 feet on the eastern front and in other areas 48 hours of rain hampered all activity. Yet the communists launched five small attack, which allied troops stopped. There was no air action.

At the United Nations here in New York, the political committee appealed to four Soviet satellite nations for the release of 3-thousand Greek soldiers. They have been kept behind the Iron Curtain since the end of World War Two. And eleven nations, (including the United States) are sponsoring a resolution urging the free world to unite. The resolution says: "would-be aggressors are tempted to commit aggression only when they think they can get away with it." The proposal calls for all members of the U.N. to "continue and intensify" their efforts for a comprehensive plan of military and economic sanctions to be used against any aggressor anywhere in the world.

In Washington, the government today ordered an end to price controls on all consumer goods and foods. This will affect coffee, beer, ale and heating oils on the east coast, among other things. Government experts say coffee prices may go up 10 to 12 cents a pound at retail, making the price about one dollar a pound. The price of a bottle of beer may go up a penny in some areas. Defense Secretary Wilson today ordered the armed services to cut their civilian payrolls by 39-thousand by the end of May. He also ordered the services to trim the number of uniformed personnel holding desk jobs.

The President today asked Congress to approve a plan for a new cabinet position: the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, to be headed by Oveta Culp Hobby, now the federal security administrator. Members of both parties in both houses predict quick approval. The President says the new department will be designed to "improve the well-being of millions of our citizens." And today, the Sovial Security Administration reported that the most serious failure in the social security system is the lack of adequate protection for those who become ill or disabled.

The House un-American activities committee has voted unanimously to prevent Chairman Velde from starting any new Communist investigations without the committee's approval.

The McCarthy committee investigating the Voice of America heard conflictin testimony today on a radio transmitter constructed in Vienna. Glenn Gilett, a radio engineer, says Voice officials "emasculated" the transmitter by structural changes that cut its efficiency 75 per cent. But two other engineers, Halbert Cupps, in charge of the Vienna project, and Julius Ross, one of his superiors at the time, denied this. They said the design of the radio tower was changed because of sound planning. They say there was no loss of efficiency. Chairman McCarthy says: "I think it was sound planning, but not sound planning for America."

Walter Reuther, the head of the C.I.O. told a House committee today that the Taft-Hartley law has "worsened" labor management relations. He says its also given employers "a new arsenal of weapons with which to beat us over the head." Reuther says "substantial" changes will be needed in the law if the President's pledge of justice and fairness in labor legislation is to be carried out.

The Atomic Energy Commission says that tomorrow it will open the first hospital in this country specifically designed for atomic treatment of patients. The Argonne Cancer Research Hospital to be operated by the University of Chicago is equipped to offer every known type of radiation thought useful in cancer treatment.

A Federal jury in Washington today convicted Sidney Buchman, former Hollywood writer-producer, on charges of contempt of Congress, refusing to appear before the House un-American activities Committee.

Here in New York, Frank Stanton, the president of CBS, announced that Arthur Godfrey is leaving his radio programs for five or six weeks and his television programs for four months. Godfrey has decided to undergo surgery to repair the effect of injuries to his hips that he suffered in an auto accident 20 years ago.

Governor Dewey today proposed an employer-employee payroll tax as the "honest way" to end New York city's financial difficulties. The tax would come to 10-dollars a year on incomes of 4-thousand dollars, and 25 dollars a year on 10-thousand dollar incomes. Employers will have to match the contributions of their employees.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon/

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The latest incident in the cold war, the shooting down of that British bomber, is cause for serious concern, but also a degree of levelheadedness. The Roman Horace once cautioned: "Always remember to preserve an even mind in adverse circumstance." Ralph Waldo Emerson took an even more practical approach: "A man should study ever to keep cool. He often makes his inferiors his superiors by heat."

Good Nite and Good Luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, March 13, 1953
7:45-8:00 p.m.

ANNOUNCER: (Commercial)

And, now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news! America and Britain both sent protest notes behind the Iron Curtain today. The United States told the Czech Government that we are taking the measures necessary to prevent further attacks on our planes. An F-84 jet was shot down by two MIGs in our zone of Germany on Tuesday and the British accuse the Russians of a deliberate and brutal act of aggression and the murder of six British airmen. Russian MIGs shot down a British bomber in the air corridor from Hamburg to Berlin yesterday. The American note accused the Czechs of falsification of facts in their claim that the American plane crossed into Czechoslovakia. We had a radar check on our plane. It did not stray into the Czech area. We demand punishment of the Czech pilot and immediate compensation for the plane destroyed. The British note to the Russian Commander in Berlin ignored the Soviet claim that their bomber violated the Soviet Zone before it was attacked. The British also demand compensation for the men killed, the plane destroyed, and they, too, want punishment of the offending pilot. The British also reveal that in addition to the bomber shot down yesterday and another bomber that was buzzed, without attack, a British commercial airplane was buzzed by Soviet fighters yesterday. This plane, the British say, may have strayed from the air corridor.

Three members of the Czechoslovak Air Force today flew an old German training plane to Austria, to Graz, in the British Occupation Zone. They asked for political asylum, said life is abominable in Czechoslovakia. And the Czech Radio now tells us that Communist President Gottwald is seriously ill. Gottwald, who is fifty-six, was Stalin's favorite; returned from the big Moscow funeral on Wednesday. On Thursday he became ill. Today, in three medical bulletins, issued in three hours, his ten doctors report he has suffered a chest hemorrhage, pneumonia, pleurisy, sinking blood pressure, and weakening blood circulation. Gottwald has been the No. 1 Communist in Czechoslovakia since the Communists seized power there five years ago. The Prague Radio tonight is playing solemn music.

In Korea today, while snow and mud kept ground fighting to a minimum, our jet pilots destroyed six enemy MIGs near the Manchurian border. There is no word on any losses we may have suffered.

In Washington tonight the Government ordered a vigorous and impartial crack-down on big and small tax evaders. With midnight Monday the deadline for Federal tax payments, the Justice Department and the Internal Revenue Bureau announced every effort will be made to discover and prosecute those who wilfully attempt to evade their taxes. I would like to offer a peculiar sort of tax problem in a few minutes.

Republican Senator Bridges, of New Hampshire, says some top people in the Administration have been advised to withdraw the nomination of Charles E. Bohlen to be the new Ambassador to Moscow. Senator Bridges says Bohlen faces formidable opposition in the Senate. He has doubts that the nomination will ever come to a vote. Democratic Senator Sparkman says he cannot conceive the Republicans fighting this personal appointment of the President's in any strength. Senator Sparkman says Mr. Bohlen is our best expert on Russia, with the possible exception of George Kennan and George Kennan, the former Ambassador to Moscow, who was ordered out by the Russians, is now expected to leave the diplomatic service. Washington reporters have been told that Secretary of State Dulles is not expected to give him another assignment.

Dr. Wilson Compton, the former head of propaganda for the State Department, said today that the "Voice of America" will become timid and valueless unless it can be lifted out of public controversy. He feels Congress should say just what kind of a propaganda program it wants and today House and Senate members told Secretary of State Dulles they want more punch and more Americanism in the "Voice."

Three persons today refused to tell congressional committees whether or not they have been Communists. Byron T. Darling, a physics professor at Ohio State University, says he never did anything disloyal. He's been suspended from his teaching post. Dr. Julius Laverty, a New York high school teacher, says he is not now a member of the party. Mrs. Dorothy Douglas/ offered to testify only about the period when she was married to Illinois Senator Douglas. They were divorced twenty-three years ago.

At the United Nations Security Council meeting, held in secret, the Russians are reported to have vetoed Lester B. Pearson, of Canada, the British and French choice to succeed Trygve Lie as Secretary General. It was the fifty-sixth veto for the Russians. The American candidate, Carlos Romulo, of the Philippines, received only five of the necessary seven votes. The Polish Foreign Minister, Moscow's candidate, received Moscow's vote.

Between now and Monday some of us are going to wonder what happened to the money. .....

* * * * * * * * * * * *

ANNOUNCER: ..... And here's Mr. Murrow with his "Word for Today."

MURROW: No one likes to pay taxes, but our security, well-being and day-to-day existence depend in large measure on Government services and someone has to pay. Ben Cyril (?) once put it delicately when he said: "Let not thy hand be stretched out to take and closed in the time of giving." Thomas Carlyle was a little more blunt. "Everywhere in life," he said, "the true question is not what we gain, but what we do."

Goodnight and good luck!

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

ORIGINAL SCRIPT LOST - HARD NEWS FROM EDIPHONE

FRIDAY, MARCH 13, 1953

Monday, March 16, 1953.

This is the news:

The State Department wants "acts" not words" from Moscow. Yesterday Premier Malenkov said in Moscow that outstanding issues could be settled peacefully between Russia and the United States. (I'D LIKE TO DISCUSS THIS MATTER IN A FEW MINUTES) Today, Lincoln White, State department press officer, said: "Protestations of peaceful intent are not new from the Soviet Union. But words must be weighted against acts." He says it will be interesting to see how Malenkov acts on his peaceful words while the Korean war continues..our planes are shot down over Germany and pledges for Austrian independence are ignored. Both the British and West German officials reacted the same way; they want proof of Moscow's peaceful intentions by deeds..not words.

In Washington today Republican Senator Knowland called for a SHOWDOWN on Korea in the United Nations. He wants us to try to get the Russians condemned as "supporters of aggression." Knowland, who is chairman of the Republican Senate policy committee, said he spoke for himself. Another Republican, Senator Cooper of Kentucky, said the Knowland proposal would lead to outright war with Russia. Knowland answered: its time for the free nations of the world to "stand up and be counted, come what may."

The British today issued an order to tighten controls over shipments of strategic materials to Communist China and North Korea..however roundabout. Hereafter, British ships must be licensed to make voyages to China and North Korea.

The British today welcomed Marshal Tito of Yugoslav, the first head of a Communist state to visit them. Tito was greeted by Prime Minister Churchill..the Duke of [redacted] Edinburgh..and the heaviest police and security guard in recent times.

Britain's first lord of the admiralty.. J.P.L. THomas, told the House of Commons today, that Russia now has a larger navy than Britain's.. a navy second only to ours. He said Russia is building more crusiers.. than all the North Atlantic treaty powers combined.

A number of America's new Sabrejets..F-86's.. TODAY were flown from their bases in Britain to Germany [redacted] to be stationed near Munich. The Sabrejet is the plane that has scored against Russian-built Migs in Korea..its newer and faster than the Thunderjet..one of which was shot down by German Migs over west Germany last week.

General [redacted] Gruenther, chief of staff to General

Ridgeway, called on President Eisenhower today. Later he told reporters: he doubts that the recent Communist attacks on allied planes in Germany means that Russia is ready for war. He thinks they may be the result of "increased vigilance or trigger-happy flyers." General Gruenther says the western forces in Europe are "no longer a pushover".

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson warned today that we'll be inviting disaster if we weaken our defenses by false economy advocated by those who would reduce taxes and balance the budget. He feels that the recent Communist attacks in Europe "are merely the forerunners of the future. We must sooner or later face the supreme test."

In Korea today, an Australian fighter-bomber pilot saw a mile-long convoy of Communist trucks below him. He flew to the head of the line--blew up the first two trucks--then flew to the end of the line and blew up the last four trucks. Then Australian, and American air force and marine planes worked over all those in between. We claim to have destroyed or damaged 100 Communist trucks.

The Army today agreed that Congress has granted all of its requests for ammunition funds. But the Army objects to a Senate armed Services Committee statement that these funds were "adequate." The implication seems to be that the army's original budget requests were trimmed before they reached Congress. Senator Byrd, Virginia Democrat, calls this a red herring..says the Defense Department previously did not give the committee "a single word to indicate that lack of appropriations had anything to do with shortages." [redacted]

The President today reviewed with Congressional leaders the order he will issue to remove FROM OFFICE hundreds of top policy-making officials. [redacted] Senator Taft says the order will affect those whom he calls "new Deal thinkers." [redacted]

[redacted]

Sen. Mc Carthy said today that the Voice of America has "some good employes..some very good and some very bad." He refused comment on Senator Taft's suggestions that all Voice employes be fired with a new agency be rebuilt from scratch. [redacted]

The Supreme Court decided today that the states may ban picketing by labor unions if the picketing conflicts with right-to-work laws of the state. The court also ruled that an alien, barred from this country for security reasons, may be held on Ellis Island indefinitely.

In the Nevada desert tomorrow the Atomic Energy Commission will conduct another atomic explosion... a test for one thousand soldiers. If wind conditions are right and the test goes off as scheduled, you may hear a report from the site over many of these stations at 8;15 a.m. eastern standard time.

In Tampa, Florida , today the American League turned down Bill Veeck's request to move his St. Louis Browns baseball team to Baltimore. The owners said the move is not advisable at this time. [redacted]

~~open for the move next season. Veeck was stunned by the decision.~~

~~said he thought it "was all in the bag."~~

Here in New York, the Dewey Administration demanded that this city increase its ten cent subway fare as part of a bigger plan to help New York's financial situation.

Edward R. Murrow: March 16, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Malenkov in Moscow says he doesn't really see any reason why the communist world and the free world can't live together in peace. We reply, in effect, by saying that he has plenty of opportunities in Korea, Austria and elsewhere to demonstrate this appetite for peace. (This exchange leaves us exactly where we were.) Similar statements and similar responses have been recorded before, meanwhile both sides continue to prepare for war.

It is now reasonably clear that the one-man rule of Stalin has been replaced by the five-man inner circle, because no one man could assume immediately Stalin's power in economic, cultural and military affairs. But the record shows that Stalin was a cautious man. He was willing to live dangerously but he never quite went over the brink. He pulled back in Iran under U.N. pressure; acknowledged defeat in the Berlin airlift; and he took no unnecessary chances in Korea or Yugoslavia. As a man who had reached the public position of being invincible and infallible, Stalin could afford to make mistakes, (which of course were never acknowledged as mistakes but were covered up by changing tactics.) Malenkov does not have the position of infallibility or invincibility. He can't risk mistakes, so for the time being at least he is likely to be even more cautious than Stalin. It is clear from the outside that only war can shake the power and prestige of this new Russian regime. (And if it's clear from the outside, it must be equally clear to the determined men who are running the show.) Malenkov cannot be expected to emerge as the dominant figure that Stalin was. He has been concerned primarily with internal matters. He will leave foreign affairs largely to Molotov. And the whole Kremlin set-up for the time being will be dedicated to preserving and consolidating the empire that Stalin bequeathed them. There isn't likely to be any drawing back from present positions, or the liquidation of present Russian commitments. But at the same time, it would not be reasonable to expect any major adventures in the foreign field. The two strong men are Malenkov and Beria, which makes it almost certain that the greatest emphasis of the new administration, will be on internal problems, consolidation and the prevention of dissension, particularly in the satellite countries.

In Western countries, by tradition, the Foreign Minister is usually the number two man in the government. But that is not true in Russia; the number two man is Beria, who controls the Secret Police and the Atomic Energy program. Beria outranks Molotov. This could mean that policies of internal control will occupy much of the time of the men in the Kremlin. This doesn't mean that there is any immediate danger or prospect of the Soviet Union flying apart. But it may mean that the new rulers recognize that they require a certain time to establish control over the empire; and during this period they want to avoid any new foreign adventures. They must first of all demonstrate to the Soviet people, (however fleetingly,) that the new government means peace and plenty. What has happened so far appears to be in a literal sense the closing of the ranks. The purges in the satellite countries appear to have pretty well eliminated the deviationists and potential Titos. The leaders who are left may be accounted loyal, not only to Stalin, but to the impersonal Kremlin machine.

It seems to this reporter, in the midst of this mystery, that it is futile to hope for Soviet disunity, collapse or revolt. Our real danger lies in possible disunity amongst the Western allies, as a result of over-optimistic estimates of what the changes in the Kremlin may mean. The fact - and it appears to be a fact - that the communists closed ranks so quickly after Stalin's death should stimulate the Western Powers to do likewise.

Speeches and announcements about Russian policy - the possibility of living in peace with the free world - should always be read against the background of communist dogma and doctrine. The basic belief of communists is that they can never be secure until they own and control the world, and remake it in their own image. They may say from time to time, as they have, that peaceful co-existence with the free world is possible. But they cannot believe this and their basic doctrine at the same time. Their tactics change from time to time. They will join with Hitler, or with us; but their objectives remain the same because their doctrine, according to Lenin, Stalin and Malenkov, is that they can ~~XXXXXX~~ achieve success and security only through world domination. While listening to their words and observing their actions we should remember their basic objective, and perhaps ask ourselves what ours are - in short, whether there is possible any accommodation that will permit their system and ours to operate without collision.

Tomorrow morning, a new series of atomic tests will take place on the Yucca Flats of Nevada. It will be a show of power. The Roman Juvenal once said:"There is nothing which power can not believe of itself." But this was long ago. More recently, Francis Drake remarked:"Atomic power shoves us into a realm in which wealth and fortitude are not enough."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 16, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The State Department wants "acts" not "words" from Moscow. Yesterday Premier Malenkov said in Moscow that outstanding issues could be settled peacefully between Russia and the United States. I'd like to discuss this matter in a few minutes. Today, Lincoln White, State Department press officer, said: "Protestations of peaceful intent are not new from the Soviet Union. But words must be weighted against acts." He says it will be interesting to see how Malenkov acts on his peaceful words while the Korean war continues; our planes are shot down over Germany and pledges for Austrian independence are ignored. Both the British and West German officials reacted the same way; they want proof of Moscow's peaceful intentions by deeds not words.

In Washington today Republican Senator Knowland called for a showdown on Korea in the United Nations. He wants us to try to get the Russians condemned as "supporters of aggression." Knowland, who is chairman of the Republican Senate policy committee, said he spoke for himself. Another Republican, Senator Cooper of Kentucky, said the Knowland proposal would lead to outright war with Russia. Knowland answered: its time for the free nations of the world to "stand up and be counted, come what may."

The British today issued an order to tighten controls over shipments of strategic materials to Communist China and North Korea, however roundabout. Hereafter, British ships must be licensed to make voyages to China and North Korea.

The British today welcomed Marshal Tito of Yugoslav, the first head of a Communist state to visit them. Tito was greeted by Prime Minister Churchill, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the heaviest police and security guard in recent times.

Britain's first lord of the admiralty, J.P.L. Thomas, told the House of Commons today that Russia now has a larger navy than Britain's, a navy second only to ours. He said Russia is building more crusiers, than all the North Atlantic treaty powers combined.

A number of America's new Sabrejets, F-86's, today were flown from their bases in Britain to Germany to be stationed near Munich. The Sabrejet is the plane that has scored against Russian-built Migs in Korea; its newer and faster than the Thunderjet, one of which was shot down by German Migs over west Germany last week.

General Gruenther, chief of staff to General Ridgeway, called on President Eisenhower today. Later he told reporters: he doubts that the recent Communist attacks on allied planes in Germany, means that Russia is ready for war. He thinks they may be the result of "increased vigilance or trigger-happy flyers." General Gruenther says the western forces in Europe are "no longer a pushover."

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson warned today that we'll be inviting disaster if we weaken our defenses by false economy advocated by those who would reduce taxes and balance the budget. He feels that the recent Communist attacks in Europe "are merely the forerunners of the future. We must sooner or later face the supreme test."

In Korea today, an Australian fighter-bomber pilot saw a mile-long convoy of Communist trucks below him. He flew to the head of the line, blew up the first two trucks, then flew to the end of the line and blew up the last four trucks. Then Australian, and American air force and marine planes worked over all those in between. We claim to have destroyed or damaged 100 Communist trucks.

The Army today agreed that Congress has granted all of its requests for ammunition funds. But the Army objects to a Senate armed Services Committee statement that these funds were "adequate." The implication seems to be that the army's original budget requests were trimmed before they reached Congress.

Senator Byrd, Virginia Democrat, calls this a red herring, says the Defense Department previously did not give the committee "a single word to indicate that lack of appropriations had anything to do with shortages."

The President today reviewed with Congressional leaders the order he will issue to remove from office, hundreds of top policy-making officials. Senator Taft says the order will affect those whom he calls "new Deal thinkers."

Senator McCarthy said today that the Voice of America has "some good employees, some very good and some very bad." He refused comment on Senator Taft's suggestions that all Voice employees be fired with a new agency to rebuild from scratch.

The Supreme Court decided today that the states may ban picketing by labor unions if the picketing conflicts with right-to-work laws of the state. The court also ruled that an alien, barred from this country for security reasons, may be held on Ellis Island indefinitely.

In the Nevade desert tomorrow the Atomic Energy Commission will conduct another atomic explosion; a test for one thousand soldiers. If wind conditions are right and the test goes off as scheduled, you may hear a report from the site over many of these stations at 8:15 a.m. eastern standard time.

In Tampa, Florida, today the American League turned down Bill Veeck's request to move his St. Louis Browns baseball team to Baltimore. The owners said the move is not advisable at this time.

Here in New York, the Dewey Administration demanded that this city increase its ten cent subway fare as part of a bigger plan to help New York's financial situation.

Malenkov in Moscow says he doesn't really see any reason why the communist world and the free world can't live together in peace. We reply, in effect, by saying that he has plenty of opportunities in Korea. Austria and elsewhere to demonstrate this appetite for peace. This exchange leaves us exactly where we were. Similar statements and similar responses have been recorded before, meanwhile both sides continue to prepare for war.

It is now reasonably clear that the one-man rule of Stalin has been replaced by the five-man inner circle, because no one man could assume immediately Stalin's power in economic, cultural and military affairs. But the record shows that Stalin was a cautious man. He was willing to live dangerously, but he never quite went over the brink. He pulled back in Iran under U.N. pressure; acknowledged defeat in the Berlin airlift; and he took no unnecessary chances in Korea or Yugoslavia. As a man who had reached the public position of being invincible and infallible, Stalin could afford to make mistakes, (which of course were never acknowledged as mistakes, but were covered up by changing tactics.) Malenkov does not have the position of infallibility or invincibility. He can't risk mistakes, so for the time being at least he is likely to be even more cautious than Stalin. It is clear from the outside that only war can shake the power and prestige of this new Russian regime. And if it's clear from the outside, it must be equally clear to the determined men who are running the show. Malenkov cannot be expected to emerge as the dominant figure that Stalin was. He has been concerned primarily with internal matters. He will leave foreign affairs largely to Molotov. And the whole Kremlin set-up for the time being will be dedicated to preserving and consolidating the empire that Stalin bequeathed them. There isn't likely to be any drawing back from present positions, or the liquidation of present Russian commitments. But at the same time it would not be reasonable to expect any major adventures in the foreign field. The two strong men are Malenkov and Beria, which makes it almost certain that the greatest emphasis of the new administration will be on internal problems, consolidation and the prevention of dissension, particularly in the satellite countries.

In Western countries, by tradition, the Foreign Minister is usually the number two man in the government. But that is not true in Russia; the number two man is Beria who controls the Secret Police and the Atomic Energy program.

Beria outranks Molotov. This could mean that policies of internal control will occupy much of the time of the men in the Kremlin. This doesn't mean that there is any immediate danger or prospect of the Soviet Union flying apart. But it may mean that the new rulers recognize that they require a certain time to establish control over the empire; and during this period they want to avoid any new foreign adventures. They must first of all demonstrate to the Soviet people, however fleetingly, that the new government means peace and plenty. What has happened so far appears to be in a literal sense the closing of the ranks. The purges in the satellite countries appear to have pretty well eliminated the deviationists and potential Titos. The leaders who are left may be accounted loyal, not only to Stalin, but to the impersonal Kremlin machine.

It seems to this reporter, in the midst of this mystery, that it is futile to hope for Soviet disunity, collapse or revolt. Our real danger lies in possible disunity amongst the Western allies, as a result of over-optimistic estimates of what the changes in the Kremlin may mean. The fact - and it appears to be a fact - that the communists closed ranks so quickly after Stalin's death should stimulate the Western Powers to do likewise.

Speeches and announcements about Russian policy - the possibility of living in peace with the free world - should always be read against the background of communist dogma and doctrine. The basic belief of communists is that they can never be secure until they own and control the world, and remake it in their own image. They may say from time to time, as they have, that peaceful co-existence with the free world is possible. But they cannot believe this and their basic doctrine at the same time. Their tactics change from time to time. They will join with Hitler, or with us; but their objectives remain the same because their doctrine, according to Lenin, Stalin and Malenkov is that they can achieve success and security only through world domination. While listening to their words and observing their actions we should remember their basic objective, and perhaps ask ourselves what ours are - in short, whether there is possible any accommodation that will permit their system and ours to operate without collision.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Tomorrow morning, a new series of atomic tests will take place on the Yucca Flats of Nevada. It will be a show of power. The Roman Juvenal once said: "There is nothing which power cannot believe of itself." But this was long ago. More recently, Francis Drake remarked: "Atomic power shoves us into a realm in which wealth and fortitude are not enough."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, March 17, 1953

This is the news:

The Air Force says a Russian Mig fired at one of our reconnaissance planes, near Siberia on Sunday. We fired back. As far as the air force knows, neither plane was damaged..no one was hurt. Our plane, an RB-50, was on a routine, 4-thousand mile, round-trip, non-stop weather flight, from Alaska. Twenty-five miles off the Kamchatka peninsula, the Russian jet attacked. Another Russian plane in the area took no part in the incident. Both flew back to Siberia, when we returned the Mig's fire. An air force spokesman says our plane was definitely over international waters.

The State Department today demanded of Russia and Hungary, 638-thousand dollars plus interest, for unlawfully seizing an American C-47 that was forced down in Hungary in November of 1951. This sum includes the 123-thousand we had to pay as ransom, for the four American flyers.

Prime Minister Churchill said today that the shooting down of an unarmed British bomber by Soviet fighter planes last week was "a cruel and wanton attack."

And today Mr. Churchill rejected a Communist proposal to free a British businessman, now in a Hungarian jail..in return for freedom of a Communist girl guerrilla, now held by the British in Malaya.

Mr. Churchill spent two hours talking with visiting Marshal Tito today after the Yugoslav dictator had lunched with the Queen at Buckingham palace.

In Korea today, American Second Division troops wiped out almost all of a 350-man Chinese force which attacked our main line on the western front. It was a seven and a half hour battle. There was no announcement of our casualties.

~~General Chase, the chief of an American military mission to Formosa, says there's been a notable increase in the volume of our aid to the Chinese Nationalists since the first of the year. Twenty-three ships brought Chiang Kai Shek's forces planes, artillery, ammunition vehicles and guns in January and February.~~

At the United Nations it's reported that Russia's candidate for secretary general--to succeed Tryvie Lie..is Madame Pandit or Sir Benegal Rau..both of India. Madame Pandit, a sister of Premier Nehru, is now head of the Indian delegation to the U.N./ Sir Benegal is a member of the international court of justice at the Hague.

The Senate Interior Committee today postponed action on a Hawaiian statehood bill and decided, first, to visit the islands before taking any final action.

The government says retail FOOD prices dropped about one per cent during February. (led by declining beef prices.) And today the government ended all remaining price controls. This means that for the first time in more than two years the eceonomy is free of almost all controls.. (except rent controls in certain areas.) [redacted]

Republican Representative Jackson of California charged today that there are "Communists in the church" and he demands a showdown on a resolution to remove Chairman Velde as head of the House un-American activities committee. Jackson, a member of the committee, says there is evidence that Communists, and what he called "the fellow-travelling press" are trying to abolish the committee. He also attacked [redacted] Methodist Bishop Bromley Oxnam of Washington. Representative Jackson said [redacted] Bishop OXNAM [redacted] "has been to the communist front what Man of War was to thoroughbred racing." He said the Bisop "served God on Sunday and the communist front the balance of the week." The Bishop issued a statement saying: "Congressmen Jackson should know there is no congressional immunity from the biblical injunction 'Thou shalt not bear false witness." He said it is regrettable that Jackson should have used the floor of the house to broadcast a lie. ~~At the conclusion of his House speech Jackson received a standing ovation from the Republican members, with about a dozen Democrats joining it.~~

Also in Washington, Henry Grunewald pleaded guilty to contempt of congress on one count. The government has agreed to withdraw 30 other contempt counts when Grunewald is sentenced. He faces a maximum of a year in prison and a thousand-dollar fine. ~~Before Grunewald, known as a Washington mystery man, changed his plea, the government said his refusal to answer questions by a House subcommittee was "probably the most contemptuous contempt ever committed before a congressional committee."~~

Out in the Nevada dessert this morning, the government exploded another "atomic device." Among the observers was CORRESPONDENT Edward P. Morgan.

Ed..what do you have to report:
(runs 3;30 ending: if this isnt symbolic of the way the world at large regards this thing.

Edward R. Murrow: March 17, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

In due course the scientists and Civil Defense authorities will give us an estimate of the effect of this "atomic device" exploded on Yucca Flat this morning. But even these reports will not contribute very much to solving our fundamental problem, for no one can be sure that the Russians would drop that particular type of gadget. We have been assured, on good authority, that they can get through and drop whatever they have. We might knock down five, ten, even twenty percent of the attacking force - no one can be sure about that. But enough would get through to make things extremely uncomfortable for several million people. This means that soon the administration and the Congress must undertake either consciously or unconsciously one of the greatest gambles in the history of this republic; the decision as to whether we are to have anything approaching an adequate Civil Defense organisation. As of now we haven't got it. This decision involves the consideration of an incredible number of imponderables. Our estimate of the current and predicted rate of bomb production in Russia; their ability now and in the future to deliver bombs on the target - our ability to intercept and shoot down the attacking force; the amount of advance warning that our radar screen will give us.

If the decision should be made to provide this country with an adequate

Civil Defense system, and an effective interceptor defense, we may as well say goodbye to any prospect of a balanced budget. / And there remains the question of how much of the total money available should be spent on our strategic Air Force, in order to strike the blows of retaliation. / And how much should be spent on preparing to avert, or minimise, the effect of the blows we know the enemy could deliver. / To put it another way, how much of our total resources should be devoted to giving us a good place to hide, and how much spent on preparing us to hit. / The striking of a balance between these two considerations is one of the most difficult problems ever to confront a free nation. / It cannot safely be resolved in purely military terms. / If we concentrate too much on hiding, we could develop a Maginot Line mentality. And if we devote too much of our resources to hitting, we may be dangerously uncovered, if the hour strikes. / Most of us know nothing about even oldfashioned bombing, so we're confronted with one of the most difficult of all problems: how to substitute intelligence and imagination for experience. / And not even the televising of the relatively small explosion in Nevada, contributes very much to the sum total of our experience.

This reporter does not pretend to know whether the major emphasis should be placed upon hiding or hitting. Probably it will have to be a combination of both. (The gamble is probably no more than a dozen cities and a few million lives.) As of right now, before the final and perhaps fateful bets are placed, only one thing is clear, on the basis of official statements; we do not have adequate strength or organisation, either to hit or to hide, with any real assurance of success or survival; the hand is still being dealt; we have plenty of chips left - both men and metal - and before long, we will have to decide how much the hand, or rather our heritage is worth, and how we want to play it.

In this matter of civilian defense, we ~~must~~ should never over-estimate ourselves nor under-estimate our enemies. With today's atomic tests in mind, we would do well to remember Ovid's observation that "the affairs of men hang by a slender thread and sudden chance can ruin what once was strong." Euripides was right: "Chance fights ever on the side of the prudent."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Tuesday, March 17, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Out in the Nevada Desert this morning, the government exploded another atomic device. Among the observers was our correspondent Edward P. Morgan. Ed, what do you have to report.

MORGAN: There was a bang out here in the brush before daybreak this morning, Ed, and now we are all unqualified experts on nuclear explosions.

It would be sheer extravagance to dwell on the awful beauty of thething. It consumexs you with its white light and hot breath; fascinates your aching eyes with red and purplxe fire; thunderclaps against your body like the recoil of a great invisible gun; and kkx then becomes a quiet cloud column climbing in the dawning sky. What happened next was this: The thousand troops crouching in five foot foxholes, two miles from Ground Zero, waited seven seconds, shook themselves and climbed out. They were nervous but unhurt; despite the fact they have been closer to an atomic blast than any human since Japan. Many thought it would be worse; but a GI from Georgia said he was going to write his wife he was right glad to be out of it. And a corporal from Akron said he thought that he'd heard a buddy pray.

The troops advanced to within a few hundred yards of the point where the atomic device had been exploded atop a steel tower. There was no tower there. Nothing but dust and black ground. The model house, three quarters of a mile from the vortex of the blast, was demolished, but did not burn. The house, a mile and a half away, was more than 50% damaged, but its basement shelter held and, presumably, would have protected occupants if rescue teams could have reachedthem before they absorbed a lethal dose of radiation.

Atomic energy and civil defense officials have made swift, on-the-spot inspections of the blast area but radioactivity was so intense that others will be delayed until tomorrow or later. This did not surpris-the experts. In a burst near the ground, as this one was, radioactivity lasts longer because the huge dust clouds become charged with it. The cars and military equipment, in the test zone, were badly punished.

Some cars, for instance, with windows closed, had their tops dented in; others, with windows open, did not have any dents at all.

Tentative unofficial conclusions: Troops properly foxholed down, may be able to get within one mile of the center of a burst such as this one, which, incidentally, a fifteen kilo ton strength, simulated the force of the atomic shell to be fired from our new 280-millimeter cannon later in this test series.

This may make atomic weapons even more significant in support of infantry in combat. As a matter of fact, Brigadier General William Bullock, who led the soldiers, believed that his men would have been safe above ground in today's action.

The fact that neither framehouse caught fire, may possibly be deceptive, because there was nothing particularly inflammable in them; nor any gas or electricity connections as would normally have been the case.

The blast damage to House No. 2 surprised officials, who said stronger home construction may be necessary. One civil defense worker, who had travelled a long way, didn't see the explosion although he had his goggles on. "I forgot and closed my eyes," he said. One wonders if this isn't symbolic of the way the allegedly civilized world at large still regards this thing.

MURROW: ...

Ed. trans. P.O. (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 17, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Air Force says a Russian Mig fired at one of our reconnaissance planes, near Siberia on Sunday. We fired back. As far as the air force knows, neither plane was damaged, no one was hurt. Our plane, an RB-50 was on a routine 4-thousand mile round-trip non-stop weather flight from Alaska. Twenty-five miles off the Kamchatka peninsula the Russian jet attacked. Another Russian plane in the area took no part in the incident. Both flew back to Siberia when we returned the Mig's fire. An air force spokesman says our plane was definitely over international waters.

The State Department today demanded of Russia and Hungary, 638-thousand dollars plus interest for unlawfully seizing an American C-47 that was forced down in Hungary in November of 1951. This sum includes the 123-thousand we had to pay as ransom for the four American flyers.

Prime Minister Churchill said today that the shooting down of an unarmed British bomber by Soviet fighter planes last week was "a cruel and wanton attack."

And today Mr. Churchill rejected a Communist proposal to free a British businessman now in a Hungarian jail, in return for freedom of a Communist girl guerrilla now held by the British in Malaya.

Mr. Churchill spent two hours talking with visiting Marshal Tito today after the Yugoslav dictator had lunched with the Queen at Buckingham palace.

In Korea today, American Second Division troops wiped out almost all of a 350-man Chinese force which attacked our main line on the western front. It was a seven and a half hour battle. There was no announcement of our casualties.

At the United Nations it's reported that Russia's candidate for Secretary general to succeed Trygvie Lie, is Madame Pandit or Sir Benegal Rau, both of India. Madame Pandit, a sister of Premier Nehru, is now head of the Indian delegation to the U.N. Sir Benegal is a member of the international court of justice at the Hague.

The Senate Interior Committee today postponed action on a Hawaiian statehood bill and decided, first, to visit the islands before taking any final action.

The government says retail food prices dropped about one per cent during February, led by declining beef prices. And today the government ended all remaining price controls. This means that for the first time in more than two years the economy is free of almost all controls, except rent controls in certain areas.

Republican Representative Jackson of California charged today that there are "Communists in the church" and he demands a showdown on a resolution to remove Chairman Velde as head of the House un-American activities committee. Jackson, a member of the committee, says there is evidence that Communists and what he called "the fellow-travelling press" are trying to abolish the committee. He also attacked Methodist Bishop Bromley Oxnam of Washington. Representative Jackson said Bishop Oxnam "has been to the communist front what Man of War was to thoroughbred racing." He said the Bishop "served God on Sunday and the communist front the balance of the week." The Bishop issued a statement saying: "Congressmen Jackson should know there is no congressional immunity from the biblical injunction 'Thou shalt not bear false witness." He said it is regrettable that Jackson should have used the floor of the House to broadcast a lie.

Also in Washington, Henry Grunewald pleaded guilty to contempt to congress on one count. The government has agreed to withdraw 30 other contempt counts when Grunewald is sentenced. He faces a maximum of a year in prison and a thousand-dollar fine.

Out in the Nevada desert this morning, the government exploded another "atomic device." Among the observers was correspondent Edward P. Morgan. Ed, what do you have to report:

MORGAN: THERE was a bang out here in the brush before daybreak this morning, Ed, and now we are all unqualified experts on nuclear explosions.

It would be sheer extravagance to dewll on the awful beauty of the thing. It consumes you with its white light and hot breath; fascinates your aching eyes with red and purple fire; thunderclaps against your body like the recoil of a great invisible gun; and then becomes a quiet cloud column climbing in the dawning sky. What happened next was this: The thousand troops crouching in five foot foxholes, two miles from Ground Zero, waited seven seconds, shook themselves and climbed out. They were nervous but unhurt; despite the fact they have been closer to an atomic blast than any human since Japan. Many thought it would be worse; but a GI from Georgia said he was going to write his wife he was right glad to be out of it. And a corporal from Akron said he thought that he'd heard a buddy pray.

The troops advanced to within a few hundred yards of the point where the atomic device had been exploded atop a steel tower. There was no tower there. Nothing but dust and black ground. The model house, three quarters of a mile from the vortex of the blast, was demolished, but did not burn. The house, a mile and a half away, was more than 50% damaged, but its basement shelter held and, presumably, would have protected occupants if rescue teams could have reached them before they absorbed a lethal dose of radiation.

Atomic energy and civil defense officials have made swift, on-the-spot inspections of the blast area but radioactivity was so intense that others will be delayed until tomorrow or later. This did not surprise the experts. In a burst near the ground, as this one was, radioactivity lasts longer because the huge dust clouds become charged with it. The cars and military equipment, in the test zone, were badly punished.

Some cars, for instance, with windows closed, had their tops dented in; others, with windows open, did not have any dents at all.

Tentative unofficial conclusions: Troops properly foxholed down, may be able to get within one mile of the center of a burst such as this one, which, incidentally, a fifteen kilo ton strength, simulated the force of the atomic shell to be fired from our new 280-millimeter cannon later in this test series.

This may make atomic weapons even more significant in support of infantry in combat. As a matter of fact, Brigadier General William Bullock, who led the soldiers, believed that his men would have been safe above ground in today's action. The fact that neither framehouse caught fire, may possibly be deceptive, because there was nothing particularly inflammable in them; nor any gas or electricity connections as would normally have been the case.

The blast damage to House No. 2 surprised officials, who said stronger home construction may be necessary. One civil defense worker, who had travelled a long way, didn't see the explosion although he had his goggles on. "I forgot and closed my eyes," he said. One wonders if this isn't symbolic of the way the allegedly civilized world at large still regards this thing.

In due course the scientists and Civil Defense authorities will give us an estimate of the effect of this "atomic device" exploded on Yucca Flat this morning. But even these reports will not contribute very much to solving our fundamental problem, for no one can be sure that the Russians would drop that particular type of gadget. We have been assured on good authority that they can get through and drop whatever they have. We might knock down five, ten, even twenty percent of the attacking force - no one can be sure about that. But enough would get through to make things extremely uncomfortable for several million people. This means that soon the administration and the Congress must undertake either consciously or unconsciously one of the greatest gambles in the history of this republic; the decision as to whether we are to have anything approaching an adequate Civil Defense organization. As of now we haven't got it. This decision involves the consideration of an incredible number of imponderables. Our estimate of the current and predicted rate of bomb production in Russia; their ability now and in the future to deliver bombs on the target - our ability to intercept and shoot down the attacking force. the amount of advance warning that our radar screen will give us.

If the decision should be made to provide this country with an adequate Civil Defense system, and an effective interceptor defense, we may as well say goodbye to any prospect of a balanced budget. And there remains the question of how much of the total money available should be spent on our strategic Air Force, in order to strike the blows of retaliation. And how much should be spent on preparing to avert or minimize the effect of the blows we know the enemy could deliver. To put it another way, how much of our total resources should be devoted to giving us a good place to hide, and how much spent on preparing us to hit. The striking of a blaance between these two considerations is one of the most difficult problems ever to confront a free nation. It cannot safely be resolved in purely military terms. If we concentrate too much on hiding we could develop a Maginot Line mentality. And if we devote too much of our resources to hitting, we may be dangerously uncovered if the hour strikes. Most of us know nothing about even oldfashioned bombing, so we're confronted with one of the most difficult of all problems: how to substitute intelligence and imagination for experience. And not even the televising of the relatively small explosion in Nevada contributes very much to the sum total of our experience.

This reporter does not pretend to know whether the major emphasis should be placed upon hiding or hitting. Probably it will have to be a combination of both. The gamble is probably no more than a dozen cities and a few million lives. As of right now, before the final and perhaps fateful bets are placed, only one thing is clear on the basis of official statements; we do not have adequate strength or organization either to hit or to hide, with any real assurance of success or survival - the hand is still being dealt; we have plenty of chips left - both men and metal - and before long we will have to decide how much the hand, or rather our heritage is worth, and how we want to play it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In this matter of civilian defense, we should never over-estimate ourselves nor under-estimate our enemies. With today's atomic tests in mind, we would do well to remember Ovid's observation that "the affairs of men hang by a slender thread and sudden chance can ruin what once was strong."

Euripides was right: "Chance fights even on the side of the prudent."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday, March 18, 1953

This is the news:

The President said again today: there must be no tax cut until we have a balanced budget in sight. He told 150 prominent business leaders in Washington:" We claim that unless we balance the budget, there will never be any lowering of taxes, because we thoroughly believe that an unbalanced budget is the greatest possible spur to a continued cheapening of our money." The President says this does not mean that taxes cannot be "reformed"..but revenues must never be lowered. [redacted]

Senator Taft says the budget can be balanced if we can cut 4-billions from the present rate of federal spending... because this spending is not as much as former President Truman predicted.

And former Defense Secretary Lovett, in his last report, warned the Eisenhower administration not to cut the military budget recommended by Mr. Truman. He said because of the Communist threat we have no choice but to "maintain and improve" our military power.

Civil Defense Director Val Peterson says the President is gravely concerned with the nation's inadequate preparations for [redacted] protection in case of an atomic bomb attack. Peterson says the President wants a full re-evaluation of the nation's civil defense program and any new facts that may have been uncovered as a result of yesterday's atomic device test.

[redacted]

The House of Representatives today approved the President's request to replace the Federal Security Agency with a new cabinet-level Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

And the Senate Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved the President's nomination of Charles E. Bohlen to be our ambassador to Moscow. The committee voted after Secretary of State Dulles testified for nearly three hours in secret. Mr. Dulles called Bohlen: "uniquely qualified for the job.. the best available person we can think of.. And he said an F.B.I. report on Bohlen "left no doubt of Mr. Bohlen's loyalty and integrity." ~~Senator McCarthy says he will make a speech to the Senate opposing Bohlen. The Senator says "It is difficult from a security standpoint to discuss some phases of the case. But we are being forced to do it."~~

At the United Nations today, American Delegate Gross asked the Russians to prove with deeds, Prime Minister Malenkov's recent words about peace. Gross said the political committee's consideration of the problem of disarmamement "is one of the clearest testing points" for Moscow's protestations for peace. [redacted] they willing [redacted] r [redacted]

The Russians confirmed today their desire to have one of two Indians--Madame Pandit or Sir Benegal Rau, replace Trygvie Lie as secretary general of the U.N. But representatives of the Big Five powers reached no agreement.

The State Department today asked Moscow to punish the Russian Mig pilot, who attacked one of our bombers off Kamchatka on Sunday. Our note says we "expect" quick word about this punishment, and we want the Russians to be sure it doesn't happen again.

In Great Britain, [redacted] visiting Marshal Tito watched [redacted] one British jet fighter[redacted] ram another, during a demonstration put on in his honor. Both pilots were killed. Tito was stunned as the planes crashed in flames..asked that the demonstration be stopped at this point.. but other jets in the air continued their activities on schedule.

In Korea, our jets followed up a night-time Superfort attack, on enemy troop and supply centers. Chinese Communist troops stabbed at our line at eight points. They were thrown back by American, Dutch and South Korean troops.

Adlai Stevenson ended a five-day tour of Korea and said he was impressed with "the infinite difficulties this cruel war presents."

The Pentagon has added another 252 names to the Korean casualty list..66 of them killed in action. [redacted]

The State Department today authorized its information agencies to use Communist material "to expose communist propaganda or refute Communist lies." Recently the Department ordered a flat ban against the use of any Communist material. Now it can be used when it is to our [redacted] advantage.

[redacted]

About a million and a quarter of the nation's railroad workers today were awarded a four-cents-an-hour wage increase..retroactive to last December first. Twenty-two railroad unions and the nation's carriers had agreed in advance to accept a decision by Arbitrator Paul N. Guthrie..who was appointed by former President Truman. [redacted] The carriers say this will cost them 120-million dollars a year.

In St. Petersburg, the National League and the American Association gave the Boston Braves permission to switch their franchise to Milwaukee.. the first shift of a major league franchise since 1903. The present Milwaukee Braves will switch to Toledo.

And here in New York, a jury ruled againt entertainers Jane Froman and Gypsy Markoff who sought a total of three and a half million dollars for injuries they SUFFERED in a Pan American Airways plane accident near Lisbon ten years ago. The judge awarded them each approximately 9-thousand dollars.. under an international convention limiting liability when no "wilful misconduct" is shown.

That's the news. On the walls of my office there hang pictures of Carl Sandburg, (with a statue of Lincoln in the background;) a picture of my seven-year-old son Casey; and a little cartoon clipped long ago from some magazine. It shows an unusually pompous-looking radio announcer, and the caption under the cartoon reads: "Stanley R. Bascom's analysis of the news usually heard at this time will not be presented tonight. Mr. Bascom was unable to figure it out himself." That cartoon reflects with considerable fidelity the position of this reporter. #

We held a long editorial conference, considered doing a piece on the progress of the Eisenhower administration to date - debated another profound piece on the probable successor to Gottwald in Czechoslovakia - discussed an analysis of the investigation into the Voice of America, until reminded that only a few days ago we had said everything, if not more, than we knew on this subject.

One reason for this editorial dilemma was the fact that we encountered a dispatch from Paris which had to do with the famous Spanish artist Pablo Picasso. He is the man who painted that pompous and pregnant-looking Peace dove, which the communists have come to use as their symbol. Picasso is reported to have said: "I have pleased master and critic, with all the changing oddities that have passed through my head. And the less they understood them the more they admired them." But Picasso is now in trouble, and he probably can't figure it out either. What happened was this: he painted a portrait of Stalin - he had never seen Stalin, and we have never seen the portrait - but according to reports he portrayed the Russian dictator as having a walrus moustache, a double chin, a vacant stare, and some sort of hairdo that resembled the halos on ancient works of religious art. This conception of Stalin was published last week in a French magazine; and today the French Communist Party issued a formal communique saying it "categorically disapproves" Picasso's painting. And Picasso said: "That's just too bad; I simply drew what I felt. I strained for a resemblance, and that does not appear to have pleased people." In the American vernacular Mr. Picasso was saying: "I call 'em as I see 'em."

Our editorial conference was further disrupted by an urgent dispatch from Vienna, our colleague Alex Kendrick reporting that a communist newspaper in Budapest has launched a vigorous campaign against "illegible signatures on official documents." It is asserted that many of these signatures were deliberately being written illegibly in order that the signers could disclaim them in the event of trouble. Illegible signatures are a small door left open to escape if the house burns down. We were considering whether any profound conclusions could be drawn from this revelation, when another dispatch from Kendrick, quoting the same Hungarian newspaper, arrived. (He must have turned the page.) This article complained about shortcomings in the Hungarian retail trade. And it discloses that the newspaper's staff has but recently completed a nation-wide survey; and in the entire length and breadth of Hungary these intrepid reporters were unable to find, offered for sale, any single one of the following articles: manicure scissors; frying pans; wash basins; poppy seed grinders; pot covers; nails; or babies' rubber panties. The Hungarian paper asserts indignantly that this state of affairs is scandalous, because man wasn't meant to work for bread alone, but needs things which might once have been considered luxuries, but are now everyday necessities. When President Eisenhower's statement that we can't reduce taxes, is compared to this deplorable state of affairs in Hungary, major issues begin to come into proper perspective.

At this point our editorial conference was about to collapse - we were disposed to accept a recent recommendation from a listener, who suggested that when we ran out of news we should just keep silent, (rather than reporting some item of news to which he objected.) But at this point we were saved by the Associated Press,reporting at some length that the British House of Commons, after well-mannered debate, had refused to grant a cost-of-living increase to cats, stationed in British Post Offices. Many of these cats get about 21 cents a week, maintenance allowance. Cat-fanciers contended that this should be raised. But Prime Minister Churchill's government took the view, that these cats "never had it so good." The Assistant Postmaster General agreed that there is a certain amount of industrial chaos in the Post Office cat world. He took a rather serious view of the cat situation, saying: "These servants of the State, are frequently unreliably capricious in their duty, and liable to prolonged absenteeism." The Assistant Postmaster General conceded that the Post Office cats have experienced a general wage freeze, since the allowances were first introduced in July of 1918.

What with Picasso's portrait of Stalin being unacceptable; Hungarian signatures illegible; and British cats subjected to "imperialist exploitation," the world is sore beset. Tomorrow night, if we can figure it out, we shall try to deal with less sombre subjects.

We were talking a moment ago of Picasso's painting of Stalin, and its repercussions in the Communist world. In Picasso's defense, Amy Lowell once said:"Art is the desire of a man to express himself, to record the reactions of his personality to the world he lives in." Salvador Dali put it more bluntly: "I do not paint a portrait to look like a subject," he said "Rather, the person grows to look like his portrait."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President said again today: there must be no tax cut until we have a balanced budget in sight. He told 150 prominent business leaders in Washington: "We claim that unless we balance the budget, there will never be any lowering of taxes, because we thoroughly believe that an unbalanced budget is the greatest possible spur to a continued cheapening of our money." The President says this does not mean that taxes cannot be "reformed" but revenues must never be lowered.

Senator Taft says the budget can be balanced if we can cut 4-billions from the present rate of federal spending, because this spending is not as much as former President Truman predicted.

And former Defense Secretary Lovett, in his last report, warned the Eisenhower administration not to cut the military budget recommended by Mr. Truman. He said because of the Communist threat we have no choice but to "maintain and improve" our military power.

Civil Defense Director Val Peterson says the President is gravely concerned with the nation's inadequate preparations for protection in case of an atomic bomb attack. Peterson says the President wants a full re-evaluation of the nation's civil defense program and any new facts that may have been uncovered as a result of yesterday's atomic device test.

The House of Representatives today approved the President's request to replace the Federal Security Agency with a new cabinet-level Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

And the Senate Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved the President's nomination of Charles E. Bohlen to be our ambassador to Moscow. The committee voted after Secretary of State Dulles testified for nearly three hours in secret. Mr. Dulles called Bohlen: "uniquely qualified for the job, the best available person we can think of. And he said an FBI report on Bohlen "left no doubt of Mr. Bohlen's loyalty and integrity."

At the United Nations today, American Delegate Gross asked the Russians to prove with deeds Prime Minister Malenkov's recent words about peace. Gross said the political committee's consideration of the problem of disarmament is "one of the clearest testing points" for Moscow's protestations for peace.

The Russians confirmed today their desire to have one of two Indians: Madame Pandit or Sir Benegal Rau to replace Trygvie Lie as secretary general of the U.N. But representatives of the Big Five powers reached no agreement.

The State Department today asked Moscow to punish the Russian Mig pilot who attacked one of our bombers off Kamchatka on Sunday. Our note says we "expect" quick word about this punishment and we want the Russians to be sure it doesn't happen again.

In Great Britain, visiting Marshal Tito watched one British jet fighter ram another during a demonstration put on in his honor. Both pilots were killed. Tito was stunned as the planes crashed in flames, asked that the demonstration be stopped at this point, but other jets in the air continued their activities on schedule.

In Korea our jets followed up a nighttime Superfort attack on enemy troop and supply centers. Chinese Communist troops stabbed at our line at eight points. They were thrown back by American, Dutch and South Korean troops.

Adlai Stevenson ended a five-day tour of Korea and said he was impressed with "the infinite difficulties this cruel war presents."

The Pentagon has added another 252 names to the Korean casualty list; 66 of them killed in action.

The State Department today authorized its information agencies to use Communist material "to expose communist propaganda or refute Communist lies." Recently the Department ordered a flat ban against the use of any Communist material. Now it can be used when it is to our advantage.

About a million and a quarter of the nation's railroad workers today were awarded a four-cents-an-hour wage increase, retroactive to last December first. Twenty-two railroad unions and the nation's carriers had agreed in advance to accept a decision by Arbitrator Paul N. Guthrie, who was appointed by former President Truman. The carriers say this will cost them 120-million dollars a year.

In St. Petersburg the National League and the American Association gave the Boston Braves permission to switch their franchise to Milwaukee, the first shift of a major league franchise since 1903. The present Milwaukee Braves will switch to Toledo.

And here in New York, a jury ruled against entertainers Jane Froman and Gypsy Markoff who sought a total of three and a half million dollars for injuries they suffered in a Pan American Airways plane accident near Lisbon ten years ago. The judge awarded them each approximately 9-thousand dollars, under an international convention limiting liability when no "wilful misconduct" is shown.

That's the news. On the walls of my office there hang pictures of Carl Sandburg, with a statue of Lincoln in the background; a picture of my seven-year-old son Casey; and a little cartoon clipped long ago from some magazine. It shows an unusually pompous-looking radio announcer, and the caption under the cartoon reads: "Stanley R. Bascom's analysis of the news usually heard at this time will not be presented tonight. Mr. Bascom was unable to figure it out himself." That cartoon reflects with considerable fidelity the position of this reporter. We held a long editorial conference, considered doing a piece on the progress of the Eisenhower administration to date - debated another profound piece on the probably successor to Gottwald in Czechoslovakia - discussed an analysis of the investigation into the Voice of America, until reminded that only a few days ago we had said everything if not more than we knew on this subject.

One reason for this editorial dilemma was the fact that we encountered a dispatch from Paris which had to do with the famous Spanish artist Pablo Picasso.

He is the man who painted that pompous and pregnant-looking Peace dove which the Communists have come to use as their symbol. Picasso is reported to have said: "I have pleased master and critic with all the changing oddities that have passed through my head. And the less they understood them the more they admired them." But Picasso is not in trouble, and he probably can't figure it out either. That happened was this: he painted a portrait of Stalin - he had never seen Stalin, and we have never seen the portrait - but according to reports he protrayed the Russian dictator as having a walrus moustache, a double chin, a vacant stare, and some sort of hairdo that resembled the halos on ancient works of religious art. This conception of Stalin was published last week in a French magazine; and today the French Communist Party issued a formal communique saying it "catagorically disapproves" Picasso's painting. And Picasso said: "That's just too bad; I simply drew what I felt. I strained for a resemblance, and that does not appear to have pleased people." In the American vernacular Mr. Picasso was saying: "I call 'em as I see 'em."

Our editorial conference was further disrupted by an urgent dispatch from Vienna, our colleague Alex Kendrick reporting that a communist newspaper in Budapest has launched a vigorous campaign against "illegible signatures on official documents." It is asserted that many of these signatures were deliberately being written illegibly in order that the signers could disclaim them in the event of trouble. Illegible signatures are a small door left open to escape if the house burns down. We were considering whether any profound conclusions could be drawn from this revelation when another dispatch from Kendrick, quoting the same Hungarian newspaper, arrived. He must have turned the page. This article complained about shortcomings in the Hungarian retail trade. And it discloses that the newspaper's staff has but recently completed a nation-wide survey; and in the entire length and breadth of Hungary these intrepid reporters were unable to find offered for sale any single one of the following articles : manicure scissors; frying pans; wash basins; poppy seed grinders; pot covers; nails; or babies' rubber panties.

The Hungarian paper asserts indignantly that this state of affairs is scandalous, because man wasn't meant to work for bread alone but needs things which might once have been considered luxuries, but are now everyday necessities. When President Eisenhower's statement that we can't reduce taxes is compared to this deplorable state of affairs in Hungary, major issues begin to come into proper perspective.

At this point our editorial conference was about to collapse - we were disposed to accept a recent recommendation from a listener who suggested that when we ran out of news we should just keep silent, rather than reporting some item of news to which he objected. But at this point we were saved by the Associated Press, reporting at some length that the British House of Commons, after well-mannered debate, had refused to grant a cost-of-living increase to cats stationed in British Post Offices. Many of these cats get about 21 cents a week maintenance allowance. Cat-fanciers contended that this should be raised. But Prime Minister Churchill's government took the view that these cats "never had it so good." The Assistant Postmaster General agreed that there is a certain amount of industrial chaos in the Post Office cat world. He took a rather serious view of the cat situation saying: "These servants of the State are frequently unreliably capricious in their duty, and liable to prolonged absenteeism." The Assistant Postmaster General conceded that the Post Office cats have experienced a general wage freeze since the allowances were first introduced in July of 1918.

That with Picasso's portrait of Stalin being unacceptable; Hungarian signatures illegible; and British cats subjected to "imperialist exploitation," the world is sore beset. Tomorrow night, if we can figure it out, we shall try to deal with less sombre subjects.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking a moment ago of Picasso's painting of Stalin, and its repercussions in the Communist world. In Picasso's defense, Amy Lowell once said: "Art is the desire of a man to express himself, to record the reactions of his personality to the world he lives in." Salvador Dali put it more bluntly: "I do not paint a portrait to look like a subject," he said "Rather, the person grows to look like his portrait."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday March 19, 1953

This is the news:

The President said today he welcomes Moscow's talk of peaceful intentions--(to the same extent that it is sincere.) He is willing to meet the Russians half way, in any effort toward world peace. We're always ready to co-operate. We will do anything honorable, that promises progress towards peace. But thus far, President Eisenhower has received no proposals of any sort from the Kremlin. AND despite our serious view of the recent Soviet attacks on American and British planes, Mr. Eisenhower sees no new Moscow pattern.. no change of intentions..no departure from the Russian attitude of the past.

At the United Nations, Russian Delegate Zorin said again, that his country wants to avoid a new war..preserve the peace. He said the Soviet Union has repeatedly tried to do this, with proposals to the United Nations. Zorin called American Delegate Gross' questioning of the sincerity of Moscow's intentions "slander." The Soviet delegate offered nothing new.

But in Berlin, some observers described as "SOMEWHAT conciliatory" a note to the western powers, from Soviet Commander Chuikov. He flatly turned down allied protests against the attack on A British BOMBER by Soviet Migs..insisted the British plane had violated Soviet territory. But--the Soviet general also said he considers the incident regrettable..he acknowledges that such things are "undesired"..and he proposes a British-Russian meeting to try to avoid such incidents in the future, particularly because of the present speed of planes.

The President--at his news conference today--made it clear that he does not plan to do anything provocative in world affairs at this time. He said he's cool to the idea--proposed by Republican Senator Knowland--that we try to get the U.N. to brand Russia an aggressor in Korea. And he also told reporters he considers the fighting in Korea a war..not the police action former President Truman called it. Mr. Eisenhower SAID [redacted] that when Americans are called to serve in Korea, and suffer the casualties we have suffered, its a war--(even though not in the sense of an all-out effort.)

That war, and the threat of a new war, calls for a continued defense build-up. And the President indicated today that there is little likeilihood of any major reduction in the military budget proposed by Mr. Truman. The President said: we cannot afford to reduce our combat strength. He hopes we can save some money by cutting administrative costs in the armed forces. But he's faced with some tough decisions. The President feels that no amount of military preparedness can give us real security; because everytime we expand our military machine we know its also going on elsewhere--in the Soviet Union.

While Mr. Eisenhower foresees no big cuts in the defense program, he does not plan any radical increase in our air power or civil defense preperations. He feels civil defense is primarily a local problem; its more important to train people for such work than to construct things..such as bomb shelters. And the President feels there should be much wider understanding in this country of both the power and the limitations of atomic weapons.

Mr. Eisenhower emphasized the difficulties of the nation's financial problem by repeating..for the second time in 24 hours.. his view that a balanced budget must be in sight before we can cut income taxes. As a matter of fact he wants Congress to find some way to maintain the federal revenue..if the Congress should decide to permit the excess profits tax law to expire.

At his news conference the President answered a number of questions: He intends to protect the civil service system, sees no reason why any great number of government workers should worry about their jobs. He is primarily interested in having people who think the way he and his cabinet members think in the policy-making posts. The President also said he can see no possible good in a Congressional investigation of possible communism in the churches (as originally proposed by Representative Velde.) Mr. Eisenhower believes Communism is the last thing in the world that our churches could be teaching, preaching or tolerating. And despite Senator Mc Carthy's criticism that the appointment of Charles E. Bohlen to be ambassador to Russia is a mistake, Mr. Eisenhower said: Bohlen is thoroughly trained in the state department...he is as familiar with the Soviet Union as any outsider.. he was chosen strictly on merit.

Later reporters asked Senator Mc Carthy about this and he SAID [redacted] he is certain that if the President saw an F.B.I. summary of the file on Bohlen he would reject Bohlen.

And when reporters asked Representative Reed of New York what he thinks of the President's repeated demands for a balanced budget before any income taxes are cut, they found Reed bitter. He said: "How long will this Republic function if pledges made by candidates for office are not carried out? " He said every candidate promised, if elected, a tax reduction. A denial of this pledge is "unfair, dishonest and gaining office under false pretenses." Representative Reed says he is abandoning plans to go over the heads of House leaders to force action on his bill calling for a ten per cent income tax cut in June.

The President has said he didn't promise a tax cut in the campaign.. merely set that as a goal. And Senator Taft said today: the Republicans promised only to reduce taxes as quickly as they can balance the budget.

The Mc Carthy committee investigating the Voice of America was told today that there has been "a terrible pattern of softness" in the Voice's war against Communism. Gerald Dooher, acting chief of the service to the Near East, Africa and Asia, said this comes from "a lack of dedication to the cold war struggle." He also said that former Ambassador to India Chester Bowles urged the Voice to "refrain from undue emphasis on anti-Communist propaganda" to India." There was no word from Mr. Bowles.

In Washington tonight, President George N. Shuster of New York's Hunter College said the time has come for the universities to investigate Senator Mc Carthy. He told A National Civil Liberties Clearing House meeting:" I would remind you that the university has always been a forum in the presence of which Lords of the Passing hour are subjected to scrutiny. "No doubt" he continued," the time has come to ask on what meat this our Ceaser has fed, and to review his activities with the utmost objectivity, calm and chilly resolution so that an authoritative report can be made to the people." Senator Mc Carthy, when informed of President Shuster's remarks, told reporters: "Everey Communist and left-winger in the country has been investigating me. This gentlemen is welcome to join the pack if he wants to."

In the Senate, Independent Wayne Morse of Oregon has asked permission to switch his seat from the first row on the Republican side to the last row on the Democratic side. The former Republican senator says he made the request for "personal reasons."

In New London, Connecticut, 23 men who had been sealed up in a submarine for two months emerged today. The Navy says it has learned that "it is feasable" for men to stay down in an atomic submarine for two months.

In Korea today, the Marines stopped two Chinese attacks near Panmunjom. And General Mark Clark, flew to Indo-China where he told French commanders: "Our fight is against Communism in Korea as yours is in Indo-China."

The Moscow radio today instructed all Russian authors to protray Josef Stalin in their books as "the greatest genius of all time." And in Czechoslovakia, President Clement Gottwald was buried as Premier ZAH-PO-TOT-SKI pledged his country's loyalty to Russia, and said the Czechs join Russia's desire for peace in the world. Apparently Zapotocky has been chosen to replace Gottwald..but there's been no official announcement.

In London, Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia is winding up his talks with British government leaders. He's reported to have promised to take a more active political and military part in European defense.

Edward R. Murrow: March 19, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The Lower House of the German Parliament has voted to ratify the European Defense Treaty, which provides among other things for German units in a European Army. Secretary of State Dulles regards this as "a significant step toward European unity." There is now increasing likelihood that the European Defense community will become a reality."

As a matter of fact this action by one House of the German Parliament has about the same practical significance as the passage of a law by our House of Representatives. Complete ratification of this treaty involves about the same process as it would here. The Upper House of the German Parliament will not consider it for a couple of weeks. There is no guarantee that that body will ratify it. The question may finally go to the German Supreme Court. The German Social Democrats will do everything they can to delay the whole process until after the elections in September. Even if everything goes smoothly, German ratification will not be completed until late Spring. And even then the whole matter can be held up by reluctance in France. Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn tonight that even the most optimistic observers there will be satisfied if the whole deal for a European Army is completed by the end of this year. And it is not expected that the German contribution to the European Army will exist in full combat strength before the beginning of 1956. West German Chancellor Adenauer is determined to complete the ratification by Germany in a straightforward fashion as quickly as possible. But this action by the Lower House of the German Parliament creates no divisions, constructs no barracks, and adds nothing to the total strength of the Western Defense of Europe.

The French reservations must still be dealt with, and they may produce further delays.

Senator Wiley, the Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said tonight that he wished to congratulate Chancellor Adenauer and the German people on "this splendid demonstration of farsighted leadership." The action is indeed encouraging, but the balance is delicate, and the possibilities for delay considerable. And any rejoicing over this initial act would certainly be premature.

Perhaps because we are a young nation, we are also at times impetuous. IMPATIENT.

We are apt to forget, as in the case of the Germans, that one problem has to be resolved before the next is taken on. It's true, as Seneca said, that "Every delay is too long to one who is in a hurry." But Confucius once warned:"Want of patience can often confound great plans."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President said today he welcomes Moscow's talk of peaceful intentions, to the same extent that it is sincere. He is willing to meet the Russians half way in any effort toward world peace. We're always ready to cooperate. We will do anything honorable that promises progress towards peace. But thus far, President Eisenhower has received no proposals of any sort from the Kremlin. And despite our serious view of the recent Soviet attacks on American and British planes, Mr. Eisenhower sees no new Moscow pattern, no change of intentions, no departure from the Russian attitude of the past.

At the United Nations, Russian Delegate Zorin said again that his country wants to avoid a new war, preserve the peace. He said the Soviet Union has repeatedly tried to do this with proposals to the United Nations. Zorin called American Delegate Gross's questioning of the sincerity of Moscow's intentions "slander." The Soviet delegate offered nothing new.

But in Berlin, some observers described as "some conciliatory" a note to the western powers from Soviet Commander Chuikov. He flatly turned down allied protests against the attack on a British bomber by Soviet Migs, insisted the British plane had violated Soviet territory. But, the Soviet general also said he considers the incident regrettable, he acknowledges that such things are "undesired" and he proposes a British-Russian meeting to try to avoid such incidents in the future, particularly because of the present speed of planes.

The President, at his news conference today, made it clear that he does not plan to do anything provocative in world affairs at this time. He said he's cool to the idea proposed by Republican Senator Knowland, that we try to get the U.N. to brand Russia an aggressor in Korea. And he also told reporters he considers the fighting in Korea a war, not the "police action" former President Truman called it. Mr. Eisenhower said that when Americans are called to serve in Korea, and suffer the casualties we have suffered, its a war, even though not in the sense of an all-out effort.

That war, and the threat of a new war, calls for a continued defense build-up. And the President indicated today that there is little likelihood of any major reduction in the military budget proposed by Mr. Truman. The President said: we cannot afford to reduce our combat strength. He hopes we can save some money by cutting administrative costs in the armed forces. But he's faced with some tough decisions. The President feels that no amount of military preparedness can give us real security; because everytime we expand our military machine we know its also going on elsewhere (in the Soviet Union.)

While Mr. Eisenhower foresees no big cuts in the defense program, he does not plan any radical increase in our air power or civil defense preparations. He feels civil defense is primarily a local problem; its more important to train people for such work than to construct things, such as bomb shelters. And the President feels there should be much wider understanding in this country of both the power and the limitations of atomic weapons.

Mr. Eisenhower emphasized the difficulties of the nation's financial problem by repeating, for the second time in 24 hours, his view that a balanced budget must be in sight before we can cut income taxes. As a matter of fact, he wants Congress to find some way to maintain the federal revenue, if the Congress should decide to permit the excess profits tax law to expire.

At his news conference the President answered a number of questions: He intends to protect the civil service system, sees no reason why any great number of government workers should worry about their jobs. He is primarily interested in having people who think the way he and his cabinet members think in the policy-making posts. The President also said he can see no possible good in a Congressional investigation of possible communism in the churches (as originally proposed by Representative Velde.) Mr. Eisenhower believes Communism is the last thing in the world that our churches could be teaching, preaching or tolerating. And despite Senator McCarthy's criticism that the appointment of Charles E. Bohlen to be ambassador to Russia is a mistake, Mr. Eisenhower said: Bohlen is thoroughly trained in the state department. He is as familiar with the Soviet Union as any outsider, he was chosen strictly on merit.

Later reporters asked Senator McCarthy about this and he said he is certain that if the President saw an FBI summary of the file on Bohlen, he would reject Bohlen.

And when reporters asked Representative Reed of New York what he thinks of the President's repeated demands for a balanced budget before any income taxes are cut, they found Reed bitter. He said: "How long will this Republic function if pledges made by candidates for office are not carried out?" He said every candidate promised, if elected, a tax reduction. A denial of this pledge is "unfair, dishonest and gaining office under false pretenses." Representative Reed says he is abandoning plans to go over the heads of House leaders to force action on his bill calling for a ten per cent income tax cut in June.

The President has said he didn't promise a tax cut in the campaign, merely set that as a goal. And Senator Taft said today: the Republicans promised only to reduce taxes as quickly as they can balance the budget.

The McCarthy committee investigating the Voice of America was told today that there has been "a terrible pattern of softness" in the Voice's war against Communism. Gerald Dooher, acting chief of the service to the Near East, Africa and Asia, said this comes from "a lack of dedication to the cold war struggle." He also said that former Ambassador to India Chester Bowles urged the Voice to "refrain from undue emphasis on anti-Communist propaganda" to India." There was no word from Mr. Bowles.

In Washington tonight, President George N. Shuster of New York's Hunter College said the time has come for the universities to investigate Senator McCarthy. He told a National Civil Liberties Clearing House meeting: "I would remind you that the university has always been a forum in the presence of which Lords of the Passing hour are subjected to scrutiny. "No doubt" he continued, "the time has come to ask on what meat this our Ceaser has fed, and to review his activities with the utmost objectivity, calm and chilly resolution so that an authoritative report can be made to the people." Senator McCarthy, when informed of President Shuster's remarks, told reporters: "Every Communist and left-winger in the country has been investigating me. This gentlemen is welcome to join the pack if he wants to."

In the Senate, Independent Wayne Morse of Oregon has asked permission to switch his seat from the first row on the Republican side to the last row on the Democratic side. The former Republican Senator says he made the request for "personal reasons."

In New London, Connecticut, 23 men who had been sealed up in a submarine for two months emerged today. The Navy says it has learned that "it is feasable for men to stay down in an atomic submarine for two months.

In Korea today, the Marines stopped two Chinese attacks near Panmunjom. And General Mark Clark, flew to Indo-China where he told French commanders: "Our fight is against Communism in Korea as yours is in Indo-China."

The Moscow radio today instructed all Russian authors to portray Josef Stalin in their books as "the greatest genius of all time." And in Czechoslovakia, President Clement Gottwald was buried as Premier Zapototski pledged his country's loyalty to Russia and said the Czechs join Russia's desire for peace in the world. Apparently Zapototski has been chosen to replace Gottwald, but there's been no official announcement.

In London, Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia is winding up his talks with British government leaders. He's reported to have promised to take a more active political and military part in European defense.

The Lower House of the German Parliament has voted to ratify the European Defense Treaty, which provides among other things for German units in a European Army. Secretary of State Dulles regards this as "a significant step toward European unity." There is now increasing likelihood that the European Defense community will become a reality."

As a matter of fact this action by one House of the German Parliament has about the same practical significance as the passage of a law by our House of Representatives. Complete ratification of this treaty involves about the same process as it would here. The Upper House of the German Parliament will not consider it for a couple of weeks. There is no guarantee that that body will ratify it. The question may finally go to the German Supreme Court. The German Social Democrats will be everything they can to delay the whole process until after the elections in September. Even if everything goes smoothly, German ratification will not be completed until late Spring. And even then the whole matter can be held up by reluctance in France. Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn tonight that even the most optimistic observers there will be satisfied if the whole deal for a European Army is completed by the end of this year. And it is not expected that the German contribution to the European Army will exist in full combat strength before the beginning of 1956. West German Chancellor Adenauer is determined to complete the ratification by Germany in a straightforward fashion as quickly as possible. But this action by the Lower House of the German Parliament creates no divisions, constructs no barracks, and adds nothing to the total strength of the Western Defense of Europe.

The French reservations must still be dealt with, and they may produce further delays.

Senator Wiley, the Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said tonight that he wished to congratulate Chancellor Adenauer and the German people on "this splendid demonstration of farsnighted leadership." The action is indeed encouraging, but the balance is delicate, and the possibilities for delay considerable. And any rejoicing over this initial act would certainly be premature.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Perhaps because we are a young nation, we are also at times impetuous and impatient. We are apt to forget, as in the case of the Germans, that one problem has to be resolved before the next is taken on. It's true, as Seneca said, that "Every delay is too long to one who is in a hurry." But Confucius once warned: "Want of patience can often confound great plans."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, March 20, 1953.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles insists there is nothing in an F.B.I. report on Charles Bohlen to indicate that he is a security or loyalty risk. Two Senators disagree. Mr. Bohlen has been nominated to be ambassador to Moscow..and this nomination has been approved unanimously by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Today, Democratic Senator McCarran of Nevada told the Senate: Mr. Dulles cleared Mr. Bohlen even though Scott McLeod, the state department security officer, objected to Bohlen. The Senator says: McLeod refused to clear Bohlen on the basis of an F.B.I. field report on Bohlen. He says THAT in November the people demanded that the State Department be cleaned out..and this is not being done.

Secretary Dulles, at a news conference after the McCarran speech, denied that he has HAD any differences of opinion with Mcleod, his security officer. He says they are working in harmony. He will not recommend the withdrawal of the Bohlen nomination. He refuses to agree to Senator McCarran's request that the whole F.B.I. file on Bohlen be turned over to the Senate. He acknowledges that there is some "derogatory information" in this file..its unsubstaniated rumour. He has informed the President about this. The Secretary feels that opening any file to the Senate would utterly destroy the whole F.B.I. process of getting information from all possible sources.

After the Dulles news conference, Senator Mc Carran said he is certain that Security Director McLeod told Secretary Dulles he could not approve the ~~Dulles~~ Bohlen nomination.

Mr. McCelod is not available.

Senator Mc Carthy says "in view of all the information we have the Dulles harmony statement appears to be untrue."

Senator Taft says that when Secretary Dulles testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he gave the Senators the "full story of what was in the Bohlen file, good and bad. Mr. Dulles concluded there was no basis whatsoever for adverse action." Taft expects the full Senate to take up the nomination on Monday--and approve it by a wide margin.

Defense Secretary Wilson held his first news conference today. He said the nation has a "pretty good defense program." But he doesn't think we are fully prepared. He wishes we had better preparations. But this doesn't mean we are in "a woeful or pitiful condition." Mr. Wilson says he believes we can cut themilitary budget without weakening our combat strength. He says that if its possible..he would like to lower the number of men called up in the draft. And he hopes to reduce the over-all total of men in the armed forces. The Secretary has asked the Joint Chiefs of Staff to tell him what would happen if he ordered a four and a half billion dollar cut in the military budget. He opposes any pay raise for armed forces personnel. He has no personal plans for ending the Korean war.

Mr. Wilson refused comment on a charge by Republican Seneator Flanders of Vermont that the Air Force made a "false report" in its account of what one of our bombers was doing off Siberia when it was attacked last Sunday. The Air force SAYS the plane was on a routine weather reconnaissance flight, 25 miles off Kamchatka, when a Russian Mig opened fire. Senator Flanders says this is "preposterous".. the plane was not there on weather business, although it may have been on a "useful" mission. The Senator accuses the air force of trying to influence public opinion by making the incident into an act of aggression. The Air Force says it has nothing to add to its original announcement.

Senator Mc Carthy said tonight that the government is taking legal steps to reclaim 14 suprlus American ships that have carried cargoes behind the Iron Crutain. The Senator says these ships, now owned by Greeks, have been found "in default" by our Maritime Commission. They have failed to "conform with seaworthy requirements outlined in their purchase contracts."

Senator Mc Carthy's recent investigation of construction contracts for two Voice of America radio transmitters today resulted in an order for [redacted] cancellation [redacted] Dr. Johnson, the new head of the State Department's information division, says he has cancelled the [redacted] to eliminate "substantial maintenance costs." He has not made a final decision on whether the transmitters will eventually be built..

Democratic Senator Eberharter of Pennsylvania said today that he would not be surprised if Congress should decide to investigate radio commentators, newspaper columnists and newspaper editors who do not agree with the practises of Congressional committees. [redacted] a long-time critic of the House un-American activities committee, says "the sky is the limit" for [redacted] congressional investigations.

Joseph Curran, the president of the C.I.O. maritime union, told a House committee today: the Taft-Hartley law threatens to open the way for subversives and criminals to man the ships of our merchant marine. He says that because the law forbids the closed shop, it has destroyed the maritime union's hiring hall system.. and opened a way for enemies of the country to get ship jobs.

Brigadier General Vincent, head of the army's guided missiles research program, said today that we now have in production rockets capable of carrying atomic war heads. The General said that within a few weeks guided missilies will go to army troop units as another weapon of the ground forces. He does not know if they'll be sent to Korea.

In Korea today steady rains kept the ground fighting to a minimum. In the only major air operation of the day, Thunderjets destroyed an enemy supply convoy. This was the one thousandth day of the war in Korea.

Admiral William Blandy, who commanded the FIRST atomic TESTS in the Pacific, said today he favors the use of tactical atomic bombs.. atomic artillery and the bombing of Manchurian bases to end what he calls the "Un-american stalemate " in Korea.

The Moscow radio says Premier Malenkov has given up his job as first secretary of the (COMMUNIST) Party's central committee. This was done at his own request. He remains premier and first secretary of the presidum of the party's central committee..(that's the highest policy making group in all the Soviet Union.)

In London, Marshal Tito's foreign secretary told reporters: the Soviet satellites have been shaken by Stalin's death. He suggests they follow Yugoslavia's example, and get out from under Moscow's control. Tito himself told reporters in London he is very satisfied with the result of his visit to Great Britain..said it was better than he hoped for. And the British say they're going to build a million dollars worth of helicopters for Yugoslavia...its an "off shore" order from the American air force in Europe.

Iran has rejected the latest British plan to settle the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute. But Premier Mossadegh says he hopes it will be possible to restore diplomatic relations with Britain.

Turkey has experienced more earthquakes.. with rain, snow and bitter cold. Istanbul reports, say more than a thousand persons have DIED IN NORTHWEST TURKEY.

Edward R. Murrow: March 20, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

During the last few days the Russian propaganda piano has sounded a few new notes. / They may or may not be significant, but it is perhaps worthwhile to sort them out. # Asian diplomats in touch with the Russians at the U.N. say that Vishinsky will come back from Moscow with "some interesting new ideas," perhaps even a new Korean peace proposal. / In the last few days the speeches of the Russians have been more restrained, and the Russian representatives have been more cordial.

Another note on the piano is an announcement from London that the Russians have agreed to arrange for the release of nine British civilians and an Irish missionary from prison camps in North Korea.

The other day General Chuikov, the Soviet Commander in Germany, expressed "regret" over the death of seven British fliers shot down by Soviet fighters over Germany. // Berlin's Mayor Ernst Reuter, after a session with President Eisenhower today, said they were both "amazed" by the statement of the Russian commander. Reuter said that's the first time the Russians have admitted regret about anything. What it means will have to be seen.

The Russians appear to be particularly solicitous about their relations with the British; but they appear also engaged in trying to ease the tension with the rest of the free world. Earlier this week the Russian commander in Eastern Germany chose to repay a courtesy visit made by our High Commissioner, Dr. Conant, last month. On his way to Conant's office, he passed a Russian check point, where the communist police were clearing truck traffic at a snail's pace, with hundreds of vehicles piled up. General Chuikov gave an order and the road traffic has been moving briskly in both directions ever since. At the same time the Russian General ordered that a vital lock, in Berlin's canal system, would re-open for business on March 25th. This lock, which handles most of the coal shipments to Berlin, had been closed -(ostensibly for repairs)- since last August. The re-opening of this canal will be a definite help to West Berlin.

These new notes of Russian policy are isolated and perhaps unimportant. They do not add up to even a temporary tactical change in Russian policy; but they could. We may know more about that when Mr. Vishinsky returns from Moscow next week. We can only wait. Some may ponder the advice given today by Secretary of Defense, Charles Wilson, who said: "It might be a good thing for each of us to keep ourselves in the condition where if we did have to meet our Maker tomorrow morning, we could do it reasonable well. But," said Mr. Wilson, "I wouldn't worry too much about it."

The Russians are old hands at promoting propaganda. And much of what they do in this field is based on a conclusion Cicero once reached and expressed this way:"Who is there, if he shoots at a mark all day long, will not occasionally hit the white ?" In assessing propaganda, we would do well to keep in mind this line from Aesop's Fables:"How can you pretend to foretell the affairs of others when you cannot foresee your own."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 20, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles insists there is nothing in an F.B.I. report on Charles Bohlen to indicate that he is a security or loyalty risk. Two Senators disagree. Mr. Bohlen has been nominated to be ambassador to Moscow, and this nomination has been approved unanimously by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Today, Democratic Senator McCarran of Nevada told the Senate: Mr. Dulles cleared Mr. Bohlen even though Scott McLeod, the state department security officer objected to Bohlen. The Senator says: McLeod refused to clear Bohlen on the basis of an F.B.I. field report on Bohlen. He says that in November the people demanded that the State Department be cleaned out, and this is not being done.

Secretary Dulles, at a news conference after the McCarran speech, denied that he has had any difference of opinion with McLeod, his security officer. He says they are working in harmony. He will not recommend the withdrawal of the Bohlen nomination. He refuses to agree to Senator McCarran's request that the whole F.B.I. file on Bohlen be turned over to the Senate. He acknowledges that there is some "derogatory information" in this file, its unsubstantiated rumor. He has informed the President about this. The Secretary feels that opening any file to the Senate would utterly destroy the whole F.B.I. process of getting information, from all possible sources.

After the Dulles news conference, Senator McCarran said he is certain that Security Director McLeod told Secretary Dulles he could not approve the Bohlen nomination.

Mr. McCleod is not available.

Senator McCarthy says "in view of all the information we have, the Dulles harmony statement appears to be untrue."

Senator Taft says that when Secretary Dulles testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he gave the Senators the "full story of what was in the Bohlen file, good and bad. Mr. Dulles concluded there was no basis whatsoever for adverse action." Taft expects the full Senate to take up the nomination on Monday, and approve it by a wide margin.

Defense Secretary Wilson held his first news conference today. He said the nation has a "pretty good defense program." But he doesn't think we are fully prepared. He wishes we had better preparations. But this doesn't mean we are in "a woeful or pitiful condition." Mr. Wilson says he believes we can cut the military budget without weakening our combat strength. He says that if its possible, he would like to lower the number of men called up in the draft. And he hopes to reduce the over-all total of men in the armed forces. The Secretary has asked the Joint Chiefs of Staff to tell him what would happen if he ordered a four and a half billion dollar cut in the military budget. He opposes any pay raise for armed forces personnel. He has no personal plans for ending the Korean war.

Mr. Wilson refused comment on a charge by Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont that the Air Force made a "false report" in its account of what one of our bombers was doing off Siberia when it was attacked last Sunday. The Air Force says the plane was on a routine weather reconnaissance flight, 25 miles off Kamchatka, when a Russian Mig opened fire. Senator Flanders says this is "preposterous" the plane was not there on weather business, although it may have been on a "useful" mission. The Senator accuses the air force of trying to influence public opinion by making the incident into an act of aggression. The Air Force says it has nothing to add to its original announcement.

Senator McCarthy said tonight that the government is taking legal steps to reclaim 14 surplus American ships that have carried cargoes behind the Iron Curtain. The Senator says these ships, now owned by Greeks, have been found "in default" by our Maritime Commission. They have failed to "conform with seaworthy requirements outlined in their purchase contracts."

Senator McCarthy's recent investigation of construction contracts for two Voice of America radio transmitters today resulted in an order for their cancallation. Dr. Johnson, the new head of the State Department's information division, says he has cancelled them to eliminate "substantial maintenance costs." He has not made a final decision on whether the transmitters will eventually be built.

Democratic Senator Eberharter of Pennsylvania said today that he would not be surprised if Congress should decide to investigate radio commentators, newspaper columnists and newspaper editors who do not agree with the practices of Congressional committees. Eberharter, a long-time critic of the House un-American activities committee, says "the sky is the limit" for congressional investigations.

Joseph Curran, the president of the C.I.O. maritime union, told a House committee today: the Taft-Hartley law threatens to open the way for subversives and criminals to man the ships of our merchant marine. He says that because the law forbids the closed shop, it has destroyed the maritime union's hiring hall system, and opened a way for enemies of the country to get ship jobs.

Brigadier General Vincent, head of the army's guided missiles research program, said today that we now have in production rockets capable of carrying atomic war heads. The General said that within a few weeks guided missiles will go to army troop units as another weapon of the ground forces. He does not know if they'll be sent to Korea.

In Korea today steady rains kept the ground fighting to a minimum. In the only major air operation of the day, Thunderjets destroyed an enemy supply convoy. This was the one thousandth day of the war in Korea.

Admiral William Blandy, who commanded the first atomic tests in the Pacific, said today he favors the use of tactical atomic bombs, atomic artillery and the bombing of Manchurian bases to end what he calls the "Un-American stalemate" in Korea.

The Moscow radio says Premier Malenkov has given up his job as first secretary of the Communist Party's central committee. This was done at his own request. He remains premier and first secretary of the presidum of the party's central committee (that's the highest policy making group in all the Soviet Union."

In London, Marshal Tito's foreign secretary told reporters: the Soviet satellites have been shaken by Stalin's death. He suggests they follow Yugoslavia's example and get out from under Moscow's control. Tito himself told reporters in London he is very satisfied with the result of his visit to Great Britain, said it was better than he hoped for. And the British say they're going to build a million dollars worth of helicopters for Yugoslavia, its an "off shore" order from the American air force in Europe.

Iran has rejected the latest British plan to settle the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute, but Premier Mossadegh says he hopes it will be possible to restore diplomatic relations with Britain.

Turkey has experienced more earthquakes, with rain, snow and bitter cold. Istanbul reports say more than a thousand persons have died in Northwest Turkey.

During the last few days the Russian propaganda piano has sounded a few new notes. They may or may not be significant, but it is perhaps worthwhile to sort them out. Asian diplomats in touch with the Russians at the U.N. say that Vishinsky will come back from Moscow with "some interesting new ideas," perhaps even a new Korean peace proposal. In the last few days the speeches of the Russians have been more restrained, and the Russian representatives have been more cordial.

Another note on the piano is an announcement from London that the Russians have agreed to arrange for the release of nine British civilians and an Irish missionary from prison camps in North Korea.

The other day General Chuikov, the Soviet Commander in Germany, expressed "regret" over the death of seven British fliers shot down by Soviet fighters over Germany. Berlin's Mayor Ernst Reuter, after a session with President Eisenhower today, said they were both "amazed" by the statement of the Russian commander. Reuter said that's the first time the Russians have admitted regret about anything. What it means will have to be seen.

The Russians appear to be particularly solicitous about their relations with the British; but the appear also engaged in trying to ease the tension with the rest of the free world. Earlier this week the Russian commander in Eastern Germany chose to repay a courtesy visit made by our High Commissioner, Dr. Conant, last month. On his way to Conant's office he passed a Russian check point, where the communist police were clearing truck traffic at a snail's pace, with hundreds of vehicles piled up. General Chuikov gave an order and the road traffic has been moving briskly in both directions ever since. At the same time the Russian General ordered that a vital lock in Berlin's canal system would re-open for business on March 25th. This lock, which handles most of the coal shipments to Berlin, had been closed (ostensibly for repairs) since last August. The re-opening of this canal will be a definite help to West Berlin.

These new notes of Russian policy are isolated and perhaps unimportant. They do not add up to even a temporary tactical change in Russian policy; but they could. (We may know more about that when Mr. Vishinsky returns from Moscow next week. We can only wait.) Some may ponder the advice given today by Secretary of Defense, Charles Wilson, who said: "It might be a good thing for each of us to keep ourselves in the condition where if we did have to meet our Maker tomorrow morning, we could do it reasonably well. But," said Mr. Wilson, "I wouldn't worry too much about it."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Russians are old hands at promoting propaganda. And much of what they do in this field is based on a conclusion Cicero once reached and expressed this way: "Who is there, if he shoots at a mark all day long, will not occasionally hit the white?" In assessing propaganda, we would do well to keep in mind this line from Aesop's Fables: "How can you pretend to foretell the affairs of others when you cannot foresee your own."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday
3/23/53

This is the news:

Chinese Communists have started their biggest Korean attack in five months. It started at 9 p.m. Korean time and continued through the night. An estimated 35-hundred enemy troops struck at allied positions on three hills on the western front: Old Baldy..T-Bone and Porkchop Hills. The enemy sent screaming troops into our lines after a heavy artillery and mortar barrage. An American division spokesman says, at last report, that "everything is under control." There is no indication yet that the enemy intends more than a limited offensive.

Here in Washington today, Defense Secretary Wilson ordered all of the military services to scale-down their manpower needs. Mr. Wilson says the future needs of the services must be based "on the current situation rather than on full mobilization or war conditions." He says this is an unprecedented situation which is neither peace nor war, but something in between." And he adds:"This state of partial mobilization may last for a considerable time."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has decided to meet again tomorrow to consider the nomination of Charles Bohlen to be ambassador to Russia. The committee ALREADY has [redacted] unanimously approved the nomination.

17

But as the result of a four-hour Senate debate today, it will consider whether it wants one or two of its members to examine the full F.B.I. file on Mr. Bohlen. Chairman Wiley opened the debate by telling his colleagues that Attorney General Brownell, has joined Secretary of State Dulles, in clearing Mr. Bohlen from a security standpoint. [redacted] Senator Wiley says the opposition to Bohlen seems to be based mainly on the fact that he served in the State Department under the Roosevelt and Truman administrations. He pointed out that both President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles could be attacked for the same reason. and that this reasoning would bar all present career officers in the department from future service. Senator Mc Carthy, the leader in today's debate attacking the nomination, asked Mr. Bohlen to take a lie detector test. Senator Taft said F.B.I. Chief Hoover is opposed to such tests. Mc Carthy said that is incorrect. And Mc Carthy told his colleagues he realized Bohlen's nomination would eventually be confirmed--as he put it--"by Truman Democrats and Republicans who will hold their noses and vote yes." He insisted that some of the charges in the F.B.I. file on Bohlen are of such a nature "that we cannot discuss it before the Senate without violating security." Democratic Senator Gillette..one of the few Democrats to participate in today's debate..said that one of the "derogatory" remarks about Bohlen in this file came from a man who said he possesses a sixth sense. "This man,"said the Senator," says he can look at a man and determine if there is something immoral in his make-up. This man said he looked at Bohlen and said Bohlen had in the back of his mind such tendencies toward immorality as make him unfit."/Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont [redacted] asked Senator Mc Carthy to give the Administration a chance and put the responsibility for the Bohlen appointment on them. ADMINISTRATION. /Mc Carthy said he thinks the President is doing an excellent job..but when the President makes what McCarthy thinks is a bad nomination then McCarthy will oppose it. The Senator suggested that Mr. Dulles be re-called by the Foreign Relations Committee to testify on Bohlen--under oath. /Senator Taft called this "a ridiculous suggestion"..said he believes Dulles whether or not he testifies under oath. /Senator Wiley said any further investigation of Bohlen is a challenge to the secretary of state, the attorney general and, in the last analysis, the President. And from Republican Senator Tobey: "Let's change the old song from I'M ALWAYS CHASING RAINBOWS" to "I'M ALWAYS CHASING RUMORS." "That", he said, "applies to the Senate of the United States today.

~~[redacted] President at the [redacted] Monday [redacted] meeting Mr. Eisenhower holds [redacted] congressional leaders, say the President is [redacted] firm on the Bohlen nomination.~~

At A White House meeting TODAY, Republican leaders decided that they will favor a law extending rent controls from the end of April to the first of October. This will give the state's time to take any action they want to, on rent controls. The White House conference also decided to allow the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to expire at the end of June, 1954..instead of trying to kill it sooner. Some congressmen favored ending the R.F.C. this year. The Corporation has assets of more than one billion dollars..including facilities for making synthetic rubber, tin and manila hemp. It also holds many loans and mortgages. Some congressmen hope that the sale of the R.F.C. assets will help balance the budget..because the returns from such sales go into the federal treasury.

18

~~The President also made it known today that he intends to get rid of any federal workers who are incompetent, dishonest or disloyal. He says there are only a few such people in government service today. And he insists there must be no endangering of the legitimate rights of the past.~~

~~The President received representatives of the American Zionist Council, and their leader, Louis Lipsky, says Mr. Eisenhower promised to use "his best offices" to help achieve peace between Israel and Egypt.~~

The White House decided not to try to tell Congress what form legislation should take giving the states the right to offshore oil lands. And Texas and Louisiana congressmen have abandoned, temporarily, their fight for royalties from the sale of oil from the outer belt of the continental shelf. They now want a bill giving the states rights only to the "historic boundaries"..ranging from three to 12 and a half miles.

The Department of Agriculture today offered to buy "quantities" of beef..to help bolster dropping cattle prices. This would be the first time the department has bought beef since the drought days of the 1930's..

The beef purchased by the government would be distributed to the school lunch program and other eligible outlets.

At the United Nations today, the delegate from Czechoslovakia accused the United States of promoting subversion and espionage in Communist countries. American Ambassador Lodge said the most glaring subversion in modern times occurred in 1948 when the Communists took over the Democratic state of Czechoslovakia. Lodge said that at that time the Kremlin sent Valerian Zorin and six of their generals, to oraganize the job. Zorin is now the Soviet delegate to the U.N.

The Moscow radio went back to its old line today. Saturday night Moscow made news when it acknowledged that the United States and Great Britain helped Russia win the last war. That seemed to fit the "peace" talk from the Kremlin. But tonight, in a broadcast to west Germany, Moscow says: European statesmen who support a Europen army are guilty of national treason... West Germany's Chancellor Adeneur is selling his people the American lie that west Germany is threatened from the east.

The Moscow radio tonight also rejected an American protest that Russian Migs fired on one of our weather reconnaissance Bombers off Kamchatka a week ago yesterday. Moscow says our planes opened fire..our plane was spying..and violated Soviet territory.

Mr. Bernard Baruch made a powerful attempt this afternoon to try to persuade the Senate Banking Committee to recommend "stand-by controls." He contended that we should take the elementary precaution of writing into law now what we know would have to be done in the event of a major war. What Mr. Baruch wants is a law providing for the control of prices, wages, rent, rationing, credit-- in short, the whole system of controls that would be needed if another war comes. This law would simply be there on the books ready for immediate use. Mr. Baruch told the Senators that if the big smash comes they will bitterly rue this tragic, needless neglect. He said, "to wait is to die." If we neglect this vital measure of defense, we will be increasing the risk of war; if it comes cities may be all but obliterated, and who knows where the Congress may be." The law proposed by Mr. Baruch would literally freeze the whole economy the moment war began. President Eisenhower has not asked for continuation of controls or for stand-by authority after present law expires in a couple of months. But he does want to retain the power to control rents in critical areas and the power to allocate scarce materials.

Mr. Baruch contended that if Congress waits until the emergency actually exists, our mobilization will be needlessly slowed, which means lengthening the struggle for victory and dooming some to lose their lives - needlessly. To wait is also to make certain there will be some degree of cruel inflation, - again needlessly." He wants to narrow the time-lag required for full mobilization so that no enemy could delude himself into thinking he could overwhelm us with a surprise blitz attack." When Mr, Baruch was asked how he felt about choosing between a balanced budget and spending of more money for planes, ammunition, and the other hardward of war, he replied: "We can afford to do what Russia makes us afford."

Opponents of that stand-by control legislation argue that if the threat of a general freeze of our economy should be written into law, both business men and labor leaders would try to keep both prices and wages as high as possible in order that neither could be frozen at a low level. It is also claimed that industry would be reluctant to make long range commitments or to cut prices because they might get caught in the freeze. Mr. Baruch's answer to these arguments was "that the threat of controls will always hang over our heads as long as the threat of war hangs over our heads". He doesn't think that the threat of controls would interfere with any business ventures.

The drafting of legislation, particularly of laws as complex, as important as this one,would be difficult if not impossible if the debate were to be punctuated by falling bombs.

Controls, or the threat of controls, have never been popular in this country, but neither has war. It seems to this reporter that what Mr. Baruch is proposing is stand-by, emergency legislation, which would go a long way toward providing not only for speedy mobilization, but also for the greatest possible equality of sacrifice, if war should come. There wouldn't be any delay in drafting bodies. Mr. Baruch would, in effect, draft a whole nation. It seems to me that he did not over-stress the importance of the legislation. What he is proposing is that we agree, in advance, on the economic groundrules that shall apply in the event war comes. In old fashioned terms, he wants to build the economic stockade now, instead of waiting until the attack comes, but leave the gates open, until the enemy attacks. In the days of the American frontier this often proved to be a pretty good system.

14

WORD FOR ~~XXXX~~ TODAY

The theme of Mr. Bernard Baruch's testimony today was that it is dangerous and could be fatal to delay. He might have summoned many ancients to support his point of view. ~~Nathan Bailey said: "Why not today, rather than tomorrow, if delays are dangerous."~~ And ~~Plutarch~~ Publilius Cyrus counseled: "Deliberate with slowness, but execute with speed -- all things come too late for those who wait." And the serious warning from John of Salisbury: "He who will not when he may, may not when he will."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 23, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Chinese Communists have started their biggest Korean attack in five months. It started at 9 p.m. Korean time and continued through the night. An estimated 35-hundred enemy troops struck at allied positions on three hills on the western front: Old Baldy, T-Bone and Porkchop Hills. The enemy sent screaming troops into our lines after a heavy artillery and mortar barrage. An American division spokesman says, at last report, that "everything is under control." There is no indication yet that the enemy intends more than a limited offensive.

Here in Washington today, Defense Secretary Wilson ordered all of the military services to scale-down their manpower needs. Mr. Wilson says the future needs of the services must be based "on the current situation rather than on full mobilization or war conditions." He says this is an unprecedented situation which is neither peace nor war, but something in between." And he adds: "This state of partial mobilization may last for a considerable time."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has decided to meet again tomorrow to consider the nomination of Charles Bohlen to be ambassador to Russia. The committee already has unanimously approved the nomination.

But as the result of a four hour Senate debate today, it will consider whether it wants one or two of its members to examine the full F.B.I. file on Mr. Bohlen. Chairman Wiley opened the debate by telling his colleagues that Attorney General Brownell, has joined Secretary of State Dulles, in clearing Mr. Bohlen from a security standpoint. Senator Wiley says the opposition to Bohlen seems to be based mainly on the fact that he served in the State Department under the Roosevelt and Truman administrations. He pointed out that both President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles could be attacked for the same reacon, and that this reasoning would bar all present career officers in the department from future service. Senator McCarthy, the leader in today's debate attacking the nomination, asked Mr. Bohlen to take a lie detector test. Senator Taft said F.B.I. Chief Hoover is opposed to such tests. McCarthy said that is incorrect. And McCarthy told his colleagues he realized Bohlen's nomination would eventually be confirmed, as he put it, "by Truman Democrats and Republicans who will hold their noses and vote yes." He insisted that some of the charges in the FBI file on Bohlen are of such a nature "that we cannot discuss it before the Senate without violating security." Democratic Senator Gillettee, one of the few Democrats to participate in today's debate, said that one of the "derogatory" remarks about Bohlen in this file came from a man who said he possesses a sixth sense. "This man," said the Senator, "says he can look at a man and determine if there is something immoral in his make-up. This man said he looked at Bohlen and said Bohlen had in the back of his mind such tendencies toward immorality as make him unfit." Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont asked Senator McCarthy to give the Administration a chance and put the responsibility for the Bohlen appointment on the Administration. McCarthy said he thinks the President is doing an excellent job, but when the President makes what McCarthy thinks is a bad nomination then McCarthy will oppose it. The Senator suggested that Mr. Dulles be re-called by the Foreign Relations Committee to testify on Bohlen under oath. Senator Taft called this "a ridiculous suggestion" said he believes Dulles whether or not he testifies under oath. Senator Wiley said any further investigation of Bohlen is a challenge to the secretary of state, the attorney general and, in the last analysis, the President. And from Republican Senator Tobey: "Let's change the old somg from I'M ALWAYS CHASING RAINBOWS" to "I'M ALWAYS CHASING RUMORS." "That", he said, "applies to the Senate of the United States today.

At a White House meeting today, Republican leaders decided that they will favor a law extending rent controls from the end of April to the first of October. This will give the states time to take any action they want to, on rent controls. The White House conference also decided to allow the Reconstruction

Finance Corporation to expire at the end of June, 1954, instead of trying to kill it sooner. Some congressmen favored ending the R.F.C. this year. The Corporation has assets of more than one billion dollars, including facilities for making synthetic rubber, tin and manila hemp. It also holds many loans and mortgages. Some congressmen hope that the sale of the R.F.C. assets will help balance the budget, because the returns from such sales go into the federal treasury.

The White House decided not to try to tell Congress what form legislation should take giving the states the right to offshore oil lands. And Texas and Louisiana congressmen have abandoned, temporarily, their fight for royalties from the sale of oil from the outer belt of the continental shelf. They now want a bill giving the states rights only to the "historic boundaries" ranging from three to 12 and a half miles.

The Department of Agriculture today offered to buy "quantities" of beef to help bolster dropping cattle prices. This would be the first time the department has bought beef since the drought days of the 1930's. The beef purchased by the government would be distributed to the school lunch program and other eligible outlets.

At the United Nations today, the delegate from Czechoslovakia accused the United States of promoting subversion and espionage in Communist countries. American Ambassador Lodge said the most glaring subversion in modern times occurred in 1948 when the Communists took over the Democratic state of Czechoslovakia. Lodge said that at that time the Kremlin sent Valerian, Zorin and six of their generals to organize the job. Zorin is now the Soviet delegate to the U.N.

The Moscow radio went back to its old line today. Saturday night Moscow made news when it acknowledged that the United State and Great Britain helped Russia win the last war. That seemed to fit the "peace" talk from the Kremlin. But tonight, in a broadcast to west Germany, Moscow says: European statesmen who support a European army are guilty of national treason. West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer is selling his people the American lie that west Germany is threatened from the East.

The Moscow radio tonight also rejected an American protest that Russian Migs fired on one of our weather reconnaissance bombers off Kamchatka a week ago yesterday. Moscow says our plane opened fire, our plane was spying, and violated Soviet territory.

Mr. Bernard Baruch made a powerful attempt this afternoon to try to persuade the Senate Banking Committee to recommend "stand-by controls." He contended that we should take the elementary precaution of writing into law now what we know would have to be done in the event of a major war. What Mr. Baruch wants is a law providing for the control of prices, wages, rent, rationing, credit; in short, the whole system of controls that would be needed if another war comes. This law would simply be there on the books ready for immediate use. Mr. Baruch told the Senators that if the big smash comes they will "bitterly rue this tragic, needless neglect." He said, "to wait is to die." "If we neglect this vital measure of defense, we will be increasing the risk of war; if it comes cities may be all but obliterated, and who knows where the Congress may be." The law proposed by Mr. Baruch would literally freeze the whole economy the moment war began. President Eisenhower has not asked for continuation of controls or for stand-by authority after present laws expire in a couple of months. But he does want to retain the power to control rents in critical areas and the power to allocate scarce materials.

Mr. Baruch contended that if Congress waits until the emergency actually exists, our mobilization will be needlessly slowed, which means lengthening the struggle for victory and dooming some to lose their lives, needlessly. To wait is also to make certain there will be some degree of cruel inflation, again needlessly." He wants to narrow the time-lag required for full mobilization," so that no enemy could delude himself into thinking he could overwhelm us with a surprise blitz attack." When Mr. Baruch was asked how he felt about choosing between a balanced budget and spending of more money for planes, ammunition, and the other hardware of war, he replied: "We can afford to do what Russia makes us afford."

Opponents of that stand-by control legislation argue that if the threat of a general freeze of our economy should be written into law, both business men and labor leaders would try to keep both prices and wages as high as possible in order that neither could be frozen at a low level. It is also claimed that industry would be reluctant to make long range commitments or to cut prices because they might get caught in the freeze. Mr. Baruch's answer to these arguments was "that the threat of controls will always hang over our heads as long as the threat of war hangs over our heads." He doesn't think that the threat of controls would interfere with any business ventures.

The drafting of legislation, particularly of laws as complex, as important as this one, would be difficult if not impossible if the debate were to be punctuated by falling bombs.

Controls, or the threat of controls, have never been popular in this country, but neither has war. It seems to this reporter that what Mr. Baruch is proposing is stand-by, emergency legislation which would go a long way toward providing not only for speedy mobilization, but also for the greatest possible equality of sacrifice if war should come. There wouldn't be any delay in drafting bodies. Mr. Baruch would, in effect, draft a whole nation. It seems to me that he did not over-stress the importance of the legislation. What he is proposing is that we agree in advance on the economic ground rules that shall apply in the event war comes. In old fashioned terms, he wants to build the economic stockade now instead of waiting until the attack comes, but leave the gates open until the enemy attacks. In the days of the American frontier this often proved to be a pretty good system.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The theme of Mr. Bernard Baruch's testimony today was that it is dangerous and could be fatal to delay. He might have summoned many ancients to support his point of view. Publilius Cirus counseled: "Deliberate with slowness, but execute with speed; all things come too late for those who wait." And the serious warning from John of Salisbury: "He who will not when he may, may not when he will."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, March 24, 1953

This is the news:

Queen Mary, the grandmother of Queen Elizabeth, died in her London home today. She had been suffering from a stomach ailment since before Christmas. Today, before her death at 5;20 p.m. eastern standard time, Queen Elizabeth, the Duke of Edinburgh, Princess Margaret, the Duke of Windsor, and other members of the family all visited the Queen's bedside. I shall try to summarize some of Queen Mary's attributes in a few minutes.

[redacted]

Two Senators..Republican Taft and Democrat Sparkman today spent three hours reviewing a summary of the F.B.I. file on Charles Bohlen, nominated to be ambassador to Moscow. Sparkman says he stands by his support of Bohlen. Taft, indicating the same thing, says he will make his observations to the Foreign Relations Committee tomorrow. The two men had 26-pages of single-spaced material before them. Taft says he was assured by F.B.I. Chief J. Edgar Hoover, that nothing was omitted from the raw file. Both men say they found nothing that was overlooked when Secretary of State Dulles first presented the material to their committee. Today's investigation was made because Senator Mc Carthy and others, has disputed Mr. Dulles' interpretation of the files.

Today, McCarthy's committee investigating the Voice of America heard three witnesses refuse to say whether they are Communists. Earl Browder, former head of The Communists in this country, refused to answer questions because--he said--"Senator McCarthy has said he is out to get me." The Senator denied this. James S. Allen and William [redacted],

In Korea tonight, troops of the 7th Division are trying to throw the Communists off Old Baldy hill on the western front. The allies have stopped an enemy attack on a six-mile front everywhere but on Old Baldy. During the day our counter-attack bogged down in the rain under heavy enemy artillery fire. ~~Seventh Division officers say the battle may last for days. Division Commander General Trudeau says: "We don't intend to be ejected from those portions of the hill we hold. But," he says, "that's a difficult position to defend."~~

In Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission set off another atomic blast..from a tower. We're told that nine volunteer officers from all the services witnessed the explosion from a point 25-hundred yards away.. that's less than a mile and a half..the closest anyone has been to a nuclear explosion since the attacks on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. ~~We're told the nine men were crouching~~ The nine men emerged unharmed from a five and a half foot trench. ~~[illegible]~~ The Air Force sent 53 planes into the general area..~~[illegible]~~ including a dozen picked crews flying B-36's. And here in Washington, Air Secretary Talbott told a House committee our means of delivering atomic bombs is lagging behind our ability to build the bombs. ~~[illegible]~~

Marx
~~Mark~~ Mandell , both of New York, were the other witnesses.

A Senate committee investigating Communism in education, today heard Paul Harvey Aron, a teacher at Sarah Lawrence College, testify that he was not a Communist last Friday. He refused to say whether he was a party member on Thursday.

A Federal grand jury here in Washington has convicted Abram Flaxer of contempt of Congress. He is the president of the United Public Workers of America, and had refused to give a Senate committee a list of the names of the union members employed by federal, state, county and municipal governments. The committee said the union was Communist-dominated, although a vast majority of its 35-thousand members are not Communists.

Postmaster General Summerfield and Civil Service Chairman Young today announced that new examinations will be held for more than 14-hundred postmaster appointments. They will discard the results of eligibility examinations held during the past few months. Summerfield and Young say they want to "establish higher standards of eligibility."

~~Senator Taft said today that neither he nor the President has any fixed ideas on how to change the Taft-Hartley law.~~

~~THAT AFTER~~

~~the Senate Labor Committee has completed six weeks of hearing~~

~~will draft the changes proposed by the Administration.~~

Secretary of Argiculture Benson says if employes of his department do not accept the Administration's farm philosophy, he will get rid of them as fast as possible. He says "a great majority" of the Department of Agriculture employes were glad to see a change in Administrations.

The State Department says that Moscow has "fabricated" a story to cover up an "unwarranted" attack by Russian planes on an American bomber off Kamchatka. We insist the Russian plane opened fire and we did not violate the Soviet border.

Prime Minister Churchill says he has accepted Russia's invitation to confer on ways of avoiding air attacks over Germany. The Russians made the offer, after one of their planes shot down a British bomber..with death for seven British flyers. The United States and France will be kept informed on these talks.

And in Frankfurt, Germany, today, a Czechoslovak commercial plane.. landed at one of our bases, after detouring from a domestic run. The Czech pilot, his wife and a mechanic, had planned for two years on how to reach an allied air base. Three other passengers have decided to seek political asylum. Two crewmen and 21 other passengers want to return to Czechoslovakia.

(66)

In these days it seems as though all roads lead to Washington. A British delegation was here a couple of weeks ago, the French, headed by their Premier, Rene Mayer, are due tomorrow. And the Germans lead by their Prime Minister will arrive the first week in April. Today the French almost didn't get off the ground. Their plane was waiting, the honor guard drawn up, when the government had another crisis. Premier Mayer wanted the Assembly to approve a two-hundred and thirty million dollar loan by the Bank of France to the government in order to meet current expenses. The French Premier threatened to quit if the loan was not approved. Today in Paris the French government staged a big raid on the Paris headquarters of the Communist-led General Federation of Labor. Two union officials and one Communist party leader were arrested. A lot of files and records were carried away by the police and security guards

When the French delegation reaches Washington they will ask for a hundred and twenty million dollars immediately to pay for the activation of two new divisions and to increase the French air strength from twenty-eight to thirty-eight squadrons. The French have, in fact, exceeded their quota contribution to western defense, and they now have the second largest force in General Ridgeway's command.

For next year, they'll be wanting from us some nine hundred twenty-five million dollars in aid, not counting end items, and money spent to buy goods made in France. In short, what the French hope for in all forms of aid for rearmament in 1954, comes to about two billion dollars in money and material. The alternative will be a cutback in French rearmament plans. The French representatives will certainly reassure Washington that they will be steadfast in their support of the European army plan, but the French government is no more able to speak for its Parliament than our administration is able to say with certainty how much money Congress will aprropriate.

Our diplomats in Paris have told the French that they must expect sharp questions in Washington, not only on the European Army Plan, but also on the possibility of settlement of their dispute with Germany over the Saar.

No hard and fast economic or financial agreements can be made with either the French or the Germans during the next three weeks. But by the end of that time, we ought to have a better idea of the state of health of the alliance. #

Tonight in a hushed House of Commons, Prime Minister Winston Churchill announced that Queen Mary had died while sleeping peacefully.

17

Her age was eighty-five. Her life spanned six reigns. She stood by Victoria's deathbed, and more than half a century later, helped to instruct Prince Charles, son of the present Queen, on the duties and responsibilites that lay before him. She saw one son abdicate, another buried as King, and a ~~grand~~ granddaughter become Queen. No one has told the full story of her painful interviews with Baldwin, Churchill, Canterbury and her son Edward, at the time of his abdication. Probably the most poignant moment recorded in her own career was when she came to that sole, uncurtained window in Marlborough House and, standing erect, made a brief gesture of farewell as the funeral procession of her son, George the Sixth, passed by. Queen Mary never used the telephone. But She made great use of her strength of character and ~~an~~ a sense of humor that was as lusty and non-Victorian as that of her contemporary, Winston Churchill. She smoked, but never in public. She recognized the responsibilites of royalty. During the first world war, when a relative complained "I am tired and I hate hospitals", Queen Mary snapped: "You are a member of the British royal family; we are never tired, and we love hospitals." During the late war she ~~entertained troops~~ visited troops, factories, and bases; knitted scarves for servicemen, and there are a few G. I.'s who were picked up on the road by her, in that big, old fashioned Rolls Royce. She even helped pile brush when land was being cleared to grow food on her estate. Queen Mary had a dignity that comes from duty done. She had a fondness for Americans, but frequently said she couldn't understand them. She once opened a conversation with this reporter by saying "Young man, tell me an amusing anecdote". She was not vastly amused, but she did smile.

No announcement has been made about the effect of Queen Mary's death upon the plans for the coronation. But it is most unlikely that it will be postponed. She may have made her wishes known on this subject, but if she didn't there is no doubt what they would have been. She was about as near to the personification of that British phrase "carry on" as any one who lived on that Island.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, Here's Bob Dixon.

WORD FOR TODAY

There are certain mysteries about the British, including their love and reverence for the royal family. In 1918, young and brash, Winston Churchill wrote: "Ask what you please, look where you will, you cannot get to the bottom of the resources of Britain. No demand is too novel or sudden to be met, no need too unexpected to be supplied, no strain too prolonged for the patience of our people. No suffering or peril daunts their heart."

Good night and good luck!

Wed
March 25
1953

This is the news:

Senator Taft told the Senate today, he is convinced that Charles E. Bohlen "is a completely good security risk in every respect, and I so report to the people of the United States." But five and a half hours later, the Senate postponed a vote on Bohlen..nominated to be ambassador to Russia. #

In the long debate, which frequently saw Democrats laughing out loud, at a Republican fight, Senator Taft disagreed with Senator Mc Carthy, and Senator Knowland accused McCarthy of "doubting his veracity." #

The debate opened with Taft's report on the F,B.I. file on Bohlen. As if in answer to Mc Carthy's charge that State Department Security Officer McCloud had called Bohlen "a security risk," Senator Taft said: "I could see nothing in the file to create the most remote guilt-by-association accusations you could think of." [He is confident Bohlen will be confirmed.]

Then Senator Bridges of New Hampshire told his colleagues: Bohlen has been an obedient and faithful servant to the Democratic White House "that all but ruined the country." He said Bohlen's "experience" is a record of tragedy for America. He said this appointment will mean suffering for the cause of freedom the world over. # Then Senator Mc Carthy spoke. He made no mention of Bohlen being a security risk. BUT he charged that Secretary of State Dulles had made a grave and inexcusable mistake in the Bohlen appointment. He criticized Senator Taft because, he said, Taft believes the Moscow job is relatively unimportant. McCarthy said that Bohlen, who acted as interpreter at the Yalta and Postdam meetings, "played an important role in selling out the people of Europe and Asia to the Soviet dictatorship." He said Bohlen was a member of "a team which called the signals for the betrayal of millions of men and women" in Europe and Asia. Then the debate turned to a statement by Secretary Dulles that Former Diplomat Hugh Gibson, among others, has called Bohlen "uniquely qualified" for the Moscow appointment. Another Republican senator, Dirksen of Illinois, said Mr. Gibson had told him he was not consulted on the Bohlen appointment. At this point Senator Knowland of California, phoned the Secretary of state and soon was handed a document from him marked "secret." Knowland told the Senate that the STATE DEPT. document approving Bohlen bore Gibson's signature. Senator Mc Carthy suggested that Knowland give the paper to Dirksen for verification. At this point Knowland, the head of the Republican policy committee, shouted that for the first time since he's been in the Senate his veracity had been questioned. He resented this.

Mc Carthy said:"No doubt you told the truth but there is a conflicting picture here." Knowland said:"If we have so lost confidence in men who are in high places in our country then God help our country." McCarthy asked that the Foreign Relations Committee investigate the Gibson business. Taft called for adjournment, not to permit time for the Gibson investigation, but because other Senators must still be heard.

The Pentagon reports that last week we suffered another 280 casualties in Korea, including 79 killed in action. And front reports from Korea today say the third day of fighting for Old Baldy hill is "viscious and deadly." Allied artillery and planes have been attacking Chinese troops dug in on the crest. But two Seventh Division counter-attacks have failed. General Taylor, the 8th army commander visited the battle zone today. And Second division commander General Trudeau says: we will re-capture Old Baldy soon. But we want to do it in a well-planned operation and not throw away lives." He says his men have everything they need--including ammunition.

The government of Burma today called on the United Nations Security Council to condemn what it calls Nationalist China's "aggression" in Burma. The complaint asks the Council to have the Chinese withdraw their "guerrilla forces" from Burma.

And Nationalist China's delegate to the U.N. told Russia today, that his government will liberate Communist China on its own ~~initiative~~ initiative..without waiting for a "go-ahead" from the United States.

American Delegate Lodge told the Russians that we long for the day of honest peace negotiations..and are willing to meet them half-way. He asked the Russians: what they intend to do about A.P. Correspondent William Otis, now in a Czech jail.. about 100-odd Americans now in jail in Communist China.. about three Americans seized by the Chinese off Hong Kong last week. Mr. Lodge said:"We ask no hasty answer. But the questions are momentous."

French Premier Mayer arrived here in Washington today for conferences with the President. He pledged that France will continue to work for "unity in the Atlantic community" and to help defeat Communism in Asia.

The President today sent Congress a plan to re-organize the Department of Agriculture.. giving Secretary Benson wide authority to change things around. The President said the purpose is to cut costs and simplify operations in farm aid programs.

The President [redacted] also made it known that the Administration is willing to accept authority to freeze wages and prices for a 90-day [redacted] period in a national emergency. The Administration does not want a detailed standby control law.

The President today nominated former White House Military aide.. Harry Vaughn..to be a major general in the army reserve for an indefinite term.

The Mc Carthy committee investigating the Voice of America was told by Louis Budenz that he thinks "a concealed Communist" must have advised the State Department to put books by Communist authors in the department's overseas libraries. Budenz, a former Communist, said at least 75 Communist authors are represented in our overseas libraries.

And a Senate committee heard William Jansen, superintendent of New York City schools, testify that about 180 teachers are under investigation in a program to oust Communists from the city schools.

From London today, Prime Minister Churchill, in an address to the British Commonwealth paid tribute to Queen Mary who died last night at 85. Here is a portion of Mr. Churchill's address recorded from the British Broadcasting ~~Company:~~ Corporation -

(runs 4;06 ending:

We pray she may now rest in peace. Good night.)

As the 78-year-old Mr. Churchill rewviewed an era in which he, too, had done much service for the Commonwealth, the government announced that the Queen will be buried Tuesday in St. George's Chapel of Windsor Castle, beside the body of her husband...King George the fifth.. and their son King George the sixth.

Queen Elizabeth has decreed one month's court ~~[illegible]~~ mourning. This means that the new Queens coronoation will go on as scheduled.. on June second.

Mr. Churchill's tribute to Queen Mary rather reminded us of a sentence written by James Barry which was: "Life is a long lesson in humility". For many years Queen Mary had been, at her own request, a rather shadowy figure, seldom seen in public and not very much written-about. The present praise of her character and career emphasizes the sentence from the Babylonian, Talmud: "A part of man's praise may be told in his presence, the whole in his absence".

Good night and good luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Wednesday, March 25, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... From London, today, Prime Minister Churchill, in an address to the British Commonwealth, paid tribute to Queen Mary, who died last night at 85. Here is a portion of Mr. Churchill's address, recorded from the British Broadcasting Corporation.

SPEAKER: The prime minister, the Right Honorable Winston Churchill RMCH.

CHURCHILL: I have been asked, my friends, to say just a few words upon the sad event which fills our thoughts this evening. Men and women of all ages in life, in all the lands owing allegiance to the Crown, have sorrowing hearts tonight.

Queen Mary was loved and revered far and wide as perhaps nobody has been since Queen Victoria. During six reigns - that longer, that is, than most people can remember - she has moved among us with the poise and the dignity which, as age drew on, made her a figure of almost legendary distinction. How few of you listening to me tonight can recall a time without Queen Mary, and even those who never saw her will feel a deep and sincere pang at the passing of this last great link with Queen Victoria's reign.

Queen Mary did not cling to the insubstantial shadows of what had been. She moved easily through changing scenes. New ideas held no terrors for her. Dispassionate in judgment, practical in all things, she was also far too much interested in the present to be unduly prejudiced by the past.

She died in the knowledge that the crown of these realms, worn so gloriously by her husband and by her son, and so soon to be set with all solemnity on the head of her graddaughter, is far more broadly and securely based on the people's love and the nation's will than in the sedate days of her youth, when rank and privilege ruled society.

I hope that she realized that her sympathy, her influence, and example played a notable part in all this, and it was for these services to the British people that our race all overthe world and in this island, with their keen and seldom erring instinct, placed her and held her so high in their affections.

Queen Mary will long live mellow and gracious in all our memories, and in the annals of these tumultuous times. We pray that she may now rest in peace. Goodnight.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senator Taft told the Senate today he is convinced that Charles E. Bohlen "is a completely good security risk in every respect and I so report to the people of the United States." But five and a half hours later the Senate postponed a vote on Bohlen, nominated to be ambassador to Russia. In the long debate, which frequently saw Democrats laughing out loud, at a Republican fight, Senator Taft disagreed with Senator McCarthy and Senator Knowland accused McCarthy of "doubting his veracity." The debate opened with Taft's report on the F.B.I. file on Bohlen. As if in answer to McCarthy's charge that State Department Security Officer McCloud had called Bohlen "a security risk," Senator Taft said: "I could see nothing in the file to create the most remote guilt by association accusations you could think of." He is confident Bohlen will be confirmed. Then Senator Bridges of New Hampshire told his colleagues: Bohlen has been an obedient and faithful servant to the Democratic White House "that all but ruined the country." He said Bohlen's "experience" is a record of tragedy for America. He said this appointment will mean suffering for the cause of freedom the world over. Then Senator McCarthy spoke. He made no mention of Bohlen being a security risk. But he charged that Secretary of State Dulles had made a grave and inexusable mistake in the Bohlen appointment. He criticized Senator Taft because, he said, Taft believes the Moscow job is relatively unimportant. McCarthy said that Bohlen, who acted as interpreter at the Yalta and Potsdam meetings, "played an important role in selling out the people of Europe and Asia to the Soviet dictatorship." He said Bohlen was a member of "a team which called the signals for the betrayal of millions of men and women" in Europe and Asia. Then the debate turned to a statement by Secretary Dulles that Former Diplomat Hugh Gibson, among others, has called Bohlen "uniquely qualified" for the Moscow appointment. Another Republican senator, Dirksen of Illinois, said Mr. Gibson had told him he was not consulted on the Bohlen appointment. At this point Senator Knowland of California, phoned the Secretary of State and soon was handed a document from him marked "secret." Knowland told the Senate that the State Department document approving Bohlen bore Gibson's signature. Senator McCarthy suggested that Knowland give the paper to Dirksen for verification. At this point Knowland, the head of the Republican policy committee, shouted that for the first time since he's been in the Senate his veracity had been questioned. He resented this. McCarthy said: "No doubt you told the truth but there is a conflicting picture here." Knowland said: "If we have so lost confidence in men who are in high places in our country then God help our country." McCarthy asked that the Foreign Relations Committee investigate the Gibson business. Taft called for adjournment, not to permit time for the Gibson investigation, but because other Senators must still be heard.

The Pentagon reports that last week we suffered another 280 casualties in Korea, including 79 killed in action. And front reports from Korea today say the third day of fighting for Old Baldy hill is "viscious and deadly." Allied artillery and planes have been attacking Chinese troops dug in on the crest. But two Seventh Division counter-attacks have failed. General Taylor, the 8th army commander visited the battle zone today. And Second division commander General Trudeau says: we will recapture Old Baldy soon. But we want to do it in a well-planned operation and not throw away lives." He says his men have everything they need, including ammunition.

The government of Burma today called on the United Nations Security Council to condemn what it calls Nationalist China's "aggression" in Burma. The complaint asks the Council to have the Chinese withdraw their "guerrilla forces" from Burma.

And Nationalist China's delegate to the U.N. told Russia today that his government will liberate Communist China on its own initiative, without waiting for a "go-ahead" from the United States.

American Delegate Lodge told the Russians that we long for the day of honest peace negotiations, and we are willing to meet them half-way. He asked the Russians: what they intend to do about A.P. Correspondent William Otis, now in a Czech jail? about 100-odd Americans now in jail in Communist China? about three Americans seized by the Chinese off Hong Kong last week? Mr. Lodge said: "We ask no hasty answer. But the questions are momentous."

French Premier Mayer arrived here in Washington today for conferences with the President. He pledged that France will continue to work for "unity in the Atlantic community" and to help defeat Communism in Asia.

The President today sent Congress a plan to re-organize the Department of Agriculture, giving Secretary Benson wide authority to change things around. The President said the purpose is to cut costs and simplify operations in farm aid programs.

The President also made it known that the Administration is willing to accept authority to freeze wages and prices for a 90-day period in a national emergency. The Administration does not want a detailed standby control law.

The President today nominated former White House Military aide, Harry Vaughn, to be a major general in the army reserve for an indefinite term.

The McCarthy committee investigating the Voice of America was told by Louis Budenz that he things "a concealed Communist" must have advised the State Department to put books by Communist authors in the department's overseas libraries. Budenz, a former Communist, said at least 75 Communist authors are represented in our overseas libraries.

And a Senate committee heard William Jansen, superintendent of New York City schools, testify that about 180 teachers are under investigation in a program to oust Communists from the city schools.

From London today, Prime Minister Churchill, in an address to the British Commonwealth paid tribute to Queen Mary who died last night at 85. Here is a portion of Mr. Churchill's address recorded from the British Broadcasting Corporatior

CHURCHILL: I have been asked, my friends, to say just a few words upon the sad event which fills our thoughts this evening. Men and women of all ages in life, in all the lands owing allegiance to the Crown, have sorrowing hearts tonight.

Queen Mary was loved and revered far and wide as perhaps nobody has been since Queen Victoria. During six reigns - that longer, that is, than most people can remember - she has moved among us with the poise and the dignity which, as age drew on, made her a figure of almost legendary distinction. How few of you listening to me tonight can recall a time without Queen Mary, and even those who never saw her will feel a deep and sincere pang at the passing of this last great link with Queen Victoria's reign.

Queen Mary did not cling to the insubstantial shadows of what had been. She moved easily through changing scenes. New ideas held no terrors for her. Dispassionate in judgment, practical in all things, she was also far too much interested in the present to be unduly prejudiced by the past.

She died in the knowledge that the crown of these realms, worn so gloriously by her husband and by her son, and so soon to be set with all solemnity on the head of her grandaughter, is far more broadly and securely based on the people's love and the nation's will than in the sedate days of her youth, when rank and privilege ruled society.

I hope that she realized that her sympathy, her influence, and example played a notable part in all this, and it was for these services to the British people that our race all over the world and in this island, with their keen and seldom erring instinct, placed her and held her so high in their affections.

Queen Mary will long live mellow and gracious in all our memories and in the annals of these tumultuous times. We pray that she may now rest in peace. Goodnight.

MURROW: As the 78-year-old Mr. Churchill reviewed an era in which he, too, had done much service for the Commonwealth, the government announced that the Queen will be buried Tuesday in St. George's Chapel of Windsor Castle beside the body of her husband, King George the fifth, and their son King George the sixth.

Queen Elizabeth has decreed one month's court mourning. This means that the new Queen's coronation will go on as scheduled, on June second.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Mr. Churchill's tribute to Queen Mary rather reminded us of a sentence written by James Barry which was: "Life is a long lesson in humility." For many years Queen Mary had been, at her own request, a rather shadowy figure, seldom seen in public and not very much written-about. The present praise of her character and career emphasize the sentence from the Babylonian, Talmud: "A part of man's priase may be told in his presence, the whole in his absence."

Good night and good luck!

Thursday March 26 1953

This is the news:

The Chinese attacked ten allied outposts on Korea's western front, Thursday night. An estimated 15-hundred enemy troops, were trying to dent our lines, in a 25 miles sector from Old Baldy to Bunker Hill. We have completely withdrawn from Old Baldy, and turned over to our artillery, tanks, and air, the job of killing the estimated 350 Chinese troops on the peak. To the west, at Bunker Hill, heavy allied fire stopped an attack by 800 Chinese. In the other battles we seem to be holding the enemy.. although in some spots, they appear to have managed to fight their way into some of our trenches. General Mark Clark, back in Tokyo from a 10-day tour of southeast Asia, says the loss of Old Baldy is not serious; but "its serious when we lose people." Front reports indicate that the Chinese lost 18-hundred men killed and wounded, in the first 48 hours of the attack in the Old Baldy sector. There is no count on allied losses, but they are described as "severe". (although far less than the enemy's losses.)

The President said today that he checked on the Old Baldy operation, and was told that our withdrawal was not due to any ammunition shortage. He says the ammunition situation in Korea is now satisfactory for the present scale of our operations.

And in London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that he's been told the ammunition situation in Korea has always been sufficient to meet operational requirements. Laborite Emmanual Shinwell, former defense minister, asked Mr. Churchill if he was aware of General Van Fleet's statement that his forces in Korea suffered from a constant shortage of ammunition. Mr. Churchill said: "I cannot deal with every statement that is made by an ex-commander in chief."

At the United Nations today the Soviets lost their campaign to have the U.N. condemn the United States for alleged spying and subversion in Soviet countries. The vote was 41 to 5 against A Czech motion...with 14 nations not voting. Tomorrow, the United States plans to answer the Communist charge that we are using germ warfare in Korea. We will urge Communist China and North Korea to agree to an impartial investigation of the charge. As one American official put it:"It will be a put up or shut up proposal."

French Marshal Juin said today that in spite of proposed changes, the European army pact is "unsuitable" for France. He demands an escape clause, that would permit the French to withdraw from the European army, in the event she later decides it was a mistake to join.

Here in Washington, the President spent four hours aboard the presidential yacht Williamsburgh with French Premier Mayer,,discussing the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and the French fighting in Indo-China.

At a newsconference today, Mr. Eisenhower said he is deeply concerned over the fate of the nomination of Charles E. Bohlen to be ambassador to Moscow. The President said he will not withdraw the nomination.. he thinks Bohlen is the best man qualified for the job. Reporters asked the President for his views on Senator Mc Carthy's opposition to Bohlen. The President said: he is "saddened" by the dissension within the Republican party.. he refused to comment on either McCarthy's objectives, or his methods. But he did say he believes it is possible to carry congressional investigations to the point where the harm exceeds the benefits. Reporters asked: Has McCarthy reached this point. The President said the reporters would have to draw their own conclusions.

Senator McCarthy later told reporters:"I'm sure the President is very serious, when he says Bohlen is the best man. But it so happens I differ with him. And I have a duty to combat Bohlen's confirmation."

At his news conference, the President explained how he finally decides on candidates for high government jobs. He calls them to his office, and interviews them to be sure they [redacted] are middle-of-the road people.--not extremists...persons with logical minds and not biased. Mr. Eisenhower also told reporters: government employes who are not willing to be loyal to their superiors should resign.. he does not believe high government officials should accept pay for leave that they earned but did not take.. #

he is waiting for a Kansas State Committee to decide whether Wesley Roberts, the Republican national chairman, acted as a lobbyist in Kansas without registering under the state law.

The government announced today that the cost of living dropped four tenths of one per cent in the month ending February 15th..the sharpest drop for a single month in the past year. Lower food prices were primarily responsible.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson says he has cut almost 131-million dollars from the department budget submitted by former President Truman.

The McCarthy committee investigating [redacted] libraries the State Department operates overseas today heard Dashiell Hammett, the author, refuse to say whether he is a Communist. Hammett did say he never committed espionage or sabotage against this country.

The government today removed the last controls on the production of color television. But Allen B. DuMont, president of Dumont Laboratories, said it would probably be five years before color tv "reaches widespread use."

Russia today gave ten American newspaper and radio editors permission to visit Moscow for one week. The group NOW IN LONDON, includes editors and radio executives from small towns in America. They have been touring Europe and the Middle East. They'll be the first American newsmen to be admitted to Moscow since Malenkov succeeded Stalin.

Alexander Kendrick cabled me from Vienna tonight that American military authorities in Europe have recommended to Washington that the Czech C-47 transport plane, which landed at our base at Frankfurt, Germany, a few days ago, should not be returned. The proposal is that this aircraft should be exchanged for an American C-47, forced down in Hungary seventeen months ago. The Hungarians have been holding it ever since despite several American protests.

Recently the Hungarians proposed that they would exchange a British businessman they hold, Edgar Sanders, for a Chinese communist held by the British in Malaya. The British turned it down.

Ordinarily it would be absurd and diplomatically impossible to propose a trade with one country involving ~~property~~ property held by another. But now it has been suggested that we play off one satellite against the other in the case of the two C-47's. Our military authorities feel that if this trade doesn't work we ought to keep the Czechoslovakian plane anyway to cancel out our plane the Hungarians have been holding since 1951. That was the plane that got lost ~~itself~~ on the way to Belgrade, and we paid a hundred and twenty thousand dollars ransom for our four fliers.

This proposal of trading one plane for another, even though a third country is involved, would not be orthodox diplomacy, but it might work. We might also consider saying to the Czechs that we would give them back their C-47 in return for A.P. correspondent, Bill Otis, whom they have been holding in jail for a couple of years.

Occasionally small stories from behind the Iron Curtain give some indication of what's going on. Two top editors of Communist Hungary's second most important newspaper are in jail. They are there because of a one-letter typographical error, or it could have been deliberate. What happened was that the substitution of one letter for another changed "sorrow" into "Joy". On March 6 the newspaper hit the street with several hundred copies, and right at the top of the front page, the main story carried a headline which read: Hungarian people receive with deep pleasure the news of Commrade Stalin's illness. The word used for "pleasure" differs by only one letter from the word meaning sorrowful emotion. The next day the names of the two principal editors disappeared from the masthead, and they disappeared from circulation. This incidence recalls another typographical error that occurred in 1949 when the offical Communist newspaper, celebrating the anniversary of Communist control of Hungary, made a similar one-letter typographical error. That one changed "freedom" into "slavery". The typesetter was arrested for sabotage, and has apparently been in jail ever since.

Most of you will remember the Communist story of a year ago when we were supplosed to be dropping Colorado beetles to eat up the potato crops behind the Iron Curtain. Today there is a new version of that story. The Hungarians have sentenced a vetinarian to fifteen years in prison for spreading hoof and mouth disease. This one is rather like the story of the Kremlin doctors who gave faulty diagnosis and improper treatment, for this vetinarian was accused of medical criminality by a faulty diagnosis which caused the death of hundreds of Hungarian cattle from hoof and mouth disease. Hungarian communists say he confessed that he misused his medical knowledge and diagnosed cases of bovine illness as cholic, while knowing that it was really hoof and mouth disease. He deliberately let the disease spread. When asked why he did this, the vetinarian replied that he was an enemy of the peoples democracies; he was still a fascist, he sympathized with the small landowners party, which has been liquidated, and that he had wormed his way into the communist youth organization in order to receive an education in vetinarian medicine.

Finally, he said in court,"I listened to the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe. It is not my fault. They incited me to act thus, and I did." Radio is blamed for many things, but this is something of a record.

About the only thing that emerges from this story, which was printed in the official Communist newspaper, is that there is a serious outbreak of hoof and mouth disease in Hungary, and that Communist propaganda is once again using the Unites States as the scapegoat for a natural phenomenon and retarded Hungarian vetinarian skill. In the Communist world, we are now blamed for every disaster, natural or otherwise, except the weather, and we may soon hear that our atomic explosions are responsible for any unfavorable weather conditions that may turn up behind the Iron Curtain.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

//

WORD FOR THDAY

We were speaking of the magnitude and variety of the "Hate American" campaign behind the Iron Curtain. This country is always the villian of the piece. St. Augustine said: "Grains of sand are small. Yet if enough are placed on a ship they sink it." And the Roman historian, Livey, taking a long view of much history, reminded us that "Events of great consequence can spring from trifling circumstances."

Good night and good luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Chinese attacked ten allied outposts on Korea's western front Thursday night. An estimated 15-hundred enemy troops were trying to dent our lines in a 25 miles sector from Old Baldy to Bunker Hill. We have completely withdrawn from Old Baldy and turned over to our artillery, tanks and air the job of killing the estimated 350 Chinese troops on the peak. To the west, at Bunker Hill, heavy allied fire stopped an attack by 800 Chinese. In the other battles we seem to be holding the enemy, although in some spots they appear to have managed to fight their way into some of our trenches. General Mark Clark, back in Tokyo from a 10-day tour of southeast Asia, says the loss of Old Baldy is not serious; but "its serious when we lose people." Front reports indicate that the Chinese lost 18-hundred men killed and wounded in the first 48 hours of the attack in the Old Baldy sector. There is no count on allied losses but they are described as "severe," (although far less than the enemy's losses.)

The President said today that he checked on the Old Baldy operation and was told that our withdrawal was not due to any ammunition shortage. He says the ammunition situation in Korea is now satisfactory for the present scale of our operations.

And in London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that he's been told the ammunition situation in Korea has "always" been sufficient to meet operational requirements. Laborite Emmanual Shinwell, former defense minister, asked Mr. Churchill if he was aware of General Van Fleet's statement that his forces in Korea suffered from a constant shortage of ammunition. Mr. Churchill said: "I cannot deal with every statement that is made by an ex-commander in chief."

At the United Nations today, the Soviets lost their campaign to have the U.N. condemn the United States for alleged spying and subversion in Soviet countries. The vote was 41 to 5 against a Czech motion, with 14 nations not voting. Tomorrow, the United States plans to answer the Communist charge that we are using germ warfare in Korea. We will urge Communist China and North Korea to agree to an impartial investigation of the charge. As one American official put it: "It will be a put up or shut up proposal."

French Marshal Juin said today that in spite of proposed changes, the European army pact is "unsuitable" for France. He demands an escape clause that would permit the French to withdraw from the European army in the event she later decides it was a mistake to join.

Here in Washington, the President spent four hours aboard the presidential yacht Williamsburgh with French Premier Mayer, discussing the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the French fighting in Indo-China.

At a newsconference today, Mr. Eisenhower said he is deeply concerned over the fate of the nomination of Charles E. Bohlen to be ambassador to Moscow. The President said he will not withdraw the nomination; he thinks Bohlen is the best man qualified for the job. Reporters asked the President for his views on Senator McCarthy's opposition to Bohlen. The President said: he is "saddened" by the dissension within the Republican party; he refused to comment on either McCarthy's objectives or his methods. But he did say he believes it is possible to carry congressional investigations to the point where the harm exceeds the benefits. Reporters asked: Has McCarthy reached this point. The President said the reporters would have to draw their own conclusions.

Senator McCarthy later told reporters: "I'm sure the President is very serious when he says Bohlen is the best man. But it so happens I differ with him. And I have a duty to combat Bohlen's confirmation."

At his news conference, the President explained how he finally decides on candidates for high government jobs. He calls them to his office, and interviews them to be sure they are middle of the road people, not extremists, persons with logical minds and not biased. Mr. Eisenhower also told reporters: government employees who are not willing to be loyal to their superiors should resign; he does not believe high government officials should accept pay for leave that they earned but did not take; he is waiting for a Kansas State Committee to decide whether Wesley Roberts, the Republican national chairman, acted as a lobbyist in Kansas without registering under the state law.

The government announced today that the cost of living dropped four tenths of one per cent in the month ending February 15th; the sharpest drop for a single month in the past year. Lower food prices were primarily responsible.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson says he has cut almost 131-million dollars from the department budget submitted by former President Truman.

The McCarthy committee investigating libraries the State Department operates overseas today heard Dashiell Hammett, the author, refuse to say whether he is a Communist. Hammett did say he never committed espionage or sabotage against this country.

The government today removed the last controls on the production of color television. But Allen B. DuMont, president of DuMont Laboratories, said it would probably be five years before color TV "reaches widespread use."

Russia today gave ten American newspaper and radio editors permission to visit Moscow for one week. The group, now in London, includes editors and radio executives from small towns in America. They have been touring Europe and the Middle East. They'll be the first American newsmen to be admitted to Moscow since Malenkov succeeded Stalin.

Alexander Kendrick cabled me from Vienna tonight that American military authorities in Europe have recommended to Washington that the Czech C-47 transport plane, which landed at our base at Frankfurt, Germany, a few days ago, should not be returned. The proposal is that this aircraft should be exchanged for an American C-47, forced down in Hungary seventeen months ago. The Hungarians have been holding it ever since, despite several American protests.

Recently the Hungarians proposed that they would exchange a British businessman they hold, Edgar Sanders, for a Chinese Communist held by the British in Malaya. The British turned it down.

Ordinarily it would be absurd and diplomatically impossible to propose a trade with one country involving property held by another. But now it has been suggested that we play off one satellite against the other in the case of the two C-47's. Our military authorities feel that if this trade doesn't work, we ought to keep the Czechoslovakian plane anyway to cancel out our plane the Hungarians have been holding since 1951. That was the plane that got lost on the way to Belgrade, and we paid a hundred and twenty thousand dollars ransom for our four fliers. This proposal of trading one plane for another, even though a third country is involved, would not be orthodox diplomacy, but it might work. We might also consider saying to the Czechs that we would give them back their C-47 in return for A.P. correspondent, Bill Otis, whom they have been holding in jail for a couple of years.

Occasionally small stories from behind the Iron Curtain give some indication of what's going on. Two top editors of Communist Hungary's second most important newspaper are in jail. They are there because of a one-letter typographical error, or it could have been deliberate. What happened was that the substitution of one letter for another changed "sorrow" into "Joy." On March 6 the newspaper hit the street with several hundred copies, and right at the top of the front page, the main story carried a headline which read: Hungarian people receive with deep pleasure the news of Comrade Stalin's illness. The word used for "pleasure" differs by only one letter from the word meaning sorrowful emotion. The next day the names of the two principal editors disappeared from the masthead, and they disappeared from circulation. This incidence recalls another typographical error that occurred in 1949 when the official Communist newspaper, celebrating the anniversary of Communist control of Hungary, made a similar one-letter typographical error. That one changed "freedom" into "slavery."

The typesetter was arrested for sabotage, and has apparently been in jail ever since.

Most of you will remember the Communist story of a year ago when we were supposed to be dropping Colorado beetles to eat up the potato crops behind the Iron Curtain. Today there is a new version of that story. The Hungarians have sentenced a vetinarian to fifteen years in prison for spreading hoof and mouth disease. This one is rather like the story of the Kremlin doctors who gave faulty diagnosis and improper treatment, for this vetinarian was accused of medical criminality by a faulty diagnosis which caused the death of hundreds of Hungarian cattle from hoof and mouth disease. Hungarian communists say he confessed that he misused his medical knowledge and diagnosed cases of bovine illness as cholic, while knowing that it was really hoof and mouth disease. He deliberately let the disease spread. When asked why he did this, the vetinarian replied that he was an enemy of the peoples democracies; he was still a fascist, he sympathized with the small landowners party, which has been liquidated, and that he had wormed his way into the communist yough organization in order to receive an education in vetinarian medicine. Finally, he said in court, "I listened to the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe. It is not my fault. They incited me to act thus, and I did." Radio is blamed for many things, but this is something of a record.

About the only thing that emerges from this story, which was printed in the official Communist newspaper, is that there is a serious outbreak of hoof and mouth disease in Hungary, and that Communist propaganda is once again using the United States as the scapegoat for a natural phenomenon and retarded Hungarian vetinarian skill. In the Communist world, we are now blamed for every disaster, natural or otherwise, except the weather, and we may soon hear that our atomic explosions are responsible for any unfavorable weather conditions that may turn up behind the Iron Curtain.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of the magnitude and variety of the "Hate America" campaign behind the Iron Curtain. This country is always the villian of the piece. St. Augustine said: "Grains of sand are small. Yet if enough are placed on a ship they sink it." And the Roman historian, Livey, taking a long view of much history, reminded us that "Events of great consequence can spring from trifling circumstances."

Good night and good luck!

Friday 3/27/53

This is the news:

The Senate today confirmed Charles E. Bohlen to be ambassador to Moscow.. (one month after he had been nominated by the President.) The vote was 74 to 13. More Democrats voted for the nomination than did Republicans. The 11 REPUBLICANS who voted against Bohlen are: [redacted].Bricker of Ohio... Bridges of New Hampshire...Dirksen of Illinois...Dworshak and Welker of Idaho...Goldwater of Arizona..Hickenlooper of Iowa...Malone of Nevada, McCarthy of Wisconsin..Mundt of South Dakota and Schoeppel of Kansas./Two Democrats joined them: Johnson of Colorado and McCarran of Nevada./ ~~It today~~ ~~debate no question was raised as to the possibility that Mr. Bohlen might be a security risk.~~ ~~But~~ those who argued against Bohlen, charged that he was part of Yalta.(where he served as an interpreter).and the Republican party is pledged to repudiate Yalta./Senator McCarthy says Republicans who voted for Bohlen did so not because they had confidence in him, but because they wanted to give the President a vote of confidence. But Democratic Senator Murray of Montana said, after the vote, that he regards it as complete vindication of the foreign policies of former President Truman and former Secretary of State Acheson. [redacted]

~~Said [illegible], now that they are in power, now find that the "[illegible]" policies were sound and thoroughly justified in the best interests of America.~~

Here in Washington tonight, Republican National Chairman Wesley Roberts has resigned. Earlier, a Kansas State legislative committee, had concluded that Roberts violated "the spirit" of the state's lobbying act.. by acting as an agent for an organization which sold a hospital to the state. Roberts received 11-thousand dollars for his effort in the sale. Roberts said tonight, that his usefullness as national party chairman has been destroyed, by what he called "a carefully contrived and thinly veiled plot, growing out of a fierce factional fight in Kansas State politics." He said his resignation is a personal decision, influenced by no one. The President then issued a statement saying Roberts's decision is a wise one, and thanking him for his devotion to the Republican party.

In Korea, the Marines have recaptured a west front outpost called Vegas. They lost it, with other outposts, to a 35-hundred man Chinese attack yesterday. A regimental commander says its believed that the Chinese killed or captured every Marine in the small force that held this hill, and another called Reno. Today, the Marine's first counter-attack was unsuccessful. A second did it. But front reports say the casualties in our second attack, were higher than the number of men we lost in the original Chinese attack. Our planes are still bombing enemy-held Old Baldy. And the Chinese radio reported today: American forces do not lack ammunition.

At the United Nations, American Delegate Cross called on the Chinese and the North Koreans, to prove their germ warfare charges. We propose that the enemy produce all of the captured Americans, who are supposed to have "confessed" to using Germ warfare. We want these prisoners taken to a neutral country, to have them testify to an impartial commission..to confirm or deny the reports the Chinese have attributed to them. Mr. Cross told the U.N.: "These confessions are false in their general assertions and their specific allegations". ~~he charged the Chinese torture prisoners to get such confessions. by depriving them of sleep, forcing them to maintain a rigid posture. Mr. Cross called on the Soviet delegate to accept our proposal "in the name of truth."~~

French Premier Rene Mayer said here in Washington today, that the war in Korea, and the war in Indo-China, are all part of the same battle. He says France has positive proof that in Indo-China the enemy's major objective is not to merely capture that country..but to push through it, and bring Burma, Thailand and India "within the reach of international Communism." Premier Mayer wants close co-ordination, with this country, of Far Eastern strategy and methods. He promises to push for his Parliament's approval of the European army treaty. And he would like us to sponsor a low-cost housing program in France, to help Combat Communism.

The Bulgarian government has devised a new way to keep refugees from leaving Bulgaria, and to keep Bulgarians in the free world from talking. Hereafter, all Bulgarian refugees abroad, are sentenced to death..and all their relatives at home will be sent to prison.. for five to ten years.

In the British colony of Kenya today, an armed band of Mau Mau tribesmen, who hate white people, struck a small village outside Nairobi. They massacred 150 natives who have been government servants, and loyal to the whites. British soldiers arrived on the scene after the massacre was over.

In Luxembourg today, American Minister Perle Mesta revealed that the Administration has accepted her resignation as of April 13. She said: "For the time being this is the end of my diplomatic career."

The Hickenlooper committee investigating the State Department's overseas information service was told today that another Senate committee--engaged in somewhat similar work--consists of "childish headline hunters and has gone hog wild." The witness, Edward W. Barrett, a former assistant secretary of state in charge of the Voice of America, obviously was referring to the McCarthy committee. Barrett said: [redacted] there is little basis for recently headlined and well rehearsed allegations made elsewhere by a hand-picked group of disgruntled and frightened little men." And [redacted] in a reference to testimony before the McCarthy committee by former Communist Louis Budenz, Barrett said: "I am getting a little tired of having ex-communists put on a pedestal to lecture the rest of us who were intelligent enough not to be communists." ~~When reporters later asked Senator McCarthy for comment he said, "Apparently Barrett hasn't changed his tune since he was one of Acheson's right-hand lieutenants."~~

In Vermont today, Warren Austin suffered a cerebral attack and was removed to a Burlington hospital "in grave but not critical condition." Mr. Austin, who is 75, restired as our ambassador to the United Nations at the end of the Truman administration.

The administration won its fight for the confirmation of Charles Bohlen, as ambassador to Moscow, as it had to do. Today the charges of possible disloyalty evaporated, and the principal complaint was that Bohlen had served the Democratic administration, as indeed had President Eisenhower, and Secretary of State Dulles.

When Senator Taft was asked, whether he thought the argument over Mr. Bohlen signalled a break between the Senate Republican leadership and the President, Taft replied "No", and then repeated it three times. #

However the nature and the size of the opposition would seem to indicate, that if President Eisenhower is to carry out a foreign policy, in accordance with the Republican platform, and the campaign promises, he can probably do so only with the help of Democrats. The Bohlen affair was in the nature of a preliminary skirmish, unrestrained, and at times ridiculous. But it served to illustrate the President's method of dealing with Congress. He stayed with Bohlen all the way, but at the same time refused to criticize or condemn, those senators who opposed his confirmation. The President contends that he is not the keeper of the conscience or the conduct of the Congress. In this case, he achieved his objective without openly attacking those who opposed him. Mr. Eisenhower, during his military career, particularly during the late war and at SHAPE, talked much of the team and team spirit. And he was more likely to chastize an officer for criticizing another nationality on the military team than for criticizing another officer in the same uniform. The President believes that the White House and the Republican Congress can work as a team, even though some of the members engage in dirty tactics or even run away with the ball. This is especially true when he is confident he is going to win the game anyway, (as he was in the Bohlen affair.) We have never had a President who, in his first ten weeks of office, made a more sustained effort to get to know such a large number of Congressmen. The testing time will come when members of his own party endanger a piece of legislation the President considers vital to the national interest. If the time should come, (under those circumstances,) when he chose to make an appeal to the country, some of the men who voted against him today, may discover that his influence is considerably greater than theirs.

Mr. Bohlen's task has not been made easier by this debate for the seeds of doubt have been planted, and if our affairs with Russia should go awry blame will attach to him whether he deserves it or not.

The conduct of the Senate will not have increased our prestige abroad. #

But perhaps the most serious aspect of this incident was the precedent established in connection with the F.B.I.'s REPORT ON ITS BORROWER files. The Senators, being unwilling to accept the assurances of the President, the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General, sent two of their number to have a look at the documents; Senators Taft and Sparkman. They were satisfied. They did not choose to divulge any of the hearsay, rumor, or gossip that clutters the files of many people investigated by the F.B.I. But the precedent was set. And no one can be sure that in subsequent cases the two Senators inspecting the files would possess the integrity or discretion of Senators Taft and Sparkman. It has also been broadly hinted that information from files that are supposed to be secret were supplied to Senators by the State Department security officer. Mr. Dulles runs the State Department. There is no record that he authorized such disclosures. # Yesterday the President said: [redacted] "If we find a man who cannot give loyal service to his superiors, than he has one recourse only to resign. Otherwise he is not doing his duty". Consequently in the State Department they must loyally carry out the policies that they are given by their superiors. If they cannot loyally carry them out, (and that does not necessarily mean that they agree with them,) then they must resign. And that is the only course they have." That is a principle which is at least as important as the appointment of an ambassador.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

WORD

It would seem that President Eisenhower's policies to date were summed up by the Italian, Aquaviva, who said: "Let us be resolute in prosecuting our ends, and mild in our methods of so doing." The President has set up an inordinant number of commissions and study-groups. He may have read Frances Bacon who said: "Crafty men condemn study;simple men admire it; wise men use it."

Good night and good luck

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 27, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate today confirmed Charles E. Bohlen to be ambassador to Moscow (one month after he had been nominated by the President.) The vote was 74 to 13. More Democrats voted for the nomination than did Republicans. The 11 Republicans who voted against Bohlen are: Bricker of Ohio, Bridges of New Hampshire, Dirksen of Illinois, Dworshak and Welker of Idaho, Goldwater of Arizona, Hickenlooper of Iowa, Malone of Nevada, McCarthy of Wisconsin, Mundt of South Dakota and Schoeppel of Kansas. Two Democrats joined them: Johnson of Colorado and McCarran of Nevada. Those who argued against Bohlen charged that he was part of Yalta where he served as an interpreter, and the Republican party is pledged to repudiate Yalta. Senator McCarthy says Republicans who voted for Bohlen did so not because they had confidence in him but because they wanted to give the President a vote of confidence. But Democratic Senator Murray of Montana said, after the vote, that he regards it as complete vindication of the foreign policies of former President Truman and former Secretary of State Acheson.

Here in Washington tonight Republican National Chairman Wesley Roberts has resigned. Earlier, a Kansas State legislative committee had concluded that Roberts violated "the spirit" of the state's lobbying act by acting as an agent for an organization which sold a hospital to the State. Roberts received 11-thousand dollars for his effort in the sale. Roberts said tonight that his usefulness as national party chairman has been destroyed by what he called "a carefully contrived and thinly veiled plot, growing out of a fierce factional fight in Kansas State politics." He said his resignation is a personal decision, influenced by no one. The President then issued a statement saying Roberts's decision is a wise one, and thanking him for his devotion to the Republican party.

In Korea, the Marines have recaptured a west front outpost called Vegas. They lost it, with other outposts, to a 35-hundred man Chinese attack yesterday. A regimental commander says its believed that the Chinese killed or captured every Marine in the small force that held this hill and another called Reno. Today, the Marine's first counter-attack was unsuccessful. A second did it. But front reports say the casualties in our second attack were higher than the number of men we lost in the original Chinese attack. Our planes are still bombing enemy-held Old Baldy. And the Chinese radio reported today: American forces do not lack ammunition.

At the United Nations, American Delegate Gross called on the Chinese and the North Koreans to prove their germ warfare charges. We propose that the enemy produce all of the captured Americans who are supposed to have "confessed" to using Germ warfare. We want these prisoners taken to a neutral country, to have them testify to an impartial commission, to confirm or deny the reports the Chinese have attributed to them. Mr. Gross told the U.N.: "These confessions are false in their general assertions and their specific allegations."

French Premier Rene Mayer said here in Washington today that the war in Korea and the war in Indo-China are all part of the same battle. He says France has positive proof that in Indo-China the enemy's major objective is not to merely capture that country, but to push through it and bring Burma, Thailand and India "within the reach of international Communism." Premier Mayer wants close co-ordination, with this country, of Far Eastern strategy and methods. He promises to push for his Parliament's approval of the European army treaty. And he would like us to sponsor a low-cost housing program in France to help Combat Communism.

The Bulgarian government has devised a new way to keep refugees from leaving Bulgaria and to keep Bulgarians in the free world from talking. Hereafter, all Bulgarian refugees abroad are sentenced to death, and all their relatives at home will be sent to prison for five to ten years.

In the British colony of Kenya today, an armed band of Mau Mau tribesmen, who hate white people, struck a small village outside Nairobi. They massacred 150 natives who have been government servants and loyal to the whites. British soldiers arrived on the scene after the massacre was over.

In Luxembourg today, American Minister Perle Mesta revealed that the Administration has accepted her resignation as of April 13. She said: "For the time being, this is the end of my diplomatic career."

The Hickenlooper committee investigating the State Department's overseas information service was told today that another Senate committee engaged in somewhat similar work consists of "childish headline hunters and has gone hog wild." The witness, Edward W. Barrett, a former assistant secretary of state in charge of the Voice of America, obviously was referring to the McCarthy committee. Barrett said: "there is little basis for recently headlined and well rehearsed allegations made elsewhere by a hand-picked group of disgruntled and frightened little men." And in a reference to testimony before the McCarthy committee by former Communist Louis Budenz, Barrett said: "I am getting a little tired of having ex-communists put on a pedestal to lecture the rest of us who were intelligent enough not to be communists."

In Vermont today, Warren Austin suffered a cerebral attack and was removed to a Burlington hospital "in grave but not critical condition." Mr. Austin, who is 75, retired as our ambassador to the United Nations, at the end of the Truman administration.

The administration won its fight for the confirmation of Charles Bohlen as ambassador to Moscow, as it had to do. Today the charges of possible disloyalty evaporated, and the principal complaint was that Bohlen had served Democratic administration as indeed had President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles.

When Senator Taft was asked whether he thought the argument over Mr. Bohlen signalled a break between the Senate Republican leadership and the President, Taft replied "No," and then repeated it three times. However the nature and the size of the opposition would seem to indicate that if President Eisenhower is to carry out a foreign policy in accordance with the Republican platform and the campaign promises, he can probably do so only with the help of Democrats. The Bohlen affair was in the nature of a preliminary skirmish, unrestrained, and at times ridiculous. But it served to illustrate the President's method of dealing with Congress. He stayed with Bohlen all the way, but at the same time refused to criticize or condemn those senators who opposed his confirmation. The President contends that he is not the keeper of the conscience or the conduct of the Congress. In this case, he achieved his objective without openly attacking those who opposed him. Mr. Eisenhower, during his military career, particularly during the late war and at SHAPE, talked much of the team and team spirit. And he was more likely to chastize an officer for criticizing another nationality on the military team than for criticizing another officer in the same uniform. The President believes that the White House and the Republican Congress can work as a team, even though some of the members engage in dirty tactics or even run away with the ball. This is especially true when he is confident he is going to win the game anyway, (as he was in the Bohlen affair.) We have never had a President who, in his first ten weeks of office, made a more sustained effort to get to know such a large number of Congressmen. The testing time will come when members of his own party endanger a piece of legislation the President considers vital to the national interest. If the time should come, (under those circumstances.) when he chose to make an appeal to the country, some of the men who voted against him today, may discover that his influence is considerably greater than theirs.

Mr. Bohlen's task has not been made easier by this debate for the seeds of doubt have been planted, and if our affairs with Russia should go awry blame will attach to him whether he deserves it or not. The conduct of the Senate will not have increased our prestige abroad. But perhaps the most serious aspect of this incident was the precedent established in connection with the F.B.I.'s report on its Bohlen file. The Senators, being unwilling to accept the assurances of the President, the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General, sent two of their number to have a look at the documents; Senators Taft and Sparkman. They were satisfied. They did not choose to divulge any of the hearsay, rumor, or gossip that clutters the files of many people investigated by the F.B.I. But the precedent was set. And no one can be sure that in subsequent cases the two Senators inspecting the files would possess the integrity or discretion of the Senators Taft and Sparkman. It has also been broadly hinted that information from files that are supposed to be secret were supplied to Senators by the State Department security officer. Mr. Dulles runs the State Department. There is no record that he authorized such disclosures. Yesterday the President said: "If we find a man who cannot give loyal service to his superiors, then he has one recourse only, to resign. Otherwise he is not doing his duty." Consequently in the State Department they must loyally carry out the policies that they are given by their superiors. If they cannot loyally carry them out, (and that does not necessarily mean that they agree with them,) then they must resign. And that is the only course they have." That is a principle which is at least as important as the appointment of an ambassador.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that President Eisenhower's policies to date were summed up by the Italian, Aquaviva, who said: "Let us be resolute in prosecuting our ends, and mild in our methods of so doing." The President has set up an inordinant number of commissions and study-groups. He may have read Francis Bacon who said: "Crafty men condemn study; simple men admire it; wise men use it."

Good Night and Good Luck!

monday 3/30/53

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists propose the immediate resumption of the Korean truce talks. Premier Chou en Lai believes that the time is ripe to settle the prisoner of war question that has blocked all efforts to reach a final agreement. Our State Department, with no direct word from Peiping, only Chinese radio reports to go on, says that "we welcome, of course, any indication that the Communists are interested in resolving the entire prisoner of war question on a humanitarian basis." We'd like to hear their "CONSTRUCTIVE PROPOSALS" ~~from them through~~ ..at Panmujom, Korea. ~~And in Tokyo, Gen. Mark Clark says, when he sets the Chinese plan, it will "receive immediate and careful consideration."~~

Once again the free world speaks of hope..and caution. As an American spokesman at the United Nations put it: "It's a straw in the wind. But how strong is the straw, and how hard is the wind blowing?"

Chou en Lai's proposal..indefinite as it is..takes up General Clark's proposal for the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners of war. The Chinese premier says "its entirely possible to achieve a reasonable settlement" on these prisoners. And, he believes, such a settlement, would have a "very significant bearing" on the entire question of prisoners of war. Hence, he considers the time ripe for a settlement of this question. He wants an immediate start on discussing the sick prisoners..and he wants the negotiators to "proceed to seek" an overall settlement on all prisoners. His plan EVIDENTLY is to let all prisoners who want to go home, go home. Those who do not, would be sent to a "neautral state". There, they would be questioned by representatives of their own countries. Chou en Lai --JUST BACK FROM MOSCOW-- makes it clear that China is not giving up its often stated view, that none of the Chinese or North Korean prisoners in United Nations hands actually refuse to go home. And the Chinese insist on the principle that all prisoners be returned without delay, after the war stops.

Allied officials wonder just what this means. In some respects the Chinese proposal is similar to one we offered last year at Panmunjom; except that we wanted the prisoners who refuse to go home, to be examined by nutral officials; the Chinese apparently want to question their own people. (We don't know what the word "neutral" means.. Are Poland and Czechoslovakia neutral countries..as the Communist have at times claimed.. or is Sweden neutral, is Switzerland neutral.)

The State Department makes it clear that we want [redacted] specific proposals..not propaganda generalities. We feel the real test is whether the COMMUNISTS go through with the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners.

A spokesman describes the State Department's attitude as "one of reserve; "neither over-optomism or throwing cold water on" what the Chinese say.

All western nations are hopeful..waiting for details. A British Foreign office spokesman, who says Chou en Lai's plan needs study, calls it [redacted] "very encouraging." And the British have recalled their ambassador from Moscow. (It will be an urgent trip home..only this morning he was inviting others to a memorial service for Queen Mary.)

As the Chinese radio broadcast their premier's new proposals, the Chinese on the Korean battlefields let up on their strong attacks of the last five days. Today, they made two small attempts to capture Marine-held Vegas hill.

Here in Washington today, Mutual Aid Director Stassen accused Senator McCarthy of "undermining" the Administration's attempt to cut off allied trade with Communist China. Mr. Stassen said McCarthy has interfered with our foreign policy AND made it MORE difficult to negotiate with our allies on the shipping problem. McCarthy said He had accomplished what Stassen and Secretary of State Dulles could not accomplish. This was a reference to his Saturday announcement of an agreement FROM Greek ship owners not to trade with the enemy in Asia. Today the State Department said that six days prior to the McCarthy announcement, the Greek government had agreed to forbid such trade by ships flying the Greek flag. Today, testifying before the McCarthy investigating committee, Stassen asked if Mc Carthy had made any promises to the Greek owners..he spoke of their very big profits, of "tax cases" being investigated. Senator Mc Carthy, at first said this was of no concern to Stassen, later told reporters his committee had made no agreements. ~~Stassen appealed to McCarthy for co-operation between the government's executive and legislative branches. McCarthy said Stassen did not have to plead with him..he'll go on doing what he can to negotiate for the removal of ships from the Communist trade.~~

At the White House today, the President told his congressional leaders that he's planning a cut in foreign aid spending. He said Stassen is studying the whole program.

And today the Senate completed congressional action on the President's plan to set up a new cabinet of Health, Education and Welfare. Action came on a voice vote. Oveta Culp Hobby will head the new department which comes into being ten days after the President signs the resolution.

The President has asked Congress to set up a commission to work out a plan for better relations among the federal, state and local governments. He says "friction, duplication and waste" in federal and state operations is a major national problem. [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

The Association of American Universities -(-made up of 37 colleges and universities-)- said today that Communists are disqualified for university positions, because of the nature of their belief. A statement says that unless a faculty member violates a law, "his discipline or discharge is a university responsibility, and should not be assumed by political authority." The statement adds:"Discipline on the basis of irresponsible accusations or suspicion never can be condoned."

Here in Washington, the visiting Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery called for a streamlining of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He says that at present its too big, swamped in a morass of papers, commitees and talk.

~~And in Paris, General Ridgeway said the west must "continue unremittingly to see from our governments the means required to accomplish our defense mission."~~

In Italy today the Communists failed in their planned general strike to protest against Premier De Gasperi's new law designed to keep his government in power. Correspondent Ned Calmer reports that for one thing the police supressed all demonstrations in "absolutely merciless fashion." For another, the Communists, apparently on word from Moscow, did not press their strike or demonstrations too hard.

The news from Russia is that the ice is breaking up on the Moscow River. This is of course an annual event, but this year it may have considerable symbolic significance. The Communist peace gestures have reached serious proportions, and the question bothering statesmen in Europe and here in Washington is whether the Russians mean it this time, and if so, where do we go from here.

Secretary of State Dulles, in his first speech before the United Nations, said "we were entering the new era." We appear to be, but no one knows the form it will take. From the evidence available, it seems that the Russians are relaxing the pressure on two fronts. And it may be that the second front, that is the one inside Russia, is the more important. The amnesty granted over the weekend to certain classes of prisoners is not as broad as it seems at first glance, but it is another indication that the new Russian regime is concerned with domestic affairs -- an attempt to improve the morale and soothe the jittery nerves of the Russian people. It is necessary to remember that whatever the effect of Russian threat, insult and invective may have on the West, they have an even more direct and immediate effect on the Russian people. However much the British, the French, or ourselves may shudder at the prospect of another war, the Russian people who live along the Volga and the Nieper must also flinch [redacted] at the prospect. Before his death, there must have been a widespread feeling that somehow Stalin would see them through. But it is difficult to instill personal confidence in a new and impersonal governmental machine, unless that machine acts as if it has human blood flowing through its mechanical arteries. The amnesty was more than the traditional imperial clemency of a new czar.

These combined actions, at home and abroad, do not add up to a basic change in Soviet long-range strategy or policy. The Soviet scriptures forbid such a thing. Still we can't just ignore them, nor can we appear to be overly suspicious about them, if for no other reason than that we have allies, who must reach their own conclusions. However, there are certain "constant elements" in Russian policy, that should be kept in mind. It is the essence of Leninism and Stalinism to take one step backward, with the intention of later taking two steps forward. Many times both men appeared to accept defeat or compromise, in order to consolidate their position, gain time, lull their opponents into a false sense of security, and then move again, when [redacted] they were ready.

A second "constant element" is that Soviet policy has always been based on Soviet advantage. Perhaps this is the basis of all foreign policy. But judged by its history, and by its philosophy, Russia could not be a true member of any larger community because it could never set common goals above its own national goals. Another "constant element" is the Soviet belief that capitalism will destroy itself. They have alternated between policies of isolation and subversive intervention. They do not believe that a straight line is necessarily the shortest distance between two points.

It is possible, though unlikely, that the Russians have decided that to push us any farther would mean too great a risk of war. Perhaps they think they can appear to relax in the hope that we will do likewise and finally go to sleep. It is possible that their need for internal security and stability outweighs any other current need. There is of course another grim alternative that this whole maneuver is designed in order to put the blame on us if a war should come. It is unlikely that all these developments are primarily the result of spring fever. It is also unlikely that we have yet reached our goal of being able to bargain from strength. The military potentials of the two camps are not in equalibrium. The Russians still have the prepondenance of military might. To paraphrase Mr. Churchill this is not the beginning of the end of the cold war, but it may be the end of the beginning. It may be that this is one of the minor pivots on which history turns. Probably all we can do is to try to be always ready, and ready always to negotiate.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

The Communists have proposed a possible solution in one area of tension. There are many others, but Sertorious said: "Perseverance is more effective than violence, and many things which cannot be overcome when they stand together, yield themselves up when taken little by little". And Aristotle reminded us: "Where we are free to act, we are also free to refrain from acting, and where we are able to say No, we are also able to say Yes."

Good night and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 30, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists propose the immediate resumption of the Korean truce talks. Premier Chou en Lai believes that the time is ripe to settle the prisoner of war question that has blocked all efforts to reach a final agreement. Our State Department, with no direct word from Peiping, only Chinese radio reports to go on, says that "we welcome, of course, any indication that the Communists are interested in resolving the entire prisoner of war question on a humanitarian basis." We'd like to hear their "constructive proposals" at Panmunjom, Korea.

Once again the free world speaks of hope and caution. As an American spokesman at the United Nations put it: "It's a straw in the wind. But how strong is the straw and how hard is the wind blowing?"

Chou en Lai's proposal, indefinite as it is, takes up General Clark's proposal for the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners of war. The Chinese premier says "it's entirely possible to achieve a reasonable settlement" on these prisoners. And, he believes, such a settlement, would have a "very significant bearing" on the entire question of prisoners of war. Hence, he considers the time ripe for a settlement of this question. He wants an immediate start on discussing the sick prisoners, and he wants the negotiators to "proceed to seek" an overall settlement on all prisoners. His plan evidently is to let all prisoners who want to go gome, go home. Those who do not, would be sent to a "neutral state." There, they would be questioned by representatives of their own countries. Chou en Lai, just back from Moscow, makes it clear that China is not giving up its often stated view that none of the Chinese or North Korean prisoners in United Nations hands actually refuse to go home. And the Chinese insist on the principle that all prisoners be returned without delay, after the war stops.

Allied officials wonder just what this means. In some respects the Chinese proposal is similar to one we offered last year at Panmunjom; except that we wanted the prisoners who refuse to go home to be examined by neutral officials; the Chinese apparently want to question their own people. (We don't know what the word "neutral" means. Are Poland and Czechoslovakia neutral countries, as the Communist have at times claimed, or is Sweden neutral, is Sqitzerland neutral.)

The State Department makes it clear that we want specific proposals, not propaganda generalities. We feel the real test is whether the Communists go through with the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners. A spokesman describes the State Department's attitude as "one of reserve; "neither over-optimism or throwing cold water" on what the Chinese say.

All western nations are hopeful, waiting for details. A British Foreign office spokesman who says Chou on Lai's plan needs study, calls it "very encouraging." And the British have recalled their ambassador from Moscow. It will be an urgent trip home, only this morning he was inviting others to a memorial service for Queen Mary.

As the Chinese radio broadcast their premier's new proposals, the Chinese on the Korean battlefields let up on their strong attacks of the last five days. Today, they made two small attempts to capture Marine-held Vegas Hill.

Here in Washington today, Mutual Aid Director Stassen accused Senator McCarthy of "undermining" the Administration's attempt to cut off allied trade with Communist China. Mr. Stassen said McCarthy has interfered with our foreign policy and made it more difficult to negotiate with our allies on the shipping problem. McCarthy said he had accomplished what Stassen and Secretary of State Dulles could not accomplish. This was a reference to his Saturday announcement of an agreement from Greek ship owners not to trade with the enemy in Asia. Today the State Department said that six days prior to the McCarthy announcement the Greek government had agreed to forbid such trade by ships flying the Greek flag. Today, testifying before the McCarthy investigating committee, Stassen asked if McCarthy had made any promises to the Greek owners, he spoke of their very big profits, of "tax cases" being investigated. Senator McCarthy, at first said this was of no concern to Stassen, later told reporters his committee had made no agreements.

At the White House today, the President told his congressional leaders that he's planning a cut in foreign aid spending. He said Stassen is studying the whole program.

And today the Senate completed congressional action on the President's plan to set up a new cabinet of Health, Education and Welfare. Action came on a voice vote. Oveta Culp Hobby will head the new department which comes into being ten days after the President signs the resolution.

The President has asked Congress to set up a commission to work out a plan for better relations among the federal, state and local governments. He says "friction, duplication and waste" in federal and state operations is a major national problem.

The Association of American Universities (made up of 37 colleges and universities) said today that Communists are disqualified for university positions because of the nature of their belief. A statement says that unless a faculty member violates a law, "his discipline or discharge is a university responsibility and should not be assumed by political authority." The statement adds: "Discipline on the basis of irresponsible accusations or suspicion never can be condoned."

Here in Washington, the visiting Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery called for a streamlining of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He says that at present its too big, swamped in a morass of papers, committees and talk.

In Italy today the Communists failed in their planned general strike to protest against Premier De Gasperi's new law designed to keep his government in power. Correspondent Ned Calmer reports that for one thing the police supressed all demonstrations in "absolutely merciless fashion." For another, the Communists, apparently on word from Moscow, did not press their strike or demonstrations too hard.

The news from Russia is that the ice is breaking up on the Moscow River. This is of course an annual event, but this year it may have considerable symbolic significance. The Communist peace gestures have reached serious proportions, and the question bothering statesmen in Europe and here in Washington is whether the Russians mean it this time, and if so, where do we go from here.

Secretary of State Dulles, in his first speech before the United Nations, said "we are entering a new era." We appear to be, but no one knows the form it will take. From the evidence available, it seems that the Russians are relaxing the pressure on two fronts. And it may be that the second front, that is the one inside Russia, is the more important. The amnesty granted over the weekend to certain classes of prisoners is not as broad as it seems at first glance, but it is another indication that the new Russian regime is concerned with domestic affairs - an attempt to improve the morale and soothe the jittery nerves of the Russian people. It is necessary to remember that whatever the effect of Russian threat, insult and invective may have on the West, they have an even more direct and immediate effect on the Russian people. However much the British, the French, or ourselves may shudder at the prospect of another war, the Russian people who live along the Volga and the Nieber must also flinch at the prospect. Before his death, there must have been a widespread feeling that somehow Stalin would see them through. But it is difficult to instill personal confidence in a new and impersonal governmental machine unless that machine acts as if it has human blood flowing through its mechanical arteries. The amnesty was more than the traditional imperial clemency of a new czar.

These combined actions, at home and abroad, do not add up to a basic change in Soviet long-range strategy or policy. The Soviet scriptures forbid such a thing. Still we can't just ignore them, nor can we appear to be overly suspicious about them, if for no other reason than that we have allies who must reach their own conclusions. However, there are certain "constant elements" in Russian policy that should be kept in mind. It is the essence of Leninism and Stalinism to take one step backward with the intention of later taking two steps forward. Many times both men appeared to accept defeat or compromise in order to consolidate their position, gain time, lull their opponents into a false sense of security, and then move again when they were ready.

A second "constant element" is that Soviet policy has always been based on Soviet advantage. Perhaps this is the basis of all foreign policy. But judged by its history, and by its philosophy, Russia could not be a true member of any larger community because it could never set common goals above its own national goals. Another "constant element" is the Soviet belief that capitalism will destroy itself. They have alternated between policies of isolation and subversive intervention. They do not believe that a straight line is necessarily the shortest distance between two points.

It is possible, though unlikely, that the Russians have decided that to push us any farther would mean too great a risk of war. Perhaps they think they can appear to relax in the hope that we will do likewise and finally go to sleep. It is possible that their need for internal security and stability outweighs any other current need. There is of course another grim alternative that this whole maneuver is designed in order to put the blame on us if a war should come. It is unlikely that all these developments are primarily the result of spring fever. It is also unlikely that we have yet reached our goal of being able to bargain from strength. The military potentials of the two camps are not in equalibrium. The Russians still have the preponderance of military might. To paraphrase Mr. Churchill this is not the beginning of the end of the cold war, but it may be the end of the beginning. It may be that this is one of the minor pivots on which history turns. Probably all we can do is to try to be always ready, and ready always to negotiate.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Communists have proposed a possible solution in one area of tension. There are many otheres, but Sertorious said: "Perseverance is more effective than violence, and many things which cannot be overcome when they stand together, yield themselves up when taken little by little." And Aristotle reminded us: "Where we are free to act, we are also free to refrain from acting, and where we are able to say No, we are also able to say Yes."

Good Night and good luck!

Tuesday 3/31/53

This is the news:

The Security Council has selected a new secretary-general for the United Nations. He is Dag Hammarshold, Sweden's deputy minister of foreign affairs. The decision was made first by the Big Five veto-holding powers. And Andrie Vishinsky, making his first appearance since his return from Moscow, went along with America, Britain, France and Nationalist China. Then at a hurriedly called meeting of the Council, Dag Hammarshold was approved. There is little doubt that the General Assembly will accept him to succeed Tryve Lie, who resigned last November.

In Stockholm, Hammarshold said he never even knew he was being considered for the 55-thousand-dollar a year job. He told reporters:"I had not the slightest warning of any kind." Hammarshold is 48..single.. AND is rated as one of Swdeen's top administrators and negotiators. He once headed Sweden's delegation to the United Nations.

Some diplomats at the U.N. believe that this East-West agreement is another step in Russia's peace offensive. And today General Assembly President Pearson formally received Communist China's proposal for a resumption of the Korean truce talks. He promptly sent them on to General Clark in Tokyo. Mr. Pearson says he hopes this "will provide the basis for a solution of the Korean war." ~~Pearson wants the General Assembly to take action on the Chinese proposals as soon as possible... (this would mean the shifting of negotiations from Panmunjom to New York)~~ Today, North Korea's Kim Il Sung made it clear that he approves every words of Chinese Premier Chou en Lai's proposals. But the Chinese Nationalists say its all a smokescreen to mask Red China's further plans for aggression.

News of the Communist proposal again had an effect on the stock market in New York. For a second day..the possibility of a truce, and ~~mmmmm~~ the possibility of a drop in defense production...sent prices down an average of more than 2-dollars a share. In two days, some 3-billion dollars in market valuations have been wiped out.

The ground war in Korea dwindled to minor patrol actions today. But again our planes hit the enemy all along the front.

In ~~Russian~~ Germany today, the Russians called again for an early four-power conference, to write a peace treaty for all Germany. The proposal was made by Russian General Chuikov..in a Communist nespaper..as he started a meeting with British officials, on how to prevent future air battles between Russian and British planes.

In England today, Queen Mary was buried in St. George's chapel of Windsor Castle

And Marshal Tito, back in Yugoslavia from his visit to Great Britain, says the British have given him a flat guarantee of help, if Yugoslavia is attacked.

The Kremlin today announced another series of price cuts on food and consumer goods. Generally prices are supposed to go down from 10 to 15 per cent..although the Russians have ordered a 50 per cent cut on potatoes, fresh fruits and vegetables. (The Russians announced a somewhat similar reduction in prices just a year ago today.)

Here in Washington, the Atomic Energy Commission announces that it has put into operation an atomic power plant, designed for submarines. The plant is now working..on dry land, in Idaho..apparently at low power. Representative Hinshaw of California, says this means we are now "substantially ahead of the rest of the world, for the first time" in the development of submarines. And out in Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission exploded another "atomic device."

The United States Conference of Mayors charges that Congress has failed to consider the civil defense problem seriously. The Mayors want a "realistic revision" of the whole program. And they told [redacted] representatives of the President [redacted] they feel the federal government must continue to help the cities in such fields as: [redacted] slum clearance, airport and highway construction and public housing.

Senator McCarthy today arranged to meet with Secretary Dulles to reach an agreement on how best to end western trade with Communist China. #

Today, Assistant Secretary of Defense Nash told the McCarthy committee that the defense department "would meet with applause" any move to cut down shipping to Red China.. if it does not upset bigger plans the government may have. Yesterday, Mutual Aid Director Stassen said an agreement McCarthy had worked out with Greek ship owners was "undermining" the Administration's approach to the problem.

~~The House of Representatives today voted to cut out of its tidelands bill a provision that would allow coastal states to tax oil taken from the continental shelf..beyond the historic boundaries of the states.~~

Commerce Secretary Weeks told Congress he opposes continuing price-wage controls "on any basis." And he announced that Dr. A.V. Astin, director of the Bureau of standards, had been forced to resign. Mr. Weeks says the Bureau, among other things, condemned a new product without testing it adequately: a power that is suppoed to prolong the life of storage batteries. Weeks says he will reorganize the Bureau to give little business a fair break.

The Agriculture Department says the prices farmers receive for their crops went up by one-third of a per cent last month. They had dropped steadily for six consecutive months.

A torney General Brownell says he favors a law permitting the use of wiretapped evidence in espionage trials. He says the government has open and shut cases of espionage that cannot be taken to court because wire-tap evidence cannot be used legally.

A federal jury today found E. Merl Young guilty on four charges of perjury.. with a possible penalty of two to ten years in prison. Young was found guilty of not telling the truth when he said that as an employe of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation he never had anything to do with a loan application from the Lustron Corporation.

And in New York, Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands said Americans had contibuted more than 2 million dollars to Holland flood relief. In addition various Dutch relief committees collected enough clothing for 44 million persons...h most of this has been sent to other countries by the Dutch.

6/

The Russians are giving us a demonstration of how quickly a totalitarian state can move in international affairs. Only a few weeks ago it was indicated that part of the policy of our government was designed to keep the Russians guessing. Now the guessing is going on furiously in Washington, London, Paris, and elsewhere in the free world. Communist China has now formally submitted her peace proposal to the United Nations. The Russians have broken another deadlock by agreeing upon a successor to Trygve Lie as Secretary-General of the United Nations. In Berlin the Russian Commander, General Chuykov, has proposed a four-power meeting to write a peace treaty and re-unite Germany. Here in Washington TODAY President Eisenhower spent 8 HOURS & 40 MINUTES in session with the National Security Council. In Moscow the censors appear to have eased up a little on the dispatches being filed by American correspondents.

At every point where we are in contact with the Communists, with the exception of Austria, they are easing the tension. On the surface at least they might almost be said to be "threatening us with peace." A conservative newspaper in Paris headlines the story: "The Risks of Pease". And another French newspaper says "the peace offensive should not be taken to be more dangerous than military aggression". There are warnings in London and in Paris that the Russians might be playing for relaxation of effort, hoping that the allies will fight amongst themselves in the absence of a direct Soviet menace. (The decline on the New York Stock market has been duly noted abroad) It is much too early to suggest that we may have to solve our economic, social and diplomatic problems without the menace of immediate war to goad us on. But if that menace diminishes, even superficially or temporarily, we shall have to rethink many of our policies, both domestic and foreign. It is, of course, still possible that this whole maneuver may be a great fraud. For example: the Communist and satellite press today gave as much prominence to a story charging a whole series of poison gas incidents against us in Korea, as it did to Chou En-Lai's truce bid. Maybe the propaganda directives haven't caught up with the presses. And maybe an alternative is already being prepared in case the truce talks fail. The Communists could easily switch to a propaganda line saying "we can't make peace with the imperialists no matter how sincere we are, because they use poison gas."

It is not likely, in the light of past performance, that the Communists want to talk only about a truce in Korea. It is their habit always to broaden the scope of conversations. They are going to want something from us, and it must be something important. It is only possible to speculate as to what that might be. It could involve an agreement on the political future of Korea. It might be a demand that Communist China get a seat on the United Nations Security Council. It could be the resumption of trade with Communist China. It could be almost anything. But it is a Communist habit to start with a single issue and then attempt to broaden the whole area of conversation.

So far there is no indication at all that these moves represent anything in the nature of a rebellion by Mao ~~Tse-tung~~ TSE TUNG, against the Kremlin. Molotov may well be the man behind this operation. Before Stalin's death, he was primarily occupied with the Far East, and may in fact, have been running the Russian side of the Korean war. He is more likely to treat Mao ~~Tse-tung~~ as an equal, or even a superior, than Stalin was ever likely to do. The possibility of a truce in Korea, may be regarded by the Russians as leading to another big-four Foreign Ministers conference. Molotov would be the Russian representative at such a meeting, and those who have dealt with him in the past, including Secretary of State Dulles, regard him as a master in the art of double-talk, and also a master of suddenly broadening the scope of the items that are to be discussed, and trying to get general conclusions out of specific issues.

This whole series of moves by the Communists must be viewed in the light of their history and their doctrine. They have not experienced a new revolution. And there is no evidence that they have changed their objective. But they have changed their policies. They are talking peace, agreement, and accommodation. There must be a reason for this, and a compelling one. We aren't hurting the Chinese enough in Korea to cause them to seek peace for military reasons. Our strength in Western Europe does not threaten them. Their reasons for acting as they do may stem partly from domestic consideration; (the prospect of peace would certainly not be displeasing to the Russian people). But at bottom, this whole maneuver must, I think, be regarded as a decision on their part, to play the long-range, grinding, waiting game, in the belief that the western alliance will come unstuck. They spelled out this theory in great detail last October, and now they're acting on it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment wth the Word for Today.

Now, here's Bob Dixon.

Better minds than this one are trying to figure out what the Russians intend as a result of this change in tactics. So we shall take refuge in La Rouhefoucauld who said"Human society would not last long if men were not deceived by one another. It is as easy to delude ourselves unknowling, as it is difficult to delude others without their knowledge."

Good night and good luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Security Council has selected a new secretary-general for the United Nations. He is Dag Hammarskjold, Sweden's deputy minister of foreign affairs. The decision was made first by the Big Five veto-holding powers. And Andrie Vishinsky, making his first appearance since his return from Moscow, went along with America, Britain, France and Nationalist China. Then at a hurriedly called meeting of The Council, Dag Hammarskjold was approved. There is little doubt that the General Assembly will accept him to succeed Trygve Lie, who resigned last November.

In Stockholm, Hammarskjold said he never even knew he was being considered for the 55-thousand dollar a year job. He told reporters: "I had not the slightest warning of any kind." Hammarskjold is 48, single, and is rated as one of Sweden's top administrators and negotiators. He once headed Sweden's delegation to the United Nations.

Some diplomats at the U.N. believe that this East-West agreement is another step in Russia's peace offensive. And today General Assembly President Pearson formally received Communist China's proposal for a resumption of the Korean truce talks. He promptly sent them on to General Clark in Tokyo. Mr. Pearson says he hopes this "will provide the basis for a solution of the Korean war." Today, North Korea's Kim Il Sung made it clear that he approves every word of Chinese Premier Chou en Lai's proposals. But the Chinese Nationalists say its all a smokescreen to mask Red China's further plans for aggression.

News of the Communist proposal again had an effect on the stock market in New York. For a second day, the possibility of a truce and the possibility of a drop in defense production sent prices down an average of more than 2-dollars a share. In two days some 3-billion dollars in market valuations have been wiped out.

The ground war in Korea dwindled to minor patrol actions today. But again our planes hit the enemy all along the front.

In Germany today, the Russians called again for an early four-power conference to write a peace treaty for all Germany. The proposal was made by Russian General Chuikov, in a Communist newspaper as he started a meeting with British officials on how to prevent future air battles between Russian and British planes.

In England today, Queen Mary was buried in St. George's chapel of Windsor Castle.

And Marshal Tito, back in Yugoslavia from his visit to Great Britain, says the British have given him a flat guarantee of help if Yugoslavia is attacked.

The Kremlin today announced another series of price cuts on food and consumer goods. Generally prices are supposed to go down from 10 to 15 per cent although the Russians have ordered a 50 per cent cut on potatoes, fresh fruits and vegetables. (The Russians announced a somewhat similar reduction in prices just a year ago today.)

Here in Washington, the Atomic Energy Commission announces that it has put into operation an atomic power plant designed for submarines. The plant is now working on dry land in Idaho, apparently at low power. Representative Hinshaw of California says this means we are now "substantially ahead of the rest of the world for the first time" in the development of submarines. And out in Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission exploded another "atomic device."

The United States Conference of Mayors charges that Congress has failed to consider the civil defense problem seriously. The Mayors want a "realistic revision" of the whole program. And they told representatives of the President they feel the federal government must continue to help the cities in such fields as: slum clearance, airport and highway construction and public housing.

Senator McCarthy today arranged to meet with Secretary Dulles to reach-an agreement on how best to end western trade with Communist China. Today, Assistant Secretary of Defense Nash told the McCarthy committee that the defense department "would meet with applause" any move to cut down shipping to Red China, if it does not upset bigger plans the government may have. Yesterday, Mutual Aid Director Stassen said an agreement McCarthy had worked out with Greek ship owners was "undermining" the Administration's approach to the problem.

Commerce Secretary Weeks told Congress he opposes continuing price-wage controls "on any basis." And he announced that Dr. A.V. Astin, director of the Bureau of standards, had been forced to resign. Mr. Weeks says the Bureau, among other things, condemned a new product without testing it adequately: a power that is supposed to prolong the life of storage batteries. Weeks says he will reorganize the Bureau to give little business a fair break.

The Agriculture Department says the prices farmers receive for their crops went up by one-third of a percent last month. They had dropped steadily for six consecutive months.

Attorney General Brownell says he favors a law permitting the use of wiretapped evidence in espionage trials. He says the government has open and shut cases of espionage that cannot be taken to court because wire-tap evidence cannot be used legally.

A federal jury today found E. Merl Young guilty on four charges of perjury, with a possible penalty of two to ten years in prison. Young was found guilty of not telling the truth when he said that as an employee of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation he never had anything to do with a loan application from the Lustron Corporation.

And in New York, Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands said Americans had contributed more than 2 million dollars to Holland flood relief. In addition various Dutch relief committees collected enough clothing for 44 million persons, most of this has been sent to other countries by the Dutch.

The Russians are giving us a demonstration of how quickly a totalitarian state can move in international affairs. Only a few weeks ago it was indicated that part of the policy of our government was designed to keep the Russians guessing. Now the guessing is going on furiously in Washington, London, Paris, and elsewhere in the free world. Communist China has not formally submitted her peace proposal to the United Nations. The Russians have broken another deadlock by agreeing upon a successor to Trygve Lie as Secretary-General of the United Nations. In Berlin the Russian Commander, General Chuykov, has proposed a four-power meeting to write a peace treaty and re-unite Germany. Here in Washington today, President Eisenhower spent 8 hours and 40 minutes in session with the National Security Council. In Moscow the censors appear to have eased up a little on the dispatches being filed by American correspondents.

At every point where we are in contact with the Communists, with the exception of Austria, they are easing the tension. On the surface at least they might almost be said to be "threatening us with peace." A conservative newspaper in Paris headlines the story: "The Risks of Peace." And another French newspaper says "the peace offensive should not be taken to be more dangerous than military aggression." There are warnings in London and in Paris that the Russians might be playing for relaxation of effort, hoping that the allies will fight amongst themselves in the absence of a direct Soviet menace. (The decline on the New York Stock market has been duly noted abroad.) It is much too early to suggest that we may have to solve our economic, social and diplomatic problems without the menace of immediate war to goad us on. But if that menace diminishes, even superficially or temporarily, we shall have to rethink many of our policies, both domestic and foreign. It is, of course, still possible that this whole maneuver may be a great fraud. For example: the Communist and satellite press today gave as much prominence to a story charging a whole series of poison gas incidents against us in Korea, as it did to Chou En-Lai's truce bid. Maybe the propaganda directives haven't caught up with the presses. And maybe an alternative is already being prepared in case the truce talks fail. The Communists could easily switch to a propaganda line saying "we can't make peace with the imperialists no matter how sincere we are, because they use poison gas."

It is not likely, in the light of past performance, that the Communists want to talk only about a truce in Korea. It is their habit always to broaden the scope of conversations. They are going to want something from us, and it must be something important. It is only possible to speculate as to what that might be. It could involve an agreement on the political future of Korea. It might be a demand that Communist China get a seat on the United Nations Security Council. It could be the resumption of trade with Communist China. It could be almost anything. But it is a Communist habit to start with a single issue and then attempt to broaden the whole area of conversation.

So far there is no indication at all that these moves represent anything in the nature of a rebellion by Mao Tse Tung against the Kremlin. Molotov may well be the man behind this operation. Before Stalin's death, he was primarily occupied with the Far East, and may in fact, have been running the Russian side of the Korean war. He is more likely to treat Mao Tse Tung as an equal, or even a superior, than Stalin was ever likely to do. The possibility of a truce in Korea may be regarded by the Russians as leading to another big-four Foreign Ministers conference. Molotov would be the Russian representative at such a meeting, and those who have dealt with him in the past, including Secretary of State Dulles, regard him as a master in the art of double-talk, and also a master of suddenly broadening the scope of the items that are to be discussed, and trying to get general conclusions out of specific issues.

This whole series of moves by the Communists must be viewed in the light of their history and their doctrine. They have not experienced a new revolution. And there is no evidence that they have changed their objective. But they have changed their policies. They are talking peace, agreement and accommodation. There must be a reason for this, and a compelling one. We aren't hurting the Chinese enough in Korea to cause them to seek peace for military reasons. Our strength in Western Europe does not threaten them. Their reasons for acting as they do may stem partly from domestic consideration; the prospect of peace would certainly not be displeasing to the Russian people. But at bottom, this whole maneuver must, I think, be regarded as a decision on their part to play the long-range grinding, waiting game in the belief that the western alliance will come unstuck. They spelled out this theory in great detail last October, and now they're acting on it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Better minds than this one are trying to figure out what the Russians intend as a result of this change in tactics. So we shall take refuge in La Rochefoucauld who said: "Human society would not last long if men were not deceived by one another. It is as easy to delude ourselves unknowing, as it is difficult to delude others without their knowledge."

Good Night and good luck!

Wednesday 4/1/53

This is the news:

The Russians made two moves today in their attempt to convince us of their desire for peace in the cold war. At the United Nations, they apparently dropped their long insistence that all atomic weapons be banned before any discusions on disarmament and atomic controls get underway. By a series of mild amendments, they seemingly have adopted the western proposals as a basis for discussing disarmament. Allied officials who say "much study" is necessary point out that so far the Soviet suggestion is just a paper arrangement; they'll talk about our plan instead of insisting on theirs. The second move from Moscow came with Foreign Minister Molotov's pledge of assistance to help get a Korean armistice..on the basis of Chou en Lai's proposals. Molotov is ready to assist fully..thinks the Chinese proposl is "completely just"..is confident it will be understood by the United States.

Indian Delegate Menon wants these proposals to be discussed at the United Nations. (The General Assembly has recessed until Tuesday.) The American view is that the discussions should be held at Panmujom.

Winston Churchill told his House of Commons the Chinese ~~offer~~ plan "seems to offer a new hope" for ending the Korean war, "if it is not spoiled."

Our State Department welcomes Molotov's announcement.. now being broadcast to the world by Radio Moscow in 15 languages. We want details. And the State Department does not believe, as some others do, that Molotov will inist on United Nations membership for Communist China as a basis for ending the Korean war.

IN a few minutes we'll hear from some of my colleagues overseas on what the Russian "peace offensive" is achieveing in various parts of the world.

In Korea, ~~General Clark says we are making all preparations to renew the battle. He says "it's a good time not to be optomistic or pessimistic."~~

The battlefields were comparatively quiet today and the Pentagon reports that we suffered 404 casualties in the last week..including 80 killed.

Army Secretary Stevens, said in Seoul today, that the 8th army has enough ammunition "no matter what happens..its well supplied to take care of itself."

And here in Washington, a Senate committee heard Generals Van Fleet and Almond..the former 10th corps commander..tell about ammunition shortages in KOREA when they were in command. General Van Fleet said the army was down to zero in some types of ammunition, after we repulsed enemy attacks in May of 1951. The next month, in June when Malik of Russia made his first suggestion of a truce, Van Fleet wanted to conduct an amphibious operation. He was sure it could destroy the enemy armies in Korea. But, he says, General Ridgeway, then the Far Eastern commander, halted the plans. General Van Fleet also suggested that we may have lost Old Baldy hill in Korea recently, because there was not enough "preventive fire". (artillery attacks designed to stop the enemy before he starts) Both the army and the President have said ammunition shortages were not the cause of our defeat at Old Baldy.

Secretary of State Dulles and Senator McCarthy today discussed McCarthy's agreement with Greek ship owners, that they would end their trading with Communist China. A State Department statement SAYS: Mr. Dulles agreed that McCarthy's activities were "in the national interest." Dulles pointed out the dangers of a congressional committee entering the foreign affairs field. McCarthy says he had no intention of interfering with Presidential perogatives. And agrees to turn his committee's information over to "proper authorities."

The House today passed a bill giving the states title to oil-rich submerged coastal lands. The vote was 285 to 108.

The President issued an order permitting the firing of "more than several hundred" government policy makers who hold civil service jobs. The President has explained that this is necessary to permit his top appointees to surround themselves with personnel of their own chosing.

~~The President also signed an order bringing the new Department of Health, Education and Welfare into being on April 11th. And he told Senator Saltonstall the defense program is now under "high-level study" and the President hopes the Senate will not move into this delicat field at this time.~~

The Russians have been trying to impress us with their desire for peace in the cold war. Today I asked my colleagues in London, Paris, Vienna and Seoul to record for us the reaction in the countries they cover. First we'll hear from Howard K. Smith in London. Howard, how are the British reacting?

(runs

You have been listening to Howard Smith in London,

Dave Schoenbrun in Paris

Alex Kendrick in Vienna and George Herman in Korea

Pan + Wadelek

recording what they have observed of reactions to the Russian moves, to convince us that they want peace in the cold war.

(M colleagues made their reports before the Russians at the United Nations announced that they are willing, in the main, to accept as a basis for discussion the western proposals for disarmament and international atomic controls.)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, April 1, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The Russians have been at considerable pains, trying to impress us with their desire for peace in the cold war. And today I asked my colleagues in London, Paris, Vienna, and Seoul to record for us the reaction in the countries they cover.

First we'll hear from Howard K. Smith in London.

Howard, how are the British reacting?

SMITH: The reaction to the Communist peace gestures here is, roughly, the same combination of hope and caution as elsewhere. If there is a difference, it's in the ratio of the ingredients. There's much more hope and much less caution in the mixture here in Britain than seems the case in America. In fact, the chief worry of the British is that America may be over-cautious and slow to grasp an opportunity. The London Times, for example, makes the point emphatically (I quote): "An essential factor in winning the cold war is that the free world shall not appear less desirous of peace than it really is. We cannot afford," says the Times in a comment directed at Washington, "to let our suspicions of the Communists make us seem less eager than the Chinese to end the Korean war." The same concern about America's reaction appears in the middle-road paper News-Chronicle. The Chronicle writes that the issue of peace in Korea may hinge on the admission or rejection of Communist China to membership in the U.N. "If so," (and I quote the Chronicle's question) "will President Eisenhower's Administration have the vision and the resolution to carve a new road out of the wilderness of past prejudices?"

The Conservative Daily Express is blunter still about its fears and suggests that America hand over the job of negotiating for all the West to Winston Churchill, "for," it writes, "the American Administration is a young Administration, not yet fully experienced, and no one is as qualified as this wisest and most experienced statesman of the West to explore the situation."

MURROW: Let's move on to Paris now and see what Dave Schoenbrun has to report.

What are the French saying tonite, Dave?

SCHOENBRUN: Peace, it's terrible! That's the unusual reaction of most statesmen and public commentators here in France today. Government officials put on serious frowns as they explained to us reporters the dangers inherent in the so-called Communist peace offensive. The newspaper Paris Press warns its readers not to be lulled into false security, and headlines this: "Contacts with the East, but vigilance in the West." The Government-controlled French radio hints that the Soviets may be seeking time to consolidate Malenkov's new regime. All French spokesmen admit that we should listen to sincere Communist offers to end the war in Korea, but they're insistently alarmed about the danger of putting too much trust in long-term Soviet intentions. French officials, particularly, waste no opportunity to stress the importance of last week's agreement in Washington between President Eisenhower and Premier Rene Mayer, that a truce in Korea must not be used by the Chinese to divert their attack to French Indochina.

And so it can be said that the leaders of French public and private life are not deluding themselves about the chances for peace on earth bursting forth overnite, or even of genuine peace being without its problems. And yet, in these first days of spring the hope for peace is growing in the hearts of Frenchmen, despite all the chill predictions, just as the first chestnut blossoms are swelling their buds and straining to flower over the boulevards of this city of Paris.

MURROW: From Vienna, my colleague Alex Kendrick is in a good spot to size up the other side of the story.

What is the Communist line at the moment, Alex?

KENDRICK: The headlines in Vienna's Communist newspaper today say, "Green Light for Peace", and the Communist press and radio of the satellite countries echo that sentiment. The Communist line is that full responsibility for continuing the Korean war is now on the United States, since, they say, the Chinese have finally made it possible to negotiate an honorable truce.

Unfortunately, that also seems to be the non-Communist line in this part of Europe - namely, that if the Korean war continues, it will be on American responsibility. The fall of the Stock Market on receipt of the latest peace news was generally reported here as a sign that some Americans don't really want to end hositilities. But beyond that, the other recent peace moves made by the Kremlin in the European sphere ~~have~~ had been accepted in Europe at a higher face value, evidently, than in America, and a great many people here now feel that maybe this time the Russians really do mean it.

The main fear is not that the West will refuse to negotiate, but that it may be inclined to press its principles too far - refuse to be satisfied with a peace in Korea and try to crowd the Russians out of Eastern Europe as well. The people in these parts are afraid of all the liberation and rollback talk they have been hearing from America, and they hope that we and the Russians both will be satisfied with a little uncomplicated peace for peace's sake.

MURROW: Finally, let's see what effect all this is having in Korea. Go ahead, George Herman!

HERMAN: Things are beginning to look mighty familiar around these parts, Ed. The base camp up at Munsan has dropped the relaxed and informal air it used to display. Admiral John Daniel has moved in, to head the liaison group on the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners and the camp has begun to bustle internally and to shoo away correspondents. The press train is back again on the siding, much to the disgust of Marine troops who have to walk around it to get to their freight trains. And with the increasingly familiar state of affairs has come the familiar breath of the past cycles of optimism and frustration alternating over hopes for peace. As a result, nobody today is willing to express any sanguine hope for success this time - not out loud, at least. But, without a word, engineers have moved into Panmunjom, reportedly to survey sites on which to set up hospital facilities for our returning prisoners. The helicopter landing strip may be expanded for immediate evacuation of those most in need of extensive care. And Colonel White, the 8th Army Public Information Officer, discussed with me today plans for broadcasting direct from the prisoner exchange site, when the prisoners start coming thru.

The Communists are busy, too. They've evacuated a village near Panmunjom, and we presume it's for, roughly, the same reason. Everybody's waiting and nobody wants to say anything that might spoil the charm. Even under extreme pressure, General Mark Clark would only say, "This is a good time not to be optimistic or too pessimistic."

MURROW: You have been listening to Howard Smith in London, Dave Schoenbrun in Paris, Alexander Kendrick in Vienna, and George Herman in Korea. They were recording what they have observed of reactions to the Russian moves in an attempt to convince us that they want a peace in the cold war.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

1953 APR -1 PM 4:52

CBS375

NY APR 1,1953

ED MURROW

WTOP

~~HOME THIS FOREWORD --~~

IT WOULD SEEM, FROM THE REPORTS OF MY COLLEAGUES TONIGHT, THAT WE ARE IN A PERIOD OF WATCHFUL WAITING. I REMEMBER WILLIAM SUMNER ONCE ~~SAYING~~ said, "THE EXTREME OF PESSIMISM IS THAT LIFE IS NOT WORTH LIVING., THE EXTREME OF OPTIMISM IS THAT EVERYTHING IS FOR THE BEST IN THE BEST OF WORLDS. NEITHER OF THESE IS TRUE." SOCRATES SUMMED IT ALL UP WHEN HE REMARKED "ALL I KNOW IS THAT I KNOW NOTHING." ~~END ED~~

AARON.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Russians made two moves today in their attempt to convince us of their desire for peace in the cold war. At the United Nations they apparently dropped their long insistence that all atomic weapons be banned before any discussions on disarmament and atomic controls get underway. By a series of mild amendments, they seemingly have adopted the western proposals as a "basis" for discussing disarmament. Allied officials who say "much study" is necessary point out that so far the Soviet suggestion is just a paper arrangement; they'll talk about our plan, instead of insisting on theirs. The second move from Moscow came with Foreign Minister Molotov's pledge of assistance to help get a Korean armistice on the basis of Chou en Lai's proposals. Molotov is ready to assist fully, thinks the Chinese proposal is "completely just" is confident it will be "understood" by the United States.

Indian Delegate Menon wants these proposals to be discussed at the United Nations. The General Assembly has recessed until Tuesday. The American view is that the discussions should be held at Panmunjom.

Winston Churchill told his House of Commons the Chinese plan "seems to offer a new hope" for ending the Korean war, "if it is not spoiled."

Our State Department welcomes Molotov's announcement, now being broadcast to the world by Radio Moscow in 15 languages. We want details. And the State Department does not believe, as some others do, that Molotov will insist on United Nations membership for Communist China as a basis for ending the Korean war.

In a few minutes we'll hear from some of my colleagues overseas on what the Russian "peace offensive" is achieving in various parts of the world.

In Korea, the battlefields were comparatively quiet today and the Pentagon reports that we suffered 404 casualties in the last week, including 80 killed.

Army Secretary Stevens, said in Seoul today, that the 8th army has enough ammunition "no matter what happens, it's well supplied to take care of itself."

And here in Washington, a Senate committee heard Generals Van Fleet and Almond, the former 10th corps commander tell about ammunition shortages in Korea when they were in command. General Van Fleet said the army was down to zero in some types of ammunition after we repulsed enemy attacks in May of 1951. The next month, in June when Malik of Russia made his first suggestion of a truce, Van Fleet wanted to conduct an amphibious operation. He was sure it could destroy the enemy armies in Korea. But, he says, General Ridgeway, then the Far Eastern commander, halted the plans. General Van Fleet also suggested that we may have lost Old Baldy hill in Korea recently because there was not enough "preventive fire" artillery attacks designed to stop the enemy before he starts. Both the army and the President have said ammunition shortages were not the cause of our defeat at Old Baldy.

Secretary of State Dulles and Senator McCarthy today discussed McCarthy's agreement with Greek ship owners that they would end their trading with Communist China. A State Department statement says: Mr. Dulles agreed that McCarthy's activities were "in the national interest." Dulles pointed out the dangers of a congressional committee entering the foreign affairs field. McCarthy says he had no intention of interfering with Presidential perogatives. And agrees to turn his committee's information over to "proper authorities."

The House today passed a bill giving the states title to oil-rich submerged coastal lands. The vote was 285 to 108.

The President issued an order permitting the firing of "more than several hundred" government policy makers who hold civil service jobs. The President has explained that this is necessary to permit his top appointees to surround themselves with personnel of their own choosing.

The Russians have been trying to impress us with their desire for peace in the cold war. Today I asked my colleagues in London, Paris, Vienna and Seoul to record for us the reaction in the countries they cover. First we'll hear from Howard K. Smith in London. Howard, how are the British reacting?

SMITH: The reaction to the Communist peace gestures here is, roughly, the same combination of hope and caution as elsewhere. If there is a difference, it's in the ratio of the ingredients. There's much more hope and much less caution in the mixture here in Britain than seems the case in America. In fact, the chief worry of the British is that America may be over-cautious and slow to grasp an opportunity. The London Times, for example, makes the point emphatically (I quote): "An essential factor in winning the cold war is that the free world shall not appear less desirous of peace than it really is. We cannot afford," says the Times in a comment directed at Washington, "to let our suspicions of the Communists make us seem less eager than the Chinese to end the Korean war." The same concern about America's reaction appears in the middle-road paper News-Chronicle. The Chronicle writes that the issue of peace in Korea may hinge on the admission or rejection of Communist China to membership in the U.N. "If so," (and I quote the Chronicle's question) "will President Eisenhower's Administration have the vision and the resolution to carve a new road out of the wildnerness of past prejudices?"

The Conservative Daily Express is blunter still about its fears and suggests that America hand over the job of negotiating for all the West to Winston Churchill, "for," it writes, "the American Administration is a young Administration, not yet fully experienced, and no one is as qualified as this wisest and most experienced statesman of the West to explore the situation."

MURROW: Let's move on to Paris now and see what Dave Schoenbrun has to report. What are the French saying tonight, Dave?

SCHOENBRUN: Peace, it's terrible! That's the unusual reaction of most statesmen and public commentators here in France today. Government officials put on serious frowns as they explained to us reporters the dangers inherent in the so-called Communist peace offensive. The newspaper Paris Press warns its readers not to be lulled into false security, and headlines this: "Contacts with the East, but vigilance in the West." The Government-controlled French radio hints that the Soviets may be seeking time to consolidate Malenkov's new regime. All French spokesmen admit that we should listen to sincere Communist offers to end the war in Korea, but they're insistently alarmed about the danger of putting too much trust in long-term Soviet intentions. French officials, particularly, waste no opportunity to stress the importance of last week's agreement in Washington between President Eisenhower and Premier Rene Mayer, that a truce in Korea must not be used by the Chinese to divert their attack to French Indochina.

And so it can be said that the leaders of French public and private life are not deluding themselves about the chances for peace on earth bursting forth overnite, or even of gunuine peace being without its problems. And yet, in these first days of spring the hope for peace is growing in the hearts of Frenchmen, despite all the chill predictions, just as the first chestnut blossoms are swelling their buds and straining to flower over the boulevards of this city of Paris.

MURROW: From Vienna, my colleague Alex Kendrick is in a good spot to size up the other side of the story. What is the Communist line at the moment, Alex?

KENDRICK: The headlines in Vienna's Communist newspaper today say, "Green Light for Peace," and the Communist press and radio of the satellite countries echo that sentiment. The Communist line is that full responsibility for continuing the Korean war is now on the United States, since, they say, the Chinese have finally made it possible to negotiate an honorable truce.

Unfortunately, that also seems to be the non-Communist line in this part of Europe - namely, that if the Korean war continues, it will be on American responsibility. The fall of the Stock Market on receipt of the latest peace news was generally reported here as a sign that some Americans don't really want to end hostilities. But beyond that, the other recent peace moves made by the Kremlin in the European sphere had been accepted in Europe at a higher face value, evidently, than in America, and a great many people here now feel that maybe this time the Russians really do mean it.

The main fear is not that the West will refuse to negotiate, but that it may be inclined to press its principles too far - refuse to be satisfied with a peace in Korea and try to crowd the Russians out of Eastern Europe as well. The people in these parts are afraid of all the liberation and rollback talk they have been hearing from America, and they hope that we and the Russians both will be satisfied with a little uncomplicated peace for peace's sake.

MURROW: Finally, let's see what effect all this is having in Korea. Go ahead, George Herman!

HERMAN: Things are beginning to look mighty familiar around these parts, Ed. The base camp up at Munsan has dropped the relaxed and informal air it used to display. Admiral John Daniel has moved in, to head the liaison group on the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners and the camp has begun to bustle internally and to shoo away correspondents. The press train is back again on the siding, much to the disgust of Marine troops who have to walk around it to get to their freight trains. And with the increasingly familiar state of affairs has come the familiar breath of the past cycles of optimism and frustration alternating over hopes for peace. As a result, nobody today is willing to express any sanguine hope for success this time - not out loud, at least. But, without a word, engineers have moved into Panmunjom, reportedly to survey sites on which to set up hospital facilities for our returning prisoners. The helicopter landing strip may be expanded for immediate evacuation of those most in need of extensive care. And Colonel White, the 8th Army Public Information Officer, discussed with me today plans for broadcasting direct from the prisoner exchange site, when the prisoners start coming through.

The Communists are busy, too. They've evacuated a village near Panmunjom, and we presume it's for, roughly, the same reason. Everybody's waiting and nobody wants to say anything that might spoil the charm. Even under extreme pressure, General Mark Clark would only say, "This is a good time not to be optimistic or too pessimistic."

MURROW: You have been listening to Howard Smith in London, Dave Schoenbrun in Paris, Alexander Kendrick in Vienna, and George Herman in Korea. They were recording what they have observed of reactions to the Russian moves in an attempt to convince us that they want a peace in the cold war.

My colleagues made their reports before the Russians at the United Nations announced that they are willing, in the main, to accept as a basis for discussion the western proposals for disarmament and international atomic controls.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem, from the reports of my colleagues tonight, that we are in a period of watchful waiting. I remember William Sumner once said: "The extreme of Pessimism is that life is not worth living. The extreme of optimism is that everything is for the best in the best of worlds. Neither of these is true." Socrates summed it all up when he remarked "all I know is that I know nothing."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thurs. 4/2/53

This is the news:

The President said today that this nation should take at face value, every Communist peace offer. He would have us continue to do this, until we determine that the Russian offers are not sincere. In a few minutes I should like to review the latest Soviet moves in their attempt to convince us, they want peace in the cold war. ~~suggestions from allied leaders.~~

At his news conference today the President said he hopes there will be a quick exchange of the sick and wounded prisoners in Korea. The truce negotiators meet on Monday. And Mr. Eisenhower also warned us not to forget the frustrating experiences, of the fruitless truce negotiations in the past.

In Korea today, the enemy broke a three-day lull, and sent an estimated 750-men against South Korean positions on the central front. The attack was stopped in 45 minutes.

The President had a number of comments today on domestic matters: He says the Republicans can keep control of Congress in the 1954 elections, if the party emphasizes the need for a progressive, sane program, based on the Constiution and the welfare of all the people, regardless of section or class. He is confident, despite some Senate demands for an investigation, that Commerce Secretary Weeks did not act unjustly in firing Dr. Allen V. Astin, the director of the Bureau of Standards. The President thinks its a crime against civilization that while some people are [redacted] hungry, some of the butter the government has bought to keep prices up, will spoil in storage.

A major part of the news conference was devoted to Senator McCarthy's announcement that he had negotiated a deal with Greek ship owners to stop trading with Communist China. Mutual Aid Director Stassen has charged this undermined government policy. Today the President disagreed..he though Mr. Stassen meant "infringed" on government policy. But he's not unhappy with Senator McCarthy. He doesn't think McCarthy had the slightest idea of "negotiating" anything because he knows, as all Senators know, that only the Executive can negotiate in such cases.

Today, Senator McCarthy charged that some of the stories and headlines on his meeting yesterday with Secretary Dulles [redacted] were examples of deliberate misrepresentation." He particularly objected to one that said "Dulles warns McCarthy on ship deal." In a letter to Mr. Dulles the Senator says he was not warned about anything..and there was no indication that he or his committee was interfering in foreign policy in any way. Mr. Dulles replied that the statement issued yesterday speaks for itself.

The President today sent Congress another reorganization plan. This one would centralize control of the whole rearmament program... give it strong leadership...establish a permanent Office of Defense Mobilization. This office would take over long-range defense planning activities, and ~~[illegible]~~ the activities of the National Security Resources Board. The President says all of this would lead to "significant economies."

Attorney General Brownell today ordered a grand jury to investigate charges that some people in Georgia have tried to sell recommendations for postoffice jobs in that state. Mr. Brownell does not says whether the suspected job-sellers are Republicans or Democrats.

The Senate Appropriations Committee has offered retired General Van Fleet a new job.. to be military adviser to the committee. Senator Ferguson says Van Fleet is considering the offer. Only yesterday the General repeated to the Armed Services Committee his charges about an ammunition shortage in Korea. And some Pentagon officials, who differ with the General's assessment of the ammunition situation, interpret the Appropriation Committee offer as a slap at them.

Today, Major General Ruffner, former commander of the 45th division in Korea, returned to San Fransisco and told reporters "I always had ammunition when I needed it." But in Korea, the former commander of the South Korean Capital Division, says the ROK army is suffering an acute and painful ammunition shortage.

Here in Washington, Republican Senator Williams of Delaware charges that the Truman re-rganization of the Internal Revenue Bureau was "a dismal failure." He says instead of taking the tax system out of politics the Democrats loaded the bureau with "political stooges" before they went out of office on January 20th. Senator Williams says former Treasury Secretary Snyder...former Revenue Commissioner Dunlap and former Civil Service Commissioner Ramspeck "violated their promise" to require competitive examinations for the top tax jobs.

The Senate today confirmed the nomination of William Howard

Taft the third..son of the Senator..to be our ambassador to Ireland.

The Atomic Energy Committee revealed today that after experimental atomic treatments, eight of ten hopeless brain cancer patients showed "improvement." The changes are said to have taken place "rapidly and spectacularly." None of the PATIENTS HAS been cured.

And the Atomic Energy Commission says its stopping the use of lie detectors, in the examination of workers at its Oak Ridge, Tennessee, plant. The Commission says the detectors help in minor thefts..but are not usefel in detecting intent to committ sabotage, or sympathy with subversive movements.

In Chicago, the Rocky MARCIANO-Joe Walcott heavyweight champaionship fight, has been postponed from April 10th to May first... because Marciano has a nose injury.

62.

MURROW APRIL 2, 1953

Today, most of the surface indications continued to point toward an easement of the tension between the Communists and the free world. The liason officers met at Pan Mun Jom to make arrangements for a meeting on Monday to discuss the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners of war. The Communists propose the immediate release of all prisoners who want to go home. Those who don't want to go home would be turned over to a neutral country. The Communists want the right to question those who refuse to return. There is no word about what happens to them if they still refuse to go home. The Communists say they have A TOTAL OF thirty-two hundred American prisoners, nine thousand South Koreans, and about a thousand prisoners from other members of the U. N. A U.N. spokesman says the Communist proposal is devoid of the usual propaganda; is businesslike in tone, and if they don't haggle over the exchange of the sick and wounded, it will show they really mean business.

In Berlin the Russians invited the United States and France to join with the British in discussing the control of air traffic into Berlin. Both countries accepted. Also in Berlin, the Communists stopped their delaying tactics at the check points on the big super-highway leading from Berlin to western Germany. Traffic is moving at an unprecedented speed. They also eased the restrictions on the [redacted] shipment to west Germany of goods made in Berlin.

18

At the same time skepticism about Communist intentions is reflected in the day's news. The South Korean National Assembly adopted unanimously a resolution opposing any armistice that does not unify the north and the south. It says that the proposal for prisoner exhange is merely a trick to gain time for another aggression. Here in Washington, Senator Saltonstall said it would be a great mistake for us to cutback our defense program. "We have a plan and we must stick to it." In Paris, General Ridgway said Russia's military strength has not diminished by one iota; their capacity continues to increase. Our forces in western Europe are still gravely inadequate." Lord Ismay, the Secretary-General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, says, to alter our policy just because some kites are being flown would be madness." He wants to wait for some practical results from the peace talks. It would be folly to relax or alter the policy we have been following. And General Al Gruenther, Chief of Staff to General Ridgway, told a Senate Committee yesterday, "we may be facing a period that will make the hardships and the sacrifices of the last two years look easy -- Russia aims to drive a wedge between us and our western allies. We've had enough experience with Russia to avoid falling into traps."

One of the most interesting stories today comes from the Russian radio in Vienna. It says this whole line of Russian policy was thought out by Stalin before his death. He knew that when he died the peace would be endangered because the western war-mongers might attack, so he instructed Commades Molotov, Beria and Malenkov to do what they are doing.. This is of course necessary to support the theory that Stalin was all-wise and all-knowing. And his pals are doing what he told them to do. Whatever the reasons, the Russian tactics are proving again that the Russians act while we react. They manage to appear to take the initiative. Even when we move first, they ignore it, wait a few weeks, accept our proposal, and then the initiative seems to be theirs. That's what they did with our proposal for the exchange of wounded prisoners. Simultaneously they undertook other peace maneuvers around the world so that in vast areas it is made to appear that they are taking the initiative for peace. This gives them a substantial propaganda victory. Many people relieved that the heat is temporarily turned off tend to forget that turning it on in the first place wasn't a very friendly action. The Russian technique of negotiating follows a predictable pattern. They begin by making exhorbitant demands, we refuse. So they cut their demands in half, but they are still exhorbitant, and if they had made their second demand first, we still would have turned it down. But since they have made a concession -- have retreated a little from their original position, many in the west think it would be foolish not to take them up. The Russian definition of compromise is getting something you aren't entitled to by backing down from your original demand of about twice that much.

Alex Kendrick reminds me from Vienna that during the war there was a Russian definition of cooperation heard frequently in Moscow; it was this: "Cooperation means that if you agree with us, you help us get what we want. But if you [redacted] don't agree, then you don't interfere with us getting [redacted] it for ourselves.

20

Probably the only thing we can do is what we are doing; go ahead and try to negotiate, but at the same time retain a healthy degree of skepticism and remain unconfused by this sudden neighborliness

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

Now, here's Bob Dixon.

There is a lot of advice available on this subject of how much to trust nations or individuals, ~~much of it contradictory~~. Steven Leacock held that "men are able to trust one another knowing the exact degree of dishonesty they are entitled to expect". But F. E. Hulme said, "Most of our suspicions of others are roused by what we know of ourselves". And LaFontaine had sound counsel when he said: "To know what to distrust is the mother of safety."

Good night and good luck.

Friday 4/3/53

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles, says Russia's recent peace propaganda should not blind us to the continuing grave danger, of her deeply hostile practises. At a newsconference today, the Secretary carefully outlined the situation as hee sees it. Here is a recorded portion of what ~~the secretary~~ Mr. Dulles said:

(runs 2;10 and ends: They do not blind us to the persistence of the danger.)

Mr. Dulles went on to say that we are prepared to test the Communist manuvers, while we carefully remain on guard. He feels that if the enemy agrees to exchange sick and wounded prisoners this might lead to an armistice in Korea. And he said the Republican Administration must be given a large degree of credit for the new Soviet attitude. He feels this was brought about by the Administration's strong position in Asia: specifically, the order to the Seventh Fleet, that would permit Nationalist attacks on the Chinese mainland.. the plans to build up the South Korean army.. and our increasing aid to the French in Indo-China. Mr. Dulles also told reporters that he feels a substantial cut can be made in the seven point six billions, former President Truman recommended for foreign aid. And the Secretart believes this cut can be made without jeopariding western security.

At another news conference, here in Washington, General Gruenther, chief of staff to General Ridgway at the North Atlantic Treaty Forces, told reporters the Russians are making a major effort to isolate us from our allies. He says this "divisive" policy presents a challenge to American leadership. He feels that if..if we should reach an armistice in Korea we must have "wisdom and imagination" to continue to resists Communist efforts to create disunity in the western camp. And General Greunther concedes that if the enemy relaxes his pressure in Europe and in Korea, it will make it more difficult for us to hold the Western alliance together.

Moscow's only contribution to its peace propaganda campaign today came with the announcement that 14 French civilians, who have been prisoners in North Korea since the war started, have now been released. They are heading for home by way of Moscow. It was only a week ago that Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov pledged to intervene with the North Koreans to free the Frenchmen. He has made a similar promise to the British. And today our State Department said it is making new efforts to try to get the release of 13 American civilians captured in Korea at the beginning of the war.

The Soviet press today gave much attention to Prime Minister Churchill's recent statement that he welcomes "what seemed to be" a Soviet desire for the improvement of international relations. And

On Formosa, Our Ambassador Rankin said that if we should agree to a Korean armistice it will not be "followed by a sell-out of Free China." He said "there will be no breaking of faith with our friends.

And in Korea itself, the Communists launched another attack on the central front. Infantrymen of the Third Division stopped them after a two-hour battle.

Not far away from the scene of this battle American Marines and army men have started to prepare for the re-opening of the truce talks on Monday. We asked Correspondent Lou Cioffi to tell us about the preparations. And here's what he had to record:

(runs 3;25 ending: ends This is Lou Cioffi in Korea)

At the United Nations today, Assembly President Pearson received a plea from North Korea, fully supporting the Chinese Communist truce proposals. The North Koreans says this is the only way "to prevent further bloodshed."

Here in Washington, Mutual Security Chief Stassen said today he is "happy" about the way the President has handled the dispute with Senator McCarthy over Greek ship owners. And Stassen says he agrees with the President that it would have been better for him to have used the word "infringe"...instead of saying that Senator McCarthy had "undermined" American foreign policy. Stassen also said he thinks "there has been a favorable outcome so far as the basic objectives are concerned.— Mr Stassen says -
The President's description of the whole situation at his news conference was excellent."

Bernard Baruch today accused the Administration of "dangerous thinking" in refusing to push for standby price and wage controls. Baruch says the Administration's

"lukewarm" attitude on emergency mobilization laws is what he called "folly and cowardice which in the past has resulted in disaster."

Dr. Allen V. Astin, who has been fired as director of the Bureau of Standards, says he believes "there has been no improper conduct in any of the Bureau's operations." Dr. Astin says he does not know if his removal had anything to do with politics. He is a registered Republican. Commerce Secretary Weeks who ordered the dismissal of Dr. Astin says he is setting up a committee of nine scientists to evaluate the functions and operations of the Bureau of Standards

George Meany, the president of the American Federation of Labor said today attacked a proposal by Al Hayes, the president of the A.F. of L. machinists union.. for compulsory arbitration to settle emergency disputes. Meany says this is "unworkable, unconstiutional and dangerous to the maintenance of a free economy." Meany has sent a letter to all state A.F. of L. officers saying the Hayes proposal "is bound to lead to wage fixing and price fixing by the government."

In Budapest tonight, on the eve of the 8th anniversary of Hungary's liberation by the Red army in the last war, the deputy premier said his country wants to live in peace with every country...including those with different forms of government.

In Rome, the Vatican newspaper says yesterday's attack on the Vatican by Moscow, indicates "a new chapter in Russia's anti-religious policy."

In the British colony of Kenya, British troops and native police today rounded up 7-thousand natives in pre-dawn raids. The British, acting in fear of a mass attack on Easter Sunday, LATER released all but 300 of the natives.

1953 APR -4 PM 5:27

CBS 858

NY APR 3,1953

ED MURROW WTOP

EASTER SUNDAY, AND A NEW BONNET SEEM TO GO TOGETHER. APPARENTLY THE LADIES AGREE WITH OLIVER GOLDSMITH THAT " A MODEST WOMAN, DRESSED OUT IN ALL HER FINERY, IS THE MOST TREMENDOUS OBJECT, OF THE WHOLE CREATION". ABOUT ALL THATS LEFT FOR MORTAL MAN TO DO IS REPEAT WHAT LEIGH HUNT ONCE SAID " WE ARE NOT FOND OF A NEW HAT. THERE IS A CERTAIN INSOLENCE ABOUT IT." BUT HAPPY EASTER ANYWAY

END AARON

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Ed. R. Murrow
17th

Friday, April 3, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... At a news conference today, the Secretary carefully outlined the situation as he sees it. Here is a recorded portion of what Mr. Dulles said.

SPEAKER: Marine and Army engineering officers converged on Munsan and Panmunjom. They immediately began to survey sites for a clearing hospital to take care ofthe sick and wounded as they come through. That is "if" they come through.

Work has already started on Freedom Village, a prefabricated city through which all returning prisoners will be processed.

At Munsan, the press train once more rolled into its old place at the railhead there to accomodate the many United Nations correspondents expected to coverthe event.

And the Army gave the operation a name: They're calling it 'Little Switch.' And in case an armistice is agreed upon, they'll call the exchange of the remainder of the prisoners 'Big Switch.'

For the past three days reporters have been hounding Allied officers here in Seoul or at the base camp at Munsan for any scraps of news they may be willing to give out. But an official silence has fallen over the upcoming negotiations. Even the jeep drivers at base camp had been ordered not to talk for fear of throwing a monkey wrench into the works.

Yesterday, I spoke with Admiral Daniel. He told me he hopes the communists mean ~~this time~~ business this time, but he refused to speculate. He said "I won't make the mistake of being too optimistic."

But although no one is saying it, the feeling of optimism is too strong to be missed. Everyone you speak to, every action taken by the United Nations Command fairly shouts new and strong hope that the end to this war may be at last in sight.

The GI in Korea, the guy in the line, is just sitting back and watching. Most of the men who do the fighting, who meet the communists in the dark at night, in the trenches and bunkers, the infantrymen, isn't engaging in any speculation. The stakes are too high for him. It's a matter of life and death, and a man gets superstitious about tempting the fates.

To Marines, the memory of Vegas Hill and Reno was too fresh. Soldiers of the 7th Division remember Old Baldy. They're all hoping. But they're keeping their rifles clean anyway.

In the midst of all this are the South Koreans. They don't trust the communists and have put it in writing. A resolution passed by the National Assembly, just a few days ago, branded the latest enemy peace move as a 'trick' to gain time for another aggression. It opposed any peace in Korea that does not include unification of both north and south.

President Syngman Rhee has said in the past that to attain this goal, he is willing to fight on against the communists alone. Whether he can or will do it are other questions.

But Admiral Daniel summed it up very nicely today for United Nations commanders here in Korea, he said "My main concern is getting our boys back."

Well, it's up to the communists now. The next few weeks will tell whether they are sincere in their desire for peace. (cut)

MURROW: ... Chinese mainland. The plans to build up the South Korean Army and our increasing aid to the French in Indo-China. Mr. Dulles also told reporters ...

American Marines and Army men have started to prepare for the reopening of the truce talks on Monday. We asked our correspondent Lou Cioffi to tell us about the preparations. And here's what he had to record.

CIOFFI: Marine and Army engineering officers converged on Munsan and Panmunjom. They immediately began to survey sites for ...

On Monday, we'll get our first indications. A liaison team will climb into helicopters for the trip to Panmunjom, followed by correspondents in jeeps.

Cameras will click and turn as the delegates enter the tent, and then leave.

A lot of people have a large stake in what will be said in that tent. A couple of 'yesses' will signal the end to a bloody and hopeless war. One 'no' and we're back where we started from, faced with the inevitable prospect of increased fighting and dying. A few prayers might help at this point.

This is Lou Cioffi in Korea.

MURROW: Well, if you've heard the same thing twice tonight, I'm a little confused, too. Apparently, what happened was that someone pushed the wrong button.

In any event, at the United Nations today ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 3, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

(HARD NEWS NOT AVAILABLE)

Not far away from the scene of this battle American Marines and army men have started to prepare for the re-opening of the truce talks on Monday. We asked correspondent Lou Cioffi to tell us about the preparations. And here's what he had to record:

CIOFFI: Marine and Army engineering officers converged on Munsan and Punmunjom. They immediately began to survey sites for a clearing hospital to take care of the sick and wounded as they come through. That is "if" they come through. Work has already started on Freedom Village, a prefabricated city through which all returning prisoners will be processed. At Munsan, the press train once more rolled into its old place at the railhead there to accomodate the many United Nations correspondents expected to cover the event.

And the Army gave the operation a name: They're calling it "Little Switch." And in case an armistice is agreed upon, they'll call the exchange of the remainder of the prisoners "Big Switch."

For the past three days reporters have been hounding Allied officers here in Seoul or at the base camp at Munsan for any scraps of news they may be willing to give out. But an official silence has fallen over the upcoming negotiations. Even the jeep drivers at base camp had been ordered not to talk for fear of throwing a monkey wrench into the works. Yesterday, I spoke with Admiral Daniel. He told me he hopes the communists mean business this time, but he refused to speculate. He said "I won't make the mistake of being too optimistic." But although no one is saying it, the feeling of optimism is too strong to be missed. Everyone you speak to, every action taken by the United Nations Command fairly shouts new and strong hope that the end to this war may be at last in sight. The GI in Korea, the guy in the line, is just sitting back and watching. Most of the men who do the fighting, who meet the communists in the dark at night, in the trenches and bunkers, the infantrymen, isn't engaging in any speculation. The stakes are too high for him. It's a matter of life and death, and a man gets superstitious about tempting the fates. To Marines, the memory of Vegas Hill and Reno was too fresh. Soldiers of the 7th Division remember Old Baldy. They're all hoping, but they're keeping their rifles clean anyway. In the midst of all this are the South Koreans. They don't trust the communists and have put it in writing. A resolution passed by the National Assembly, just a few days ago, branded the latest enemy peace move as a "trick" to gain time for another aggression. It opposed any peace in Korea that does not include unification of both north and south. President Syngman Rhee has said in the past that to attain this goal, he is willing to fight on against the communists alone. Whether he can or will do it are other questions. But Admiral Daniel summed it up very nicely today for United Nations commanders here in Korea. He said, "My main concern is getting our boys back." Well, it's up to the communists now. The next few weeks will tell whether they are sincere in their desire for peace. On Monday, we'll get our first indications. A liaison team will climb into helicopters for the trip to Panmunjom, followed by correspondents in jeeps. Cameras will click and turn as the delegates enter the tent, and then leave. A lot of people have a large stake in what will be said in that tent. A couple of "yesses" will signal the end to a bloody and hopeless war. One "no" and we're back where we started from, faced with the inevitable prospect of increased fighting and dying. A few prayers might help at this point. This is Lou Cioffi in Korea.

MURROW: At the United Nations today, Assembly President Pearson received a plea from North Korea, fully supporting the Chinese Communist truce proposals. The North Koreans says this is the only way "to prevent further bloodshed."

Here in Washington, Mutual Security Chief Stassen said today he is "happy" about the way the President has handled the dispute with Senator McCarthy over Greek ship owners. And Stassen says he agrees with the President that it would have been better for him to have used the word "infringe" instead of saying that Senator McCarthy had "undermined" American foreign policy. Stassen also said he thinks "there has been a favorable outcome so far as the basic objectives are concerned. Mr. Stassen says, the President's description of the whole situation at his news conference was excellent."

Bernard Baruch today accused the Administration of "dangerous thinking" in refusing to push for standby price and wage controls. Baruch says the Administration's "lukewarm" attitude on emergency mibilization laws is what he called "folly and cowardice which in the past has resulted in disaster."

Dr. Allen V. Astin, who has been fired as director of the Bureau of Standards, says he believes "there has been no improper conduct in any of the Bureau's operations." Dr. Astin says he does not know if his removal had anything to do with politics. He is a registered Republican. Commerce Secretary Weeks who ordered the dismissal of Dr. Astin says he is setting up a committee of nine scientists to evaluate the functions and operations of the Bureau of Standards.

George Meany, the president of the American Federation of Labor today attacked a proposal by Al Hayes, the president of the A.F.L. machinists union for compulsory arbitration to settle emergency disputes. Meany says this is "unworkable, unconstitutional and dangerous to the maintenance of a free economy." Meany has sent a letter to all state A.F.L. officers saying the Hayes proposal "is bound to lead to wage fixing and price fixing by the government."

In Budapest tonight, on the eve of the 8th anniversary of Hungary's liberation by the Red army in the last war, the deputy premier said his country wants to live in peace with every country including those with different forms of government.

In Rome, the Vatican newspaper says yesterday's attack on the Vatican by Moscow indicates "a new chapter in Russia's anti-religious policy."

In the British colony of Kenya, British troops and native police today rounded up 7-thousand natives in pre-dawn raids. The British, acting in fear of a mass attack on Easter Sunday, later released all but 300 of the natives.

This is Ed Murro. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Easter Sunday and a new bonnet seem to go together. Apparently the ladies agree with Oliver Goldsmith that "a modest woman, dressed out in all her finery, is the most tremendous object of the whole creation." About all that's left for mortal man to do is repeat what Leigh Hunt once said "We are not fond of a new hat. There is a certain insolence about it. But Happy Easter anyway.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday April 6, 1953

This is the news:

Rear Admiral Daniel, our chief negotiator at Panmunjom, reports that "distinct progress" was made at the resumed truce talks. He says the attitude of the Communists was very objective. [redacted] At the first meeting we proposed to start exchanging sick and wounded prisoners seven days after an agreement is reached on procedure. We would give the enemy 500 Chinese or North Korean prisoners every day until the exchange is completed. We asked how many of our sick men the Communists hold. They said they will give us this number later and will comment on our other proposals at a later meeting. The enemy negotiators said that before any exchange is made both sides must agree on the "category" of prisonrs to be returned. [They did not explain what this means.] And their chief negotiator said they are prepared to send home or to a neutral country.. this, too, was left vague.. all sick and injured prisoners. Later, a Chinese broadcast indicated this means not just the seriously sick and wounded, but all sick and wounded. [The negotiators meet again in about an hour.]

About a half-mile away from the neutral corridor that leads to Panmunjom, the Marines fought today with 175 Chinese Communists. The enemy force retreated after an hour and a half of battle.

~~In Indo-China today, Adlai Stevenson ended a week's study of the military, political and economic picture in the land where the French and their forces have been fighting for six years. He called it "the most perplexing situation I have ever seen"...said "I'm afraid its a long, hard war with no easy solution."~~

The Russian newspaper Pravda boasted today that the Kremlin's action in freeing 15 doctors, formerly charged with plotting to murder Soviet officials, is proof [redacted] of the "great strength of the Soviet structure"..proof that the government is revealing faults in its machinery. At the same time Pravda says that one Semyon Ignatiev, recently named to the five-man Communist Party secretariat, formerly served as minister of state security. He's accused of "political blindness and gullibility" for accepting the false charges against the doctors.

Here in New York today, Wall Street experts said a general "nervousness" was responsible for another drop in prices..the worst in two and a half years. Many prices went down from one to six dollars. [redacted]

In the last five Stock Market sessions..since the Chinese first offered to exchange ~~[illegible]~~ sick/wounded war prisoners..the market has dropped five billion dollars in stock valuations.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles revealed that the Eisenhower Administration will not sign the United Nations treaties on human rights...and the political rights of women. Both were guided through the U.N. by Mrs. Roosevelt. And her successor, Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, is now in Geneva, working on the human rights treaty. The Secretary made his views known at a Senate hearing considering a Constiutional amendment sponsored by Senator Bricker and 63 others. This amendment would limit the President's power and authority to negotiate treaties. The Secretary passed on President Eisenhower's word that the leaders and committees of congress will be consulted when any serious treaty questions arise. But the Administration is opposed to having the treaty power of the President hampered or diluted. Secretary Dulles says this proposed amendment could seriously weaken our conduct of foreign affairs.

~~Flanagan~~

~~The President today named Arthur S. Fleming, president of Ohio Wesleyan university, to be the director of defense mobilization.~~

~~and~~ The governmnt ~~reports~~ TODAY Reported a sharp drop in the cost of living during February. This will mean a three cents an hour wage cut for about a million and a third railroad workers. Their contract is tied to the cost of living.

Senator Taft said today, in an article in Look magazine and an interview with reporters, that the Eisenhower Administration is not getting ~~an~~ a break from a majority of the commentators and columnists in Washington. He says they tend to be anti-Republican.. view the Administration with a critical eye.. and exaggerate Republican party differences. The Senator suggests that various Senate committees investigate the Truman administration to dramatize the differences between Democratic and Republican control of the federal government. He also feels the Republican National Committee has not done a good publicity job.

Some newspapers, radio and television stations came under attack from a group of supporters of Senator McCarthy. Twenty-eight writers, authors, actors and others, say hardly any critics reviewed the Senator's book "McCartyism, the fight for America." They say Owen Lattimore's book, "Ordeal by Slander, "was given most extravagant and critical support." The 28 feel this is a blight on a profession "supposedly objective and COURAGEOUS."

Former Attorney General Francis Biddle today asked the Justice Department to investigate a Senate sub-committee report questioning, among other things, whether Senator McCarthy unlawfully used money donated to fight Communism, for his own use and profit. Biddle wrote as chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action.

Senator McCarthy says Biddle "has a long record of defense of Communism and Communist causes and is thoroughly discredited."

Out in Nevada today, the atomic energy Committee exploded another atomic device.. this one at more than 5-thousand feet above the ground... [higher than any airburst yet.]

And at the White House, 30-thousand children and adults rolled eggs on the lawn. The President paid a brief visit. His grandson, David, lost some of his easter eggs. And, in all, 110 children were lost... temporarily. The crowd left an estimated two tons of empty boxes, napkins, empty soft drink bottles.. and hard boiled eggs.

West Germany's Chancellor Konrad Adenauer arrived here in New York today..on his way to Washington. He expressed gratitude for America's help and kindness to his country.

Edward R. Murrow: April 6, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

General Van Fleet has been making considerable news, with his allegations that he suffered from a chronic shortage of ammunition, during the twenty-two months he commanded the 8th Army in Korea. This is an issue upon which able military men of integrity and skill may differ. Van Fleet was in the field; his superiors were in the Pentagon; there is a long history tending to prove that field commanders never feel that they have enough men or metal; they always want more. In this instance Generals Bradley and Collins disagree with Van Fleet, and under questioning Van Fleet has agreed, that he always had sufficient ammunition available to stop an enemy offensive.

It should be remembered that on March 4th General Van Fleet stated, that the 8th Army, and its attached units, were the best equipped, best fed, best clothed, best housed, best cared for, of any army the United States had ever produced. He said there were no serious shortages. Since that date, General Van Fleet has spoken at length about serious, critical and prolonged shortages of ammunition. (These statements do not conform with his earlier pronouncements.) However, ammunition available at the guns, involves highly technical logistical considerations, that often go beyond the knowledge of the non-professional soldier. Artillery ammunition is always rationed, except when a position that must be held is endangered, and when that happens there is no limit to the rate of fire except what the guns will stand. They shoot the works -

But General Van Fleet has made a much more serious allegation, and has made it repeatedly. He has claimed that he could have achieved victory in Korea in the summer of 1951, had he not been stopped or held back by orders. He has said that he was "crying to be turned loose" to destroy the enemy, in June of 1951. Last week General Van Fleet told a sub-committee of the Senate Armed Services Committee that he had wanted to make an amphibious landing in June of 1951, which would have captured hundreds of thousands of prisoners and much heavy equipment. On this occasion he was not claiming that complete victory could have been achieved.

This argument has reached the highest ranks in the Pentagon, and General Van Fleet's testimony is apparently aimed at Generals Bradley and Collins. Both men rose to high command under a Democratic administration, as did General Eisenhower, and that fact neither proves nor disproves their capabilities for command.

There was, as the record will show, a lag in the production of artillery ammunition when the change was made from brass to steel casing. But the serious charge made by General Van Fleet is that he was stopped by higher orders from winning the war in 1951. This may be what General Van Fleet believes now; but it was not what he believed in June of 1951. There is in the hands of the Senate sub-committee investigating this matter a message from General Van Fleet, sent in June of '51, stating in effect that he believed it possible to make an advance of roughly twenty miles, but that the casualties involved in such an offensive would be unacceptable.

This reporter does not pretend to know why the Pentagon or the sub-committee has failed to make public this communication, but it does exist. And when that estimate of the situation is compared with General Van Fleet's current statements, he is placed in the role of a ~~Sunday~~ Monday morning quarter-back in a situation that is rather more serious than any football game. When a field commander speaks of a limited advance involving unacceptable casualties, and later speaks of "crying to be turned loose", and says that he could have achieved victory in Korea if his counter-attack had not been stopped - then the discrepancy between the two statements requires some explanation.

MURROW: April 6, 1953. WORD FOR TODAY.

It is clear [redacted] that General Van Fleet has not been consistent in his statements - few people are. Macaulay once said: "Man is so inconsistent a creature that it is impossible to reason from his belief to his conduct, or from one part of his belief to another." And Aristotle said: "One may go wrong in many different directions, but right only in one."

GOODNIGHT AND GOOD LUCK!

Tuesday April 7/953

This is the news:

Ambassador Lodge told the United Nations today that "progress is being made" at the Panmunjom truce talks. Mr. Lodge said this government "hopes the progress will result in an armistice." And Soviet sources told reporters Russia will not press for a United Nations debate on the Chinese truce offer. The Russians also appealed to the United States to drop its demand for an impartial investigation of the enemy's charge that we have used germ warfare in Korea. Soviet delegate Zorin says there is no need to consider the American plan now. He would have us ratify the Geneva protocl prohibiting bacterioloigical warfare..something we refuse to do because we say it cannot be enforced.

At Panmunjom today, both sides agreed in principle to exchange all their sick and wounded war prisoners..not just those seriously ill. We accepted an enemy proposal to send to a neutral country those prisoners who do not want to return home. Rear Admiral Daniel our chief negotiator says the Communist attitude is "very favorable." And the Peiping radio says "an early armistice can be achieved." In little over an hour from now the Communists may tell us how many of our soldiers are on their sick or wounded list. Today, on the battlefield, the enemy brought a Peurto Rican marine, ~~[illegible]~~ criticially wounded, to within 50 yards of our lines. And then broadcast a message to our men to come and get him. We did. On the central front, South Korean troops twice won and twice lost a strategic hill. And our jets shot down two enemy Migs and damaged seven others.

The President said today that American troops will remain in Korea after the fighting there stops. In a brief talk at ~~the~~ a United Defense Fund meeting in Washington, Mr. Eisenhower said we'll have to keep allied soldiers in Korea for quite awhile. And he warned that if a truce is achieved, it will be followed by a "trying period".. during which impatient soldiers, anxious to get home, "will grouse and gripe." He said this will create a new demand for U.S.O. work.

The President today re-affirmed America's interest in the promotion of human rights through the United Nations. He took no note of Secretary of State Dulles' statement yesterday that we do not plan to sign a U.N. treaty on human rights.

And Mr. Eisenhower called on Congress to extend the present reciprocal trade act for one year after its June 12th ~~[illegible]~~ expiration date. He wants the year to make a thorough study of our economic foreign policy.

Attorney General Brownell told a Senate committee today that it would be "against the best interests of the country" to restrict the President's treaty-making powers through a proposed constiutional amendment. Mr. Brownell said to do so at this time, when the world is "fraught with peril" would be to "dissipate our responsibility and authority for meeting the world-wide issues which affect our welfare."

Washington reporters were told today that the government plans to urge our allies to get ready for a long-range defense effort. It would be aimed at stopping Communist aggression should it come five or ten years from now or later. The Administration feels that it ~~should~~ must drop the idea of any particular year.. this one or the next one.. marking a "maximum danger" period. The idea would be to trim our defense spending to a level which can be sustained over a long time..without putting our economic stability in danger. We'll urge a similar plan for our allies.

Today, Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a Senate committee that the military budget will have to be cut four billion dollars if the budget is to be balanced next year. [redacted] Senator Taft says Defense Secretary Wilson has been talking about a two billion dollar reduction in military spending. Senator Bridges of New Hampshire told reporters, after a White House visit, that the budget can be cut, all along the line, "without impairing efficiency or national security." And Chairman Johnson of the Senate Democratic policy committee, says Democrats are worried about what he called "panicky" talk of cutting military spending, if a truce is negotiated in Korea. On the other hand, Republican Senator Dirksen says such a truce must lead to a "substantial reduction" in military spending.

The Senate Banking Committee today voted to give the Federal Reserve Board stand-by authority, to curb consumer and real estate credit, any time it thinks this should be done. Chairman Capehart says the Administration requested this.

In Detroit, General Motors announced that because of a drop in the nation's cost of living index, it will cut, by one cent an hour, its cost of living allowance to some 397-thousand employes.

In Denver, Secretary of Agriculture Benson says, there has been "a deliberate attempt to unload responsibility" on the Republicans for a drop in farm prices. Benson says the kind of price supports the administration inherited from the Truman administration is "putting farm products into storage rather than into stomachs."

In Washington, Herbert Philbrick, who worked inside the Communist party as an F.B.I. counter-spy for nine years, told a Senate committee that a few years ago there were seven or eight Communists in Boston "posing as ministers of the gospel."

In Yugoslavia today, Foreign Minister Kardelj said if the Russians really want peace everything should be done to make an agreement with them. But, he said, "we have no illussions." He feels that the new Soviet leaders are trying to "wash their hands" of Stalin's foreign policies.

Today the Moscow Press and radio attacked the United States and other western powers for racial persecution. Many interpret this as an attempt to divert attention from Moscow's own anti-Semetic activities.

Edward R. Murrow: April 7, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer spent an hour with the President today. He is the first German head of state ever to visit this country. After the conference, Adenauer said he is confident he will be able to reach agreement with President Eisenhower, on a wide range of European problems. He described it as "a very pleasant and inspiring XXX talk."

Presumably the two main questions in these talks with the Germans, will involve their dispute with France over the Saar, and the question of German participation in a European Army. But there is a more fundamental German question just over the horizon. Germany is divided; allied and Russian troops face each other across that narrow line. Chancellor Adenauer rules with a narrow majority, and has an election coming up in September. There are about eighteen million Germans living East of the Iron Curtain. The great single political, sentimental and emotional drive in Germany is toward unifying the whole country. No politician, of whatever Party in the West, can be elected without supporting German claims ~~xxxxxxxx~~ for unification. Germany could be united, and only the Russians could do it. They are capable of agreeing to free, internationally-supervised elections throughout all Germany. They have in the past urged that Germany have its own national Army, Air Force and Navy; and this contains considerable appeal for a people skilled in arms.

If the Russians were to propose a national election, followed by the withdrawal of all occupation troops, we could not refuse to discuss the proposal. German Communists could not win that first election; ~~XXXX XXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ this would appear to be a defeat for the Communists in Germany. But it would provide unity, the removal of the troops of occupation, and probably also the political defeat of those who advocate joining with the West. Such a development could destroy the very basis of American foreign policy in Europe. It could and probably would be the end of any chance for a European Army or a European defense community. It could and probably would mean the re-creation of a powerful and unified Germany which could bargain effectively with both the East and the West. Nothing of any real or lasting importance can be achieved in Western Europe without Germany. There is the key to the whole business. We have based much of our policy on a divided Germany. The Russians have the capacity to unite it.

Many of our leaders in the field of foreign affairs have contended that in order to join with Russia, Germany would have to go Communist. History is against any such conclusion. A non-Communist Germany joined with Russia in 1922, and Hitlerite Germany joined with Moscow in 1939.

The Russians are committed to do what they can to prevent the unification of Western Europe. They have explained to us in great detail how they plan to use trade as an instrument of foreign policy.

Throughout history defeated nations have invariably wanted three things: the restoration of their pre-war frontiers; the removal of the armies of occupation; and the restoration of a degree of prosperity through trade. The Russians are in a position to propose, and probably to carry out all three of those requirements. They could do it at the price of losing a political election in Germany, and of pulling back their armies - but our armies would have to be pulled back too, perhaps three thousand miles not just to the frontier. Moreover, the Russians could hold out to the Germans, particularly the industrialists of the Ruhr, the prospect of vast markets stretching all the way to the China Sea. (And ideological differences are no barrier to trade.)

The Russians warned us, in tens of thousands of words last October, that they were going to play the long-range, patient dividing game. No one knows what they are actually going to do; but it would be consistent with the policies they are now pursuing for them to confront us with a proposal for really free elections in all of Germany; the withdrawal of all troops of occupation; and the unification of the country. They might well reckon that any short-term political defeat they might suffer at the polls in Germany would be offset by frustrating our major purpose in Europe. It In the long view, their chances with a united and independent Germany might look better than their prospects with a divided Germany, most of which is firmly tied to the West. If the Russians do advance such a proposal, we shall need a new policy - and quickly.

No one can accurately say how the German problem will be resolved. But we would do well to remember Josiah Holland's observation that "a nation is a thing that lives and acts like a man." With this in mind, Harry Overstreet once said: "The psychological growth of man must keep pace with his physical powers; every increase in power must be matched by an increase in understanding."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Ambassador Lodge told the United Nations today that "progress is being made" at the Panmunjom truce talks. Mr. Lodge said this government "hopes the progress will result in an armistice." And Soviet sources told reporters Russia will not press for a United Nations debate on the Chinese truce offer. The Russians also appealed to the United States to drop its demand for an impartial investigation of the enemy's charge that we have used germ warfare in Korea. Soviet Delegate Zorin says there is "no need to consider" the American plan now. He would have us ratify the Geneva protocol prohibiting bacteriological warfare, something we refuse to do because we say it cannot be enforced.

At Panmunjom today, both sides agreed in principle to exchange all their sick and wounded war prisoners, not just those seriously ill. We accepted an enemy proposal to send to a neutral country those prisoners who do not want to return home. Rear Admiral Daniel our chief negotiator says the Communist attitude is "very favorable." And the Peiping radio says "an early armistice can be achieved." In little over an hour from now the Communists may tell us how many of our soldiers are on their sick or wounded list. Today, on the battlefield, the enemy brought a Puerto Rican marine, critically wounded, to within 50 yards of our lines. And then broadcast a message to our men to come and get him. We did. On the central front, South Korean troops twice won and twice lost a strategic hill. And our jets shot down two enemy Migs and damaged seven others.

The President said today that American troops will remain in Korea after the fighting there stops. In a brief talk at a United Defense Fund meeting in Washington, Mr. Eisenhower said we'll have to keep allied soldiers in Korea for quite awhile. And he warned that if a truce is achieved, it will be followed by a "trying period" during which impatient soldiers, anxious to get home, "will grouse and gripe." He said this will create a new demand for U.S.O. work.

The President today re-affirmed America's interest in the promotion of human rights through the United Nations. He took no note of Secretary of State Dulles' statement yesterday that we do not plan to sign a U.N. treaty on human rights.

And Mr. Eisenhower called on Congress to extend the present reciprocal trade act for one year after its June 12th expiration date. He wants the year to make a thorough study of our economic foreign policy.

Attorney General Brownell told a Senate committee today that it would be "against the best interests of the country" to restrict the President's treaty-making powers through a proposed constitutional amendment. Mr. Brownell said to do so at this time, when the world is "fraught with peril" would be to "dissapate our responsibility and authority for meeting the world-wide issues which affect our welfare."

Washington reporters were told today that the government plans to urge our allies to get ready for a long-range defense effort. It would be aimed at stopping Communist aggression should it come five or ten years from now or later. The Administration feels that it must drop the idea of any particular year, this one or the next one, marking a "maximum danger" period. The idea would be to trim our defense spending to a level which can be sustained over a long time, without putting our economic stability in danger. We'll urge a similar plan for our allies.

Today, Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a Senate committee, that the military budget will have to be cut four billion dollars if the budget is to be balanced next year. Senator Taft says Defense Secretary Wilson has been talking about a two billion dollar reduction in military spending. Senator Bridges of New Hampshire told reporters, after a White House visit, that the budget can be cut, all along the line "without impairing efficiency or national security." And Chairman Johnson of the Senate Democratic Policy committee says Democrats are worried about what he called "panicky" talk of cutting military spending if a truce is negotiated in Korea. On the other hand, Republican Senator Dirksen says such a truce must lead to a "substantial reduction" in military spending.

The Senate Banking Committee today voted to give the Federal Reserve Board standy-by authority to curb consumer and real estate credit, any time it thinks this should be done. Chairman Capehart says the Administration requested this.

In Detroit, General Motors announced that because of a drop in the nation's cost of living index, it will cut by one cent an hour its cost of living allowance to some 397-thousand employees.

In enver, Secretary of Agriculture Benson says there has been a "deliberate attempt to unload responsibility" on the Republicans for a drop in farm prices. Benson says the kind of price supports the administration inherited from the Truman administration is "putting farm products into storage rather than into stomachs."

In Washington, Herbert Philbrick, who worked inside the Communist party as an F.B.I. counter-spy for nine years, told a Senate committee that a few years ago there were seven or eight Communists in Boston "posing as ministers of the gospel."

In Yugoslavia today, Foreign Minister Kardelj said if the Russians really want peace everything should be done to make an agreement with them. But, he said, "we have no illusions." He feels that the new Soviet leaders are trying to "wash their hands" of Stalin's foreign policies.

Today the Moscow Press and radio attacked the United States and other western powers for racial persecution. Many interpret this as an attempt to divert attention from Moscow's own anti-Semetic activities.

West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer spent an hour with the President today. He is the first German head of state ever to visit this country. After the conference Adenauer said he is confident he will be able to reach agreement with President Eisenhower on a wide range of European problems. He described it as "a very pleasant and inspiring talk."

Presumably the two main questions in these talks with the Germans, will involve their dispute with France over the Saar, and the question of German participation in a European Army. But there is a more fundamental German question just over the horizon. Germany is divided; allied and Russian troops face each other across that narrow line. Chancellor Adenauer rules with a narrow majority and has an election coming up in September. There are about eighteen million Germans living East of the Iron Curtain. The great single political, sentimental and emotional drive in Germany is toward unifying the whole country. No politician of whatever Party in the West can be elected without supporting German claims for unification. Germany could be united, and only the Russians could do it. They are capable of agreeing to free, internationally-supervised elections throughout all Germany. They have in the past urged that Germany have its own national Army, Air Force and Navy; and this contains considerable appeal for a people skilled in arms.

If the Russians were to propose a national election, followed by the withdrawal of all occupation troops, we could not refuse to discuss the proposal. German Communists could not win that first election; this would appear to be a defeat for the Communists in Germany. But it would provide unity, the removal of the troops of occupation, and probably also the political defeat of those who advocate joining with the West. Such a development could destroy the very basis of American foreign policy in Europe. It could and probably would be the end of any chance for a European Army or a European defense community. It could and probably would mean the re-creation of a powerful and unified Germany which could bargain effectively with both the East and the West. Nothing of any real or lasting importance can be achieved in Western Europe without Germany. There is the key to the whole business. We have based much of our policy on a divided Germany. The Russians have the capacity to unite it.

Many of our leaders in the field of foreign affairs have contended that in order to join with Russia, Germany would have to go Communist. History is against any such conclusion. A non-Communist Germany joined with Russia in 1922, and Hitlerite Germany joined with Moscow in 1939.

The Russians are committed to do what they can to prevent the unification of Western Europe. They have explained to us in great detail how they plan to use trade as an instrument of foreign policy.

Throughout history defeated nations have invariably wanted three things: the restoration of their pre-war frontiers; the removal of the armies of occupation; and the restoration of a degree of prosperity through trade. The Russians are in a position to propose, and probably to carry out all three of those requirements. They could do it at the price of losing a political election in Germany, and of pulling back their armies - but our armies would have to be pulled back too, perhaps three thousand miles not just to the frontier. Moreover, the Russians could hold out to the Germans, particularly the industrialists of the Ruhr, the prospect of vast markets stretching all the way to the China Sea. (And ideological difference are no barrier to trade.)

The Russians warned us, in tens of thousands of words last October, that they were going to play the long-range, patient dividing game. No one knows what they are actually going to do; but it would be consistent with the policies they are now pursuing for them to confront us with a proposal for really free elections in all of ermany; the withdrawal of all troops of occupation; and the unification of the country. They might well reckon that any short-term political defeat they might suffer at the polls in ermany would be offset by frustrating our major purpose in Europe. In the long view, their chances with a united and independent Germany might look better than their prospects with a divided Germany, most of which is firmly tied to the West. If the Russians do advance such a proposal, we shall need a new policy - and quickly.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: No one can accurately say how the German problem will be resolved. But we would do well to remember Josiah Holland's observation that "a nation is a thing that lives and acts like a man." With this in mind, Harry Overstreet once said: "The psychological growth of man must keep pace with his physical powers; every increase in power must be matched by an increase in understanding."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday April 8, 1953

This is the news:

The Communists in Korea say they have only 600 sick or wounded allied war prisoners. We say this list is "incredibly small." We have asked for a more liberal interpretation of "sick and wounded." At the latest truce meeting, we told the Communists we are prepared to turn over to them 58-hundred prisoners. This includes 51-hundred North Koreans and 700 Communist Chinese. They told us they would exchange 450 South Koreans and about 150 other United Nations troops. They did not say how many of these 150 are Americans.. British..French, Dutch, Turkish or any other countries represented in Korea. In the past the enemy has said he holds 12-thousand prisoners... about 3-thousand Americans. We said today that we hold 81,500 enemy prisoners who want to return home. In advance of the next truce meeting, Admiral Daniel our chief negotiator told reporters: "I hope we will get more prisoners back from them. I have no reason at present to believe that they are not acting in good faith."

The Chinese radio said today that they "accord humanitarian treatment" to prisoners in their custody..and again charged that we have killed Communists prisoners by shooting and gas poisoning.

On the eastern and central fronts, American Marines and Belgian infantrymen stopped [redacted] Chinese attacks.

And the Pentagon reports that last week we suffered one thousand and thirty-nine casualties. (the largest weekly increase since last November) The First Marine Division and the Army's Seventh Division suffered most. They were engaged in the fighting for the hills on the western front. This week's casualty list includes 158 men killed...94 missing... the rest wounded.

At the United Nations today, the political committee approved a five-member neutral nation commission to make an on-the-spot investigation of Communist charges that we used germ warfare in Korea. # We insist that this charge IS "an infamous lie." And the British and French delegates, supporting the American proposal, made reference to a document produced last month by Andrie Vishinsky. It claimed that two captured Americans had confessed using germ warfare. Today, the British and French delegates, in a broad reference to the recently reversed confessions of 14 doctors in Moscow, pointed out that ANY confessions produced by the Russians may be the result of [redacted] what Moscow called "inadmissable methods."

Vishinsky pleaded with the West today to meet the Soviets "half way" on [redacted] disarmament [redacted] proposals. [redacted] But the west refused to agree to remove a section of its resolution re-affirming [redacted] support of the plan adopted at a Paris meeting in 1951. The Assembly, with Russia and her bloc voting no, instructed the Disarmement Commission to work towards a cut in arms. In his speech, Vishinsky said that in the past month Russia had produced "a host of instances demonstrating her readiness to reach agreement by deeds." He said: "The foreign policy of the Soviet Uniin has shown itself. You asked for deeds and they have been forthcoming. Where are yours?" Vishinsky went on to say: "New relationships are arising before our eyes...Events do not always take the shape tomorrow that they took yesterday....The phrase 'wait and see' has been used, but you can't wait and see at one end..." He said the West must help "dig the tunnel of friendship from both sides, then we are likely to meet earlier." In all his speech was a far cry from two years ago when he told the Assembly the Western proposals for disasrmament were so funny they kept him awake with laughter all night.

The British embassy in Moscow announces that the Russians will send one of their cruisers to British waters to participate in Queen

Elizabeth's coronation review. (The British have invited many nations to send a warship to this review.)

And in Washington, the State Department says George Kennan, a long-time supporter of the plan to contain Russia, will retire from the diplomatic service in the near future. Kennan was ousted from Russia last fall for criticizing the Russians for prohibiting foreigners to meet with the Russian people.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said in Washington today that the Soviet Union is as dangerous as ever to the free world.. there is not yet any "convincing proof" that Russia has changed her ambitions. He called for such proof in a Russian agreement to permit free elections for all Germany.. and to release some 300-thousand Germans still held as war prisoners in the Soviet Union. Adenauer also offered to send a German hospital unit to Korea as a "humble contribution from the heart."

The Atomic Energy Commission announced today that the President has approved its plan to let private industry invest in atomic power. The plan, to be sent to Congress for approval, will call for a modification of the government's 12-billion dollar atomic energy monopoly.

A Senate committee heard Assistant Secretary of Defense Nash testify that proposals to limit the President's treaty making powers "would seriously interfere with essential military operations in peace and war."

The Defense Department has banned all public demonstrations of new weapons [redacted]..for reasons of economy and security... and possibly because of the rivalry between the services.

Undersecretary of Commerce Williams says we should not be "too frightened about the possibility of occassional downturns in business." He says a LITTLE slump, when defense spending tapers off, [redacted] should be recognized "as part of our economy.. a price we pay for having a vigorous, dynamic, expanding economy."

Senator Taft says that despite the talk the Administration cannot possibly cut taxes for at least another year. And he predicts that President Eisenhower WILL [redacted] run again in 1956 and [redacted] be re-elected.

Edward R. Murrow: April 8, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The Senate sub-Committee investigating ammunition shortages in Korea received some rather startling information today, and the members didn't like it. It was disclosed that an ammunition contract travels ten thousand miles around the country through 42 Army departments, is handled by two to three hundred people before the contract is finally let. The Committee couldn't even find out how much money has been spent. The Army has submitted two sets of figures, but the figures don't agree - there's a difference of about five hundred million dollars. However, it is reasonably clear that the shortages were not due to any failure on the part of the Congress to appropriate money.

Senator Byrd of Virginia called the evidence of red tape and delay, "the most colossal and terrible thing I've ever known." He said: "Everybody admits it's gross inefficiency, but nobody is responsible." The Committee decided unanimously to ask the Defense Department for the names and positions of everybody who had anything to do with ammunition contracts or deliveries.

Former Defense Secretary Lovett told the Committee that "the Army as a whole" is responsible for past ammunition shortages in Korea, but he refused to single out any individual. He thought the shortages were due to a failure to spend the money available quickly and efficiently; to an obsolete ordnance set-up; and to production and distribution problems. Mr. Lovett said that as Secretary of Defense his patience was exhausted, and he took the ammunition situation out of the hands of the Army and turned it over to a civilian deputy in the Defense Department. Lovett disagreed completely with earlier testimony by General Joe Collins, to the effect that restrictions imposed upon the Army by the Defense Department caused the shortages. He said he doesn't know what Collins was talking about. He also denied General Collins statement that cuts in the Army's ammunition budget contributed to the problem. He said that when he left office in January, the Army still had better than eight billion dollars not yet obligated. Mr. Lovett said that the handling of the ammunition situation had definitely been unsatisfactory since the start of the Korean war. But the former Defense Secretary paid his compliments to General Van Fleet in some rather blunt language. He denied Van Fleet's testimony that the 8th Army had been continuously short of ammunition during the 22 months Van Fleet commanded it. He said: "Van Fleet's testimony is contradictory in many places, and the facts do not support his view. There was more ammunition in Korea last December than in all of Europe 24 days after the Normandy invasion."

Mr. Lovett testified that for a period of many months the Far Eastern stockpile was greater than the authorised levels; and the Army didn't shoot as much as it was authorised to shoot. Mr. Lovett also mentioned one of many inconsistencies in General Van Fleet's testimony. The General said the ammunition supply in ~~XXX~~ May of '51 went down to zero; and yet Van Fleet says that a month later he was "crying to be turned loose," had plenty of ammunition, and could have launched a major attack. It has now been established that what Van Fleet actually cabled in June of '51, as contrasted to what he now says, was that he could make an advance of something like twenty miles, but the casualties would have been unacceptable.

Mr. Lovett said that the Army "as a whole" is responsible for a sorry showing, but at the same time he denied much of General Van Fleet's testimony. At the same time he wouldn't name any individual responsible for the delay and red tape. Assistant Defense Secretary Wilford MacNeil likewise refused to identify by name any of the individuals responsible for the lag in production. He blamed it on ~~XXX~~ "the system". MacNeil said, "The system of ordering ammunition couldn't easily be remodelled with one hand and kept in operation with the other."

Mr. Lovett denied emphatically that politics had anything to do with the shortages. And anyone familiar with his career must be disposed to agree on that point.

It seems to this reporter that the Senators have encountered the old Army game of passing the buck, and if they can alter that and eliminate even part of the incredible red tape, they will have labored mightily on behalf of the nation.

Many voices have been raised on this whole question of ammunition lately ...but we have yet to get a clear, concise over-all picture. It would seem that those who have testified agree with John Locke that "no man's knowledge can go beyond his own experience." Perhaps this is so. Perhaps it is equally true as Junius once said:"Facts are apt to alarm us more than the most dangerous principles."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Communists in Korea say they have only 600 sick or wounded allied war prisoners. We say this list is "incredibly small." We have asked for a more liberal interpretation of "sick and wounded." At the latest truce meeting, we told the Communists we are prepared to turn over to them 58-hundred prisoners. This includes 51-hundred North Koreans and 700 Communist Chinese. They told us they would exchange 450 South Koreans and about 150 other United Nations troops. They did not say how many of these 150 are Americans, British, french, Dutch, Turkish or any other countries represented in Korea. In the past the enemy has said he holds 12-thousand prisoners, about 3-thousand Americans. We said today that we hold 81,500 enemy prisoners who want to return home. In advance of the next truce meeting, Admiral Daniel our chief negotiator told reporters: "I hope we will get more prisoners back from them. I have no reason at present to believe that they are not acting in good faith."

The Chinese radio said today that they "accord humanitarian treatment" to prisoners in their custody, and again charged that we have killed Communists prisoners by shooting and gas poisoning.

On the eastern and central fronts, American Marines and Belgian infantrymen stopped Chinese attacks.

And the Pentagon reports that last week we suffered one thousand and thirty nine casualties (the largest weekly increase since last November.) The First Marine Division and the Army's Seventh Division suffered most. They were engaged in the fighting for the hills on the western front. This week's casualty list includes 158 men killed, 94 missing, the rest wounded.

At the United Nations today, the political committee approved a five-member neutral nation commission to make an on-the-spot investigation of Communist charges that we used germ warfare in Korea. We insist that this charge is "an infamous lie." And the British and French delegates, supporting the American proposal, made reference to a document produced last month by Andrie Vishinsky. It claimed that two captured Americans had confessed using germ warfare. Today, the British and French delegates, in a broad reference to the recently reversed confessions of 14 doctors in Moscow, pointed out that any confessions produced by the Russians may be the result of what Moscow called "inadmissable methods."

Vishinsky pleaded with the West today to meet the Soviets "half way" on disarmament proposals. But the West refused to agree to remove a section of its resolution reaffirming support of the plan adopted at a Paris meeting in 1951. The Assembly, with Russia and her bloc voting no, instructed the Disarmament Commission to work towards a cut in arms. In his speech, Vishinsky said that in the past month, Russia had produced "a host of instances demonstrating her readiness to reach agreement by deeds." He said: "The foreign policy of the Soviet Union has shown itself. You asked for deeds and they have been forthcoming. Where are yours?" Vishinsky went on to say: "New relationships are arising before our eyes. Events do not always take the shape tomorrow that they took yesterday. The phrase 'wait and see' has been used, but you can't wait and see at one end." He said the West must help "dig the tunnel of friendship from both sides, then we are likely to meet earlier." In all, his speech was a far cry from two years ago, when he told the Assembly the Western proposals for disarmament were so funny they kept him awake with laughter all night.

The British Embassy in Moscow announces that the Russians will send one of their cruisers to British waters to participate in Queen Elizabeth's coronation review. The British have invited many nations to send a warship to this review.

And in Washington, the State Department says George Kennan, a long-time supporter of the plan to contain Russia, will retire from the diplomatic service in the near future. Kennan was ousted from Russia last fall for criticizing the Russians for prohibiting foreigners to meet with the Russian people.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said in Washington today that the Soviet Union is as dangerous as ever to the free world; there is not yet any "convincing proof" that Russia has changed her ambitions. He called for such proof in a Russian agreement to permit free elections for all Germany, and to release some 300-thousand Germans still held as war prisoners in the Soviet Union. Adenauer also offered to send a German hospital unit to Korea as a "humble contribution from the heart."

The Atomic Energy Commission announced today that the President has approved its plan to let private industry invest in atomic power. The plan, to be sent to Congress for approval, will call for a modification of the government's 12-billion dollar atomic energy monopoly.

A Senate committee heard Assistant Secretary of Defense Nash testify that proposals to limit the President's treaty making powers "would seriously interfere with essential military operations in peace and war."

The Defense Department has banned all public demonstrations of new weapons, for reasons of economy and security (and possibly because of the rivalry between the services.)

Undersecretary of Commerce Williams says we should not be "too frightened about the possibility of occasional downturns in business." He says a little slump, when defense spending tapers off, should be recognized "as part of our economy, a price we pay for having a vigorous, dynamic, expanding economy."

Senator Taft says that despite the talk the Administration cannot possibly cut taxes for at least another year. And he predicts that President Eisenhower will run again in 1956 and be re-elected.

The Senate sub-committee investigating ammunition shortages in Korea, received some rather startling information today, and the members didn't like it. It was disclosed that an ammunition contract travels ten thousand miles around the country, through 42 Army Departments, is handled by two to three hundred people, before the contract is finally let. The Committee couldn't even find out how much money has been spent. The Army has submitted two sets of figures, but the figures don't agree - there's a difference of about five hundred million dollars. However, it is reasonably clear that the shortages were not due to any failure on the part of the Congress to appropriate money.

Senator Byrd of Virginia called the evidence of red tape and delay "the most colossal and terrible thing I've ever known." He said: "Everybody admits it's gross inefficiency, but nobody is responsible." The Committee decided unanimously to ask the Defense Department for the names and positions of everybody who had anything to do with ammunition contracts or deliveries.

Former Defense Secretary Lovett told the Committee that "the Army as a whole" is responsible for past ammunition shortages in Kores, but he refused to single out any individual. He thought the shortages were due to a failure to spend the money available quickly and efficiently; to an obsolete ordnance set-up; and to production and distribution problems. Mr. Lovett said that as Secretary of Defense his patience was exhausted, and he took the ammunition situation out of the hands of the Army and turned it over to a civilian deputy in the Defense Department. Lovett disagreed completely with earlier testimony by General Joe Collins, to the effect that restrictions imposed upon the Army by the Defense Department caused the shortages. He said he doesn't know what Collins was talking about. He also denied General Collins statement that cuts in the Army's ammunition budget contributed to the problem. He said that when he left office in January, the Army still had better than eight billion dollars not yet obligated. Mr. Lovett said that the handling of the ammunition situation had definitely been unsatisfactory since the start of the Korean war. But the former Defense Secretary paid his compliments to General Van Fleet in some rather blunt language. He denied Van Fleet's testimony that the 8th Army had been continuously short of ammunition during the 22 months Van Fleet commanded it. He said: "Van Fleet's testimony is contradictory in many places, and the facts do not support his view. There was more ammunition in Korea last December than in all of Europe 24 days after the Normandy invasion."

Mr. Lovett testified that for a period of many months the Far Eastern stockpile was greater than the authorized levels; and the Army didn't shoot as much as it was authorized to shoot. Mr. Lovett also mentioned one of many inconsistencies in General Van Fleet's testimony. The General said the ammunition supply in May of '51 went down to zero; and yet Van Fleet says that a month later he was "crying to be turned loose," had plenty of ammunition, and could have launched a major attack. It has now been established that what Van Fleet actually cabled in June of '51, as contrasted to what he now says, was that he could make an advance of something like twenty miles, but the casualties would have been unacceptable.

Mr. Lovett said that the Army "as a whole" is responsible for a sorry showing, but at the same time he denied much of General Van Fleet's testimony. At the same time he wouldn't name any individual responsible for the delay and red tape. Assistant Defense Secretary Wilford MacNeil likewise refused to identify by name any of the individuals responsible for the lag in production. He blamed it on "the system." MacNeil said, "The system or ordering ammunition couldn't easily be remodelled with one hand and kept in operation with the other."

Mr. Lovett denied emphatically that politics had anything to do with the shortages. Any anyone familiar with his career must be disposed to agree on that point.

It seems to this reporter that the Senators have encountered the old Army game of passing the buck, and if they can alter that, and eliminate even part of the incredible red tape, they will have labored mightily on behalf of the nation.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon;

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Many voices have been raised on this whole question of ammunition, but we have yet to get a clear, concise over-all picture. It would seem that those who have testified agree with John Locke that "no man's knowledge can go beyond his own experience." Perhaps this is so. Perhaps it is equally true as Junius once said: "Facts are apt to alarm us more than the most dangerous principles."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday, April 9.

This is the news:

Allied and Communist negotiators in Korea are believed to be ready to sign an agreement for the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners of war. Liason officers meet at Panmunjom in a little more than an hour. If there are no last minute hitches, both sides could initial an agreement that could mean the beginning of the exchange in ten days. The Communists have flatly refused to return more than the 600 prisoners they already have listed as sick or wounded. They have agreed to turn over these men... (450 Koreans and 150 other U.N. troops). in batches of 100 a day. We will turn over to them 500 men a day until all 58-hundred we hold are back in Communist hands.

Today, the North Koreans, acting at the request of Moscow, released seven British civilians captured in Korea in the summer of 1950 when the war started. They are being turned over to the Russians for return to Great Britain.

~~The Chinese Communist radio says American Captain Harold Fisher, who has shot down ten Migs, was himself shot down and captured over Manchuria on Tuesday.~~

On the western front, Communist troops over-ran Marine positions early in the day. But pockets of Marines continued to battle on the slopes of the hill for three hours..until reinforcements came./Then the Marines re-captured the hill and killed or wounded 220 enemy troops.

At the United Nations today, Andrie Vishinsky said Korea is the main obstacle to peace. He said Russia upholds the principle that all Korean prisoners must be sent home... but he "welcomed" the Chinese proposal to hand over to a neutral state those prisoners who do not want to go home.

And in Washington today, there were reports--denied by the White House--that the Eisenhower Administration is willing to accept a Korean settlement based on a boundary line about 80 miles north of the present front. My colleague Bill Costello has been keeping track of the developments on this story, and we've asked him to sum it all up for you:

4 25

(return cue: every President must be his own secretary of state)

While the White House was denying any change in its foreign policy in Asia, it did announce the achivements of the visit of West Germany's Chancelor Adenaur to this country.

The President and the Chancellor challenge Russia to "prove" it wants peace by permitting free elections in the Russian zone of Germany and by freeing thousands of German prisoners held in the Soviet Union. The two governments agree that "the free nations of the West must not relax their vigilance nor diminish their efforts to increase their unity and common strength." We have promised the Germans that as soon as a European army is formed we will help equip a new German army. We promise to consider carefully Germany's request for help in taking care of refugees from behind the iron curtain who are now arriving in West Germany. We agree to re-examine the status of German war criminals now in our custody. (with a view towards pardoning some of them.) The Germans agree to seek a solution, with France, on the problem of the Saar. And they agree to tighten up their embargo on the shipment of strategic materials to Communist China.

At the United Nations today Andri Vishinsky spoke for two hours in an obvious effort to split the western allies. [redacted] He feels the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has no justification. He says the Schuman plan, to pool west Europe's iron and coal, is "a dangerous machine", intended to hurt Britain's exports of heavy industry. He says we want to re-arm west Germany to perpatuate the division of that country. He wants the West to stop arming..to ban the atomic bomb..dissolve N.A.T.O. and abandon the whole idea of a European army. [redacted] American delegate Gross called the speech "an old record... stale..dull and regressive." Gross said we are willing to meet the Russians half-way. But, he asked Vishinsky, "half way to what?"

The new secretary general of the United Nations arrived here in New York today. Dag Hahmer-sholde said he is interested in mountain climbing and that the qualities required in mountain climbing are just what people need today. He defined them as:" Perserverence and patience, a firm grip on realities, careful but imaginative planning, a clear awareness of the dangers, but also of the fact that fate is what we make it, and that the safest climber is he who never questions his ability to overcome all difficulties."

In Washington, the Senate committee investigating the ammunition shortage in Korea heard from former Army Secretary Pace. He testified: there was no real production of ammunition for the Korean war until two years after it began. Until then we used surplus world war two stock. In the first six months of the war there was a general belief in Washington and the Far Eastern command..shared, he believes by General McArthur...that the war would end in December of 1950. Pace said the reports of ammunition shortages General Van Fleet sent to Washington never reached him. He said the ammunition situation never prevented General Van Fleet from carrying out the 8th army's mission. He disagrees with Former Defense Secretary Lovett who said yesterday that he took ammunition production away from the army. [redacted] Another witness was former Undersecretary of the army Alexander. He was reminded that Van Fleet has testified that in May of 1951 his ammunition reserves were down to zero. Alexander said he was in Korea for the following two months..asked Van Fleet about his ammunition problems..and was told there were no shortages except for one item. [redacted] of [redacted] war [redacted] has cut in half a Joint Chiefs [redacted] dollars for ammunition. At that time [redacted] was secretary of defense and Mr. Lovett was his [redacted].

Attorney General Brownell announced today that he will proceed with a civil anti-trust suit against an alleged international oil cartel. He indicated he will seek the end of a criminal grand jury inquiry into [redacted] the charges.

Republican Representative Hinshaw of California says the government will have to subsidize private industry with about 30-million dollars a year to push the development of atomic plants for commercial power production.

The President and Republican leaders in the Senate and the House have unanimously endorsed Leonard Hall, a former Congressman from New York, to be the next chairman of the Republican National Committee. (He'll probably be elected tomorrow.) The committee today issued a statement saying the first 75 days of the Eisenhower Administration HAVE been a period of "memorable and significant results. The Democrats point out that the other night Senator Taft said the administration has made "some progress, but it seems slow and will seem slower in the future."

The Justice Department said today that the Taft-Hartley law is "being twisted from its purpose and utilized as a shield for communist deception." The Department said this is being done by some persons who are falsely taking the law's non-Communist oath. (The Department adds:) This has not proved to be effective "in eliminating Communists from positions of control and domination in labor unions."

As my colleague Bill Costello reported earlier, there's been quite a mixup in Washington as a result of Mr. Dulles' remarks. I can't help remembering this line by Spencer Bayne:"It was, I am convinced, two other guys, in another place, a long time ago." Perhaps the Greek Thucydides was right when he said:"I fear our mistakes far more than the strategy of our enemies."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, April 9, 1953
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... And in Washington today there were reports, denied by the White House, that the Eisenhower Administration is willing to accept a Korean settlement based on a boundary line about eighty miles north of the present front. My colleague, Bill Costello, has been keeping track of the developments on this story and we've asked him to sum it all up for you.

COSTELLO: This is a story of good intentions which paved the way to the hottest fire of controversy the Eisenhower Administration has yet encountered. Last Monday, in an effort to keep diplomatic correspondents abreast of his thinking on foreign policy, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles met informally with a group of about twenty top-flight newsmen. He talked very frankly about his approach to foreign problems because it was understood in advance that what he said could be published, but it could not be attributed directly to him. Such meetings are, of course, a common practice in Washington, have been for many years. It was even understood that what the Secretary had to say would not be used in a single general story, but would be allowed to dribble into print over a period of several days. This reporter was not present, but by tonight there are several thousand persons in the capital who are fully aware that an apparent contradiction in Administration policy had its origin in the meeting with Mr. Dulles.

What the Secretary had to say was briefly this, that he reviews the resumption of truce negotiations in Korea as an opportunity for opening discussions with the Communists on an over-all settlement of Far Eastern tensions. Mr. Dulles revealed that in Korea he would be prepared to press for an extension of South Korea as far northward as the waist of the peninsula, some eighty miles north of the present battle line. He would also be prepared to consider again a proposal made in 1947 that Formosa be placed under United Nations trusteeship, thus removing it as a source of irritation to Red China.

He felt that this might be a way out of an otherwise awkward dilemma in maintaining American support for the Chiang Kai-shek Government on that island. In return for this concession, the hope was expressed that China and the Kremlin would be willing to call off the dogs of war in Indo-China.

Since then a series of stories have appeared, very much according to plan, dealing with various aspects of the Secretary's remarks, all very much along the same line and all appearing in highly reputable newspapers under the signatures of thoroughly reliable correspondents. This morning the White House, apparently in response to a chorus of protests, issued a statement knocking the whole story on the head. Press Secretary, James Hagerty, told reporters, first, that no consideration has been given by the Administration to a United Nations trusteeship for Formosa and, second, that the Administration has never reached any conclusion that a permanent division of Korea is desirable or feasible or consistent with the decisions of the United Nations. Since this denial was aimed originally at a dispatch appearing in the "New York Times," the chief of the "Times" bureau promptly issued a statement pointing out that the essentials of the story had appeared in a number of newspapers and concluded acidly: "This is another instance of the Administration getting its wires crossed and blaming the consequences on the press."

This afternoon there was an angry reaction on the floor of the Senate when Republican Senator Knowland, of California, denounced the reported policy as unbelievable and demanded an investigation to find the leak. He said this nation cannot have two Secretaries of State. It must speak with one voice, through President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles. The reason for this outburst, of course, is that a policy of permanent division for Korea and trusteeship for Formosa come down hard not only on the sensitive toes of the South Koreans and the Chinese Nationalists but aroused also fears that revelation of such bargaining tactics might throw a monkey wrench into the new Korean peace talks. Moreover, it was realized belatedly that if Chiang's Government on Formosa were liquidated such an act might be tantamount to a recognition of Red China's sovereignty, a policy which President Eisenhower has consistently opposed. This afternoon, Senator Knowland x called on the President and said afterward he is satisfied the United States does not in fact have a radically new policy in Asia. If Secretary Dulles was misquoted or misrepresented, he has not yet said so. What the tempest boils down to is that Dwight Eisenhower has discovered, like most of his predecessors in the White House, that every President must be his own Secretary of State.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Allied and Communist negotiators in Korea are believed to be ready to sign an agreement for the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners of war. Liason officers meet in Panmunjom in a little more than an hour. If there are no last minute hitches, both sides could initial an agreement that could mean the beginning of the exchange in ten days. The Communists have flatly refused to return more than the 600 prisoners they already have listed as sick or wounded. They have agreed to turn over these men (450 Koreans and 150 other U.N. troops.) in batches of 100 a day. We will turn over to them 500 men a day until all 58-hundred we hold are back in Communist hands.

Today, the North Koreans, acting at the request of Moscow, released seven British civilians captured in Korea in the summer of 1950 when the war started. They are being turned over to the Russians for return to Great Britain.

On the western front, Communist troops over-ran Marine positions early in the day. But pockets of Marines continued to battle on the slopes of the hill for three hours, until reinforcements came. Then the Marines re-captured the hill and killed or wounded 220 enemy troops.

At the United Nations today, Andrie Vishinsky said Korea is the main obstacle to peace. He said Russia upholds the principle that all Korean prisoners must be sent home, but he "welcomed" the Chinese proposal to hand over to a neutral state those prisoners who do not want to go home.

And in Washington today, there were reports, denied by the White House, that the Eisenhower Administration is willing to accept a Korean settlement based on a boundary line about 80 miles north of the present front. My colleague Bill Costello has been keeping track of the developments on this story, and we've asked him to sum it all up for you:

COSTELLO: This is a story of good intentions which paved the way to the hottest fire of controversay the Eisenhower Administration has yet encountered. Last Monday, in an effort to keep diplomatic correspondents abreast of his thinking on foreign policy, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles met informally with a group of about twenty top-flight newsmen. He talked very frankly about his approach to foreign problems because it was understood in advance that what he said could be published, but it could not be attributed directly to him. Such meetings are, of course, a common practice in Washington, have been for many years. It was even understood that what the Secretary had to say would not be used in a single general story, but would be allowed to dribble into print over a period of several days. This reporter was not present, but by tonight there are several thousand persons in the capitol who are fully aware that an apparent contradiction in Administration policy had its origin in the meeting with Mr. Dulles.

What the Secretary had to say was briefly this, that he reviews the resumption of truce negotiations in Korea as an opportunity for opening discussions with the Communists on an over-all settlement of Far Eastern tensions. Mr. Dulles revealed that in Korea he would be prepared to press for an extension of South Korea as far northward as the waist of the peninsula, some eighty miles north of the present battle line. He would also be prepared to consider again a proposal made in 1947 that Formosa be placed under United Nations trusteeship, thus removing it as a source of irritation to Red China. He felt that this might be a way out of an otherwise awkward dilemmn in maintaining American support for the Chiang Kai-shek Government on that island. In return for this concession, the hope was expressed that China and the Kremlin would be willing to call off the dogs of war in Indo-China.

Since then a series of stories have appeared, very much according to plan, dealing with various aspects of the Secretary's remarks, all very much along the same line and all appearing in highly reputable newspapers under the signatures of thoroughly reliable correspondents. This morning the White House, apparently in response to a chorus of protests, issued a statement knocking the whole story on the head. Press Secretary, James Hagerty, told reporters, first, that no consideration has been given by the Administration to a United Nations trusteeship for Formosa and, second, that the Administration has never reached any conclusion that a permanent division of Korea is desirable or feasible or consistent with the decisions of the United Nations. Since this denial was aimed originally at a dispatch appearing in the "New York Times," the chief of the "Times" bureau promptly issued a statement pointing out that the essentials of the story had appeared in a number of newspapers and concluded acidly: "This is another instance of the Administration getting its wires crossed and blaming the consequences on the press."

This afternoon there was an angry reaction on the floor of the Senate when Republican Senator Knowland, of California, denounced the reported policy as unbelievable and demanded an investigation to find the leak. He said this nation cannot have two Secretaries of state. It must speak with one voice, through President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles. The reason for this outburst, of course, is that a policy of permanent division for Korea and trusteeship for Formosa come down hard not only on the sensitive toes of the South Koreans and the Chinese Nationalists but aroused also fears that revelation of such bargaining tactics might throw a monkey wrench into the new Korean peace talks. Moreover, it was realized belatedly that if Chiang's Government on Formosa were liquidated such an act might be tantamount to a recognition of Red China's sovereignty, a policy which President Eisenhower has consistently opposed. This afternoon, Senator Knowland called on the President and said afterward he is satisfied the United States does not in fact have a reaically new policy in Asia. If Secretary Dulles was misquoted or misrepresented, he has not yet said so. What the tempest boils down to is that Dwight Eisenhower has discovered, like most of his predecessors in the White House, that every President must be his own Secretary of State.

MURROW: While the White House was denying any change in its foreign policy in Asia, it did announce the achievements of the visit of West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer to this country.

The President and the Chancellor challenge Russia to "prove" it wants peace by permitting free elections in the Russian zone of Germany and by freeing thousands of German prisoners held in the Soviet Union. The two governments agree that "the free nations of the West must not relax their vigilance nor diminish their efforts to increase their unity and common strength." We have promised the Germans that as soon as a European army is formed we will help equip a new German army. We promise to consider carefully Germany's request for help in taking care of refugees from behind the iron curtain who are now arriving in West Germany. We agree to re-examine the status of German war criminals now in our custody with a view towards pardoning some of them. The Germans agree to seek a solution, with France, on the problem of the Saar. And they agree to tighten up their embargo on the shipment of strategic materials to Communist China.

At the United Nations today Andrei Vishinsky spoke for two hours in an obvious effort to split the western allies. He feels the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has no justification. He says the Schuman plan, to pool West Europe's iron and coal, is "a dangerous machine," intended to hurt Britain's exports of heavy industry. He says we want to rearm west Germany to perpetuate the division of that country. He wants the West to stop arming, to ban the atomic bomb, dissolve NATO and abandon the whole idea of a European army. American Delegate Gross called the speech "an old record, stale, dull and regressive." Gross said we are willing to meet the Russians halfway. But, he asked Vishinsky, "half way to what?"

The new secretary general of the United Nations arrived here in New York today. Dag Hammarshold said he is interested in mountain climbing and that the qualities required in mountain climbing are just what people need today. He defined them as: "Perserverence and patience, a firm grip on realities, careful but imaginative planning, a clear awareness of the dangers, but also of the fact that fate is what we make it, and that the safest climber is he who never questions his ability to overcome all difficulties."

In ashington, the Senate committee investigating ehe ammunition shortage in Korea heard from former Army Secretary Pace. He testified: there was no real production of ammunition for the Korean war until two years after it began. Until then, we used surplus world war two stock. In the first six months of the war there was a general belief in Washington and the Far Eastern command, shared, he believes, by General MacArthur, that the war would end in December of 1950. Pace said the reports of ammunition shortages General Van Fleet sent to Washington never reached him. He said the ammunition situation never prevented General Van Fleet from carrying out the 8th Army's mission. He disagrees with Former Defense Secretary Lovett who said yesterday that he took ammunition production away from the army. Another witness was former undersecretary of the Army, Alexabder; he was reminded that Van Fleet has testified that in May of 1951 his ammunition reserves were down to zero. Alexander said he was in Korea for the following two months, asked Van Fleet about his ammunition problems, and was told there were no shortages except for one item.

Attorney General Brownell announced today that he will proceed with a civil anti-trust suit against an alleged international oil cartel. He indicated he will seek the end of a criminal grand jury inquiry into the charges.

Republican Representative Hinshaw of California says the government will have to subsidize private industry with about 30-million dollars a year to push the development of atomic plants for commercial power production.

The President and Republican leaders in the Senate and the House have unanimously endorsed Leonard Hall, a former Congressman from New York, to be the next chairman of the Republican National Committee. (He'll probably be elected tomorrow.) The committee today issued a statement saying the first 75 days of the Eisenhower Administration have been a period of "memorable and significant results. The Democrats point out that the other night Senator Taft said the administration has made "some progress, but it seems slow and will seem slower in the future."

The Justice Department said today that the Taft-Hartley law is "being twisted from its purpose and utilized as a shield for Communist deception." The Department said this is being done by some persons who are falsely taking the law's non-Communist oath. The Department adds: This has not proved to be effective "in eliminating Communists from positions of control and domination in labor unions."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As my colleague Bill Costello reported earlier, there's been quite a mixup in Washington as a result of Mr. Dulles' remarks. I can't help remembering this line by Spencer Bayne: "It was, I am convinced, two other guys, in another place, a long time ago." Perhaps the Greek Thucydides was right when he said: "I fear our mistakes far more than the strategy of our enemies."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday April 10, 1953

This is the news:

General Mark Clark has approved the signing of an agreement for the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners in Korea. If there are no last minute hitches, the papers could be signed AT PANMUNJOM. within a few hours.. and 120 Americans might be in American hands within 10 days. The Communists today also formally gave us their proposal for negotiating on other war prisoners. (with a view towards completing an armistice agreement.) Their note to General Clark contained little that was not first broadcast by the Chinese Communists. But they did emphasize their DEMAND [redacted] that all prisoners must be sent home. They proposed that those who refuse to do so be sent to A neutral state. There, the Communists say, they will explain to the prisoners why they should return home.. free them of the "intimidation and oppression" they charge to the allied command.

The State Department says the Russians have agreed to try to get American civilians released from North Korea. We say the North Koreans hold 13 [redacted] Catholic and Methodist missionaries who were captured when the war started. The North Koreans say they hold seven such persons.

The battlefields were generally quiet today after South Korean troops recaptured a hill they had lost to a Chinese Communist attack earlier in the day.

At the United Nations, American Ambassador Gross said:"We should avoid any steps here that may impede the negotiations" in Korea. He said:"When an armistice comes about it will not be because of any debate" at the U.N. Mr. Gross warned the western nations that "we must not abandon, but rather nurture, the strength that has brought some conciliatory gestures from the Kremlin." He added:"Most of us feel that the time will come when the Soviet government will realize the necessity of modifying its traditional obstructive policies. Then we will feel that this is the result of our policy of strength and unity."

~~In Vienna today the Russians gave no indication of any change in their policy towards Austria. The British member of the Allied Control Council told the Soviet representative that Vishinsky had recently suggested that both the East and West dig a tunnel of friendship from both sides. He said he regretted that the Russians do not intend to dig such a tunnel in Austria.~~

ANDREI

In Frankfurt, Germany, JOSEPH FRANKENSTEIN, AN American information official, discharged as an economy move, said he will not recognize his dismissal and will continue to report for work. He charges his dismissal was a subterfugre in order to avoid passing on his loyalty.

~~In Berlin, the Russians proposed that as an air safety measure, two of the three allied air corridors from West Germany be closed, with the remaining corridor widened from 20 to 60 miles. The American, British and French governments will consider this. During the Berlin airlift, all three corridors were crowded with planes night and day.~~

~~In a few minutes we'll have a report from my colleague Richard C. Hottelet, who is just back from Germany.~~

In Washington today, Army Secretary Stevens told Senate investigators that our ammunition supplies in Korea and the Far East are in "good shape all along the line." He said in most cases the supplies are well above what might be needed for an emergency. In answer to questions he acknowledged that our domestic ammunition supplies may be below the safety level. And Secretary Stevens, just back from a visit to Korea, denied General Van Fleet's recent testimony that we RECENTLY lost old Baldy hill because we did not have enough ammunition to fire in advance.. as a preventive measure. He said that by the time the heavy firing at Old Baldy was over, there were more shells at gun emplacements than had been there before the battle.

General Van Fleet, speaking in Chicago today, said there is nothing new in the Chinese Communist peace overtures. He recommends that the Korean war be ended with "a military victory."

The President today named Frederick J. Lawton to be the democratic member of the Civil Service Commission. Lawton had served former president Truman as budget director. The President also nominated two new members of the Subversive Activities Board. They are former Senator Cain from Washington state, and Ohio's former Governor Thomas J. Herbert... both Republicans. The Senate unanimously confirmed Oveta Culp Hobby to be the first Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

The President today told members of the Republican National Committee that there is no longer any room in the party for "Eisenhower Republicans, or any other special kind of Republicans." He told the party leaders during a White House visit that "there has been a whale of a lot" in the papers about differences among Republicans. And he described these reports as being just about as exaggerated as was the report of Mark Twain's DEATH.

President Eisenhower said he and every member of his cabinet have been astonished at the degree of co-operation they've been getting from members of both parties in Congress.

Mr. Eisenhower pledged his support to the new party chairman, former Representative Hall of New York. And Hall called on party members to "man the dikes for Ike in '54."

Alf Landon, the party's 1936 presidential candidate, said today that the Eisenhower Administration has "bungled" every major "political" problem of its first 90 days. (He said this is the new administration's only weakness.) And he described the Eisenhower cabinet as "unpleasantly reminiscent" of the last Hoover cabinet. He called it "long on ability but short on political savvy."

Much of the materiel about Germany ,on this program,comes from my old friend and colleague Richard C Hottelet who lives in Bonn.. Hes home on a brief visit...

TODAY

AGAIN

ED: ~~Earlier this week~~ Soviet air force officers sat down with western experts in Berlin to talk about increasing air safety over Eastern Germany. Tonight Western German police announce that they've broken up a big Soviet espionage ring - which was certainly not designed to enhance the safety of the western world --- How do these two events fit into the Soviet peace offensive, Dick?

Hatt

~~DICK:~~ I think, Ed, that they're ~~part and parcel~~ DIFFERENT ASPECTS of the same thing. Andrei Vyshinsky once described soviet policy as being based on two forces - compulsion and persuasion. ~~Within the framework~~ On the one hand the Kremlin takes certain OPEN ~~on the surface~~ steps to persuade the west that it wants to relax tension and reduce danger. At the same time it goes right ahead with its attempts to undermine the west and capture a new position in central Europe. So far the peace offensive in Germany has consisted mainly of interesting but unimportant gestures. Propaganda inside the soviet zone and east berlin - and underground work in western Germany do not seem to have changed. They indicate no real easing of the struggle between Russia and the west.

ED: Do you think that the Kremlin has gone as far as it wants to go in its peace offensive WHERE ~~as far as~~ Germany is concerned - or does it still have something up its sleeve?

Hatt

~~DICK:~~ There've been several signs in the past two weeks that the Russians are at least thinking of warming up one of the biggest political operations they could undertake in Germany. The communist press, certain prominent fellow travellers and the Soviet commander in chief in Eastern Germany himself have strongly suggested that Russia might propose a Big Four conference on the German problem as a whole. And Moscow could make such a proposal look good. It could suggest free elections, withdrawal of foreign troops, reunification of Germany and conclusion of a peace treaty. The Russians have made such proposals before with not the slightest intention of following through. But the offers have at least helped delay the organization of European defense. They may continue to do just that.

135

ED: The Russians have ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ it in their power to tempt the Germans very sorely. How about the withdrawal of occupation troops? Wouldn't the Germans like to see us as well as the Russians leave their country?

Hoff

~~Bonn:~~ I think the Germans distinguish very clearly between the ~~xxxxxx~~ two. The Soviet Army~~xxxxxxx~~ is a plague on the land in the Soviet zone and a weapon of naked oppression. Western troops on the other hand - the Americans British, Canadians, ~~xxxxxxx~~ French and the others are not seen in this light at all. They are Germany's insurance policy in troubled times. And we and the Canadians bring many millions of dollars into the German economy. All our people are reasonably well behaved and they stand for freedom. No foreign garrison is ever loved, but in Germany today ours is welcome.

ED: In effect we are carrying much of Germany's defense burden. Are the Germans willing and ready to do something for themselves?

Hoff

~~Bonn:~~ The Bundestag, which is the German House of Representatives, was the first of the six nations in the European Defense community to ratify the defense treaties. Chances are that ratification will be completed in Bonn this summer. --- As for public opinion, the stubborn, sullen opposition to any kind of military service has practically disappeared. The political opposition, the social democrats, now openly support a defense contribution - albeit in the framework of NATO rather than a European Army. The young people who will be called to the colors are not protesting.

ED: Just how much will the Germans contribute -- and more important, when?

[illegible] The how much is pretty well agreed upon. They will set up twelve divisions, a tactical air force of about thirteen hundred planes and a small coastal navy. The whole thing will amount to somewhat more than half a million men. --- Now, as regards when. That is most unclear. As things stand now Germany is not permitted even to start practical preparations for this large force. Germany will be called upon to produce some weapons for the European army. This requires capital investment and retooling, because German industry has been completely demilitarized. But no steps may be taken in this direction until the Defense Treaties have been ratified by France at least. The barracks needed to house this force may not be built until after ratification. Pilot orders for uniforms and signal and transport equipment may not be placed until the international green light goes on. --- I would guess ED that it will be 1956 before we can expect to see a German defense force even partly ready for combat. And that only if the treaties are ratified this year.

ED: Our government has just told Chancellor Adenauer that we would help the Germans rearm once the way is legally clear. Won't that help speed things up?

[illegible] Our help won't really speed matters up. It will rather help prevent them from bogging down altogether. Without weapons from us there would probably be another year's delay.

ED: How much will we give the Germans in the way of supplies?

[illegible] I think they expect to get the full first complement of heavy weapons - tanks, planes and artillery (PLUS A LOT OF OTHER THINGS.) Present plans do not provide for the production of aircraft in Germany at all - so they'll have to keep coming in from outside. On tanks and artillery it'll take a couple of years for the Germans to get into production. They could manage to turn out small arms in about a year. Trucks and the rest they could build at once. -------- The whole thing is a vast operation. German experts estimate that it will cost about ten billion dollars to set up a fully equipped force. A good slice is expected from the United States.

ED: The rest will have to be raised in Germany. Will that make the budget an issue in the election next September?

Holt: Not in terms of party differences, because everyone admits that defense costs money. But Chancellor Adenauer is slightly worried about an economic recession which could cost him votes and maybe defeat him. He is eager to get some of the defense money flowing into industry.

ED: Do you think he'll get a majority again?

Holt: As things stand now I think he will. But the economic factor bears watching. -- There's political uncertainty too. Adenauer's foreign policy rests completely on integrating Germany into western Europe. He's bound to suffer if his plan breaks down.

ED: The Saar is one of the problems that could wreck it. Will the Germans and the French get together on a solution?

Holt: There's no reason why they shouldn't. But the Saar is more than a problem in itself. It's a symbol of the distrust which poisons the relations between France and Germany. As long as this feeling exists all the treaties written so far are not worth very much. It can best be dispelled in a European Community supported by Britain and the United States.

It's evident from Dick Hottelet's remarks that there is tremendous pressure on Germany from both the East and West. And that these pressures must be calculated against the clock. Dickens once remarked:"Time is money, and very good money too, to those who reckon interest by it." But as Emerson said:"Very often the worst thing about time is that we know not what to do with it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 10, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Mark Clark has approved the signing of an agreement for the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners in Korea. If there are no last minute hitches, the papers could be signed at Panmunjom within a few hours, and 120 Americans might be in American hands within 10 days. The Communists today also formally gave us their proposal for negotiating on other war prisoners (with a view towards completing an armistice agreement.) Their note to General Clark contained little that was not first broadcast by the Chinese Communists. But they did emphasize their demand that all prisoners must be sent home. They proposed that those who refuse to do so be sent to a neutral state. There, the Communists say, they will explain to the prisoners why they should return home, free them of the "intimidation and oppression" they charge to the allied command.

The State Department says the Russians have agreed to try to get American civilians released from North Korea. We say the North Koreans hold 13 Catholic and Methodist missionaries, who were captured when the war started. The North Koreans say they hold seven such persons.

The battlefields were generally quiet today after South Korean troops recaptured a hill they had lost to a Chinese Communist attack earlier in the day.

At the United Nations, American Ambassador Gross said: "We should avoid any steps here that may impede the negotiations" in Korea. He said: "When an armistice comes about, it will not be because of any debate" at the U.N. Mr. Gross warned the western nations that "we must not abandon, but rather nurture, the strength that has brought some conciliatory gestures from the Kremlin." He added: "Most of us feel that the time will come when the Soviet government will realize the necessity of modifying its traditional obstructive policies. Then we will feel that this is the result of our policy of strength and unity."

In Frankfurt, Germany, Joseph Frankenstein, an American information official, discharged as an economy move, said he will not recognize his dismissal and will continue to report for work. He charges his dismissal was a subterfuge in order to avoid passing on his loyalty.

In Washington today, Army Secretary Stevens told Senate investigators that our ammunition supplies in Korea and the Far East are in "good shape all along the line." He said in most cases the supplies are well above what might be needed for an emergency. In answer to questions, he acknowledged that our domestic ammunition supplies may be below the safety level. And Secretary Stevens, just back from a visit to Korea, denied General Van Fleet's recent testimony that we recently lost old Baldy Hill because we did not have enough ammunition to fire in advance, as a preventive measure. He said that by the time the heavy firing at Old Baldy was over, there were more shells at gun emplacements than had been there before the battle.

General Van Fleet, speaking in Chicago today, said there is nothing new in the Chinese Communist peace overtures. He recommends that the Korean war be ended with a "military victory."

The President today named Frederick J. Lawton to be the democratic member of the Civil Service Commission. Lawton had served former president Truman as budget director. The President also nominated two new members of the Subversive Activities Board. They are former Senator Cain from Washington state, and Ohio's former Governor Thomas J. Herbert, both Republicans. The Senate unanimously confirmed Oveta Culp Hobby to be the first Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

The President today told members of the Republican National Committee that there is no longer any room in the party for "Eisenhower Republicans or any other special kind of Republicans." He told the party leaders during a White House visit that "there has been a whale of a lot" in the papers about differences among Republicans.

He described these reports as being just about as exaggerated as was the report of Mark Twain's death; President Eisenhower said he and every member of his cabinet have been astonished at the degree of cooperation they've been getting from members of both parties in Congress.

Mr. Eisenhower pledged his support to the new party chairman, former Representative Hall of New York. And Hall called on party members to "man the dikes for Ike in '54."

Alf Landon, the party's 1936 presidential candidate, said today that the Eisenhower Administration has "bungled" every major "political" problem of its first 90 days. He said this is the new administration's only weakness. And he described the Eisenhower cabinet as "unpleasantly reminiscent" of the last Hoovercabinet. He called it "long on ability but short on political savvy."

Much of the material about Germany on this program comes from my old friend and colleague, Richard C. Hottelet who lives in Bonn. He's home on a brief visit. Today, Soviet Air Force Officers sat down again with western experts in Berlin to talk about increasing air safety over Eastern Germany. Tonight Western German police announce that they've broken up a big Soviet espionage ring, which was certainly not designed to enhance the safety of the western world. How do these two events fit into the Soviet peace offensive, Dick?

HOTTELET: I think, Ed, that they're different aspects of the same thing. Andrei Vishinsky once described soviet policy as being based on two forces - compulsion and persuasion. On the one hand the Kremlin takes certain open steps to persuade the west that it wants to relax tension and reduce danger. At the same time it goes right ahead with its attempts to undermine the west and capture a new position in central Europe. So far the peace offensive in Germany has consisted mainly of interesting but unimportant gestures. Propaganda inside the soviet zone and east Berlin - and underground work in western Germany do not seem to have changed. They indicate no real easing of the struggle between Russia and the West.

MURROW: Do you think that the Kremlin has gone as far as it wants to go in its peace offensive where Germany is concerned - or does it still have something up its sleeve?

HOTTELET: There have been several signs in the past two weeks that the Russians are at least thinking of warming up one of the biggest political operations they could undertake in Germany. The Communist press, certain prominent fellow travellers and the Soviet commander in chief in Eastern Germany himself have strongly suggested that Russia might propose a Big Four conference on the German problem as a whole. And Moscow could make such a proposal look good. It could suggest free elections, withdrawal of foreign troops, reunification of Germany and conclusion of a peace treaty. The Russians have made such proposals before with not the slightest intention of following through. But the offers have at least helped delay the organization of European defense. They may continue to do just that.

MURROW: The Russians have it in their power to tempt the Germans very sorely. How about the withdrawal of occupation troops? Wouldn't the Germans like to see us as well as the Russians leave their country?

HOTTELET: I think the Germans distinguish very clearly between the two. The Soviet Army is a plague on the land in the Soviet zone and a weapon of naked oppression. Western troops on the other hand - the Americans, British, Canadians, French and the others are not seen in this light at all. They are Germany's insurance policy in troubled times. And we and the Canadians bring many millions of dollars into the German economy. All our people are reasonably well behaved and they stand for freedom. No foreign garrison is ever loved, but in Germany today, ours is welcome.

MURROW: In effect we are carrying much of Germany's defense burden. Are the Germans willing and ready to do something for themselves?

HOTTELET: The Bundestag, which is the German House of Representatives, was the first of the six nations in the European Defense community to ratify the defense treaties. Chances are that ratification will be completed in Bonn this summer. As for public opinion, the stubborn, sullen opposition to any kind of military service has practically disappeared. The political opposition, the social democrats, now openly support a defense contribution - albeit in the framework of NATO rather than a European Army. The young people who will be called to the colors are not protesting.

MURROW: Just how much will the Germans contribute - and more important, when?

HOTTELET: The how much is pretty well agreed upon. They will set up twelve divisions, a tactical air force of a bout thirteen hundred planes and a small coastal navy. The whole thing will amount to somewhat more than half a million men. Now, as regards when. That is most unclear. As things stand now Germany is not permitted even to start practical preparations for this large force. Germany will be called upon to produce some weapons for the European Army. This required capital investment and retooling, because German industry has been completely demilitarized. But no steps may be taken in this direction until the Defense Treaties have been ratified by France at least. The barracks needed to house this force may not be built until after ratification. Pilot orders for uniforms and signal and transport equipment may not be placed until the international green light goes on. I would guess, Ed, that it will be 1956 before we can expect to see a German defense force even partly ready for combat. And that only if the treaties are ratified this year.

MURROW: Our government has just told Chancellor Adenauer that we would help the Germans rearm once the way is legally clear. Won't that help speed things up?

HOTTELET: Our help won't really speed matters up. It will rather help prevent them from bogging down altogether. Without weapons from us there would probably be another year's delay.

MURROW: How much will we give the Germans in the way of supplies?

HOTTELET: I think they expect to get the full first complement of heavy weapons - tanks, planes and artillery, plus alot of other things. Present plans do not provide for the production of aircraft in Germany at all - so they'll have to keep coming in from outside. On tanks and artillery it'll take a couple of years for the Germans to get into production. They could manage to turn out small arms in about a year. Trucks and the rest they could build at once. The whole thing is a vast operation. German experts estimate that it will cost about ten billion dollars to set up a fully equipped force. A good slice is expected from the United States.

MURROW: The rest will have to be raised in Germany. Will that make the budget an issue in the election next September?

HOTTELET: Not in terms of party differences, because everyone admits that defense costs money. But Chancellor Adenauer is slightly worried about an economic recession which could cost him votes and maybe defeat him. He is eager to get some of the defense money flowing into industry.

MURROW: Do you think he'll get a majority again?

HOTTELET: As things stand now I think he will. But the economic factor bears watching. There's political uncertainty too. Adenauer's foreign policy rests completely on integrating Germany into western Europe. He's bound to suffer if his plan breaks down.

MURROW: The Saar is one of the problems that could wreck it. Will the Germans and the French get together on a solution?

HOTTELET: There's no reason why they shouldn't. But the Saar is more than a problem in itself. It's a symbol of the distrust which poisons the relations between France and Germany. As long as this feeling exists all the treaties written so far are not worth very much. It can best be dispelled in a European Community supported by Britain and the United States.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It's evident from Dick Hottelet's remarks that there is tremendous pressure on Germany from both the East and West. Adn that these pressures must be calculated against the clock. Dickens once remarked: "Time is money, and very good money too, to those who reckon interest by it." But as Emerson said: "Very often the worst thing about time is that we know not what to do with it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday April 13, 1953

This is the news:

The Communists in Korea have started to move allied war prisoners towards Panmunjom./ The first enemy convoy, carefully marked, left a prison camp 14 miles from the Yalu River, this afternoon./ Its expected in Panmunjom for the first exchange of prisoners a week from today./ Allied officials say we are ready for the exchange of Communist prisoners. [redacted] The enemy has not identified the nationality of the first prisoners to be turned over to us./ And the Chinese Communist radio today made it clear, that it is eagerly awaiting word from General Mark Clark on when negotiations..for the remaining prisoners on both sides..can get under way./ Radio Peiping notes it has now been three days since General Clark received the Chinese proposal to resume armistice talks.

The battlefields were comparatively quiet today. But again our fighter-bombers hit enemy communications lines..(our Sabre jets shot down one Mig..) and the battleship New Jersey, and 75 carrier planes, attacked a North Korean city 55 miles from the Russian border.

In Washington, Republican Senator Knowland of California proposed today that we test the good faith of Russia's peace campaign with a demand for free elections in North Korea. Knowland would have this supervised by the United Nations.

Republican Senator Mundt says he and other Republican senators are going to insist on a big shake-up of top-level policy-making officials in the State Department. He says Senators Bridges, Ferguson and McCarthy will join him in demanding the dismissal of what he calls "an alarming number of the old Acheson team who still hold most of the top posts."

Mutual Security Director Stassen TODAY suggested to Senator McCarthy that he investigate the Greek ship owners, in New York, who recently promised to remove their ships from trade with Communist China. Mr. Stassen suggests that the Senator determine how the Greeks got their ships from the United States, how much money they have made, their agents and their taxes.

And Senator McCarthy discloses that his investigating committee is looking into payments made to newspapers, magazines, radio networks and writers by government agencies during the past five years. The Senator says this is not "an investigation of the press." He is primarily interested in any subsidies that might have been paid to any individuals or organizations for what he calls favorable treatment of the Truman administration. Requests for such information have been sent to the State Department, and the Defense department, the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Security Agency. The Senator says many payments to outside media are perfectly legitimate..but he wants to know who got paid , and how much.

In the House today, Republican Representative Reed of New York filed a petition seeking to force a House vote on his bill to cut taxes. It will need 218 signatures to take the bill from the Rules committee, where it has been bottled up, and move it to the floor for a vote. Reed insists that taxes can be reduced without interfering with budget balancing. The Administration prefers to balance the budget first.

Administration spokesmen made it clear today, they oppose a bill designed to put a 65-billion dollar limit on all government operations. Treasury Secretary Humphrey, and Budget Director Dodge, say they oppose any such "mandatory expenditure ceiling." The bill, sponsored by Republican Representative Coudert of New York, would limit spending to estimated revenue returns.

Members of the Senate appropriations committee today challenged the cuts Secretary of Agriculture Benson has proposed in his new budget. And the Secretary revealed that the 130-million he proposed to cut from the Truman budget, will more than be offset by the cost of keeping farm prices up next year. Today, farmers sent one of the heaviest runs of cattle to market in 19 years. Experts say this is because the farmers fear beef prices will not recover. And the Department of Agriculture predicts that net farm income will be lower this year than last year.

In a federal court in Washington, Otto Verber, a former army intelligence officer, today pleaded guilty to charges that he served as an agent for a spy ring, directed from the Soviet embassy in Washington. And there are indications that he will be a witness at the trial of his brother-in-law, Kurt Ponger, held on the same charge. Both men were arrested in Vienna.

A House committee today heard Henry W. Grunewald--so-called Washington mystery man--testify that he gave television sets, and other gifts, to high tax officials. Grunewald also said that Republican Senator Bridges of New Hampshire once introduced him to a lawyer for John L. Lewis. Democratic Representative Boggs of Louisiana said that Grunewald had testified in a closed session that he did a job for Lewis..for 16-thousand dollars... investigating the late Judge Goldsborough. It was Judge Goldsborough who fined the United Mine Workers three and a half million dollars BECAUSE [redacted] the union IGNORED [redacted] a back to work order. Lewis says he never met Grunewald or knew anything about him.

Here in New York, [redacted] a grand jury indicted Joseph P. Ryan on charges of stealing more than 11-thousand dollars from his union's funds. Ryan is president of the A. F. of L. Longshiremen's Association. He is accused of using union funds to pay golf and country club dues, buy clothing, pay insurance premiums and pay the funeral expenses of a relative. Ryan pleaded innocent to all charges. [redacted]

[redacted]

The major league baseball [redacted] season opened today in Cinncinnati where the Milwaukee Braves beat the Redlegs, two to nothing. The AMERICAN LEAGUE opener in Washington was cancelled by rain. And because of this, the President, who flew to Augusta for golf, has decided to throw out the first ball when the Washington Senators meet the New York Yankees in Washington on Thursday. The President had made plans to fly back to Washington for a speech. Now he's decided to attend the delayed opener.

A friend and colleague - Alex Kendrick - is back home from his listening post in Vienna. He's with us in the newsroom tonite. Alex, what's been happening in the satellite countries ?

Alex Kendrick - Vienna -

When I left Vienna a couple of days ago, the satellite regimes had obviously not yet recovered from the shock of Stalin's death, and there's no telling when -- or even if -- they will recover. The Russians, in the past 40 days, have given the appearance of closing their ranks, and the Malenkov government has carried out a series of interesting moves -- both internal and external -- showing that there has been a change of government, even though the Moscow censor doesn't permit American correspondents to say that. You ask me what's been happening in the satellites. Well, except for a Moscow style amnesty by the Romanians and the hint of an amnesty by the Hungarians, the answer is that practically nothing has happened. It's as if Rakosi and Cervenov and Zapotocky and the other provincial governors of the Kremlin are still too numb to carry out the normal business of Communist rule -- or maybe they don't quite know what to do.

And this illustrates the difference between Russia itself and the Russian satellites -- a difference that might be important to us sooner than we think. The difference is that Russia, and the Russian Communist Party, seem to be integrated enough after 35 years of power and harsh discipline to go into a new reign without too many dislocations.

The Communist satellite regimes, on the other hand, have held power -- and by no means unopposed power -- only for five years or so, and they have done it mainly through the use of Stalin's name and prestige. They've had all their eggs put in one basket for them, and now they see those eggs being taken out of the basket by Malenkov, one by one, and splattered against the Kremlin wall. Prague radio the other night when I heard it, still described Stalin as the greatest man of our time, but that phrase hasn't been used in Moscow since the funeral.

I think the most significant thing about the recent Kremlin moves is not that they constitute a new Soviet peace offensive -- which they do -- but that even though Soviet over-all policy and objectives may not have changed and only fresh tactics brought into play, for the first time since the war relations between the East and the West seem to have become slightly fluid again. The Russians are talking truce in Korea, they are talking about the unification of Germany, they are talking the Malenkov line that there are no problems, even fundamental ones, that cannot be settled by negotiation. We have to wait and see what they mean by all this, and whether they are as sincere about digging Vishinsky's tunnel of friendship as they were about digging the Moscow subway.

But when you start to open up a situation that has been locked tight for some time, as the Russians appear to be doing, you not only acquire maneuverability for yourself, but you hand it to the other fellow -- meaning us. Anything might happen -- and that's where the satellites come in. Suppose, for instance, that for the sake of German unity -- with the hope, of course, of winning a united Germany over to their side -- the Russians decided that the western areas of Poland, which were taken away from Germany, will now have to be returned to Germany. Well, that territory was given to Poland in compensation for the eastern areas that Russia herself took away. One of the bases on which the Polish Communist regime rests is those new, colonized sections. No Polish government, no matter how much force and compulsion it used, could justify such a loss to its people -- and yet it could happen.

The point is this, Ed, that the existence of eastern Europe as part of the Soviet empire depends to a large extent on the premise that East and West will never get together, that the world is irrevocably split into two, and that the satellites had better go along with the world into which they have been dragged -- in fact there's nothing else for them to do.

But once Moscow begins negotiating with the West -- and I believe she has started to do so -- once the Iron Curtain begins to show a few chinks of light through it, once you get communications reestablished, and a few trade agreements, and an exchange of scientific ideas, it's going to be much harder maintaining that tight control over every phase of life that Communism needs in order to exist.

And don't forget that four of the satellites, Bulgaria, Romania, Hungary and Albania, border on Yugoslavia, where Tito has slowly been undoing the whole fabric of state communism. That's bound to have its effect on a fluid situation in eastern Europe.

Maybe I sound too optimistic about all this, Ed, but I'm sure I'm not as optimistic as the rulers of the satellite countries must be pessimistic at this moment, five and a half weeks after Stalin's death.

As ~~my colleague~~ Alex Kendrick noted this is a time to watch and await developments behind the Iron Curtain. Joseph Addison set up a pretty good rule for us to follow when he said:"Do not anticipate the relish of any happiness, nor feel the weight of any misery before it actually arrives." For as Archbishop Whately remarked:"It is folly to expect men to do all that they may reasonably be expected to do."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 13, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Communists in Korea have started to move allied war prisoners towards Panmunjom. The first enemy convoy, carefully marked, left a prison camp 14 miles from the Yalu River, this afternoon. It's expected in Panmunjom for the first exchange of prisoners a week from today. Allied officials say we are ready for the exchange of Communist prisoners. The enemy has not identified the nationality of the first prisoners to be turned over to us. And the Chinese Communist radio today make it clear that it is eagerly awaiting word from General Mark Clark on when negotiations for the remaining prisoners on both sides can get under way. Radio Peiping notes it has now been three days since General Clark received the Chinese proposal to resume armistice talks.

The battlefields were comparatively quiet today. But again our fighter-bombers hit enemy communications lines (our Sabre jets shot down one Mig,) and the battleship New Jersey and 75 carrier planes attacked a North Korean city 55 miles from the Russian border.

In Washington, Republican Senator Knowland of California proposed today that we test the good faith of Russia's peace campaign with a demand for free elections in North Korea. Knowland would have this supervised by the United Nations.

Republican Senator Mundt says he and other Republican senators are going to insist on a big shake-up of top-level policy-making officials in the State Department. He says Senators Bridges, Ferguson and McCarthy will join him in demanding the dismissal of what he calls "an alarming number of the old Acheson team who still hold most of the top posts."

Mutual Security Director Stassen today suggested to Senator McCarthy that he investigate the Greek ship owners in New York who recently promised to remove their ships from trade with Communist China. Mr. Stassen suggests that the Senator determine how the Greeks got their ships from the United States, how much money they have made, their agents and their taxes.

And Senator McCarthy discloses that his investigating committee is looking into payments made to newspapers, magazines, radio networks, and writers by government agencies during the past five years. The Senator says this is not "an investigation of the press." He is primarily interested in any subsidies that might have been paid to any individuals or organizations for what he calls favorable treatment of the Truman administration. Requests for such information have been sent to the State Department, and the Defense department, the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Security Agency. The Senator says many payments to ourside media are perfectly legitimate, but he wants to know who got paid, and how much.

In the House today, Republican Representative Reed of New York filed a petition seeking to force a House vote on his bill to cut taxes. It will need 218 signatures to take the bill from the Rules committee, where it has been bottled up, and move it to the floor for a vote. Reed insists that taxes can be reduced without interfering with budget balancing. (The Administration prefers to balance the budget first.)

Administration spokesmen made it clear today they oppose a bill designed to put a 65-billion dollar limit on all government operations. Treasury Secretary Humphrey and Budget Director Dodge say they oppose any such "mandatory expenditure ceiling." The bill, sponsored by Republican Representative Coudert of New York, would limit spending to estimated revenue returns.

Members of the Senate appropriations committee today challenged the cuts Secretary of Agriculture Benson has proposed in his new budget. And the Secretary revealed that the 130-million he proposed to cut from the Truman budget, will more than be offset by the cost of keeping farm prices up next year. Today, farmers sent one of the heaviest runs of cattle to market in 19 years. Experts say this is because the farmers fear beef prices will not recover. And the Department of Agriculture predicts that net farm income will be lower this year than last year.

In a federal court in Washington, Otto Verber, a former army intelligence officer, today pleaded guilty to charges that he served as an agent for a spy ring directed from the Soviet embassy in Washington. And there are indications that he will be a witness at the trial of his brother-in-law, Kurt Ponger, held on the same charge. Both men were arrested in Vienna.

A House committee today heard Henry W. Grunewald, so called Washington mystery man, testify that he gave television sets and other gifts to high tax officials. Grunewald also said that Republican Senator Bridges of New Hampshire once introduced him to a lawyer for John L. Lewis. Democratic Representative Boggs of Louisiana said that Grunewald has testified in a closed session that he did a job for Lewis, for 16-thousand dollars, investigating the late Judge Goldsborough. It was Judge Goldsborough who fined the United Mine Workers three and a half million dollars because the union ignored a back to work order. Lewis says he never met Grunewald or knew anything about him.

Here in New York, a grand jury indicted Joseph P. Ryan on charges of stealing more than 11-thousand dollars from his union's funds. Ryan is president of the A.F.L. Longshoremen's Association. He is accused of using union funds to pay golf and country club dues, buy clothing, pay insurance premiums and pay the funeral expenses of a relative. Ryan pleaded innocent to all charges.

The major league baseball season opened today in Cincinnati where the Milwaukee Braves beat the Redlegs, two to nothing. The American League opener in Washington was cancelled by rain. And because of this, the President, who flew to Augusta for golf, has decided to throw out the first ball when the Washington Senators meet the New York Yankees in Washington on Thursday. The President had made plans to fly back to Washington for a speech. Now he's decided to attend the delayed opener.

A friend and colleague - Alex Kendrick - is back home from his listening post in Vienna. He's with us in the newsroom tonight. Alex, what's been happening in the satellite countries?

KENDRICK: When I left Vienna a couple of days ago, the satellite regimes had obviously not yet recovered from the shock of Stalin's death, and there's no telling when - or even if - they will recover. The Russians, in the past 40 days, have given the appearance of closing their ranks, and the Malenkov government has carried out a series of interesting moves - both internal and external - showing that there has been a change of government, even though the Moscow censor doesn't permit American correspondents to say that. You ask me what's been happening in the satellites. Well, except for a Moscow style amnesty by the Romanians and the hint of an amnesty by the Hungarians, the answer is that practically nothing has happened. It's as if Rakosi and Cervekov and Zapotocky and the other provincial governors of the Kremlin are still too numb to carry out the normal business of Communist rule - or maybe they don't quite know what to do.

And this illustrates the difference between Russia itself and the Russian satellites - a difference that might be important to us sooner than we think. The difference is that Russia, and the Russian Communist Party, seem to be integrated enough after 35 years of power and harsh discipline to go into a new reign without too many dislocations.

The Communist satellite regimes, on the other hand, have held power - and by no means unopposed power - only for five years or so, and they have done it mainly through the use of Stalin's name and prestige. They've had all their eggs put in one basket for them, and now they see those eggs being taken out of the basket by Malenkov, one by one, and splattered against the Kremlin wall. Prague radio the other night when I heard it, still described Stalin as the greatest man of our time, but that phrase hasn't been used in Moscow since the funeral.

I think the most significant thing about the recent Kremlin moves is not that they constitute a new Soviet peace offensive - which they do - but that even though Soviet over-all policy and objectives may not have changed and only fresh tactics brought into play, for the first time since the war relations between the East and the West seem to have become slightly fluid again. The Russians are talking truce in Korea, they are talking about the unification of Germany, they are talking the Malenkov line that there are no problems, even fundamental ones, that cannot be settled by negotiation. We have to wait and see what they mean by all this, and whether they are as sincere about digging Vishinsky's tunnel of friendship as they were about digging the Moscow subway.

But when you start to open up a situation that has been locked tight for some time, as the Russians appear to be doing, you not only acquire maneuverability for yourself, but you hand it to the other fellow - meaning us. Anything might happen - and that's where the satellites come in. Suppose, for instance, that for the sake of German unity - with the hope, of course, of winning a united Germany over to their side - the Russians decided that the western areas of Poland, which were taken away from Germany, will not have to be returned to Germany. Well, that territory was given to Poland in compensation for the eastern areas that Russia herself took away. One of the bases on which the Polish Communist regime rests is those new, colonized sections. No Polish government, no matter how much force and compulsion it used, could justify such a loss to its people - and yet it could happen.

The point is this, Ed, that the existence of eastern Europe as part of the Soviet empire depends to a large extent on the premise that East and West will never get together, that the world is irrevocably split into two, and that the satellites had better go along with the world into which they have been dragged, in fact there's nothing else for them to do.

But once Moscow begins negotiating with the West, and I believe she has started to do so, once the Iron Curtain begins to show a few chinks of light through it, once you get communications reestablished, and a few trade agreements, and an exchange of scientific ideas, it's going to be much harder maintaining that tight control over every phase of life that Communism needs in order to exist.

And don't forget that four of the satellites, Bulgaria, Romania, Hungary and Albania, border on Yugoslavia, where Tito has slowly been undoing the whole fabric of state communism. That's bound to have its effect on a fluid situation in Eastern Europe.

Maybe I sound too optimistic about all this, Ed, but I'm sure I'm not as optimistic as the rulers of the satellite countries must be pessimistic at this moment, five and a half weeks after Stalin's death.

Thank you Alex Kendrick. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As Alex Kendrick noted, this is a time to watch and await developments behind the Iron Curtain. Joseph Addison set up a pretty good rule for us to follow when he said: "Do not anticipate the relish of any happiness, nor feel the weight of any misery before it actually arrives." For as Archbishop Whately remarked: "It is folly to expect men to do all that they may reasonably be expected to do."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday April 14 1953

This is the news:

The Chinese Communist radio says three convoys of allied war prisoners, are now on their way to Panmunjom. The enemy describes the 68 trucks as "speeding southward along highways which United States bombing failed to wreck." American jet planes, in the air over the badly battered highway today, could see nothing, because of clouds. But the Air Force says all precautions have been taken to make sure there is no "mistake" bombing of the prisoners. At our end, 700 Chinese Communists, and North Koreans, were taken from a prison camp on Cheju island today, and loaded on [redacted] landing ships for a trip to Pusan. From there, all of the freshly clothed [redacted] prisoners will travel by [redacted] ambulance to Panmunjom. Allied troops today began working on the possibility that a full-scale prisoner of war exchange may be possible soon. [redacted]

Reliable sources [redacted] in Washington say that [redacted] General CLARK is ready to agree to resuming the TRUCE talks. We will suggest that anti-Communist prisoners, who refuse to [redacted] return home, be turned over to Swiss control.... in line with the enemy suggestion that they be turned over to a neutral nation.

The air force today used Sabrejets as fighter-bombers and attacked an enemy concentration in Western Korea..starting fires in 21 buildings. The Sabrejets ran into no enemy air opposition. On the ground, a patrol of the British First Commonwealth Division charged through a Chinese ring that had surrounded the British on the western front. The Commonwealth Division recently returned to the front after rest and training.

In Indo-China, the French-backed Kingdom of Laos today ordered general mobilization of all able-bodied men between the ages of 18 and 35. They are to fight alongside French troops against guerrilla invaders who have now surrounded a town 100 miles southwest of Hanoi. The French evacuated the town because of the difficulty in defending it.

At the United Nations today, Brazil--with western support--introduced a a resolution to keep Korean armistice talks at Panmunjom... and avoid any U.N. debate on Korea.

Britain's Sir Gladwyn Jebb suggests that the Russians can prove the sincerity of their peace talk in five ways: an armistice in Korea.. a peace treaty for Austria.. release of Japanese, German and Italian prisoners held since the last war.. the release of Greek children and soldiers held by Soviet satellites... and the institution of racial and religious tolerance and freedom of thought in the Soviet Union.

Moscow's Literary Gazette said today, that a peaceful settlement of the Korean war would make things easier for a settlement of issues in Germany.

In this country, the President, vacationing at Augusta, has asked Congress to authorize the sale, to private industry, of the government's 550-million-dollar synthetic rubber industry. He says we now have adequate rubber stockpiles for the foreseeable future. [The synthetic plants were set up during the last war when the Japanese cut off our supplies of natural rubber from the Far East.]

House Republican LEADERS today spoke out against any early action on a bill to cut taxes. A petition to take the tax cutting bill from committee, and force it to the House floor for a vote, has only 14 signatures..it needs 218. Speaker Martin says the Republicans will "not urge our members" to sign the peitition. He wants to wait until the middle of May, to decide whether spending can be reduced enough to permit a tax cut.

Chairman Wolcott of the House Banking Committee today introduced a bill to let rent controls end on schedule...April 30th..except in those cities designated as critical defense housing areas. The President has called for a five months extension of rent controls.. and a Senate committee has given this its approval.

The acting director of the National Bureau of Standards..Dr. Wallace Brode.. told a Senate committee today that Commerce Secretary Weeks ignored a letter from Dr. Allen Astin, who was recently dismissed as the bure u's director. Astin had suggested an impartial review of the controversial battery-additive case. Dr. Brode said today that "terrific pressure" was brought on the Bureau to get approval of this compound. He said among other mail there were letters from 24 senators.

~~Labor Secretary Durkin says college seniors have an excellent chance of finding jobs after their graduation. He says our economy is now operating at record breaking levels, with unemployment at a post war low.~~

The Justice Department says its going to drop a grand jury investigation of an alleged international oil cartel. It will substitute a civil anti-trust action for criminal charges.

~~Interior Secretary McKay wants a reduction in federal government power development. But he says he does not think the government should get out of the power business entirely, as suggested recently by former President Hoover.~~

In a Washington federal court, a second former G.I., Kurt L. Ponger, pleaded guilty of conspiring to give the Russians American military secrets. He followed the same action taken yesterday by his brother-in-law Otto Verber. Both men had been arrested in Vienna. And the government now indicates it expects to make additional arrests in the same case.

Harold Glasser, a former government economist, today refused to tell a Senate committee whether he has been a Communist. Glasser worked for the government for a dozen years. The committee produced a letter from Dean Acheson, written at a time when he was not with the State Department, commending Glasser's work for the government. A committee attorney says two witnesses have testified that Glasser was an active Communist at one time.

Edward R. Murrow: April 14, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

At long last the British people received some cheering news from their Chancellor of the Exchequer today; (sweeping reductions in income taxes and excess profits taxes.) For the first time since the beginning of World War II no new taxes of any kind were proposed. Britain's gold and dollar reserves have gone up more than 450 million dollars in the last year. There is even the prospect that after thirteen years sugar rationing may be ended.

The Excess Profits Tax on British industry, which has been at 30 percent, will end the first of next year. This is designed to increase production so that British industries can produce more goods for export in order to earn more dollars. There is also a cut in the sales tax on a wide variety of goods, ranging from automobiles to television sets, averaging about 25 percent. The basic individual income tax is reduced slightly, but even after this reduction the British are paying income ~~tax~~ taxes at a higher rate than we are. Britain thus becomes the second commonwealth nation to reduce income tax rates for the next fiscal year. Canada did it a few weeks ago. Mr. Butler estimated that the total tax reduction would amount to about 473 million dollars; and he figures that the British Government will not go into the red next year as a result of this reduction in tax rates. (Whether it does or not may depend to a considerable extent upon the amount of American aid forthcoming.)

Today's announcement in London started immediate speculation that Mr. Churchill's government may be planning a national election some time after the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II.

Certainly the tax reductions, even though the individual income tax remains higher than in this country, will increase the prestige of the Conservative Government; and the prospect of ending sugar rationing may have an even greater influence.

On the surface the biggest tax benefits went to private industry, the assumption being that this easement will give British industry an opportunity to expand, increase its production for export, and thereby produce more dollars for the British Treasury. They have managed to increase their reserve of hard currency, and they face the agreeable prospect of a balanced budget at the end of the next fiscal year.

There is nothing in Mr. Butler's statement as reported so far to indicate that Russia's policy of easing the tension played any part in the British decision. They have announced no substantial cuts in their defense appropriations. But the Russian moves in the last forty days have created a noticeable climate of optimism. Our Secretary of State speculates semi-publicly about the terms and the demarcation lines for a truce in Korea, even before the first sick and wounded prisoners have been exchanged. It is perhaps necessary to remember that so far the Russians have given up nothing, and neither have we. There will have to be some giving up by both sides before an accommodation can be reached in Asia or in Europe. Even if a cease-fire should be achieved in Korea, that will be only the beginning of prolonged and exceedingly delicate negotiations.

It is true that the Russians have taken a somewhat more gentle tone at the United Nations; that they speak of a truce in Korea; that their manners have improved somewhat in their contacts with the West. It is also true that in their broadcasts to their own people they speak increasingly of ~~increased~~ above production of consumer goods, better housing, and lower food prices. But in what they are saying to their own people there is no change discernible in their attitude towards the democratic states. On our side there has been no change and no explanation as to how we are to achieve peacefully the liberation of the satellite nations. The conflict in announced objectives between the free world and the Communist world is just as complete as it was before Stalin's death. The Russian Government, in what it is saying to its own people, is following an obvious line. Their intentions are peaceful; they threaten no one; they are making every effort to reach a peaceful solution with these Western warmongers. From their point of view this is sound doctrine, no matter what happens, because if there is a relaxation of the tension they get the credit; and if war should come, then it's all our fault. They are playing both ends against the middle. They have achieved an orderly transfer of power, and they have retained the initiative in this worldwide conflict. They have told us that one of their primary purposes is to divide us from our allies. Whatever happens, we cannot say that we were not warned.

For the first time since the start of ~~the~~ war two Britain is reducing taxes. And while it's true, as Machiavelli once said, that "new benefits cannot obliterate old injuries", most Britons are doubtless grateful. And in this regard would probably agree with Seneca that "a benefit consists not always in what is done or given, but in the intention."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Chinese Communist radio says three convoys of allied war prisoners, are now on their way to Panmunjom. The enemy describes the 68 trucks as "speeding southward along highways which United States bombing failed to wreck." American jet planes, in the air over the badly battered highway today, could see nothing because of clouds. But the Air Force says all precautions have been taken to make sure there is no "mistake" bombing of the prisoners. At our end, 700 Chinese Communists and North Koreans were taken from a prison camp on Cheju Island today and loaded on landing ships for a trip to Pusan. From there all of the freshly clothed prisoners will travel by ambulance to Panmunjom. Allied troops today began working on the possibility that a full-scale prisoner of war exchange may be possible soon. Reliable sources in Washington say that General Clark is ready to agree to resuming the truce talks. He will suggest that anti-Communist prisoners who refuse to return home be turned over to Swiss control in line with the enemy suggestion that they be turned over to a "neutral" nation.

The Air Force today used Sabrejets as fighter-bombers and attacked an enemy concentration in Western Korea, starting fires in 21 buildings. The Sabrejets ran into no enemy air opposition. On the ground, a patrol of the British First Commonwealth Division charged through a Chinese ring that had surrounded the British on the western front. The Commonwealth Division recently returned to the front after rest and training.

In Indo-China, the French-backed Kingdom of Laos today ordered general mobilization of all able-bodied men between the ages of 18 and 35. They are to fight alongside French troops against guerrilla invaders who have now surrounded a town 100 miles southwest of Hanoi. The French evacuated the town because of the difficulty in defending it.

At the United Nations today, Brazel, with western support, introduced a resolution to keep Korean armistice talks at Panmunjom and avoid any U.N. debate on Korea.

Britain's Sir Gladwyn Jebb suggests that the Russians can prove the sincerity of their peace talk in five ways: an armistice in Korea, a peace treaty for Austria, release of Japanese, German and Italian prisoners held since the last war, the release of Greek children and soldiers held by Soviet satellites, and the institution of racial and religious tolerance and freedom of thought in the Soviet Union.

Moscow's Literary Gazette said today that a peaceful settlement of the Korean war would make things easier for a settlement of issues in Germany.

In this country, the President, vacationing at Augusta, has asked Congress to authorize the sale to private industry of the government's 550-million dollar synthetic rubber industry. He says we now have adequate rubber stockpiles for the foreseeable future. The synthetic plants were set up during the last war when the Japanese cut off our supplies of natural rubber from the Far East.

House Republican leaders today spoke out against any early action on a bill to cut taxes, a petition to take take the tax cutting bill from committee and force it to the House floor for a vote has only 14 signatures, it needs 218. Speaker Martin says the Republicans will "not urge our members" to sign the petition. He wants to wait until the middle of May to decide whether spending can be reduced enough to permit a tax cut.

Chairman Wolcott of the House Banking Committee today introduced a bill to let rent controls end on schedule, April 30th, except in those cities designated as critical defense housing areas. The President has called for a five months extension of rent controls, and a Senate committee has given this its approval.

The acting director of the National Bureau of Standards, Dr. Wallace Brode, told a Senate committee today that Commerce Secretary Weeks ignored a letter from Dr. Allen Astin, who was recently dismissed as the bureau's director. Astin had suggested an impartial review of the controversial battery-additive case. Dr. Brode said today that "terrific pressure" was brought on the Bureau to get approval of this compound. He said among other mail there were letters from 24 senators.

The Justice Department says its going to drop a grand jury investigation of an alleged international oil cartel. It will substitute a civil anti-trust action for criminal charges.

In a Washington federal court, a second former G.I., Kurt L. Ponger, pleaded guilty of conspiring to give the Russians American military secrets. He followed the same action taken yesterday by his brother-in-law Otto Verber. Both men had been arrested in Vienna. And the government now indicates it expects to make additional arrests in the same case.

Harold Glasser, a former government economist, today refused to tell a Senate committee whether he has been a Communist. Glasser worked for the government for a dozen years. The committee produced a letter from Dean Acheson, written at a time when he was not with the State Department, commending Glasser's work for the government. A committee attorney says two witnesses have testified that Glasser was an active Communist at one time.

At long last the British people received some cheering news from their Chancellor of the Exchequer today; (sweeping reductions in income taxes, and excess profits taxes.) For the first time since the beginning of World War II no new taxes of any kind were proposed. Britain's gold and dollar reserves have gone up more than 450 million dollars in the last year. There is even the prospect that after thirteen years sugar rationing may be ended.

The Excess Profits Tax on British industry, which has been at 30 percent, will end the first of next year. This is designed to increase production so that British industries can produce more goods for export in order to earn more dollars. There is also a cut in the sales tax on a wide variety of goods, ranging from automobiles to television sets, averaging about 25 percent. The basic individual income tax is reduced slightly, but even after this reduction the British are paying income taxes at a higher rate than we are. Britain thus becomes the second commonwealth nation to reduce income tax rates for the next fiscal year. Canada did it a few weeks ago. Mr. Butler estimated that the total tax reduction would amount to 473 million dollars; and he figures that the British Government will not go into the red next year as a result of this reduction in tax rates. (Whether it does or not may depend to a considerable extent upon the amount of American air forthcoming.)

Today's announcement in London started immediate speculation that Mr. Churchill's government may be planning a national election some time after the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II.

Certainly the tax reductions, even though the individual income tax remains higher than in this country, will increase the prestige of the Conservative Government; and the prospect of ending sugar rationing may have an even greater influence.

On the surface the biggest tax benefits went to private industry, the assumption being what this easement will give British industry an opportunity to expand, increase its production for export, and thereby produce more dollars for the British Treasury. They have managed to increase their reserve of hard currency, and they face the agreeable prospect of a balanced budget at the end of the fiscal year.

There is nothing in Mr. Butler's statement as reported so far to indicate that Russia's policy of easing the tnesion played any part in the British decision. They have announced no substantial cuts in their defense appropriations. But the Russian moves in the last forty days have created a noticeable climate of optimism. Our Secretary of State speculates semi-publicly about the terms and the demarcation lines for a truce in Korea, even before the first sick and wounded prisoners have been exchanged. It is perhaps necessary to remember that so far the Russians have given up nothing, and neither have we. There will have to be some giving up by both sides before an accommodation can be reached in Asia or in Europe. Even if a cease-fire should be achieved in Korea, that will be only the beginning of prolonged and exceedingly delicate negotiations.

It is true that the Russians have taken a somewhat more gentle tone at the United Nations; that they speak of a truce in Korea; that their manners have improved somewhat in their contacts with the West. It is also true that in their broadcasts to their own people they speak increasingly of more production of consumer goods, better housing, and lower food prices. But in what they are saying to their own people there is no change discernible in their attitude towards the democratic states. On our side there has been no change and no explanation as to how we are to achieve peacefully the liberation of the satellite nations. The conflict in announced objectives between the free world and the Communist world is just as complete as it was before Stalin's death. The Russian Government, in what it is saying to its own people, is following an obvious line. Their intentions are peaceful; they threaten no one; they are making every effort to reach a peaceful solution with these Western warmongers. From their point of view this is sound doctrine, no matter what happens, because if there is a relaxation of the tension they get the credit; and if war should come, then it's all our fault. They are playing both ends against the middle. They have achieved an orderly transfer of power, and they have retained the initiative in this worldwide conflict. They have told us that one of their primary purposes is to divide us from our allies. Whatever happens, we cannot say that we were not warned.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: For the first time since the start of World War II Britain is reducing taxes. And while it's true, as Machiavelli once said, that "new benefits cannot obliterate old injuries," most Britons are doubtless grateful. And in this regard would probably agree with Seneca that "a benefit consists not always in what is done or given, but in the intention."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Chinese Communist radio says three convoys of allied war prisoners, are now on their way to Panmunjom. The enemy describes the 68 trucks as "speeding southward along highways which United States bombing failed to wreck." American jet planes, in the air over the badly battered highway today, could see nothing because of clouds. But the Air Force says all precautions have been taken to make sure there is no "mistake" bombing of the prisoners. At our end, 700 Chinese Communists and North Koreans were taken from a prison camp on Cheju Island today and loaded on landing ships for a trip to Pusan. From there all of the freshly clothed prisoners will travel by ambulance to Panmunjom. Allied troops today began working on the possibility that a full-scale prisoner of war exchange may be possible soon. Reliable sources in Washington say that General Clark is ready to agree to resuming the truce talks. He will suggest that anti-Communist prisoners who refuse to return home be turned over to Swiss control in line with the enemy suggestion that they be turned over to a "neutral" nation.

The Air Force today used Sabrejets as fighter-bombers and attacked an enemy concentration in Western Korea, starting fires in 21 buildings. The Sabrejets ran into no enemy air opposition. On the ground, a patrol of the British First Commonwealth Division charged through a Chinese ring that had surrounded the British on the western front. The Commonwealth Division recently returned to the front after rest and training.

In Indo-China, the French-backed Kingdom of Laos today ordered general mobilization of all able-bodied men between the ages of 18 and 35. They are to fight alongside French troops against guerrilla invaders who have now surrounded a town 100 miles southwest of Hanoi. The French evacuated the town because of the difficulty in defending it.

At the United Nations today, Brazel, with western support, introduced a resolution to keep Korean armistice talks at Panmunjom and avoid any U.N. debate on Korea.

Britain's Sir Gladwyn Jebb suggests that the Russians can prove the sincerity of their peace talk in five ways: an armistice in Korea, a peace treaty for Austria, release of Japanese, German and Italian prisoners held since the last war, the release of Greek children and soldiers held by Soviet satellites, and the institution of racial and religious tolerance and freedom of thought in the Soviet Union.

Moscow's Literary Gazette said today that a peaceful settlement of the Korean war would make things easier for a settlement of issues in Germany.

In this country, the President, vacationing at Augusta, has asked Congress to authorize the sale to private industry of the government's 550-million dollar synthetic rubber industry. He says we now have adequate rubber stockpiles for the foreseeable future. The synthetic plants were set up during the last war when the Japanese cut off our supplies of natural rubber from the Far East.

House Republican leaders today spoke out against any early action on a bill to cut taxes, a petition to take take the tax cutting bill from committee and force it to the House floor for a vote has only 14 signatures, it needs 218. Speaker Martin says the Republicans will "not urge our members" to sign the petition. He wants to wait until the middle of May to decide whether spending can be reduced enough to permit a tax cut.

Chairman Wolcott of the House Banking Committee today introduced a bill to let rent controls end on schedule, April 30th, except in those cities designated as critical defense housing areas. The President has called for a five months extension of rent controls, and a Senate committee has given this its approval.

The acting director of the National Bureau of Standards, Dr. Wallace Brode, told a Senate committee today that Commerce Secretary Weeks ignored a letter from Dr. Allen Astin, who was recently dismissed as the bureau's director. Astin had suggested an impartial review of the controversial battery-additive case. Dr. Brode said today that "terrific pressure" was brought on the Bureau to get approval of this compound. He said among other mail there were letters from 24 senators.

The Justice Department says its going to drop a grand jury investigation of an alleged international oil cartel. It will substitute a civil anti-trust action for criminal charges.

In a Washington federal court, a second former G.I., Kurt L. Ponger, pleaded guilty of conspiring to give the Russians American military secrets. He followed the same action taken yesterday by his brother-in-law Otto Verber. Both men had been arrested in Vienna. And the government now indicates it expects to make additional arrests in the same case.

Harold Glasser, a former government economist, today refused to tell a Senate committee whether he has been a Communist. Glasser worked for the government for a dozen years. The committee produced a letter from Dean Acheson, written at a time when he was not with the State Department, commending Glasser's work for the government. A committee attorney says two witnesses have testified that Glasser was an active Communist at one time.

At long last the British people received some cheering news from their Chancellor of the Exchequer today; (sweeping reductions in income taxes, and excess profits taxes.) For the first time since the beginning of World War II no new taxes of any kind were proposed. Britain's gold and dollar reserves have gone up more than 450 million dollars in the last year. There is even the prospect that after thirteen years sugar rationing may be ended.

The Excess Profits Tax on British industry, which has been at 30 percent, will end the first of next year. This is designed to increase production so that British industries can produce more goods for export in order to earn more dollars. There is also a cut in the sales tax on a wide variety of goods, ranging from automobiles to television sets, averaging about 25 percent. The basic individual income tax is reduced slightly, but even after this reduction the British are paying income taxes at a higher rate than we are. Britain thus becomes the second commonwealth nation to reduce income tax rates for the next fiscal year. Canada did it a few weeks ago. Mr. Butler estimated that the total tax reduction would amount to 473 million dollars; and he figures that the British Government will not go into the red next year as a result of this reduction in tax rates. (Whether it does or not may depend to a considerable extent upon the amount of American air forthcoming.)

Today's announcement in London started immediate speculation that Mr. Churchill's government may be planning a national election some time after the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II.

Certainly the tax reductions, even though the individual income tax remains higher than in this country, will increase the prestige of the Conservative Government; and the prospect of ending sugar rationing may have an even greater influence.

On the surface the biggest tax benefits went to private industry, the assumption being what this easement will give British industry an opportunity to expand, increase its production for export, and thereby produce more dollars for the British Treasury. They have managed to increase their reserve of hard currency, and they face the agreeable prospect of a balanced budget at the end of the fiscal year.

There is nothing in Mr. Butler's statement as reported so far to indicate that Russia's policy of easing the tnesion played any part in the British decision. They have announced no substantial cuts in their defense appropriations. But the Russian moves in the last forty days have created a noticeable climate of optimism. Our Secretary of State speculates semi-publicly about the terms and the demarcation lines for a truce in Korea, even before the first sick and wounded prisoners have been exchanged. It is perhaps necessary to remember that so far the Russians have given up nothing, and neither have we. There will have to be some giving up by both sides before an accommodation can be reached in Asia or in Europe. Even if a cease-fire should be achieved in Korea, that will be only the beginning of prolonged and exceedingly delicate negotiations.

It is true that the Russians have taken a somewhat more gentle tone at the United Nations; that they speak of a truce in Korea; that their manners have improved somewhat in their contacts with the West. It is also true that in their broadcasts to their own people they speak increasingly of more production of consumer goods, better housing, and lower food prices. But in what they are saying to their own people there is no change discernible in their attitude towards the democratic states. On our side there has been no change and no explanation as to how we are to achieve peacefully the liberation of the satellite nations. The conflict in announced objectives between the free world and the Communist world is just as complete as it was before Stalin's death. The Russian Government, in what it is saying to its own people, is following an obvious line. Their intentions are peaceful; they threaten no one; they are making every effort to reach a peaceful solution with these Western warmongers. From their point of view this is sound doctrine, no matter what happens, because if there is a relaxation of the tension they get the credit; and if war should come, then it's all our fault. They are playing both ends against the middle. They have achieved an orderly transfer of power, and they have retained the initiative in this worldwide conflict. They have told us that one of their primary purposes is to divide us from our allies. Whatever happens, we cannot say that we were not warned.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: For the first time since the start of World War II Britain is reducing taxes. And while it's true, as Machiavelli once said, that "new benefits cannot obliterate old injuries," most Britons are doubtless grateful. And in this regard would probably agree with Seneca that "a benefit consists not always in what is done or given, but in the intention."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday
April 15, 1953 4/15/53

This is the news:

Allied planes today attacked the Communists all across Korea..except in the corridor the enemy is using to bring allied war prisoners to Panmunjom. One of our planes dropped a bomb on an allied forward position. (There were three casualties) And the Pentagon reports that we suffered a total of 496 casualties in Korea last week: 106 killed, 30 missing, the rest wounded. I'd like to discuss the Korean situation in a few minutes.

At the United Nations today, France and Indonesia urged General Clark's Tokyo headquarters to resume truce negotiations with the Communists in Korea. And Andre Vishinsky called on the U.N. to stop "quibbling" about details..to start helping the Korean negotiators reach a truce. Vishinsky said th [redacted] Chinese Communist proposal for renewing negotiations is an open door. He asked:"Why don't you walk through it. Instead we hear nothing but quibbling." Vishinsky also told the political committee that Russia will never agree to the disarmament proposals supported by the western nations. He said: "We have not been able to agree, we do not agree, and we will never be able to agree."

And American Delegate Gross told the Russian that the Communists " must convince the world" that the Chinese communist truce proposals "are a sound basis for solving the Korean problem."

The United States narcotic commissioner, Harry J. Anslinger, today told the U.N. commission on Narcotic Drugs that the Chinese Reds are running a giant dope smuggling ring. He said they're doing this to finance their war economy...to finance political activity, and for sabotage. He said the Communists are spreading drug addiction among American troops in the Far East.

The President returns to Washington tomorrow, from Augusta, to make a speech, and throw out a baseball at the Washington-Yankee game. His news secretary says Mr. Eisenhower's speech will be a major address... "on foreign policy, and the chances for peace, for all the peoples of the world in 1953." The President's speech will be heard over many of these stations at 1 p.m., eastern standard time.

The army today called for 32-thousand draftees in June. That's 21-thousand less than have been called up in each of the last four months. The Army says the drop in the June quota has nothing to do with Russia's peace offensive. Its just that a two year cycle has now been established for drafting men and the quotas are expected to continue at the new level.

Democratic Senator Byrd charged today that the nation's military planners have made "one tragic mistake after another" in dealing with our ammunition problems. The Senate committee investigating the situation heard Major General Reeder, former deputy chief of staff for army supplies, testify that the ammunition program was "slow." And Senator Byrd charged that former Defense Secretary Marshal issued an order late in 1950 that slowed down production by assuming that the Korean war would be over in a year.

Defense Mobilization Director Fleming told a House committee today that the Administration would prefer an extension of rent controls until October first. (They're due to end on April 30.) And Banking Committee Chairman Wolcott wants them to end then..except in criticial military housing areas.

Senator Taft said today that Republican leaders in the Senate have given up their hope to have a vote this week on a tidelands bill. And Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama charged that the bill..to give coastal states title to offshore lands...is an "attempt to make a gratuitous grant TO THE STATES of vast oil, gas, sulphur and other natural resources".

[redacted]

Republican Representative Hyde of Maryland today urged Congress to take the Bureau of Standards away from the Commerce Department and make it an independent agency. He said this would keep the Bureau out of politics. He charges that the recent dismissal of Director Astin has led to the demoralization of the Bureau's staff.

The Justice Department says Movie Actor Charlie Chaplin has voluntarily given up his status as a resident alien. This would indicate he does not intend to return to the United States. (Chaplin is now in Switzerland and could not be reached for comment.)

William Remington, a former government economist, today started to serve a three-year sentence. (He has been convicted of perjury.) Remington, who is 35.. says he never was a member of the Communist party and never gave secret information to anyone.

In Germany today, Defense Secretary Wilson, starting a three-week inspection tour of our European bases, told reporters the Soviet peace moves will not slow up the build-up of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In Berlin, East Germany's top communist, Walter Ulbricht, said today that Russia wants a four-power conference on the unification of all Germany. He demands that the United States "show its readiness to accept" such a conference.

In Argentina, two bombs exploded within 400 feet of President Peron who was addressing a crowd of 100-thousand persons in Beunos Aires. TWO persons were killed.. many injured.

In New York, Spyros Skouras, president of the 20th Century Fox Film Corporation, announced that General Van Fleet has joined the corporation's board of directors.

In Korea, our pilots have now located two enemy convoys moving south with disabled allied prisoners. The first one is due to reach Kaesong today. Our pilots went down low to have a look at the convoys, but were forced to break off because of unusually heavy anti-aircraft fire. One pilot said that in all of his ninety-six missions onver Korea he had never seen so many trucks on the roads. It looks as though the enemy is taking advantage of this opportunity to move heavy military traffic up to the front along with the prisoner convoys.

Down at Pusan a group of Chinese prisoners due for repatriation staged a sit-down strike, refusing to go ashore from the ship that had brought them from Cheju Island. They finally went ashore when American guards came aboard with fixed bayonets. Brigadier General McGaar, head of the U.N. prisoner of war command, said "these people are Communists...there's always the possibility of trouble up to the last man."

Here in Washington the State Department is drafting a reply to the Communist proposal for renewed truce talks. It is denied that any formal request has been made to Switzerland to take over control of those prisoners who do not want to be sent home.

The possibility of a truce in Korea was recognized by the State Department today in a rather unusual move. The Department told the Japanese government that we will continue to spend money in that country at a relatively high level even if peace should be achieved in Korea. A considerable part of the Japanese economy rests upon our expenditures there. They have been running at the rate of about eight hundred million dollars a year. The State Department also gave an implied promise that we would lend a hand to the Japanese "if a serious situation ever were to develop in the Japanese economy. The Japanese are electing a new House of Representatives on Sunday, and what we are doing is trying to reassure them that their economy won't suffer too much, even if peace should break out in Korea. This action illustrates one of the many problems that will inevitably follow hard upon any cease-fire in Korea. If the Japanese are to have a healthy economy, they must either trade with the Communist controlled mainland of Asia, or they must continue to get subsidies in one form or another from us. The alternative would be economic chaos, and a fertile field for the Communists.

The question of Formosa is also bound to arise as soon as the talks have expanded beyond the consideration of a cease-fire. Some [redacted] consideration has been given to a U. N. trusteeship, but no decision has been reached. This issue is political dynamite here at home, and provides the possibility for basic disagreement [redacted] between ourselves and our allies.

A cease-fire or a settlement in Korea will [redacted] simply mean that the armies stand where they are, and stop shooting. It will not solve the political future of Korea, of Formosa, the war in Indochina, or the question of Japanese trade with the mainland. It will merely mean that the hot war in Korea has stopped, and that in turn will cause us to recognize that the basic issues in Asia cannot be settled in Korea, and that the hard core of the cold war remains what it has been.

The question of diplomatic recognition for Communist China is bound to arise. We are committed to doing what we can to disrupt the alliance between Communist China and the Soviet Union. The question will arise whether over the long haul we have a better chance of doing this by recognizing an existing fact, namely, that the Communists control China, or by denying this fact and continuing to nourish the forces of Chiang Kai-Shek while having no diplomatic or trade relations with Communist China. It can be assumed that most of our allies in Europe will urge us to recognize Communist China when, and if, the war is ended in Korea. Here again will occur furious political debate in this country and the possibility of division in the alliance of the free world. It will be necessary for us to always remember that just as it is our purpose to weaken or destroy Russian control and domination over the satellite countries and China, so it is Russian purpose to do anything they can to disrupt or destroy the rather uneasy alliances that exist amongst the nations of the free world. In this sort of contest, the Communist world can move with great speed as it has demonstrated recently, and with a considerable, although by no means complete disregard of public opinion.

It appears that our administration is proceeding upon the sound policy of taking one step at a time without revealing its plans or policies in regard to the possibility of any broader settlement in Asia. When and if the question of recognizing Communist China rises, we might recall that one reason we didn't know that the Chinese would enter the Korean war if we reached for the Yalu was that we had no representative in Peping who could talk to the Chinese Communists. They told the [redacted] Indian representative what they would do; he told us, but we didn't believe him. The whole question of diplomatic recognition for governments that we dislike, distrust, and abhor was probably best put by Winston Churchill when he said that diplomatic recognition should be regarded as the acquiring of a [redacted] convenience and not the conferring of a compliment.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

New, here's Bob Dixon.

10

WORD FOR TODAY

We were speaking of Japanese trade with Asia. Thomas Jefferson said: "The selfish spirit of commerce knows no country and feels no passion or principle but that of gain". But Will Durant held that "The crossroads of trade are the meeting place of ideas, the attrition grounds of rival customs and beliefs; diversities beget conflict, comparison, thought; superstitions cancel one another and reason begins."

Good night and good luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Allied planes today attacked the Communists all across Korea except in the corridor the enemy is using to bring allied war prisoners to Panmunjom. One of our planes dropped a bomb on an allied forward position. (There were three casualties.) And the Pentagon reports that we suffered a total of 496 casualties in Korea last week: 106 killed, 30 missing, the rest wounded. I'd like to discuss the Korean situation in a few minutes.

At the United Nations today, France and Indonesia urged General Clark's Tokyo headquarters to resume truce negotiations with the Communists in Korea. And Andre Vishinsky called on the U.N. to stop "quibbling" about details, to start helping the Korean negotiators reach a truce. Vishinsky said the Chinese Communist proposal for renewing negotiations is an open door. He asked: "Why don't you walk through it. Instead we hear nothing but quibbling." Vishinsky also told the political committee that Russia will never agree to the disarmament proposals supported by the western nations. He said: "We have not been able to agree, we do not agree, and we will never be able to agree."

And American Delegate Gross told the Russian that the Communists "must convince the world" that the Chinese communist truce proposals "are a sound basis for solving the Korean problem."

The United States narcotic commissioner, Harry J. Anslinger, today told the U.N. commission on Narcotic Drugs that the Chinese Reds are running a giant dope smuggling ring. He said they're doing this to finance their war economy, to finance political activity and for sabotage. He said the Communists are spreading drug addiction among American troops in the Far East.

The President returns to Washington tomorrow, from Augusta, to make a speech and throw out a baseball at the Washington-Yankee game. His news secretary says Mr. Eisenhower's speech will be a major address "on foreign policy and the chances for peace for all the peoples of the world in 1953." The President's speech will be heard over many of these stations at 1 p.m. eastern standard.

The army today called for 32-thousand draftees in June. That's 21-thousand less than have been called up in each of the last four months. The Army says the drop in the June quota has nothing to do with Russia's peace offensive. Its just that a two year cycle has now been established for drafting men and the quotas are expected to continue at the new level.

Democratic Senator Byrd charged today that the nation's military planners have been "one tragic mistake after another" in dealing with our ammunition problems. The Senate committee investigating the situation heard Major General Reeder, former deputy chief of staff for army supplies, testify that the ammunition program was "slow." And Senator Byrd charged that former Defense Secretary Marshal issued an order late in 1950 that slowed down production by assuming the Korean war would be over in a year.

Defense Mobilization Director Fleming told a House committee today that the Administration would prefer an extension of rent controls until October first. They're due to end on April 30. And Banking Committee Chairman Wolcott wants them to end then, except in critical military housing areas.

Senator Taft said today that Republican leaders in the Senate have given up their hope to have a vote this week on a tidelands bill. And Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama charged that the bill to give coastal states title to offshore lands is an "attempt to make a gratuitous grant to the states of vast oil, gas, sulphur and other natural resources."

Republican Representative Hyde of Maryland today urged Congress to take the Bureau of Standards away from the Commerce Department and make it an independent agency. He said this would keep the Bureau out of politics. He charges that the recent dismissal of Director Astin has led to the demoralization of the Bureau's staff.

The Justice Department says Movie Actor Charlie Chaplin has voluntarily given up his status as a resident alien. This would indicate he does not intend to return to the United States. Chaplin is now in Switzerland and could not be reached for comment.

William Remington, a former government economist, today started to serve a three year sentence. He has been convicted of perjury. Remington who is 35, says he never was a member of the Communist party and never gave secret information to anyone.

In Germany today, Defense Secretary Wilson, starting a three week inspection tour of our European bases, told reporters the Soviet peace moves will not slow up the build-up of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In Berlin, East Germany's top communist, Walter Ulbricht, said today that Russia wants a four-power conference on the unification of all Germany. He demands that the United States "show its readiness to accept" such a conference.

In Argentina, two bombs exploded within 400 feet of President Peron who was addressing a crowd of 100-thousand persons in Buenos Aires. Two persons were killed, many injured.

In New York, Spyros Skouras, president of the 20th Century Fox Film Corporation, announced that General Van Fleet has joined the corporation's board of directors.

In Korea, our pilots have now located two enemy convoys moving south with disabled allied prisoners. The first one is due to reach Kaesong today. Our pilots went down low to have a look at the convoys, but were forced to break off because of unusually heavy anti-aircraft fire. One pilot said that in all of his ninety-six missions over Korea he had never seen so many trucks on the roads. It looks as though the enemy is taking advantage of this opportunity to move heavy military traffic up to the front along with the prisoner convoys.

Down at Pusan a group of Chinese prisoners due for repatriation staged a sit-down strike, refusing to go ashore from the ship that had brought them from

Cheju Island. They finally went ashore when American guards came aboard with fixed bayonets. Brigadier General McCarr, head of the U.N. prisoner of war commands, said "these people are Communists - there's always the possibility of trouble up to the last man."

Here in Washington the State Department is drafting a reply to the Communist proposal for renewed truce talks. It is denied that any formal request has been made to Switzerland to take over control of those prisoners who do not want to be sent home.

The possibility of a truce in Korea was recognized by the State Department today in a rather unusual move. The Department told the Japanese government that we will continue to spend money in that country at a relatively high level even if peace should be achieved in Korea. A considerable part of the Japanese economy rests upon our expenditures there. They have been running at the rate of a bout eight hundred million dollars a year. The State Department also gave an implied promise that we would lend a hand to the Japanese "if a serious situation ever were to develop in the Japanese economy. The Japanese are electing a new House of Representatives on Sunday, and what we are doing is trying to reassure them that their economy won't suffer too much even if peace should break out in Korea. This action illustrates one of the many problems that will inevitably followhard upon any cease-fire in Korea. If the Japanese are to have a healthy economy, they must either trade with the Communist controlled mainland of Asia or they must continue to get subsidies in one form or another from us. The alternative would be economic chaos and a fertile field for the Communists.

The Question of Formosa is also bound to arise as soon as the talks have expanded beyond the consideration of a ceass-fire. Some consideration has been given to a U.N. trusteeship, but no decision has been reached. This issue is political dynamite here at home and provides the possibility for basic disagreement between ourselves and our allies.

A cease-fire or a settlement in Korea will simply mean that the armies stand where they are and stop shooting. It will not solve the political future of Korea, of Formosa, the war in Indochina, or the question of Japanese trade with the mainland. It will merely mean that the hot war in Korea has stopped, and that in turn will cause us to recognize that the basic issues in Asia cannot be settled in Korea, and that the hard core of the cold war remains what it has been.

The question of diplomatic recognition for Communist China is bound to arise. We are committee to doing what we can to disrupt the alliance between Communist China and the Soviet Union. The question will arise whether over the long haul we have a better chance of doing this by recognizing an existing fact, namely, that the Communists control China, or by denying this fact and continuing to nourish the forces of Chiang Kai Shek while having no diplomatic or trade relations with Communist China. It can be assumed that most of our allies in Europe will urge us to recognize Communist China when, and if, the war is ended in Korea. Here again will occur furious political debate in this country and the possibility of division in the alliance of the free world. It will be necessary for us to always remember that just as it is our purpose to weaken or destroy Russian control and domination over the satellite countries and China, so it is Russian purpose to do anything they can to disrupt or destroy the rather uneasy alliances that exist amongst the nations of the free world. In this sort of contest, the Communist world can move with great speed as it has demonstrated recently, and with a considerable, although by no means complete disregard of public opinion.

It appears that our administration is proceeding upon the sound policy of taking one step at a time without revealing its plans or policies in regard to the possibility of any broader settlement in Asia. When and if the question of recognizing Communist China rises, we might recall that one reason we didn't know that the Chinese would enter the Korean war if we reached for the Yalu was that we had no representative in Peping who could talk to the Chinese Communists. They told the Indian representative what they would do; he told us, but we didn't believe him. The whole question of diplomatic recognition for governments that we dislike, distrust, and abhor was probably best put by Winston Churchill when he said that diplomatic recognition should be regarded as the acquiring of a convenience and not the conferring of a compliment.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of Japanese trade with Asia. Thomas Jefferson said: "The selfish spirit of commerce knows no country and feels no passion or principle but that of gain." But Will Durant held that "The crossroads of trade are the meeting place of ideas, the attrition grounds of rival customs and beliefs; diversities beget conflict, comparison, thought; superstitutions cancel one another and reason begins."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday 4/16/53

This is the news:

The President today called on the Soviet Union to prove..with concrete steps..its expressed desire for peace. In a speech here in Washington.(which I'd like to review in a few minutes)..Mr. Eisenhower said the Soviet moves should start with an honorable armistice in Korea. #

Later, the President threw out a baseball at the Washington-Yankee game, and then left, after an inning and a half, for North Carolina. There he made an informal address in Rowan County, and his secretary announced that the President has been ill all day. He suffered a slight attack of food poisoning at Augusta last night..had a slight fever all day..but did not want to cancel any of the engagements on today's busy schedule. The President's speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors will be re-broadcast over many of these stations, tonight at 10;35 p.m. eastern standard time.

At Panmunjom today, the United Nations command told enemy negotiators, we are ready to meet on Saturday, to discuss re-opening the truce negotiations. And in a letter to the Communist we suggest that Switzerland be "the neutral nation" to supervise, in Korea, the care of prisoners who refuse to return home. We also say that unless the new meetings indicate that the enemy is willing to reach an agreement in a reasonable time, we will call for another recess.

The first of the allied war prisoners who will be turned over to us on Sunday have now reached Kaseong..six miles from the exchange point at Panmunjom. Communist broadcasts say about half of the FIRST 100 men to be exchanged [redacted] will be non-Koreans..but there is no count on how many Americans will be among them. The enemy radio also says only a handful of the hundred are stretcher cases.."the rest can get around..they have only minor disabilities."

Again today, the enemy prisoner of war convoys were used [redacted] as a shield for big truck convoys moving south with war supplies. And again, our flyers made no attack..for fear of hitting trucks carrying our prisoners.

On the western front, the enemy attacked eight hills held by allied troops including Pork Chop Ridge..two miles west of enemy-held Old Baldy. We stopped all attacks. And our flyers shot down two enemy Migs and damaged three others in attacks on enemy front line positions.

There was something new at the United Nations today. For the first time Russia and the Communist bloc joined the western powers in a Korean vote. The Russians gave up their own peace plan and accepted a resolution calling for an early armistice. The resolution WOULD leave negotiations at Panmunjom..and not try to bring them to the United Nations.

A Senate committee was told today that General Van Fleet's descrption of continuous and serious ammunition shortages in Korea was "much too SWEEPING and much too alarming." Lieut. General Williston B. Palmer, the army supply chief, said he's convinced there was a waste of ammunition in Koraa while Van Fleet commanded the 8th army..too much firing going on...he feels Van Fleet set an extremely high standard for ammunition. General Palmer says there never has been a shortage of ammunition for troops in the front lines. Then, in response to question, he acknowledged that the depletion of the army's ammunition stockpile, because of the Korean war, is a "frightening situation...if WAR came tomorrow "we'd be in a desperate situation."

The House Banking Committee today approved a bill..opposed by the Administration...which would end rent ceilings on about 5-million housing units on April 30.

Undersecretary of the Treasury Folsom said today that THAT prospects are the government's income this year will be substantially below estimates made by former President Truman. This would make it more difficult to balance the budget.

A House committee was told today by Henry Grunewald that he received a 75-thousand-dollar fee for helping get 100 fighter planes for the Chinese govt.. back in 1939 or earlier, he thought. Grunewald also testified, that although his declared income in 1949 and 1950 was more than 269-thousnad dollars, he had filed no 1951 or 1952 tax returns..because the committee has his papers.

In South Africa today, Premier Malan's nationalist party, [redacted] won a sweeping election victory. With returns not yet complete, it appears that the party will double the majority it formerly held. This would mean five more years of the policy of racial segregation..backed up by force if necessary. And it could lead to South Africa's withdrawal from the British Commonwealth.

In Moscow, [redacted] the newspaper Pravda, which had devoted much space for many years praising the [redacted] LATE Stalin, today came out against "one person decisions" in the Communist party's leadership. Pravda says: leadership [redacted] should be collective.. no matter what experience, knowledge or talents a leader posses, he cannot replace a collective decision. Pravda says:"Where collectivity is violated, certain leaders begin to conduct themselves like autocrats..as if they knew everything..as if only they can say anything forecful..as if the job of others is only to support the opinion of the leader."

In the jungles of Malaya today, a British helicopter carrying Adlai Stevenson and others made a forced landing because of engine trouble. No one was injured.

63

April 16, 1953

President Eisenhower's first major speech delivered to the Society of Newspaper Editors today has received an almost universally favorable response, both here and abroad. Dick Hottelet cables me from Germany that the feeling there is that it really put the Russians on the spot before the bar of world public opinion. The Germans were tremendously reassured by the President's emphasis on the necessity to unify Germany on the basis of Free elections, ~~and~~ the proposals regarding disarmament and the use of the money thus saved for economic development is regarded as supplying just that positive, inspirational [redacted] aspect of western policy which has been lacking in the past. Few months — The word from Paris is that the first official French reaction is extremely favorable. The French were particularly impressed by the restraint and lack of belligerence in the President's speech. Diplomatic quarters in London regarded it as an historic pronouncement reflecting the thinking of the free world.

Mr. Eisenhower began by placing the responsibility for the current tension, fear and heavy military expenditures upon the Russians. He said "the present condition is not any way of life at all in the true sense. Under the cloud of threatening war, it is humanity hanging from a cross of iron." He thought ~~of~~ this a time when the governments of the world ~~could~~ should speak ~~of~~ their intentions with simplicity and honesty. The new Soviet leadership has a precious opportunity to awaken with the rest of the world to the point of peril reached and to help turn the tide of history.

18

And then the President got down to cases. The first step must be the conclusion of an honorable armistice in Korea, to be followed by free elections in a united Korea; an end to Communist attacks in Indochina and Malaya -- the conclusion of a peace treaty with Ausutria which will free that country from economic exploitation and from occupation by foreign troops. We want a free and united Germany with a government based on free and secret elections.

We are prepared to enter into the most solemn agreements about disarmament; limit the size of the military establisment and the amount of strategic materials used for military purposes in all countries; the prohibition of atomic weapons, all of this to be done under a practical system of inspection under the United Nations. Here again the President did not adopt a "take it or leave it" attitude, saying: "Neither the United States nor any other nation can properly claim to possess a perfect, immutable formula, but the formula matters less than the faith.

We are prepared to devote a substantial percentage of the savings achieved by disarmament to a fund for world aid and reconstruction to help other peoples to develop the underdeveloped areas of the world (this part was practically a restatement of Mr. Truman's Point Four).

And then the President asked "What is the Soviet Union ready to do." And he added "whatever the answer be, let it be plainly spoken". Mr. Eisenhower said ~~these~~ our porposals spring, without ulterior purpose or a political passion, from our calm conviction that the hunger for just peace is in the hearts of all peoples, those of Russia and of China, no less than of our own country.

Today's speech was not delivered with Mr. Eisenhower's usual vigor because he was suffering from an upset stomach. But it was in this reporter's opinion an extraordinarily lucid and restrained restatement of the basic principles of American foreign policy. In so far as a speech can do it, this one recaptured the initiative for the free world. It established the moral ground upon which we can stand and fight, if fight we must. It was a speech free from rhetoric or unwarranted recrimination. Mild in tone, but firm in purpose, the speech contained little that was new, little of anything to which Mr. Truman or Mr. Acheson, for example, could take exception. It was a reaffirmation of policy in clear and specific terms by our new head of State to the new rulers of Russia. It was an admirable negotiating speech, completely free from recrimination or partisan political bias.

Obviously, the Russians aren't going to agree tomorrow to free elections in the satellite states or to internationally supervised disarmament. They may never agree to such proposals. But what the President was saying to them was not all or nothing, take it or leave it, he was suggesting a step by step gradual easing of the tension, and he was holding out the prospect -- the vision, of a world in which people can be productive and prosperous, and he pledged the strength of this country to serving the needs rather than the fears of the world.

18

Whatever effect this speech may have upon the rulers of Russia, we have now got a statement of policy that is clear, that can be translated effectively to our allies, and one that is not likely to cause any significant partisan political friction in this country. Although some of the porposals advanced by the President cannot in the forseeable future be accepted by the Russians, he has outlined, step by step an alternative to the steady increase of hate, fear, suspicion, and the burden of preparing for ultimate collision.

No one knows what effect, if any, this speech will have on Communist policy or action. But so far as our allies are concerned it will be regarded as bearing the stamp of responsible and restrained world leadership.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

Now, here's Bob Dixon.

The President spelled out, in terms all can understand, the degree and direction our foreign policies are to take in the immediate future. And it would seem, from today's speech, that the President agrees with both Franklin and Lincoln when they said:"If a principle is good for anything it is worth living up to...but important principles may and must be flexible."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 16, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today called on the Soviet Union to prove, with concrete steps, its expressed desire for peace. In a speech here in Washington, which I'd like to review in a few minutes, Mr. Eisenhower said the Soviet moves should start with an honorable armistice in Korea. Later, the President threw out a baseball at the Washington-Yankee game, and then left after an inning and a half for North Carolina. There he made an informal address in Rowan County and his secretary announced that the President has been ill all day. He suffered a slight attack of food poisoning at Augusta last night, had a slight fever all day, but did not want to cancel any of the engagements on today's busy schedule. The President's speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors will be re-broadcast over many of these stations tonight at 10:35 p.m. eastern standard time.

At Panmunjom today, the United Nations command told enemy negotiators we are ready to meet on Saturday to discuss re-opening the truce negotiations. And in a letter to the Communists, we suggest that Switzerland be "the neutral nation" to supervise, in Korea, the care of prisoners who refuse to return home. We also say that unless the new meetings indicate that the enemy is willing to reach an agreement in a reasonable time, we will call for another recess.

The first of the allied war prisoners who will be turned over to us on Sunday, have now reached Kaseong, six miles from the exchange point at Panmunjom. Communist broadcasts say about half of the first 100 men to be exchanged will be non-Koreans, but there is no count on how many Americans will be among them. The enemy radio also says only a handful of the hundred are stretcher cases, "the rest can get around, they have only minor disabilities."

Again today, the enemy prisoner of war convoys were used as a shield for big truck convoys moving south with war supplies. And again, our flyers made no attack, for fear of hitting trucks carrying our prisoners.

On the western front, the enemy attacked eight hills held by allied troops including Pork Chop Ridge, two miles west of enemy-held Old Baldy. We stopped all attacks. And our flyers shot down two enemy Migs and damaged three others in attacks on enemy front line positions.

There was something new at the United Nations today. For the first time Russia and the Communist bloc joined the western powers in a Korean vote. The Russians gave up their own peace plan and accepted a resolution calling for an early armistice. The resolution would leave negotiations at Panmunjom, and not try to bring them to the United Nations.

A Senate committee was told today that General Van Fleet's description of continuous and serious ammunition shortages in Korea was "much too sweeping and much too alarming." Lieutenant General Williston B. Palmer, the army supply chief, said he's convinced there was a waste of ammunition in Korea while Van Fleet commanded the 8th army, too much firing going on, he feels Van Fleet set an extremely high standard for ammunition. General Palmer says there never has been a shortage of ammunition for troops in the front lines. Then, in response to question, he acknowledged that the depletion of the army's ammunition stockpile, because of the Korean is a "frightening situation;if war came tomorrow "we'd be in a desperate situation."

The House Banking Committee today approved a bill, opposed by the Administration, which would end rent ceilings on about 5-million housing units on April 30.

Undersecretary of the Treasury Folsom said today that prospects are that the government's income this year will be "substantially below estimates" made by former President Truman. This would make it more difficult to balance the budget.

A House committee was told today by Henry Grunewald that he received a 75-thousand dollar fee for helping get 100 fighter planes for the Chinese government "back in 1939 or earlier," he thought. Grunewald also testified, that although his declared income in 1949 and 1950 was more than 269-thousand dollars, he had filed no 1951 or 1952 tax returns, because the committee had his papers.

In South Africa today, Premier Malan's Nationalist party, won a sweeping election victory. With returns not yet complete, it appears that the party will double the majority it formerly held. This would mean five more years of the policy of racial segregation backed up by force if necessary. And it could lead to South Africa's withdrawal from the British Commonwealth.

In Moscow, the newspaper Pravda, which had devoted much space for many years praising the late Stalin, today came out against "one person decisions" in the Communist party's leadership. Pravda says: leadership should be collective, no matter what experience, knowledge or talents a leader possesses, he cannot replace a collective decision. Pravda says: "Where collectivity is violated, certain leaders begin to conduct themselves like autocrats, as if they knew everything, as if only they can say anything forceful, as if the job of others is only to support the opinion of the leader."

In the jungles of Malaya today, a British helicopter carrying Adlai Stevenson and others made a forced landing because of engine trouble. No one was injured.

President Eisenhower's first major speech delivered to the Society of Newspaper Editors today has received an almost universally favorable response, both here and abroad. Dick Hottelet cables me from Germany that the feeling there is that it really put the Russians on the spot before the bar of world public opinion. The Germans were tremendously reassured by the President's emphasis on the necessity to unify Germany on the basis of Free elections; the proposals regarding disarmament and the use of the money thus saved for economic development is regarded as supplying just that positive, inspirational aspect of western policy which has been lacking in the past few months. The word from Paris is that the first official French reaction is extremely favorable. The French were particularly impressed by the restraint and lack of belligerence in the President's speech.

Diplomatic quarters in London regarded it as an historic pronouncement reflecting the thinking of the free world.

Mr. Eisenhower began by placing the responsibility for the current tension, fear and heavy military expenditures upon the Russians. He said "the present condition is not any way of life at all in the true sense. Under the cloud of threatening war, it is humanity hanging from a cross of iron." He thought this a time when the governments of the world should speak their intentions with simplicity and honesty. The new Soviet leadership has a precious opportunity to awaken with the rest of the world to the point of peril reached and to help turn the tide of history. And then the President got down to cases. The first step must be the conclusion of an honorable armistice in Korea, to be followed by free elections in a united Korea; an end to Communist attacks in Indochina and Malaya - the conclusion of a peace treaty with Austria which will free that country from economic exploitation and from occupation by foreign troops. We want a free and united Germany with a government based on free and secret elections.

We are prepared to enter into the most solemn agreements about disarmament; limit the size of the military establishment and the amount of strategic materials used for military purposes in all countries; the prohibition of atomic weapons, all of this to be done under a practical system of inspection under the United Nations. Here again the President did not adopt a "take it or leave it" attitude saying: "Neither the United States nor any other nation can properly claim to possess a perfect, immutable formula, but the formula matters less than the faith.

We are prepared to devote a substantial percentage of the savings achieved by disarmament to a fund for world aid and reconstruction to help other peoples to develop the underdeveloped areas of the world (this part was practically a restatement of Mr. Truman's Point Four.).

And then the President asked "What is the Soviet Union ready to do." And he added "whatever the answer be, let it be plainly spoken." Mr. Eisenhower said our proposals spring, without ulterior purpose or a political passion, from our calm conviction that the hunger for just peace is in the hearts of all peoples, those of Russia and of China, no less than of our own country.

Today's speech was not delivered with Mr. Eisenhower's usual vigor because he was suffering from an upset stomach. But it was in this reporter's opinion an extraordinarily lucid and restrained restatement of the basic principles of American foreign policy. In so far as a speech can do it, this one recaptured the initiative for the free world. It established the moral ground upon which we can stand and fight, if fight we must. It was a speech free from rhetoric or unwarranted recrimination. Mild in tone, but firm in purpose, the speech contained little that was new, little, if anything, to which Mr. Truman or Mr. Acheson, for example, could take exception. It was a reaffirmation of policy in clear and specific terms by our new head of State to the new rulers of Russia. It was an admirable negotiating speech, completely free from recrimination or partisan political bias.

Obviously, the Russians aren't going to agree tomorrow to free elections in the satellite states or to internationally supervised disarmament. They may never agree to such proposals. But what the President was saying to them was not all or nothing, take it or leave it, he was suggesting a step by step gradual easing of the tension, and he was holding out the prospect, the vision, of a world in which people can be productive and prosperous, and he pledged the strength of this country to serving the needs rather than the fears of the world.

Whatever effect this speech may have upon the rulers of Russia, we have now got a statement of policy that is clear, that can be translated effectively to our allies, and one that is not likely to cause any significant partisan political friction in this country. Although some of the proposals advanced by the President cannot in the foreseeable future be accepted by the Russians, he has outlined, step by step, an alternative to the steady increase of hate, fear, suspicion, and the burden of preparing for ultimate collision.

No one knows what effect, if any, this speech will have on Communist policy or action. But so far as our allies are concerned, it will be regarded as bearing the stamp of responsible and restrained world leadership.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The President spelled out, in terms all can understand, the degree and direction our foreign policies are to take in the immediate future. And it would seem, from today's speech, that the President agrees with both Franklin and Lincoln when they said: "If a principle is good for anything, it is worth living up to, but important principles may and must be flexible."

Good Nite and Good Luck.

Friday 4/17/53

This is the news:

The American embassy in Moscow today formally presented to the Soviet Foreign Office the text of President Eisenhower's statement yesterday. And the State Department says our envoys throughout the world are making the President's ~~views~~ views known, with emphasis on two points: that the President's program is a long-range program that we feel can contribute to peace, stability, and the welfare of all people...and that we will accept, at face value, any concrete steps by Moscow that demonstrate Russia's good faith.

In Moscow today, the Soviet press, gave unusual attention to the Eisenhower statement. One veteran American reporter, with ten years experience there, says he cannot remember when the Russian press acted so quickly, AND

[redacted] the [redacted] with comparatively little abuse. [redacted]

[redacted] in [redacted]

Winston Churchill calls Mr. Eisenhower's proposals "a massive and magnificent statement of our case." We'll hear more of Mr. Churchill's comments in a few minutes.

Secretary of States Dulles told reporters here in Washington that unless there is "a very prompt response" to the President's speech "in a great many respects, it will be necessary to move ahead on all fronts to develop strong positions."

And Congressmen who heard the Secretary testify behind closed doors SAY he made it very clear that nothing in our foreign policy contemplates a trusteeship over Formosa.. "our recent activities have been directly in opposition" to such a plan. This was in comment on last week's contrary reports attributed to the Secretary. Mr. Dulles is also said to have promised to try to get "a unified, free Korea as a condition of a truce" there

Today the State Department announced that the Russians have told us North Korean authorities "are taking measures" to release seven American civilians captured in Korea when the war started almost three years ago. The North Koreans say three other Americans are missing..another three are dead.

At Panmunjom today, allied and Communist negotiators agreed to meet Saturday night to start planning for a resumption of the armistice talks. And again the Chinese Communist radio said the enemy will insist on the forced repatriation of all prisoners now in our hands... that was (the stumbling block that caused the recess of negotiations last October.)

Three Communist convoys, with allied war prisoners, are now in Kaesong, a waiting the Sunday night exchange. And for the first time in days, our flyers reported that the enemy was not using the prisoners as a shield for moving military convoys to the south.

Our Jets destroyed four enemy Migs in air battles today. Communist shore batteries at Wonsan, caused minor damage to our Destroyer Maddox. And on the western front, allied troops stopped five enemy attacks on our hill positions.

[redacted]

At the United Nations, Burma offered documents and photographs, to support her claim, that 12-thousand Chinese Nationalist troops are fighting on Burmese soil, under directions from Formosa. The Chinese Nationalist delegate says Formosa has no control of this army in Burma.

Here in Washington, Commerce Secretary Weeks has temporarily changed his mind on the dismissal of Dr. Allen V. Astin, the director of the Bureau of Standards. Dr. Astin was to step out tomorrow. But today, following complaints by many scientists and scientific organizations, Weeks said Dr. Astin will stay on the job at least through the summer while a study is made of the Bureau. Originally, Weeks dismissed Astin because, of a "lack of objectivity" and other reasons..not enumerated. Today, Secretary Weeks praised Dr. Astin's professional skill and ability, called him a scientists of distinction, and said the two men disagreed on administrative procedures and viewpoint. The Weeks announcement came after two Washington papers reported that as many as 400 SCIENTISTS in the Bureau would quit if Dr. Astin was fired.

Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois says the Weeks decision "is a tribute to popular indignation when aroused...an indication that the will of the people is still a mighty factor."

The President, back in Augusta, spent most of the day in bed.. recevering from yesterday's attack of food poisoning. His secretary says he still has some abdominal pain.

[redacted]

Here in Washington, Assistant Secrtary of Defense Hannah, said today that even if the war in Korea ends, the Administration will ask Congress to extend the draft law when it expires in 1955.

The House Appropriations Committee has voted to cut 61 per cent from the first regular money bill it has considered. Democrats on the committee call this a "phoney cut"..say most of the 721-millions will have to be appropriated later. The committee bill, among other things, calls for the government to call a halt to its subsidized low-rent housing programs.

~~Attorney General Brownell says 145 lawyers recently have left the Justice Department, mostly by request.~~

~~The Senate continued to debate the tidelands oil bill today with Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama claiming that the bill makes no provision for the development of oil in the area beyond the historical boundaries of the coastal states concerned.~~

Major General Ford, the army's chief of ordnance, told Senate investigators TODAY that the Korean war was under way for 18 months before the army was given "effective priorities" for producing ammunition.

In London, Movie Actor Charlie Chaplin, explained that he's giving up his residence in the United States, because of what he called "lies and viscious propaganda" directed against him by "powerful reactionary groups, and the yellow press."

And in Glasgow, Scotland, at a Conservative Party rally, Prime Minister Churchill reviewed the recent developments in Moscow, and welcomed President Eisenhower's statement of yesterday. We recorded for you part of what the Prime Minister had to say:

(churchill runs 5:15..ending

"for securing peace and for the broadening future of mankind")

And at the President's headquarters in Augusta, a White House spokesman, asked to comment on the general reaction to the President's address told reporters:"We laid it on the line in yesterday's statement. Now we are awaiting the answers."

This is Ed Murrow...I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.....But first Here is Bob Dixon.

These words by Winston Churchill ~~Churchill~~ would seem to fit the days news,

"In the past, we had a light which flickered, in the present we have a light which flames, and in the future there will be a light which shines over all the land and sea. ~~(Day after Pearl Harbor)~~

~~Churchill in 1942.~~

"Any feather head can have confidence in times of victory, but the test is to have faith when things are going wrong and when things happen which cannot be explained in public."

Good night + good luck —

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Friday, April 17, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... And in Glasgow, Scotland, at a Conservative Party rally, Prime Minister Churchill reviewed the recent developments in Moscow and welcomed President Eisenhower's statement of yesterday. We recorded for you part of what the Prime Minister had to say.

CHURCHILL: ... New men have obtained supreme power in Moscow andtheir words and gestures and even to some extent their actions seem to betoken a change of mood.

We cannot yet tell what this means. We cannot measure how deep is their purpose or where the process they have set on foot will lead them. Is there a new breeze blowing on the tormented world? Certainly, sudden hopes have sprung in the hearts of peoples dwelling under every sky and tongue?

We live in a time when science offers with blind prodigality to mankind the choice between a golden age of prosperity and the most hideous form of destructions.

When at the end of the war eight years ago the three-victorious powers met in Berlin, all this lay before us. I could not understand why Soviet Russia did not join with the Western allies in seeking to make a just and enduring treaty of peace. ...? immense branch of the human family that fought so bravely in defense of their vast native land, the Russians were led into the morasses of ...(unintelligible) for the triumph and expansion not only of Communist doctrines , which is one thing, but of Communist control which goes with (?) them. It was only gradually that the Western world became aware of their new danger ... and several hard years had to pass before they even began to regain or recreate their united power. Many grievous things have happened to valiant and ancient nations and heavy burdens of toil and fear have been laid upon the backs of mankind.

Now it may be that another chance will come. Perhaps, indeed, it has come. We cannot tell. The future is inscrutable. But as so often happen though the future may be veiled, the path of duty is clear. And this is all I have to say to you on this point. We must not cast away a single hope however slender so long as we believe there is good faith and good will behind the actions of those with whom we have to deal.

It is, ladies and gentlemen, for these reasons that we in Britain and I doubt not throughout the British Empire and Commonwealth of nations, have welcomed the massive and magnificent statement made yesterday by President Eisenhower. (applause) He has set forth the range of practical issues which divide the world. He has declared the resolve of the free nations, headed and sustained by the giant power of the United States, not to weaken their defensive measures until an honorable settlement is reached. But he has closed no door upon sincere efforts to reach a true world peace.

We give him a resolute and wholehearted support and we will do our utmost to work in the closest concord with the great republic of which he is the chosen chief.

There are many famous countries with whom we are friends and allies, but it is my faith that it is in the abiding fellowship and brotherhood of the English-speaking world that the best hopes reside both for securing peace today and for the broadening future of mankind.

MURROW: That was a recorded excerpt of the speech made by Winston Churchill in Glasgow today. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

ANNOUNCER: ... (C O M M E R C I A L) ... That's my word for today, and here's Mr. Murrow with his word for today.

MURROW: These words by Winston Churchill would seem to fit today's news: "In the past we had a light which flickered, in the present we have a light which flames, and in the futuse there will be a light which shines over all the land and sea. Any feather-head can have confidence in times of victory. But the test is to have faith when things are going wrong."

Good nightand good luck.

ANNOUNCER: (C O M M E R C I A L) ... (30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 17, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The American embassy in Moscow today formally presented to the Soviet Foreign Office the text of President Eisenhower's statement yesterday. And the State Department says our envoys throughout the world are making the President's views known with emphasis on two points: that the President's program is a long-range program that we feel can contribute to peace, stability and the welfare of all people, and that we will accept at face value any concrete steps by Moscow that demonstrate Russia's good faith.

In Moscow today, the Soviet press, gave unusual attention to the Eisenhower statement. One veteran American reporter, with ten years experience there, says he cannot remember when the Russian press acted so quickly, and with comparatively little abuse.

Winston Churchill calls Mr. Eisenhower's proposals "a massive, and magnificent statement of our case." We'll hear more of Mr. Churchill's comments in a few minutes.

Secretary of State Dulles told reporters here in Washington that unless there is "a very prompt response" to the President's speech "in a great many respects, it will be necessary to move ahead on all fronts to develop strong positions."

And Congressmen who heard the Secretary testify behind closed doors, say he made it very clear that nothing in our foreign policy contemplates a trusteeship over Formosa "our recent activities have been directly in opposition" to such a plan. This was in comment on last week's contrary reports attributed to the Secretary. Mr. Dulles is also said to have promised to try to get "a unified, free Korea as a condition of a truce" there.

Today the State Department announced that the Russians have told us

North Korean authorities "are taking measures" to release seven American civilians captured in Korea when the war started almost three years ago. The North Koreans say three other Americans are missing, another three are dead.

At Panmunjom today, allied and Communist negotiators agreed to meet Saturday night to start planning for a resumption of the armistice talks. And again the Chinese Communist radio said the enemy will insist on the forced repatriation of all prisoners now in our hands; that was the stumbling block that caused the recess of negotiations last October.

Three Communist convoys, with allied war prisoners, are now in Kaesong, a-waiting the Sunday night exchange. And for the first time in days, our flyers reported that the enemy was not using the prisoners as a shield for moving military convoys to the south.

Our Jets destroyed four enemy Migs in air battles today. Communist shore batteries at Wonsan caused minor damage to our Destroyer Maddox. And on the western front, allied troops stopped five enemy attacks on our hill positions.

At the United Nations, Burma offered documents and photographs to support her claim that 12-thousand Chinese Nationalist troops are fighting on Burmese soil, under directions from Formosa. The Chinese Nationalist delegate says Formosa has no control of this army in Burma.

Here in Washington, Commerce Secretary Weeks has temporarily changed his mind on the dismissal of Dr. Allen V. Astin, the director of the Bureau of Standards. Dr. Astin was to step out tomorrow. But today, following complaints by many scientists and scientific organizations, Weeks said Dr. Astin will stay on the job at least through the summer while a study is made of the Bureau. Originally, Weeks dismissed Astin because of a "lack of objectivity" and other reasons, not unumerated. Today, Secretary Weeks praised Dr. Astin's professional skill and ability, called him a scientist of distinction, and said the two men disagreed on administrative procedures and viewpoint. The Weeks announcement came after two Washington papers reported that as many as 400 scientists in the Bureau would quit if Dr. Astin was fired.

Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois says the Weeks decision "is a tribute to popular indignation when aroused, an indication that the will of the people is still a mighty factor."

The President, back in Augusta, spent most of the day in bed, recovering from yesterday's attack of food poisoning. His secretary says he still has some abdominal pain.

Here in Washington, Assistant Secretary of Defense Hannah, said today that even if the war in Korea ends, the Administration will ask Congress to extend the draft law when it expires in 1955.

The House Appropriations Committee has voted to cut 61 percent from the first regular money bill it has considered. Democrats on the Committee call this a "phoney cut" say most of the 721-millions will have to be appropriated later. The committee bill, among other things, calls for the government to call a halt to its subsidized low-rent housing programs.

Major General Ford, the army's chief of ordnance, told Senate investigators today that the Korean war was under way for 18 months before the army was given "effective priorities" for producing ammunition.

In London, Movie Actor Charlie Chaplin explained that he's giving up his residence in the United States because of what he called "lies and viscious propaganda" directed against him by "powerful reactionary groups and the yellow press."

And in Glasgow, Scotland, at a Conservative Party rally, Prime Minister Churchill reviewed the recent developments in Moscow and welcomed President Eisenhower's statement of yesterday. We recorded for you part of what the Prime Minister had to say:

CHURCHILL: New men have obtained supreme power in Moscow and their words and gestures and even to some extent their actions seem to betoken a change of mood. We cannot yet tell what this means. We cannot measure how deep is their purpose or where the process they have set on foot will lead them. Is there a new breeze blowing on the tormented world? Certainly, sudden hopes have sprung in the hearts of peoples dwelling under every sky. We live in a time when science offers with blind prodigality to mankind the choice between a golden age of prosperity and the most hideous form of destructions.

When at the end of the war eight years ago the three-victorious powers met in Berlin, all this lay before us. I could not understand why Soviet Russia did not join with the Western allies in seeking to make a just and enduring treaty of peace. It was only gradually that the Western world became aware of their new danger and several hard years had to pass before they even began to regain or recreate their united power. Many grievous things have happened to valiant and ancient nations and heavy burdens of toil and fear have been laid upon the backs of mankind. Now it may be that another chance will come. Perhaps, indeed, it has come. We cannot tell. The future is inscrutable. But as so often happens, though the future may be veiled, the path of duty is clear. And this is all I have to say to you on this point. We must not cast away a single hope however slender so long as we believe there is good faith and good will behind the actions of those with whom we have to deal. It is, ladies and gentlemen for these reasons that we in Britain and I doubt not throughout the British Empire and Commonwealth of nations, have welcomed the massive and magnificent statement made yesterday by President Eisenhower. He has set forth the range of practical issues which divide the world. He has declared the resolve of the free nations, headed and sustained by the giant power of the United States, not to weaken their defensive measures until an honorable settlement is reached. But he has closed no door upon sincere efforts to reach a truce world peace. We give him a resolute and wholehearted support and we will do our utmost to work in the closest concord with the great republic of which he is the chosen chief. There are many famous countries with whom we are friends and allies, but it is my faith that it is in the abiding fellowship and brotherhood of the English-speaking world that the best hopes reside both for securing peace today and for the broadening future of mankind.

And at the President's headquarters in Augusta, a White House spokesman asked to comment on the general reaction to the President's address told Reporters: "We laid it on the line in yesterday's statement. Now we are awaiting the answers."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: These words by Winston Churchill would seem to fit today's news: "In the past we had a light which flickered, in the present we have a light which flames, and in the future there will be a light which shines over all the land and sea. Any feather-head can have confidence in times of victory. But the test is to have faith when things are going wrong."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday April 20, 1953

As this second day of exchanging prisoners started, almost all fighting at the front came to a halt. The Communists made three small attacks against allied forward positions, and there were a few patrol contacts. Murky weather again grounded most allied planes.

In Moscow today, six British civilians and an Irish [redacted] priest, ended their long railroad trip from North Korea. They had been held by the enemy FOR almost the whole war. (Fourteen French civilians from North Korea, are due in Moscow next week.)

The new American Ambassador, Charles Bohlen, presented his credentials to Marshal Voroshilov, the president of the Soviet Union. He said this government hopes to be able to settle "AMICABLY" all issues with the Soviet Union.

Prime Minister Churchill told the [redacted] House of Commons that he hopes "the processes of good will, which may be at work" will lead to talks among the chiefs of state of the big powers.

But in Washington, Secretary of State Dulles said such meetings are useful only after preperations have been made.. and so far there have been no such preperations. Mr. Dulles also told reporters this government wants to negotiate political issues with the Communists in Korea after an armistice has been signed.. not before. Over the week-end Senator Taft had suggested that before we agree to an armistice, we should make every effort to get a settlement on such Far Eastern problems as the wars in Indo-China and Malaya. But Mr. Dulles said we are committed to the United Nations to have armistice talks before any discussions on political issues. He would have the armistice talks be short and to the point..not complicated by any political discussions. Mr. Dulles also suggested again that the simple and important way for Moscow to prove her peaceful intentions is to agree to a peace treaty for Austria.

In Japan, RETURNS from yesterday's election show that Prime Minister Yoshida's Liberal Party has won 42 per cent of the seats in the House of Representatives.. a loss of five seats.. and not enough to form a single party government.

The new prime minister of Pakistan, Mohammed Ali, said in Karachi today that his new government is behind the United States in world affairs. He told a reporter:"We just do not have much in common with the Soviet Union." And he stressed Pakistan's need for one million tons of American wheat.

In Indo-China, French army and carrier-based planes today attacked Communist-led guerrilla forces in LAOS. But the French apparently do not know the exact location of all three of the spearheads now moving into LAOS.

At the United Nations, Russia, Poland and a number of other U.N. delegates backed Burma's strong demand that the U.N. condemn Nationalist China as aggressors against Burma. The Burmese say the Chinese have 12-thousand guerrillas in Burma. Britain's Sir Gladwyn Jebb urges the Nationalists to broadcast an appeal to the Chinese guerrillas to lay down their arms and accept internment... or evacuation. The Nationalists say they have no control over the Chinese soldiers now in Burma.

West Germany's Chancelloer Adenaur returned home today, to be greeted by enthusiastic crowds in Hamburg. My colleague Richard C. Hottelet cables that the success of Adenauer's trip to this country has so impressed Adenauer's advisors, that some are urging that the West German election be held in mid-June instead of later. Adenauer was warmly cheered as he said: "Once again Germany's name counts for something in the world." And he told of his "sincere emotion" at the Arlington Cemetery where a German chancellor, the German flag and the German anthem were "accorded full honors."

The American army in Vienna announced today that at least 12 Czechs and Germans have been arrested, on charges of working for a Czech and Russian spy ring in Austria. The arrests took place some weeks ago. "Other persons" are being investigated.

And the State Department says that Private Willis Bergen, who fled to Czehhslovakia from his army post in Germany, last year, has now returned to the west. He became fed up with Communism..asked the American embassy in Prague to help him get back to his post in Germany.

In Washington today, the Subversive Activities Board has decided that the Communist party in this country is "a subsidiary and puppet" of the Soviet Union. The board held hearings for 14 months, under the McCarran Act provision directing it to determine whether any organizations in this country are directed from abroad. The Subversive Activities Board says the views and policies of the party in this country, coincide with those of the Communists in Russia. The party here "labors unstintingly to advance the world Communist movement...it uses the Constiution as a cloak for an eventual Soviet America." Lawyers for the Communist party say they will appeal this finding to the Supreme Court if necessary. Under today's decision the party has to register as an instrument of a foreign country... list its members and make a financial report. But this will probably not come to pass until the case has been heard through the courts. Attorney General Brownell says the Board's finding will be of great ASSISTANCE to the Justice Department's drive to defeat the conspiracy to overthrow our government by force and violence.

Today, the President, still vacationing in Augusta, asked the Congress to approve his plan to re-roganize the Justice Department. Among other things it would make the Deputy attorney General, rather than the solicitor general, the department's second in command. The President played 18-holes of golf today with Senator Taft and others. Then the Senator flew back to Washington for a night debate on the tidelands oil bill. Opponents of this bill, starting their third week of debate against it, charge that Taft is trying to silence them. Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota says Taft must take responsibility for what he calls "giving away billions of dollars of the public resources." Supporters of the bill say the opponents are filibustering. The opponents say they don't want the debate limited until all who want to talk against the bill have had "a reasonable opportunity."

General Collins, the army chief of staff, told investigating Senators today that there were criticial shortages of ammunition in the over-all Far Eastern command at "certain times"... but the troops never had any shortages for the mission they were assigned.

Here in New York, Treasury Secretary Humphrey said: "There is no reason to fear peace. We are not headed for a depression." Humphrey said that if we get an armistice in Korea, or ~~if~~ EVEN there is an agreement on world peace, we may face certain domestic "adjustments, yes..but not a depression." Again he said taxes should not be reduced until expenses are under control. And he called for a radical revision of the whole tax system.

a

[redacted]

BRBAN

The second exchange of prisoners of war at Panmunjom [redacted] 45 minutes ago. [redacted]

The plan called for the Communists to turn over to us [redacted] 16 more Americans... 6 British soldiers... three Turks... and 25 South Koreans. (The enemy said seven of these men would be litter cases.)

At 9 p.m. tonight..eastern standard time..the Communists are to give us another 19 Americans..six British soldiers...and 25 South Koreans. This group will include eight litter cases.

At the moment the circuits between Korea and Tokyo are failing. There are no late reports from our own correspondents [redacted] on the scene. If conditions improve, we will switch immediately to Panmunjom and Freedom Village.

b

Its now 24 hours since the first exchange was made yesterday. And correspondents at the scene, who were allowed to talk to almost all of the returning Americans, give us this report. Some of the PRISONERS say their treatment was "unbelievably poor" until the armistice negotiations started. Then the treatment improved. Some say they received excellent care; others say it wasn't so good. There were those who told stories of the enemy's attempt to indoctrinate them. And again..others say no such attempts were made on them. Some of the prisoners were shown photographs of what was supposed to be evidence of American use of Germ warfare. But not all the prisoners saw such pictures. Some of the men were frankly in the dark as to why they were returned to our lines now...howevere happy they might be. They made it clear that there were men back in the enemy prisoner camps with more severe injuries. One of our returned prisoners said"There's not much wrong with me"... another had only a minor ear ailment.. another had high blood pressure, was in bad need of eyeglasses. Doctors who examined all of the Americans found them in good shape. They were all scheduled to be flown from Korea to Japan tonight.. the first step on their way home.

6

A South Korean, among the prisoners said many of his comrades died in North Korean prison camps.

And the Americans who were interviewed made it clear that they were worried about the men they left behind. A naval doctor said he thought most of the men were too dazed by their good luck to have much to say.. except for the usual G.I "cracks".. and expressions of appreciation and happiness at again being in American hands.

Allied officials today accused the Communist prisoners that we turned over yesterday...of a deliberate campaign to sabotage the repatriation. The Communists: refused new clothing... refused to permit themselves to be dusted with D.D.T....balked at entering trucks. The prisoners also threw away the soap and ciagrates with which we supplied them.

At the moment we still have not been able to make contact with Korea....

So we'll go on with the news and hope that the circuits can be established during this program.

Now here are the names we have received so far of the Americans who arrived back to freedom at Panmunjom within the hour:

1- Private First Class Paul [redacted] O'Blanton..of Route 2, Brodhead, Kentucky.

2. Pfc. John M. Dangkowich, Jr., of 962 No. 6th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

3. SGT. Walter Mitchell, of Greenville, Tenn.

4. Sgt. Orville R. Mullen, of Covington, Kentucky

mb.

And here are the names of two men..without their home towns:

Private G. Moreland

Private First Class Harry Purvis

For many American families, the exchange of Korean war prisoners brings with it that long period of anxious waiting. And it is moments such as these that Dorothy Thompson had in mind when she said:"There are times in the lives of all people when freedom is the twin of duty, sacrifice the companion of happiness, and when courage - parent of fortitude, endurance and determination - is the first virtue."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Here ARE the names of the third AND FOURTH American returned to Panmunjom tonight:

Sergeant Walter Mitchell of Greenville, Tennessee

Sergeant Orville R. Mullen of Covington, Kentucky

Here's the name of the second American returned to Panmunjom tonight:

He is Private First Class. John M. Dangowitch, Junior, of 962 North Sixth street, in Philadelphia.

Correspondents at Panmunjom say this second batch of prisoners arrived in good humor. They were waving and smiling as their ambulances drew up to our reception tent. They were in far better spririts than the men who returned yesterday...joking with reporters and photographers at the scene.

We're still waiting for more names.. and will relay them to you as fast as we can.

This is the news:

We have started another exchange of prisoners at Panmunjom. The first American in this group was:

Private First Class Paul Blanton of Route 2, Brodhead, Kentucky.

Another dispatch suggests the name may be Paul O'Blanton.

As soon as other names are received here we'll pass them on..in a hurry.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 20, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

As this second day of exchanging prisoners started, almost all fighting at the front came to a halt. The Communists made three small attacks against allied forward positions and there were a few patrol contacts. Murky weather again grounded most allied planes.

In Moscow today, six British civilians and an Irish priest ended their long railroad trip from North Korea. They had been held by the enemy for almost the whole war. Fourteen French civilians from North Korea are due in Moscow next week.

The new American ambassador, Charles Bohlen, presented his credentials to Marshal Voroshilov, the president of the Soviet Union. He said this government hopes to be able to settle "amicably" all issues with the Soviet Union.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that he hopes "the processes of good will which may be at work" will lead to talks among the chiefs of state of the big powers.

But in Washington, Secretary of State Dulles said such meetings are useful only after preparations have been made, and so far there have benn no such preparations. Mr. Dulles also told reporters this government wants to negotiate political issues with the Communists in Korea after an armistice has been signed, not before. Over the weekend Senator Taft had suggested that before we agree to an armistice we should make every effort to get a settlement on such Far Eastern problems as the wars in Indo-China and Malaya. But Mr. Dulles said we are committed to the United Nations to have armistice talks before any discussions on political issues. He would have the armistice talks be short and to the point, not complicated by any political discussions. Mr. Dulles also suggested again that the simple and important way for moscow to prove her peaceful intentions is to agree to a peace treaty for Austria.

In Japan, returns from yesterday's election show that Prime Minister Yoshida's Liberal Party has won 42 per cent of the seats in the House of Representatives, a loss of five seats, and not enough to form a single party government.

The new prime minister of Pakistan, Mohammed Ali, said in Karachi today that his new government is behind the United States in world affairs. He told a reporter: "We just do not have much in common with the Soviet Union." And he stressed Pakistan's need for one million tons of American wheat.

In Indo-China, French army and carrier-based planes today attacked Communist-led guerrilla forces in Laos. But the French apparently do not know the exact location of all three of the spearheads now moving into Laos.

At the United Nations, Russia, Poland and a number of other U.N. delegates backed Burma's strong demand that the U.N. condemn Nationalist China as aggressors against Burma. The Burmese say the Chinese have 12-thousand guerrillas in Burma. Britain's Sir Gladwyn Jebb urges the Nationalists to broadcast an appeal to the Chinese guerrillas to lay down their arms and accept internment, or evacuation. The Nationalists say they have no control over the Chinese soldiers now in Burma.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenaur returned home today to be greeted by enthusiastic crowds in Hamburg. My colleague Richard C. Hottelet cables that the success of Adenauer's trip to this country has so impressed Adenauer's advisors that some are urging that the West German election be held in mid-June instead of later. Adenauer was warmly cheered as he said: "Once again Germany's name counts for something in the world." And he told of his "sincere emotion" at the Arlington Cemetery where a German Chancellor, the German flag and the German anthem were "accorded full honors."

The American army in Vienna announced today that at least 12 Czechs and Germans have been arrested on charges of working for a Czech and Russian spy ring in Austria. The arrests took place some weeks ago. "Other persons" are being investigated.

And the State Department says that Private Willis Bergen, who fled to Czechoslovakia from his army post in Germany, last year, has now returned to the west. He became fed up with Communism, asked the American embassy in Prague to help him get back to his post in Germany.

In Washington today, the Subversive Activities Board has decided that the Communist party in this country is "a subsidiary and puppet" of the Soviet Union. The board held hearings for 14 months under the McCarran Act privision directing it to determine whether any organizations in this country are directed from abroad. The Subversive Activities Board says the views and policies of the party in this country coincide with those of the Communists in Russia. The party here "labors unstintingly to advance the world Communist movement - it uses the Constitution as a cloak for an eventual Soviet America." Lawyers for the Communist party say they will appeal this finding to the Supreme Court if necessary. Under today's decision the party has to register as an instrument of a foreign country, list its members and make a financial report. But this will probably not come to pass until the case has been heard through the courts. Attorney General Brownell says the Board's finding will be of great assistance to the Justice Department's drive to defeat the conspiracy to overthrow our government by force and violence.

Today, the President, still vacationing in Augusta, asked the Congress to approve his plan to re-organize the Justice Department. Among other things it would make the Deputy Attorney General, rather than the solicitor general, the department's second in command. The President played 18-holes of golf today with Senator Taft and others. Then the Senator flew back to Washington for a night debate on the tidelands oil bill. Opponents of this bill, starting their third week of debate against it, charge that Taft is trying to silence them. Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota says Taft must take responsibility for what he calls "giving away billions of dollars of the public resources." Supporters of the bill say the opponents are filibustering. The opponents say - they don't want the debate limited until all who want to talk against the bill have had "a reasonable opportunity."

General Collins, the army chief of staff, told investigating Senators today that there were critical shortages of ammunition in the over-all Far Eastern command at "certain times" but the troops never had any shortages for the mission they were assigned.

Here in New York, Treasury Secretary Humphrey said: "There is no reason to fear peace. We are not headed for a depression." Humphrey said that if we get an armistice in Korea, or even if there is an agreement on world peace, we may face certain domestic "adjustments, yes, but not a depression." Again he said taxes should not be reduced until expenses are under control. And he called for a radical revision of the whole tax system.

The second exchange of prisoners of war at Panmunjom began 45 minutes ago. The plan called for the Communists to turn over to us 16 more Americans, 6 British soldiers, three Turks, and 25 South Koreans. The enemy said seven of these men would be litter cases.

At 9 p.m. tonight, eastern standard time, the Communists are to give us another 19 Americans, six British soldiers, and 25 South Koreans. This group will include eight litter cases.

At the moment the circuits between Korea and Tokyo are failing. There no late reports from our own correspondents on the scene. If conditions improve, we will switch immediately to Panmunjom and Freedom Village.

It's now 24 hours since the first exchange was made yesterday and correspondents at the scene, who were allowed to talk to almost all of the returning Americans, give us this report. Some of the prisoners say their treatment was "unbelievably poor" until the armistice negotiations started. Then the treatment improved. Some say they received excellent care; others say it wasn't so good. There were those who told stories of the enemy's attempt to indoctrinate them. And again, others say no such attempts were made on them. Some of the prisoners were shown photographs of what was supposed to be evidence of American use of Germ warfare. But not all the prisoners saw such pictures. Some of the men were frankly in the dark as to why they were returned to our lines now, however happy they might be. They made it clear that there were men back in the enemy prisoner camps with more severe injuries. One of our returned prisoners said, "There's not much wrong with me," another had only a minor ear ailment; another had high blood pressure, was in bad need of eyeglasses. Doctors who examined all of the Americans found them in good shape. They were all scheduled to be flown from Korea to Japan tonight, the first step on their way home.

A South Korean, among the prisoners said many of his comrades died in North Korean prison camps.

And the Americans who were interviewed made it clear that they were worried about the men they left behind. A naval doctor said he thought most of the men were too dazed by their good luck to have much to say, except for the usual G.I. "cracks" and expressions of appreciation and happiness at again being in American hands.

Allied officials today accused the Communist prisoners that we turned over yesterday of a deliberate campaign to sabotage the repatriation. The Communists: refused new clothing, refused to permit themselves to be dusted with DDT, balked at entering trucks. The prisoners also threw away the soap and cigarretes with which we supplied them.

For many American families, the exchange of Korean war prisoners brings with it that long period of anxious waiting. And it is moments such as these that Dorothy Thompson had in mind when she said: "There are times in the lives of all people when freedom is the twin of duty, sacrifice the companion of happiness, and when courage - parent of fortitude, endurance and determination - is the first virt

Good Nite and Good Luck!

NAMES MENTIONED ON THIS BROADCAST OF AMERICANS WHO ARRIVED BACK TO PANMUNJOM

1. PFC Paul O'Blanton of Route 2, Brodhead, Kentucky.
2. PFC John M. Dangkowich, Jr., 962 No. 6th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
3. SGT Walter Mitchell, Greenville, Tennessee
4. Sgt. Orville R. Mullen, Covington, Kentucky
5. Private G. Moreland - no home town mentioned
6. PFC Harry Purvis - No home town mentioned

Tuesday April 21, 1953

This is the news:

A third exchange of allied and enemy prisoners in Korea was scheduled to get underway a few minutes ago. The enemy says none of the prisoners to be turned over to us at Panmunjom TONIGHT, will be Americans.. (they'll all be South Koreans.)

The 30 Americans released on Sunday night, today were flown to Tokyo..and army hospitals. A few minutes ago we recorded a report on their arrival from Correspondent Lou Cioffi in Tokyo:

(runs: 2;37 ending:

This is Lou Cioffi in Tokyo)

[redacted] Correspondents in Korea reported that YESTERDAYS questioning of the prisoners [redacted] indicated that many sick and wounded Americans are still in enemy prison camps..that many others died as the result of long marches in North Korea. Already, Chairman Bridges of the Senate Appropriations Committee has announced that he will call Acting Secretary of State Bedell Smith to give the committee "all available information" on the mistreatment of our men.

And from the correspondents in Korea we get these stories:

Sergeant Mitchell of Tennessee says quite a few sick and wounded prisoners are still left behind at his prison camp. He estimates there are least 20 hospital cases. And he says: "I would rather these men had come down than me. They need medical attention more MAN I DO. Very few received such attention."

Private Kerkstra of Michigan, suffering from tuberculosis, says some of the T.B. patients in his hospital are in worse condition than he is. He thinks the enemy selected him to return home [redacted] to impress reporters who greeted the ambulances at Panmunjom.

Private Picerno of New York says he knows of one paralyzed soldier and one with a leg amputated who apparently are not coming home. He said: "Quite a few are worse off than I am." And Private Warring of Philadelphia says there are least 25 men in the hospital he just left.. some of them unable to walk.

Two other soldiers-- Sergeant Howard of Tennessee and Corporal Purvis of South Carolina--say they, too, left sick and wounded buddies behind. They guess that maybe their friends were too sick for the ride down from north Korea.. a ride they described as "pretty rough."

Among other released men there were stories of long forced marches and resulting casualties. Private Roger Herndon of Florida says that back in 1950 he was on a nine-day forced march in which the men were not allowed to stop for any reason. He says 40 American and Turkish soldiers died on this march. One night, he says, 17 allied soldiers were put in a small room. The next day only two were alive. Many died of pneumonia. (Herndon has one hand amputated.)

Another soldier, Sergeant Orville Mullins of Kentucky, said he was part of a group forced to make a 45 or 50-day March over frozen roads in the winter of 1951. He says there were 162 allied soldiers on this march. Up to a year ago there were only 61 still alive. Mullins also told reporters that during this march two jeeps loaded with Russian soldiers drove up to the allied column. Mullins says the Russians tried to get the Chinese Communist and North Korean guards drunk enough to shoot allied soldiers.

One of the Turkish soldiers released by the enemy estimated that 100 Americans died in his prison camp because of a lack of food, or improper food. He says he saw 20 Americans so weak from malnutrition that they couldn't move.

Private William Moreland of Georgia says he was in a group of 700 prisoners who made a 300-mile march. He says only 289 survived.

And while these Allied soldiers were describing some of the horrors of their internment, the Chinese Communist radio offered its version of the prisoners we have turned over to the enemy. The Communists say the men we sent back are "ghosts"..."tottering from the horrors of prison camps." They quote a Communist correspondent at Panmunjom as saying that many of the enemy prisoners told him there was a needless amputation of arms and legs by allied doctors.."for no apparent reason."

Thus far 65 American soldiers have been set free. Under the original Communist plan we may still expect another 55 this week.

5

Seven British subjects who were recently released by the North Koreans arrived in West Berlin today. They told reporters that their long imprisonment was a constant fight against cold.. STARVATION [redacted]..disease and Communist indoctrination. The British counsel-general, who was captured in Seoul at the beginning of the war, told reporters: "They fed us on canary seeds and corn, until they learned we were going to be repatriated. Then nothing was too good for us."

On the Korean battlefronts today there was only light patrol contacts. But our carrier planes attacked enemy positions just a mile ahead of the allied lines in the Heartbreak Ridge area.

In Indo-China, the Communist-led guerrillas have carried out a surprise attack on a big French ammunition depot in the Red River Delta. They blew it up..killing at least 30 French soldiers. And the three enemy columns in Laos have all made more progress. They've now over-run almost a third of Laos' 90-thousand square miles..and without serious opposition.

[redacted]

b

And at the United Nations, the Chinese Nationalists promised that they would do their utmost to help bring about a withdrawal of Chinese National ist irregulars who are now in Burma . The Burmese had asked the U.N. to brand the National ists as aggressors. [redacted]

Secretary of State Dulles left Washington today for a flight to Paris and a meeting of the North Atlantic Council. Mr. Dulles called [redacted] on our allies to keep on with their defense build-up. He said this would "influence the Soviet Union decisvely in the direction of peace."

And 200 distinguished citizens of seven North Atlantic treaty countries tonight issued a four-point plan designed to give us "better defense at less cost." These citizens..including General Marshal, Henry Ford, Bertrand Russell, Eduard Herriot, want lower tariffs and the elimination of trade and currency restrictions...one agency to take care of economic activities... a consultative assembly.. and a central agency to co-ordinate allied policy and planning.

The President returned to Washington today, after toping his 8-day Augusta vacation by shooting an 88, on his final round on the golf course. At the White House he found a letter, from 25 Senators who oppose state ownership of offshore submerged lands. These Senators ask the President if he supports the claims of Texas and Florida to state boundaries extending beyond the three-mile limit. (to 10 and a half miles) The Senators ask: "Why is your congressional leadership pressing for the enactment of provisions strongly opposed" by the state department and Attorney General ~~Bmm~~ Brownell.

~~The tidelands debate is still going on in the Senate, but Senator Taft says [illegible] is going to attempt to limit it. This needs [illegible].~~

~~[illegible]~~ MR. Brownell today filed a civil anti-trust suit against five big American oil companies charging that they had participated in an international oil cartel.

And A. F. of L. President Meany today called on Republican and Democratic leaders in the House not to approve a committee bill, that would drop funds for building public housing units. He said if the bill is passed in its present form "it will be a vote for slums, and a vote [redacted] as against decent housing for American families."

House investigators were told today that the army spent 45-million dollars for overcoats, that were too heavy and too loaded with gadgets, to be useful. Chairman Reihlman of a House sub-committee says more than a million of the [redacted] COATS were made "and nobody knows now where most of them are." The garments were originally made in 1946 and 1947.

Another committee heard Henry Grunewald say that he was paid 25-thousand dollars by a New York law firm for "investigating work and introductions." He denied that this payment was a fee for speeding up a tax refund of a half million dollars, to the Consolidated Electric [redacted] and Gas Company of New York. Grunewald also said: he was paid $13,500 by the A.F. of L. carpenters union in 1948, and 68-hundred dollars in 1947, for unspecified "investigative work." [redacted] and [redacted]

A broadcast from the Latvian capital of Riga said today that a sweeping cabinet shake-up has been carried out..similar to those in other Soviet satellites. Six Latvian ministers have been replaced.. and a Russian is now in top command of all police forces.

In Moscow, the Communist Party today published its annual May Day slogans. The emphasis is on peace and international friendship. And the only refenece to the United States and Great Britain is an expression of friendship. (Not a word about Anglo-American war-mongers or imperialists.)

There is doubtless much still to be told of conditions and treatment of prisoners of war. But until we have all the facts, it would seem wise to follow this bit of advice from Seneca:"Weigh, not merely count, men's judgements." For as Publilius Syrus once remarked: "A clear case brings the right verdict with it." And as St. Augustine summed it up:"The judgement of the world will be conclusive."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, April 21, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: .... The thirty Americans released on Sunday nite today were flown to Tokyo and army hospitals. A few minutes ago we recorded a report on their arrival from correspondent Lou Cioffi in Tokyo.

CIOFFI: All the prisoners who returned to freedom on the first day of exchange are now in hospitals here in Tokyo. They arrived yesterday - thirty-six of them, including thirty Americans. A giant C-124 carried them from Korea and landed at Tatchikawa airfield, on the outskirts of Tokyo. Thousands of people, most of them American GIs, were gathered to watch the arrival. It was a quiet and sober crowd. The plane taxied up to the waiting line of ambulances and stopped. The giant doors in the nose of the plane opened. For a dramatic one-half hour the plane stood there; no one came out. And then the first of the sick and wounded walked thru those doors, followed by the others, most walking, some of them carried on litters. They all were American hospital bathrobes and many of them were sporting new service patches, either Army or Marine. Gone were the blue Communist uniforms in which the men arrived in Panmunjom.

The walking patients were placed in staff cars for the ride to the hospitals, litter patients were placed in shiny new Cadillac ambulances. The caravan moved thru the streets of downtown Tokyo, led off by a procession of Japanese policemen. Once downtown, the convoy split up. The surgical and orthopedic cases were taken to the Tokyo Army Hospital; medical and other cases went to the 81st, 67th Hospitals. They went thru immediate processing, blood checks, x-rays and all the other procedures given to new patients. Then they were placed in special wards for rest and further treatment, if necessary. There they were given radios, magazines, cigarettes, anything they wanted. For dinner last nite the menu was wide open for these former prisoners. They could eat anything they wanted. Just order it - and it was there; that is, as long as their doctor approved.

The Army wants it known that our GIs are now in the hands of the best medical talent available. U.S. doctors here in Tokyo are top men in their fields. Last nite the nineteen patients in the 81st, 67th Hospital were shown their first American movies in years. It was called "The Rose Bowl Story", a movie about football. They also saw long documentary newsreels which tried to bring them up-to-date on the major world events of the past two years.

The men will be allowed to see newsmen this afternoon, in just a couple of hours, and it's then that we'll get the full story of life in Communist prison camps in North Korea. There's no telling how long the men will remain here in Tokyo, but most, if not all, of this first group of thirty Americans should be headed home within a few days.

This is Lou Cioffi in Tokyo.

-30-

Ediphone trans./ES

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 21, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A third exchange of allied and enemy prisoners in Korea was scheduled to get underway a few minutes ago. The enemy says none of the prisoners to be turned over to us at Panmunjom tonight will be Americans. They'll all be South Koreans.

The 30 Americans released on Sunday night today were flown to Tokyo and army hosptials. A few minutes ago we recorded a report on their arrival from Correspondent Lou Cioffi in Tokyo:

CIOFFI: All the prisoners who returned to freedom on the first day of exchange are now in hospitals here in Tokyo. They arrived yesterday - thirty-six of them, including thirty Americans. A giant C-124 carried them from Korea and landed at Tatchikawa airfield, on the outskirts of Tokyo. Thousands of people, most of them American GIs, were gathered to watch the arrival. It was a quiet and sober crowd; the plane taxied up to the waiting line of ambulances and stopped. The giant doors in the nose of the plane opened. For a dramatic one-half hour the plane stood there; no one came out. And then the first of the sick and wounded walked through those doors, followed by the others, most walking, some of them carried on litters. They all wore American hosptial bathrobes and many of them were sporting new service patches, either Army or Marine. Gone were the blue Communist uniforms in which the men arrived in Panmunjom.

The walking patients were placed in staff cars for the ride to the hospitals, litter patients were placed in shiny new Cadillac ambulances. The caravan moved through the streets of downtown Tokyo, led off by a procession of Japanese policement. Once downtown, the convoy split up. The surgical and orthopedic cases were taken to the Tokyo Army Hospital; medical and other cases went to the 81st, 67th Hospitals. They went through immediate processing, blood checks, x-rays and all the other procedures given to new patients. Then they were placed in special wards for rest and further treatment, if necessary. There they were given radios, magazines, cigarettes, anything they wanted. For dinner last night the menu was wide open for these former prisoners. They could eat anything they wanted. Just order it - and it was there; that is, as long as their doctor approved. The Army wants it known that our GIs are now in the hands of the best medical talent available. U.S. doctors here in Tokyo are top men in their fields. Last night the nineteen patients in the 81st, 67th Hospital were shown their first American movies in years. It was called "The Rose Bowl Story," a movie about football. They also saw long documentary newsreels which tried to bring them up-to-date on the major world events of the past two years.

The men will be allowed to seenewsmen this afternoon, in just a couple of hours, and it's then that we'll get the full story of life in Communist prison camps in North Korea. There's no telling how long the men will remain here in Tokyo, but most, if not all, of this first group of thirty Americans should be headed home within a few days. - This is Lou Cioffi in Tokyo.

Correspondents in Korea report that yesterday's questioning of the prisoners indicated that many sick and wounded Americans are still in inemy prison camps that many others died as the result of long marches in North Korea. Already, Chairman Bridges of the Senate Appropriations Committee has announced that he will call cting Secretary of State Bedell Smith to give the committee "all available information" on the mistreatment of our men.

And from the correspondents in Korea we get these stories: Sergeant Mitchell of Tennessee says quite a few sick and wounded prisoners are still left behind at his prison camp. He estimates there are at least 20 hospital cases. And he says: "I would rather these men had come down than me. They need medical attention more than I do. Very few received such attention."

Private Kerkstra of Michigan, suffering from tuberculosis, says some of the T.B. patients in his hospital are in worse condition than he is. He thinks the enemy selected him to return home to impress reporters who greeted the ambulances at Panmunjom.

Private Picerno of New York says he knows of one paralyzed soldier and one with a leg amputated who apparently are not coming home. He said: "Quite a few are worse off than I am." And Private Warring of Philadelphia says there are at least 25 men in the hospital he just left, some of them unable to walk.

Two other soldiers, Sergeant Howard of Tennessee and Corporal Purvis of South Carolina say they, too, left sick and wounded buddies behind. They guess that maybe their friends were too sick for the ride down from north Korea, a ride they describe as "pretty rough."

Among other released men there were stories of long forced marches and resulting casualties. Private Roger Herndon of Florida says that back in 1950 he was on a nine-day forced march in which the men were not allowed to stop for any reason. He says 40 American and Turkish soldiers died on this march. One night, he says, 17 allied soldiers were put in a small room. The next day only two were alive. Many died of pneumonia. Herndon has one hand amputated.

Another soldier, Sergeant Orville Mullins of Kentucky, said he was part of a group forced to make a 45 or 50-day March over frozen roads in the winter of 1951. He says there were 162 allied soldiers on this march. Up to a year ago, there were only 61 still alive. Mullins also told reporters that during this march two jeeps loaded with Russian soldiers drove up to the allied column. Mullins says the Russians tried to get the Chinese Communist and North Korean guards drunk enough to shoot allied soldiers.

One of the Turkish soldiers released by the enemy estimated that 100 Americans died in his prison camp because of a lack of food, or improper food. He saw 20 Americans so weak from malnutrition that they couldn't move. Private William Moreland of Georgia says he was in a group of 700 prisoners who made a 300-mile march. He says only 289 survived.

And while these Allied soldiers were describing some of the horrors of their internment, the Chinese Communist radio offered its version of the prisoners we have turned over to the enemy. The Communists say the men we sent back are "ghosts" "tottering from the horrors of prison camps." They quote a Communist correspondent at Panmunjom as saying that many of the enemy prisoners told him there was a needless amputation of arms and legs by allied doctors "for no apparent reason."

Thus far 65 American soldiers have been set free. Under the original Communist plan we may still expect another 55 this week. Seven British subjects who were recently released by the North Koreans arrived in West Berlin today. They told reporters that their long imprisonment was a constant fight against cold, starvation, disease and Communist indoctrination. The British counsel-general who was captured in Seoul at the beginning of the war told reporters: "They fed us on canary seeds and corn until they learned we were going to be repatriated. Then nothing was tood good for us."

On the Korean battlefronts today there was only light patrol contacts. But our carrier planes attacked enemy positions just a mile ahead of the allied lines in the Heartbreak Ridge area.

In Indo-China, the Communist-led guerrillas have carried out a surprise attack on a big French ammunition depot in the Red River Delta. They blew it up, killing at least 30 French soldiers. And the three enemy columns in Laos have all made more progress. They've now over-run almost a third of Laos' 90-thousand square miles, and without serious opposition.

And at the United Nations, the Chinese Nationalists promised that they would do their utmost to help bring about a withdrawal of Chinese Nationalist irregulars who are now in Burma. The Burmese had asked the U.N. to brand the Nationalists as aggressors.

Secretary of State Dulles left Washington today for a flight to Paris and a meeting of the North Atlantic Council. Mr. Dulles called on our allies to keep on with their defense build-up. He said this would "influence the Soviet Union decisively in the direction of peace."

And 200 distinguished citizens of seven North Atlantic treaty countries tonight issued a four point plan designed to give us "better defense at less cost." These citizens, including General Marshal, Henry Ford, Bertrand Russell, Eduard Herriot, want lower tariffs and the elimination of trade and currency restrictions, one agency to take care of economic activities, a consultative assembly, and a central agency to coordinate allied policy and planning.

The President returned to Washington today after toping his 8-day Augusta vacationby shooting an 88 on his final round on the golf course. At the White House he found a letter, from 25 Senators who oppose state ownership of offshore submerged lands. These Senators ask the President if he supports the claims of Texas and Florida to state boundaries extending beyond the three-mile limit (to 10 and a half miles). The Senators ask: "Why is your congressional leadership pressing for the enactment of provisions strongly opposed" by the State Department and Attorney General Brownell.

Mr. Brownell today filed a civil anti-trust suit against five big American oil companies charging that they had participated in an international oil cartel.

And A.F.L. President Meany today called on Republican and Democratic leaders in the House not to approve a committee bill that would drop funds for building public housing units. He said if the bill is passed in its present form "it will be a vote for slums and a vote against decent housing for American families."

House investigators were told today that the army spent 45-million dollars for overcoats that were too heavy and too loaded with gadgets to be useful. Chairman Reihlman of a House sub-committee says more than a million of the coats were made "and nobody knows now where most of them are." The garments were originally made in 1946 and 1947.

Another committee heard Henry Grunewald say that he was paid 25-thousand dollars by a New York law firm for "investigating work and introductions."

He denied that this payment was a fee for speeding up a tax refund of a half million dollars to the Consolidated Electric and Gas Company of New York. Grunewald also said: he was paid $13,500, by the AFL carpenters union in 1948, and 68-hundred dollars in 1947, for unspecified "investigative work."

A broadcast from the Latvian capital of Riga said today that a sweeping cabinet shake-up has been carried out, similar to those in other Soviet satellites. Six Latvian ministers have been replaced, and a Russian is now in top command of all police forces.

In Moscow, the Communist Party today published its annual May Day slogans. The emphasis is on peace and international friendship. And the only reference to the United States and Great Britain is an expression of friendship. (Not a word about Anglo-American war-mongers or imperialists.)

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There is doubtless much still to be told of conditions and treatment of prisoners of war. But until we have all the facts, it would seem wise to follow this bit of advice from Seneca: "Weight, not merely count, men's judgements." For as Publilius Syrus once remarked: "A clear case brings the right verdict with it." And as St. Augustine summed it up: "The judgment of the world will be conclusive."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

(lede if Korea signal up)

Wednesday April 22, 1953

This is the news:

The fourth exchange of prisoners at Panmunjom is now underway. For a direct report from Freedom Village, and as many names as are available at the moment, we take you--after a few seconds pause... to Correspondent George Herman reporting from Korea:

RETURN TO —

ED MURROW IN N.Y.

if must use record

This is the news:

The fourth exchange of prisoners of war at Panmunjom is now underway. In a few minutes we hope to be able to switch to Freedom Village for a direct report from the scene.

In Washington today officials of the State and Defense Departments told a Senate committee that [redacted] "generally speaking" the stories about atrocities committed on our prisoners are "to a large degree sadly and unfortunately correct." Senator Bridges says officials of both departments have agreed to step up their collection of evidence of such atrocities.. (with a view to possible future war crimes trials.) Bridges did not reveal any of the testimony heard behind closed doors. He said his committee aggrees with the government officials who said it would be unfortunate to make such information public at this time.. a time when we are exchanging sick and wounded prisoners..and planning and hoping for a further exchange of prisoners. The State and Defense department officials [redacted] also feel that it will be better for the allied soldiers still in enemy hands if [redacted] little is said about atrocities now. The committee also discussed a report made in November of 1951, by the 8th army's judge advocate division. This report said that to that time, the Chinese Communists had killed [redacted] 6 TO 8 THOUSAND Americans.. and the North Koreans had "wantonly murdered" another 142.

Aside from stories of death marches and poor food and poor treatment, many of the Americans released so far have complained that sick soldiers have been left behind in the enemy prison camps. This may be the subject for the special meeting of liason negotiaors which we requested for tonight. Its scheduled to begin in one hour from now.

There was comparatively little fighting in Korea...for a third day. But our jets joined fighter-bombers in attacking enemy trenches at at the front.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 342 casualties in Korea last week. This includes 61 killed and 14 missing. The total casualty list is now 133, 787.

In Indo-China today strong enemy forces opened a mortar attack on French troops and troops from Loas. Reporters in Hanoi suggest this may be the first phase of an all-out enemy assault.

At the United Nations, for the second time in two weeks, East and West agreed on a basic problem. By a vote of 58 to nothing, the political committee called on all countries to help Burma get rid of 12-thousand Chinese Nationalist guerrillas who are now in Burma. The resolution suggests that the Chinese either leave the country or submit to internment.

And in Washington, a former delegate to the United Nations, Republican Senator Cooper of Kentucky, said today the Esienhower Administration must be prepared to risk adverse public opinion.. and make limited concessions for real peace with the enemy in Asia. Senator Cooper says the Chinese Communists are likely "to ask for a lot of things we cannot do" when we get down to political negotiations. He says someplace along the line we'll have to make concessions.

The President today asked Congress to authorize the special admission of 120-thousand immigrants a year for the next two years. This would be in addition to persons admitted under regular immigration quotas. In a letter to Vice President Nixon and Speaker Martin, the President spoke especially of refugees from Iron Curtain countries. He did not specify which nationalities would be covered by the proposed legislation.

The House today voted to cut the budgets of 23 federal agencies by a total of 61 per cent. And in the same vote the House ORDERED AN END TO the public housing program by next July first. Most Republicans voted for this..most Democrats against it. Republican Leader Halleck says this does not "kill" the housing program..just suspends it until the new Administration completes a survey of the situation.

Attorney General Brownell today demanded that 12 organizations register promptly as creatures of the Communist party. He acted under a decision by the Subversive Activities Control Board that Communist-front groups be ordered to register with the government..list their officials and their financial statements. The Board required the Communist Party itself to register as an organization under foreign domination.. that of the Soviet Union.

Earl J. Mc Grath, the United States commissioner of education, resigned today in protest against budget cuts in his organization. He said these cuts would "reduce the quality of education of American youth." McGrath said he did not want to undergo the embarrassment of having to defend the reduced budget before a Senate committee.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that living costs went up a fraction of a per cent between the middle of February and the middle of March. In three previous monthly reports, the cost of living had gone down.

The new chief of the government's overseas information service.. Dr. Robert L. Johnson...announced today that he is dropping 830 employes as an economy measure. And 160 positions, now vacant, will not be filed.

Senate Republican leaders today put off until Monday a test vote on the tidelands oil bill. But the Republicans agreed to start a round-the-clock sessions, starting next week.

The Daughters of the American Revolution, meeting in Washington, today passed resolutions ~~[illegible]~~ criticizing the United Nations and demanding an income tax cut. There were only a handful of dissenting votes.

Once again tonight, more Americans are passing through Freedom Village... no longer prisoners of war, but free men. At a time such as this, we could do worse than recall these words by Franklin and John Curran: "Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety...the condition upon which God has given liberty to man is eternal vigilence."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

~~The Communists today set free 14 Americans... six Columbians.. 3 Australians and 25 South Koreans.~~

Here are the names of the 14 Americans released today.

--William Penn.. a Marine.. ~~hometown~~ of MACOMB, MISSISSIPPI

--Thomas H. Wadill of the Navy.. no hometown

--Sam J. Armstrong... a Marine.. no hometown

-- Jimmy E. Lacy... A MARINE ~~no service~~

--Joseph P. Britt, a Marine

--Richard L. OVEN, a Marine

--Benjamin I. McGhee of the Army

--Charles W. Akers of the army

-- Paul A. KLOZIK of the army

--Ned M. Kelly of the army

--Fred C. Steinkae of the army.. ~~spelled correctly~~

--George F. Hart.. we don't know his service

-- Boyer Angel Garcia..of the army

— VINCENT DANDREO, ARMY

(if Korea signal a possibility but not certainty)

This is the news:

The fourth exchange of prisoners of war at Panmunjom is now underway. In a few moments we hope to be able to switch direct to Freedom Village for a report on what's going on..and the names of the prisoners exchaged so far. At the moment we know the names of of the Americans released today.

~~Here is~~: They are -

Now for a direct report from Freedom Village we take you..after a few seconds pause.. to Correspondent George Herman reporting from Korea:

tape cue

I've just been informed that we will not be able to bring you a direct report from Korea. We will however continue to report the names of the released Americans as the press associations make them available to us. About an hour ago we had contact with our reporters in Korea and Tokyo and asked them to record reports [redacted] for you. First, let's hear from George Herman in Freedom Village:

(runs total of 5..

[redacted])

return cue: This is Lou Cioffi in Tokyo)

LIVE CUE: Now for a direct report from Freedom Village we take you..after a few seconds pause...to Correspondent George Herman , reporing from Korea.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, April 22, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: THIS IS THE NEWS:

The fourth exchange of prisoners at Panmunjom is now under way. For a direct report from Freedom Village and as many names as are available at the moment, we take you, after a few seconds' pause, to correspondent George Herman, reporting from Korea.

HERMAN: This is Freedom Village.

This morning's exchange of sick and wounded prisoners of war has already begun. The first load of U.N. personnel, including fourteen Americans, has already been delivered at Panmunjom and is on its way down here to Freedom Village. There were ten litter cases in the first fourteen and eight of them are being brought down here by helicopter. Now, here is the list of the first fourteen Americans to be delivered today. The first name on the list is Billy R. Penn; he's a Marine; his last name, again, is Penn as in Pennsylvania. The second name on the list is Thomas H. Waddill; he's from the United States Navy; his last name again: Waddill - W-a-d-d-i-l-l. We have no home towns on any of these people. The third name is Samuel J. Armstrong. Armstrong is a Marine. The fourth name is Jimmie E. Lacy. Lacy spells his first name J-i-m-m-i-e, his last name, Lacy, L-a-c-y, and he is a Marine.

Fifth man is also a Marine, his name is Joseph P. Britt - B-r-i-t-t - as in Britain; his name is Joseph P. Britt. The sixth name on the list is also a Marine. His name is Richard L. Oven, as in a cooking oven, Richard L. Oven. Seventh name on the list is an Army man, Benjamin I. McGhee, M-c capital G-h-e-e, Ben McGhee. Another army man, Charles W. Akers; he spells his last name A-k-e-r-s, Charles W. Akers. Then there's Paul A. Klozik, an Army man. Paul spells his last name K-l-o-z-as-in-zebra-i-k, Klozik. Ned M. Kelley, an army man, Ned Kelley. Fred C. Steinke, an army man. Steinke spells his last name S-t-e-i-n-k-e. I hope I'm pronouncing it right. The twelfth name is Vincent Dandreo; he's an army man; he spells his last name D-a-n-d-r-e-o, either with or without an apostrophe; we are unable to find out. Next is George F. Hart - H-a-r-t, also of the U.S. Army. And the fourteenth man on the list is Boyer - B-o-y-e-r - Angel M. Garcia, Boyer Angel Garcia, no hometown; he apparently is also an army man.

In all, fourteen Americans, five Australians and six Colombians have been returned to us, along with twenty-five South Koreans. It's bright and sunny and warm today and there's very little breeze. It's perfect flying weather for the helicopters which are bringing these men down to Freedom Village andfor the bigger six-man helicopters which will ferry the men down to Seoul from here, Freedom Village. There's a large ~~xxx~~ corps of newsmen here, incidentally, waiting in the interview tent to ask our returning sick and wounded about atrocities in North Korea. All last nite a heated controversy raged among the newsmen here as to whether or not the statements by the prisoners who've returned so far constitute ~~xxxx~~ clear proof of real atrocities. We know from the Hanley and Ridgway reports, released in November and December of 1951, that between six and eight thousand Americans are known to have died in enemy prison camps. But the majority of the statements made by the interviewed prisoners coming back thru here have not referred to atrocities in those terms, and the press corps itself is sharply divided on the issue. It should be reported, I think, that the overwhelming majority of the foreign press -- the French and the British and the Dutch newsmen here -- are not writing anything about atrocities just yet.

The Army radio station and the Stars and Stripes, which is a semi-official Army newspaper, are still taking a comparatively cautious attitude. So are many of the so-called specials, the writers for individual newspapers, such as the New York Times and the Herald Tribune and other papers and chains of papers. In essence, we now know something about the practices inside the prison camps run by the Chinese Communists. Of what went on in the camps run by the North Koreans before the more subtle Chinese entered the war, we don't have even a hint as yet, because not a single prisoner captured before the Chinese took over command has yet been released, nor have any of the prisoners mentioned any of their friends left behind who were seized during the old Pusan perimeter days. It was the North Koreans, you'll remember, who committed the atrocities on which we have direct and pictorial evidence, down in the old Pusan fighting zone.

The Chinese, of course, on the other hand, have tried to make propaganda from our prisoners all along. I was lucky enough to catch one of those phoney Communist claims in the making yesterday. I was standing in the Communist reception center at Panmunjom when an ambulance full of walking wounded pulled up and discharged its freight. And among the walking wounded was one Chinese soldier who had lost both legs at the hips and was obviously unable to walk. And Allan Winnington, the English Communist agent, who was standing next to me, made sarcastic noises. "No litter for that man with both legs off," he said to me. "Surely, that's very, very naughty." When I got back to the train several hours later, I was informed that Peiping radio had picked up the story. I got so mad that I checked all the way back to the Korean communication zone headquarters to see what it was all about. And I was personally informed by the chief of staff of the Prisoner Exchange Command that this particular Chinese prisoner had specially begged and pleaded to be allowed to travel with his buddies. The medics decided, after a brief conference, that it would be okay, providing that his buddies would agree to carry him. They agreed, and the medics granted this man's request, as they will grant any such reasonable request. So this man arrived at Panmunjom with his friends as a special favor from the U.N. and, hey, presto-changeo, the Communists have another atrocity story about the U.N.

Well, that's all there is here at the moment, Ed. No news yet on the liaison meeting. It hasn't convened yet; it'll be about another ten minutes. So this is George Herman at Freedom Village returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The fourth exchange of prisoners at Panmunjom is now under way. For a direct report from Freedom Village and as many names as are available at the moment, we take you, after a few seconds' pause, to correspondent George Herman, reporting from Korea.

HERMAN: This is Freedom Village. This morning's exchange of sick and wounded prisoners of war has already begun. The first load of U.N. personnel, including fourteen Americans, has already been delivered at Panmunjom and is on its way down here to Freedom Village. There were ten litter cases in the first fourteen and eight of them are being brought down here by helicopter. Now, here is the list of the first fourteen Americans to be delivered today.

1. William Penn - a Marine of Macomb, Mississippi
2. Thomas H. Cadill - Navy - no hometown
3. Sam J. Armstrong - a Marine - no hometown
4. Jimmy E. Lacy - a Marine - no hometown
5. Joseph P. Britt, a Marine - no hometown
6. Richard L. Oven, a Marine - no hometown
7. Benjamin I. McGhee - Army - no hometown
8. Charles W. Akers - Army - no hometown
9. Paul A. Klozik - Army - no hometown
10. Ned M. Kelly - Army - no hometown
11. Fred C. Steinkae of Army - no hometown
12. George F. Hart - no service or hometown
13. Boyer Angel Garcia - Army - no hometown
14. Vincent D'Andreo, Army - no hometown

In all, fourteen Americans, five Australians and six Colombians have been returned to us, along with twenty-five South Koreans. It's bright and sunny and warm today and there's very little breeze. It's perfect flying weather for the helicopters which are bringing these men down to Freedom Village and for the bigger six-man helicopters which will ferry the men down to Seoul from here, Freedom Village. There's a large corps of newsmen here, incidentally, waiting in the interview tent to ask our returning sick and wounded about atrocities in North Korea. All last night a heated controversy raged among the newsmen here as to whether or not the statements by the prisoners who've returned so far constitute clear proof of real atrocities. We know from the Hanley and Ridgway reports, released in November and December of 1951, that between six and eight thousand Americans are known to have died in enemy prison camps. But the majority of the statements made by the interviewed prisoners coming back through here have not referred to atrocities in those terms, and the press corps itself is sharply divided on the issue. It should be reported, I think, that the overwhelming majority of the foreign press - the French and the British and the Dutch newsmen here, are not writing anything about atrocities just yet.

The Army radio station and the Stars and Stripes, which is a semi-official Army newspaper, are still taking a comparatively cautious attitude. So are many of the so-called specials, the writers for individual newspapers, such as the New York Times and the Herald Tribune and other papers and chains of papers. In essence, we now know something about the practices inside the prison camps run by the Chinese Communists. Of what went on in the camps run by the North Koreans before the more subtle Chinese entered the war, we don't have even a hint as yet, because not a single prisoner captured before the Chinese took over command has yet been released, nor have any of the prisoners mentioned any of their friends left behind who were seized during the old Pusan perimeter days. It was the North Koreans, you'll remember, who committed the atrocities on which we have direct and pictorial evidence, down in the old Pusan fighting zone.

The Chinese, of course, on the other hand, have tried to make propaganda from our prisoners all along. I was lucky enough to catch one of those phoney Communist claims in the making yesterday. I was standing in the Communist reception center at Panmunjom when an ambulance full of walking wounded pulled up and discharged its freight. And among the walking wounded was one Chinese soldier who had lost both legs at the hips and was obviously unable to walk. And Allan Winnington, the English Communist agent, who was standing next to me, made sarcastic noises. "No litter for that man with both legs off," he said to me. "Surely, that's very, very naughty." When I got back to the train several hours later, I was informed that Peiping radio had picked up the story. I got so mad that I checked all the way back to the Korean communication zone headquarters to see what it was all about. And I was personally informed by the chief of staff of the Prisoner Exchange Command that this particular Chinese prisoner had specially begged and pleaded to be allowed to travel with his buddies. The medics decided, after a brief conference, that it would be okay, providing that his buddies would agree to carry him. They agreed, and the medics granted this man's request, as they will grant any such reasonable request. So this man arrived at Panmunjom with his friends as a special favor from the U.N, and hey, presto-changeo, the Communists have another atrocity story about the U.N.

Well, that's all there is here at the moment, Ed. No news yet on the liaison meeting. It hasn't convened yet; it'll be about another ten minutes. So, this is George Herman at Freedom Village returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Washington today officials of the State and Defense Departments told a Senate committee that "generally speaking" the stories about atrocities committed on our prisoners are "to a large degree sadly and unfortunately correct." Senator Bridges says officials of both departments have agreed to step up their collection of evidence of such atrocities (with a view to possible future war crimes trials.) Bridges did not reveal any of the testimony heard behind closed doors. He said his committee agrees with the government officials who said it would be unfortunate to make such information public at this time - a time when we are exchanging sick and wounded prisoners, and planning and hoping for a further exchange of prisoners. The State and Defense Department officials also feel that it will be better for the allied soldiers still in enemy hands if little is said about atrocities now. The committee also discussed a report made in November of 1951, by the 8th Army's judge advocate division. This report said that to that time the Chinese Communists had killed 6 to 8 thousand Americans and the North Koreans had "wantonly murdered" another 142.

Aside from stories of death marches and poor food and poor treatment, many of the Americans released so far have complained that sick soldiers have been left behind in the enemy prison camps. This may be the subject for the special meeting of liaison negotiators which we requested for tonight. Its scheduled to begin in one hour from now.

There was comparatively little fighting in Korea, for a third day. But our jets joined fighter-bombers in attacking enemy trenches at the front.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 342 casualties in Korea last week. This includes 61 killed and 14 missing. The total casualty list is now 133,787.

In Indo-China today strong enemy forces opened a mortar attack on French troops and troops from Loas. Reporters in Hanoi suggest this may be the first phase of an all-out enemy assault.

The the United Nations, for the second time in two weeks, East and West agreed on a basic problem. By a vote of 58 to nithing, the political committee called on all countries to help Burma get rid of 12-thousand Chinese Nationalist guerrillas who are now in Burma. The resolution suggests that the Chinese either leave the country or submit to internment.

And in Washington, a former delegate to the United Nations, Republican Senator Cooper of Kentucky, said today the Eisenhower Administration must be prepared to risk adverse public opinion and make limited concessions for real peace with the enemy in Asia. Senator Cooper says the Chinese Communists are likely "to ask for a lot of things we cannot do" when we get down to political negotiations. He says someplace along the line we'll have to make concessions.

The President today asked Congress to authorize the special admission of 120-thousand immigrants a year for the next two years. This would be in addition to persons admitted under regular immigration quotas. In letters to Vice President Nixon and Speaker Martin, the President spoke especially of refugees from Iron Curtain countries. He did not specify which nationalities would be covered by the proposed legislation.

The House today voted to cut the budgets of 23 federal agencies by a total of 61 per cent. And in the same vote the House ordered an end to the public housing program by next July first. Most Republicans voted for this; most Democrats against it. Republican Leader Halleck says this does not "kill" the housing program, just suspends it until the new Administration completes a survey of the situation.

Attorney General Brownell today demanded that 12 organizations register promptly as creatures of the Communist party. He acted under a decision by the Subversive Activities Control Board that Communist-front groups be ordered to register with the government, list their officials and their financial statements. The Board required the Communist Party itself to register as an organization under foreign domination, that of the Soviet Union.

Earl J. McGrath, the United States commissioner of education, resigned today in protest against budget cuts in his organization. He said these cuts would "reduce the quality of education of American youth." McGrath said he did not want to undergo the embarrassment of having to defend the reduced budget before a Senate committee.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that living costs went up a fraction of a per cent between the middle of February and the middle of March. In three previous monthly reports, the cost of living had gone down.

The new chief of the government's overseas information service,

Dr. Robert L. Johnson, announced today that he is dropping 830 employees as an economy measure. And 160 positions now vacant will not be filled.

Senate Republican leaders today put off until Monday a test vote on the tidelands oil bill. But the Republicans agreed to start a round-the-clock sessions starting next week.

The Daughters of the American Revolution, meeting in Washington, today passed resolutions criticizing the United Nations and demanding an income tax cut. There were only a handful of dissenting votes.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: One again tonight, more Americans are passing through Freedom Village, no longer prisoners of war, but free men. At a time such as this, we could do worse than recall these words by Franklin and John Curran: "Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety, the condition upon which God has given liberty to man is eternal vigilence."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday April 23, 1953

This is the news:

The Communists ~~have~~ ARE SCHEDULED TO release 40 more American prisoners Tonite, together with 4 British soldiers.. four Turkish soldiers.. one from the Netherlands.. one Canadian, and 50 South Koreans. For the names of the Americans released SO FAR today, we'll switch you to Korea, George Herman reporting:

(cue back to ERM in NY) Back for more.

The Communists have now promised to release additional allied personnel. That would be ~~in addition to~~ OVER the 605 prisoners they originally promised to send back to freedom. But they have not stated just how many more men we will get.. or the nationality of these prisoners.

Reporters in Tokyo say the United Nations is carefully checking all released prisoners, for information they may have on sick or wounded men left behind.. men who are not to be returned. It may be that we will protest, after this week's exchange is completed, that the enemy did not live up to the agreement to exchange all sick and wounded prisoners.

In Korea today, South Korean troops attacked the enemy line at four points. And in both Seoul and Pusan , South Korean civilians demonstrated against any armistice that would leave Korea divided.

The President told reporters in Washington today that like everyone else he is waiting to see how things develop in Korea. He and his aides are studying and analyzing the stories the RELEASED prisoners are telling reporters. The President said the things we are hearing..the reports of the death of so many allied troops.. weighs heavy on the heart. The President said something is obviously wrong. And again he told reporters he is ready to do anything and confer anywhere to bring about peace in Korea. He said he has had no reaction FROM the Kremlin TO the peace proposals he made recently.

Mr. Eisenhower also told reporters that HE AND his aides are watching the situation in Indo-China very carefully..especially in view of the enemy invasion of Laos.

The Communist-led guerrillas pushed to within 60 miles of the capital of LAOS today..and ran into stiff opposition from allied forces.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons he, TOO, is watching this situation "with great anxiety." And French Foreign Minister Bidault, told the North Atlantic ministers in Paris:"It is intolerable for a renewal of negotiations in Korea to be accompanied by a renewal of hostilities in Indo-China." He added:"You are not heading for peace when you close one theater of operations only to open another." Bidault also said that Germany must be unified by free elections..and permitted to make her own alliances.

And Secretary of State Dulles told the Ministers that France must show a willingness to ratify a European Defense army. Otherwise, he said, our Congress may want to review the entire NATO program. He said:"We certainly are not going to send our boys to Europe to fight and die and protect Germans who are sitting idly by. Perhaps the French would like to do that, but we will not."

Mr. Dulles told reporters that the Council of Ministers has agreed unanimously that Soviet peace overtures must be backed by deeds.. that the Ministers feel the Russians have changed their tactics.. but more concrete evidence is needed before the western powers believe that there has been a change in basic Soviet policy. As Mr. Dulles put it: "We are not going to stop to pick up the crumbs the Soviet Communists drop..perhaps merely to distract us."

At the United Nations today, the General Assembly voted 51 to 5..the Soviet bloc..for an impartial investigation of Communist charges that American troops have used germ warfare in Korea. American Delegate Gross said that Russia's charges "compound two crimes.. speaking evil and concealing evil." He said Soviet opposition to the impartial investigation is "rephrensible in the extreme." And Andrie Vishinsky responded by saying our denials of germ warfare are "reckless denials of fact". He says the investigation the Assembly has now approved is based on "hypocrisy and falseness." The Assembly has now recessed..indefinitely..to await developments in Korea.

At his White House newsconference today the President answered a number of questions: He said the National Security Council had advised him that it would be advantageous for this country to join in the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The President said he will soon send to Congress plans to reorganize both the State and Defense Departments.. He is completely unaware of the dismissal of any government officials from important jobs just for patronage reasons. He does not approve of this sort of thing....Mr. Eisenhower said he believes the defense budget can be cut..but he did not suggest by how much..He said the opening of atomic energy to private industry is a challenge both to the Atomic Energy Commission and other government agencies; he feels that it is certainly the hope of everyone that something can be done to permit private concerns to work with atomic energy. The President also told reporters that yesterday's House vote.. to end the Administration's plan for public housing..does not agree with his personal view. (But he did not want this to be interpreted as criticism of those who voted against the proposal.)

Today, the House passed a bill that would call for the end of rent controls on 5-and-a-half million units on July 31st. Democrats tried to extend rent controls for five months or a year..but the House chose to end them by the end of July.

The House Appropriations Committee said today that the Interior Department should stop competing with private enterprise in the power field.

Attorney General Brownell says we should make a "one step at a time " approach to a general settlement of our differences with Communists. He feels the Korean armistice should be the first step.

Henry Grunewald told a House committee today that he once conducted an investigation for the late President Roosevelt. He refused to give the committee any details. And he said the 96-thousand dollars he deposited in banks in 1949 was "all race track money."

More prisoners of war are passing across the enemy's lines tonite. And while there are many more yet to come, this is a time to agree as Sophocles did that "it is hope which maintains most of mankind." Events of great importance often move slowly. But it is true, as the Frenchman Vov-narg once remarked: "Despair is a greater deceiver than hope."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

if Hermans list of names run long

That's the latest word on the prisoners. Now here is a quick summary of today's major news developments:

The Communists in Korea promise to release more allied prisoners..but they don't say how many or what nationality.

The President says he's still waiting to see how things develop in Korea. The stories our men are telling "weighs heavy on the heart." He's willing to go anywhere, do anything, to get peace in Korea.

Secretary of State Dulles says all of the North Atlantic foreign ministers agree that the Russians must back their peace overtures with deeds.

The United Nations General Assembly has adjourned after approving an impartial investigation of Communist charges that we used germ warfare in Korea.

FINAL CUE if we run over:

This is Ed Murrow. Good night and good luck.

)Dixon then gives system)

CUES FOR STANDBY TAPE

MURROW SHOW

TAPE RUNS 4:50 COMES AT 7:46:00

MURROW:

"We had hoped to bring you a direct report from Korea, [redacted] the signal has apparently broken down. But a few minutes ago, we recorded a piece by George Herman from Freedom Village...and let's listen to that now."

RETURN CUE:

"Back to Ed Murrow in New York."

Now here again are the names of freed ~~American~~ Allied prisoners that we have received so far:

PFC Peter S. LeClaire, 419 Harrison Street, Fulton, NY

Navy Corpsman Thomas A. Scheddel, Bay City, Michigan

~~[illegible]~~ PFC Arthur J. Baker of Canada

SAME NAMES

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Thursday, April 23, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... For the names of the Americans released so far today, we'll switch you to Korea, George Herman reporting.

HERMAN: This is Freedom Village. George Herman speaking. As you probably heard by now we've received the first batch of prisoners up at Panmunjom. We have a few names for you. Here are the names of the first two Americans to come in today: First man across from Fulton, New York, Pfc. Peter S. LaClaire - he spells his last name, L-e C-l-a-i-r-e - Peter S. LeClaire of 419 Harrison St., Fulton, New York. The second American across today is Navy corpsman from Bay City, Michigan, Navy Corpsman Thomas A. S-c-h-e-d for David d-e-l, Navy Corpsman Thomas A. Scheddel. We also received a Canadian thos morning - his name is Pfc. Arthur J. Baker. I'll read those three names again because the public addresssystem cut in on me just as I was going through. The names again - from Fulton, New York, Pfc. Peter S. LeClaire; from Bay City, Michigan, Navy Corpsman Thomas A. Scheddel - S-c-h-e-d-d-e-l; and from Canada - home town is not given - Pfc. Arthur J. Baker.

I've also received word from Panmunjom that there is to be a liaison meeting this morning at 10:00 o'clock our time - that's 8:00 o'clock New York City Time. So far today ... (Pause) ... that means, Ed, that there'll be none of them coming down here by helicopter, and that in turn means that we will not have any of the final and complete names of the next of kin and their addresses oh, I'd say for approximately another half or three-quarters of an hour. They will be coming down from Panmunjom by ambulance convoy. Those official rosters travel right with the returned veterans down here to Freedom Village.

So far this morning, we have heard that we are returning to the communists only 499 instead of the usual 500 communist prisoners of war. This is the first example of that kind that I know of where we are returning fewer than the number specified. What actually happened was that last night or yesterday afternoon, our time, when they started to load the prisoner train down at Pusan one North Korean at the very last minute changed his mind and decided that he did not want to go back to Communist North Korea. So he climbed off the train and they had to scratch his name off the list.

Unfortunately they'd already or perhaps fortunately - depending on the way you look at it - they had already given the roster of names to the communists yesterday at Panmunjom so they were unable to substitute another name for his. That means that the Communists now know and all the world now knows that one North Korean decided that he'd rather stay in South Korea rather than go back and face communism. Why he didn't specify so before is something of a mystery, but we know from past experiences in the prison camps that many of the communist prisoners are afraid to express their opinions until they get in some situation where they are reasonably isolated and can do so without fear of reprisals from their fellow hard-core communist prisoners. Apparently this man felt, as he was climbing onthe train, that that was an opportunity and so that is when he balked.

So far as I know, that's the first case. But it wouldn't surprise us here at all - having watched the communists in operation - if it were not the last case. It's quite possible that the communists will double or triple that number tomorrow or the day after and say that those gentlemen did not want to return to America or Britain.

You may remember that during most of these talks, pictures ofthe peace ... ofthe table in the conference room showed the UN flag possibly an inch or two taller than the communist flag. It was an accident; that was the way that the base was made. The last day, the day the communists let their photographers in, all of a sudden their flag showed up on a pedestal, which was two inches higher than ours.

Here at Freedom Village, the loudspeaker system has warned that the first convoy is on its way and is expectable here in 15 or 20-min. Everybody here is standing by. Those are the only developments we have hereat Freedom Village. So this is George Herman returning you now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Communists are scheduled to release 40 more American prisoners tonight together with four British soldiers, four Turkish soldiers, one from the Netherlands, one Canadian and 50 South Koreans. For the names of the Americans released so far today we'll switch you to Korea, George Herman reporting:

HERMAN: This is Freedom Village. George Herman speaking, and as you probably heard by now we've received the first batch of prisoners up at Panmunjom. We have a few names for you:

1. PFC Peter S. LaClaire - 419 Harrison St., Fulton, N.Y.
2. Navy Corpsman Thomas A. Scheddell. Bay City, Michigan
3. PFC Arthur J. Baker - Canada

I've also received word from Panmunjom that there is to be a liaison meeting this morning at 10:00 o'clock our time, and so far today, that means, Ed, that there'll be none of them coming down here by helicopter, and that in turn means that we will not have any of the final and complete names of the next of kin and their addresses oh, I'd say for approximately another half or three-quarters of an hour. They will be coming down from Panmunjom by ambulance convoy. These official rosters travel right with the returned veterans down here to Freedom Village.

So far this morning, we have heard that we are returning to the communists only 499 instead of the usual 500 communist prisoners of war. This is the first example of that kind that I know of where we are returning fewer than the number specified. What actually happened was that last night or yesterday afternoon, our time, when they started to load the prisoner train down at Pusan one North Korean at the very last minute changed his mind and decided that he did not want to go back to Communist North Korea. So he climbed off the train and they had to scratch his name off the list. Unfortunately they'd already or perhaps fortunately - depending on the way you look at it - they had already given the roster of names to the communists yesterday at Panmunjom so they were unable to substitute another name for his. That means that the Communists now know and all the world now knows that one North Korean decided that he'd rather stay in South Korea rather than go back and face communism. Why he didn't specify so before is something of a mystery, but we know from past experiences in the prison camps that many of the communist prisoners are afraid to express their opinions until they get in some situation where they are reasonably isolated and can do so without fear of reprisals from their fellow hard-core communist prisoners. Apparently this man felt, as he was climbing on the train, that that was an opportunity and so that is when he balked.

So far as I know, that's the first case. But it wouldn't surprise us here at all - having watched the communists in operation - if it were not the last case. It's quite possible that the communists will double or triple that number tomorrow or the day after and say that those gentlemen did not want to return to America or Britain. You may remember that during most of these talks, pictures of the peace table in the conference room showed the UN flag possibly an inch or two taller than the communist flag. It was an accident; that was the way that the base was made. The last day, the day the communists let their photographers in, all of a sudden their flag showed up on a pedestal, which was two inches higher than ours.

Here at Freedom Village, the loudspeaker system has warned that the first convoy is on its way and is expectable here in 15 or 20 minutes. Everyone here is standing by. Those are the only developments we have here at Freedom Village. So this is George Herman returning you now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

The Communists have now promised to release additional allied personnel. That would be over the 605 prisoners they originally promised to send back to freedom. But they have not stated just how many more men we will get, or the nationality of these prisoners.

Reporters in Tokyo say the United Nations is carefully checking all released prisoners for information they may have on sick or wounded men left behind, men who are not to be returned. It may be that we will protest, after this week's exchange is completed, that the enemy did not live up to the agreement to exchange all sick and wounded prisoners.

In Korea today, South Korean troops attacked the enemy line at four points. And in both Seoul and Pusan, South Korean civilians demonstrated against any armistice that would leave Korea divided.

The President told reporters in Washington today that like everyone else he is waiting to see how things develop in Korea. He and his aides are studying and analyzing the stories the released prisoners are telling reporters. The President said the things we are hearing, the reports of the death of so many allied troops, "weighs heavy on the heart." The President said something is obviously wrong. And again he told reporters he is ready to do anything and confer anywhere to bring about peace in Korea. He said he has had no reaction from the Kremlin to the peace proposals he made recently.

The President also told reporters that he and his aides are watching the situation in Indo-China very carefully, especially in view of the enemy invasion of Laos.

The Communist-led guerrillas pushed to within 60 miles of the capital of Laos today, and ran into stiff opposition from allied forces.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons he too, is watching this situation "with great anxiety." And French Foreign Minister Bidault, told the North Atlantic ministers in Paris: "It is intolerable for a renewal of negotiations in Korea to be accompanied by a renewal of hostilities in Indo-China." He added: "You are not heading for peace when you close one theater of operations only to open another." Bidault also said that Germany must be unified by free elections, and permitted to make her own alliances.

And Secretary of State Dulles told the Ministers that Franch must show a willingness to ratify a European Defense army. Otherwise, he said, our Congress may want to review the entire NATO program. He said: "We certainly are not going to send our boys to Europe to fight and die and protect Germans who are sitting idly by. Perhaps the French would like to do that, but we will not."

Mr. Dulles told reporters that the Council of Ministers has agreed unanimously that Soviet peace overtures must be backed by deeds, that the Ministers feel the Russians have changed their tactics, but more concrete evidence is needed before the western powers believe that there has been a change in basic Soviet policy. As Mr. Dulles put it: "We are not going to stop to pick up the crumbs the Soviet Communists drop, perhaps merely to distract us."

At the United Nations today, the General Assembly voted 51 to 5 (the Soviet bloc) for an impartial investigation of Communist charges that American troops have used germ warfare in Korea. American Delegate Gross said that Russia's charges "compound two crimes, speaking evil and concealing evil." He said Soviet opposition to the impartial investigation is "reprehensible in the extreme." And Andrie Vishinsky responded by saying our denials of germ warfare are "reckless denials of fact." He says the investigation the Assembly has now approved is based on "hypocrisy and falseness." The Assembly has now recessed, indefinitely, to await developments in Korea.

At his White House news conference today the President answered a number of questions: He said the National Security Council had advised him that it would be advantageous for this country to join in the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The President said he will soon send to Congress plans to reorganize both the State and Defense Departments.He is completely unaware of the dismissal of any government officials from important jobs just for patronage reasons. He does not approve of this sort of thing. Mr. Eisenhower said he he believes the defense budget can be cut, but he did not suggest by how much. He said the opening of atomic energy to private industry is a challenge both to the Atomic Energy Commission and other government agencies; he feels that it is certainly the hope of everyone that something can be done to permit private concerns to work with atomic energy. The President also told reporters that yesterday's House vote, to end the Administration's plan for public housing, does not agree with his personal view. But he did not want this to be interpreted as criticism of those who voted against the proposal.

Today, the House passed a bill that would call for the end of rent controls on 5-and-a-half million units on July 31st. Democrats tried to extend rent controls for five months or a year, but the House chose to end them by the end of July.

The House Appropriations Committee said today that the Interior Department should stop competing with private enterprise in the power field.

Attorney General Brownell says we should make a "one step at a time" approach to a general settlement of our differences with Communists. He feels the Korean armistice should be the first step.

Henry Grunewald told a House committee today that he once conducted an investigation for the late President Roosevelt. He refused to give the committee any details. And he said the 96-thousand dollars he deposited in banks in 1949 was "all race track money."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: More prisoners of war are passing across the enemy's lines tonight. And while there are many more yet to come, this is a time to agree as Sophocles did, that "it is hope which maintains most of mankind." Events of great importance often move slowly. But it is true, as the Frenchman Vov-narg once remarked: "Despair is a greater deceiver than hope."

Good Nite and Good Luck.

Friday, April 24, 1953

This is the news:

The Communists have released another 17 American prisoners. For their names and a direct report from Korea, we take you.. after a few seconds pause.. to Freedom Village, George Herman reporting:

4 MINUTES
(NOW BACK TO ERN = NY)

Tonight's release of 17 Americans makes a total of 136 sick and injured prisoners returned to us by the enemy. That's 16 more than the Communists originally promised to hand over to us. And we have suggested to the enemy that the exchange of prisoners.. by both sides... be made a "continuous thing" as long as the war goes on. Rear Admiral Daniel, our chief negotiator at Panmunjom, says that under our present agreement, the Communists have promised to return "all" sick and wounded.. without regard to previous estimates of how many such prisoners they held. But so far there has been no word from the Communists on our proposal to make the [redacted] exchange a "continuous" process.

As both sides prepared to resume full-scale truce negotiations at midnight Saturday.. our time... the South Korean ambassador to Washington said today that his country is "absolutely determined" to reject any truce, unless it provides for a nation "re-united under a government of the people's choice." He said if we agree on a truce.. and it should leave Korea divided..the people of South Korea will "go it alone, even if they are exterminated by so doing. They feel it is better to die for liberty than to die as slaves."

And General MacArthur suggested today that we might end the Korean war and force the Russians to settle "all pending global issues on equitable terms." He said this might be brought about, by threatening to wipe out all of Communist China's industrial centers and supply lines to the Soviet Union. In a letter to Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia, General MacArthur said "a warning of action of this sort" might convince the Russians to end the cold war. And he is certain this would not lead to another world war. In Washington there was little enthusiasm for the General's plan. Republican Representative Van Zandt of Pennsylvania thinks the General is "absolutely right". He called for the use of atomic bombs on strategic targets in North China and Manchuria. But Democratic Senator Gillettee of Iowa said: "We should disabuse our minds of any thought, that we can wave a club over the Soviet Union and frighten them. No threat would be effective unless accompanied by action, or the imminence of effective action." And Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia said: "I agree we need a new approach to the Korean war, but I'm not willing to go as far as General MacArthur."

Another veteran of the Korean war, General Van Fleet, said here in New York today, that the only way to win the Korean war is with "a smashing military victory." He said he wanted to tell the leaders of South Korea that "they must win, or there will be no rest."

In Tokyo today, recently released prisoners told more stories of long marches.. poor food and poor treatment in enemy prison camps. And the Communist radio answered with charges that we gave their prisoners poor food and insufficient medical care.

In Europe, many newspapers are taking the attitude that the "atrocities" American prisoners are reporting, took place in the first year of the war, when the enemy forces were rapidly retreating in winter-time. [redacted] And the Communist press in the Satellite Countries apparently is trying to present the appearance of being sincere about their desire for a truce.

In Indo-China today, Communist led-guerrillas captured a TOWN [redacted] 60 miles from the capital of Laos state. The French say they put up a stubborn defense and turned back several assaults before they surrendered the city. And some reports cleared through Hanoi say the newly captured town is now in flames.

In Paris today the North Atlantic Foreign Ministers adopted a resolution (urged on them by Secretary of State Dulles) saying that the six-nation West European army treaty must be ratified...to bring a half million German troops into the western army. Both Mr. Dulles and Defense Secretary Wilson said our future military aid to Europe depends on the progress the European nations make towards ratifying the treaty.

But in West Germany, [redacted] the upper house of the German parliament voted to delay ratification..until the high court approves of the constiutionality of this treaty and a peace treaty with the west. The vote was 20 to 18. Chancellor Adenauer said that despite this defeat, he will submit the army treaty to the German president FOR his signature... because the lower house of parliament has approved it.

In London, Queen Elizabeth today knighted Winston Churchill. As a knight he gains the title of "sir" and the right to walk ahead of plain ministers and knights of lesser rank on formal occassions. Sir Winston decided to accept from the new Queen the honor of [redacted]n [redacted]m being a member of the Companion of the Order of the Garter... an honor he declined to accept from the late King George.

In Washington today, President Eisenhower told Republican women that they must expect no "miracle overnight" to bring about a permanent peace.

And the President made it known today that he is deeply concerned over the delay in passing the controversial tidelands oil bill. As the Senate debate went through its 17th day, the President called for its prompt passage. And in a letter to Democratic Senator Anderson he noted that the Republican platform called for such a bill. Mr. Eisenhower also noted that his desire for quick passage of the bill was not to be taken as a criticism of those who differ with his view. He said:"I respect their sincerity, and their right to vote as they think best."

Ambassador Lodge told a Senate committee today that all American employes of the United Nations who refused to answer a Senate committee's loyalty questions..have now been fired.

And James A. Wechesler, the editor of the New York Post, charged today that Senator McCarthy's investigating committee was trying to intimidate him. Wechsler testified before the committee in secret. He then told reporters: he challenges what he called "the obvious interference with the press." He said he told McCarthy that he thought he was the first of a long line of editors to be called before the committee "because they refuse to equate McCarthyism with patriotism." Senator McCarthy said the committee questioned Wecshler as an author, not as a newspaperman. Wechsler admits having been a member of the Young Communist League from 1934 to 1937. He says he is "vigorously anti-Communist now." McCarthy says his committee wants to know about books Wechesler has written which are now in overseas libraries of the State Department. And the Senator says today the committee went into what McCarthy called "the question of Wechsler's leading the fight against everyone who is exposing Communists in the government."

Each exchange of prisoners brings with it new stories of steadfastness and courage. The Roman Plo-tus once summed it all up when he said:" courage stands before everything; it is the best gift of all. It is what preserves our liberty, safety, life and our homes and parents, our country and our children. Courage comprises all things: a man with courage has every blessing."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

LIST

Now...again...here are the names that we have of Americans released by the Communists in Korea today:

---Private Thomas C. FETTY, of the Third Division. He lives on Route 4, Fairmont, West Virginia.

---Ensign Marvin S. Broomhead of Salt Lake City. He was a pilot on the carrier Valley Forge...was captured February 8, 1952.

---Sergeant Donald Rose of the First Marine Division...He lives in Redlands, California.. has been a prisoner for seven months.

---Airman Second Class William Hilycord, of Columbus, Indiana

---Corporal John King...no hometown available yet...

--Private Thomas R. Barnes, no hometown available yet

--Private Theodore Juern, no hometown available at this time

--Corporal John King, no hometown available at this time

CUES FOR STANDBY TAPE

MURROW SHOW

TAPE RUNS 4:03 COMES AT 7:46:00

MURROW:

"We had hoped to bring you a direct report from Korea, but communications have broken down. However, we did record this piece from George Herman in Freedom Village a short while ago. Let's listen to it now."

RETURN CUE:

"...this is George Herman returning you now to Ed Murrow in New York."

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Friday, April 24, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The Communists have released another seventeen American prisoners. For their names and a direct report from Korea, we take you after a few seconds' pause to Freedom Village, George Herman reporting.

HERMAN: This is Freedom Village. George Herman speaking. Here're the first names we've received of military personnel returned to the United States today up through Panmunjom. The first name is Private First Class Thomas C. Fetty of Faimont, West Virginia. Private Fetty spells his last name: F, for fox, e-t-t-y. He gives his address as: Box 269, Route 4, Fairmont, West Virginia. He's a member of the 3rd Division. He was captured on the 5th of November 1952.

From Salt Lake City, Utah, a Navy man, Ensign Marvin S. Broomhead. He spells his last name - B-r-o-o-m, as in broom, h-e-a-d, head, Broomhead. He is a pilot, a flier from the carrier Valley Forge. He was shot down on the 8th of February, 1952.

From Redlands, California, a Marine - a Sergeant Donald A. Rose, of Redlands. He's a member of the 1st Marine Division. He was captured ~~several~~ seven months ago; the exact date is not yet available.

From Columbus, Indiana, Airman Second Class William R. Hilycord He spells his name - H-i-l-y-c-o-r-d. He's twenty-two years old, from Columbus, Indiana. He was an engineer on a B-26. He was shot down apparently on the 8th of December, 1951.

And now we have three names on which no further information is given. There is no home town; no next of kin; no further facts. I hesitate to give them because of the possibilities for confusion. But, in any case, for better, for worse: Private First Class Thomas R. Barnes. Thomas R. B-a-r-n-e-s; Private First Class Theodore A. Juern, spelled J-u-e-r-n - Private First Class Theodore A. Juern; Corporal John King, Corposal John King.

Now, this first list of names, of course, has come from Panmunjom. It is not the final, official list of names, but those names on which addresses, home towns and further information is given, can be considered as at least partly finalized.

The convoy of ambulances from Panmunjom is on its way down here to Freedom Village. It should be here in perhaps twenty minutes, perhaps half an hour. They've been averaging 15-mi. an hour on those runs because of the nature of this rough Korean road - the distance is about 14-mi. - so it takes them approximately one hour to get down from Panmunjom.

There were no American or United Nations litter cases delivered back to ~~us~~ our side today, so there would be no men coming in here to Freedom Village any sooner than that.

Also up at Panmunjom of course we are scheduling a liaison meeting about an hour from now. This is the meeting at which we hope the Communists will answer the suggestion put by Admiral Daniel yesterday at this exchange operation, the return of the sick and wounded, ...? according to the Geneva Convention to be a continuing operation. In other words that it should go onuntil a cease-fire is signed.

The Communists have given no answer as yet. It's possible that they will not answer today but that will be held over again until tomorrow. However, they are expected to deliver to us in not too long a time, possibly another hour, the list of names, if any, of United Nations personnel to be returned to us tomorrow.

Now, they have already exceeded the number that they promised to return to us. So if they hand us any further list of names ofpersonnel to be returned tomorrow, that will be considered here, at Freedom Village, as a pretty good indication that Little Switch is continuing, at least for the present, that the exchange of prisoners - that the return of United Nations personnel - is not yet over. Possibly it will continue diminishing to a small trickle; we don't know as yet.

Down here in Freedom Village, the newsmen are sharpening up their pencils and getting their questions ready. They want, of course, to ask more questions about the number of Americans who died in enemy prison camps, such as the now infamous Death Valley camp.

The Army and the Navy medical men are also hard at work down here. They're going to ask some questions themselves.

In the meantime, doctors here have told me certain conclusions which they've drawn from the statements of all returning soldiers. Those conclusions are not going to be popular in the United States because what the doctors have to say is that Americans have not ~~been~~ seemed able to stand the conditions in North Korea as well as personnel from other United Nations. The doctors seem to think that people who have grown up and lived in other tougher, rougher countries where the milk is not pasteurized, the water is not chlorinated, ...? things werenot wrapped in cellophane, these people have been able to survive better in North Korean prison camps.

That's all the information we have from here. The next batch of prisoners should be ~~arrixing~~ arriving at twenty minutes. We'll let you hear as soon as we get the final and official list of names.

This is George Herman in Freedom Village, returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 24, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Communists have released another 17 American prisoners. For their names and a direct report from Korea, we take you, after a few seconds pause, to Freedom Village, George Herman reporting:

HERMAN: This is Freedom Village. George Herman speaking. Here are the first names we've received of military personnel returned to the United States today up through Panmunjom. The first name is Private First Class Thomas C. Fetty of Box 269, Route 4, Fairmont, West Virginia. He's a member of the 3rd Division. He was captured on the 5th of November, 1952.

From Salt Lake City, Utah, a Navy man, Ensign Marvin S. Broomhead. He is a pilot, a flier from the carrier Valley Forge. He was shot down on the 8th of February, 1952.

From Redlands, California, a Marine - a Sergeant Donald A. Rose, of Redlands. He's a member of the 1st Marine Division. He was captured seven months ago; the exact date is not yet available.

From Columbus, Indiana, Airman Second Class William R. Hilycord. He's 22 years old, from Columbus, Indiana. He was an engineer on a B-26. He was shot down apparently on the 8th of December, 1951.

And now we have three names on which no further information is given. There is no home town; no next of kin; no further facts. I hesitate to give them because of the possibilities for confusion. But, in any case, for better, for worse: Private First Class Thomas R. Barnes; Private First Class Theodore A. Juern; Corporal John King.

Now, this first list of names, of course, has come from Panmunjom. It is not the final, official list of names, but those names on which addresses, home towns and further information is given, can be considered as at least partly finalized

The convoy of ambulances from Panmunjom is on its way down here to Freedom Village. It should be here in perhaps twenty minutes, perhaps half an hour. They've been averaging 15-mi. an hour on those runs because of the nature of this rough Korean road - the distance is about 14-mi. - so it takes them approximately one hour to get down from Panmunjom.

There were no American or United Nations litter cases delivered back to our side today, so there would be no men coming in here to Freedom Village any sooner than that.

Also up at Panmunjom of course we are scheduling a liaison meeting about an hour from now. This is the meeting at which we hope the Communists will answer the suggestion put by Admiral Daniel yesterday at this exchange operation, the return of the sick and wounded - according to the Geneva Convention to be a continuing operation. In other words that it should go on until a cease-fire is signed.

The Communists have given no answer as yet. It's possible that they will not answer today but that will be held over again until tomorrow. However, they are expected to deliver to us in not too long a time, possible another hour, the list of names, if any, of United Nations personnel to be returned to us tomorrow.

Now, they have already exceeded the number that they promised to return to us. So if they hand us any further list of names of personnel to be returned tomorrow, that will be considered here, at Freedom Village, as a pretty good indication that Little Switch is continuing, at least for the present, that the exchange of prisoners - that the return of United Nations personnel - is not yet over. Possibly it will continue diminishing to a small trickle, we don't know as yet.

Down here in Freedom Village, the newsmen are sharpening up their pencils and getting their questions ready. They want, of course, to ask more questions about the number of Americans who died in enemy prison camps, such as the now infamous Death Valley camp.

The Army and the Navy medical men are also hard at work down here. They're going to ask some questions themselves.

In the meantime, doctors here have told me certain conclusions which they've drawn from the statements of all returning soldiers. Those conclusions are not going to be popular in the United States because what the doctors have to say is that Americans have not seemed able to stand the conditions in North Korea as well as personnel from other United Nations. The doctors seem to think that people who have grown up and lived in other tougher, rougher countries where the milk is not pasteurized, the water is not chlorinated, things were not wrapped in cellophane, these people have been able to sirvive better in North Korean prison camps.

That's all the information we have from here. The next batch of prisoners should be arriving at twenty minutes. We'll let you hear as soon as we get the final and official list of names.

This is George Herman in Freedom Village, returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Tonight's release of 17 Americans makes a total of 136 sick and injured prisoners returned to us by the enemy. That's 16 more than the Communists originally promised to hand over to us. And we have suggested to the enemy that the exchange of prisoners, by both sides, be made a "continuous thing" as long as the war goes on. Rear Admiral Daniel, our chief negotiator at Panmunjom says that under our present agreement the Communists have promised to return "all" sick and wounded, without regard to previous estimates of howmany such prisoners they held. But so far there has been no word from the Communists on our proposal to make the exchange a "continuous" process.

As both sides prepared to resume full-scale truce negotiations at midnight Saturday, our time, the South Korean ambassador to Washington said today that his country is "absolutely determined" to reject any truce unless it provides for a nation" re-united under a government of the people's choice." He said if we agree on a truce, and it should leave Korea divided, the people of South Korea will "go it alone even if they are exterminated by so doing. They feel it is better to die for liberty than to die as slaves."

And General MacArthur suggested today that we might end the Korean war and force the Russians to settle "all pending global issues on equitable terms." He said this might be brought about by threatening to wipe out all of Communist China's industrial centers and supply lines to the Soviet Union. In a letter to Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia, General MacArthur said "a warning of action of this sort" might convince the Russians to end the cold war. And he is certain this would not lead to another world war. In Washington there was little enthusiasm for the General's plan. Republican Representative Van Zandt of Pennsylvania thinks the General is "absolutely right." He called for the use of atomic bombs on strategic targets in North China and Manchuria. But Democratic Senator Gillette of Iowa said: "We should disabuse our minds of any thought that we can wave a club over the Soviet Union and frighten them. No threat would be effective unless accompanied by action or the imminence of effective action." And Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia said: "I agree we need a new approach to the Korean war but I'm not willing to go as far as General MacArthur."

Another veteran of the Korean war, General Van Fleet, said here in New York today, that the only way to win the Korean war is with "a smashing military victory." He said he wanted to tell the leaders of South Korea that "they must win or there will be no rest."

In Tokyo today, recently released prisoners told more stories of long marches, poor food and poor treatment in enemy prison camps. And the Communist radio answered with charges that we gave their prisoners poor food and insufficient medical care.

In Europe, many newspapers are taking the attitude that the "atrocities" American prisoners are reporting took place in the first year of the war when the enemy forces were rapidly retreating in winter-time. And the Communist press in the satellite countries apparently is trying to present the appearance of being sincere about their desire for a truce.

In Indo-China today, Communist led-guerrillas captured a town 60 miles from the capital of Laos state. The French say they put up a stubborn defense and turned back several assaults before they surrendered the city. And some reports cleared through Hanoi say the newly captured town is now in flames.

In Paris today the North Atlantic Foreign Ministers adopted a resolution, urged on them by Secretary of State Dulles, saying that the six-nation West European army treaty must be ratified, to bring a half million German troops into the western army. Both Mr. Dulles and Defense Secretary Wilson said our future military aid to Europe depends on the progress the European nations make towards ratifying the treaty.

But in West Germany, the upper house of the German parliament voted to delay ratification, until the high court approves of the constitutionality of this treaty and a peace treaty with the west. The vote was 20 to 18. Chancellor Adenauer said that despite this defeat, he will submit the army treaty to the German president for his signature, because the lower house of parliament has approved it.

In London, Queen Elizabeth today knighted Winston Churchill. As a knight he gains the title of "sir" and the right to walk ahead of plain ministers and knights of lesser rank on formal occasions. Sir Winston decided to accept from the new Queen the honor of being a member of the Companion of the Order of the Garter, an honor he declined to accept from the late King George.

In Washington today, President Eisenhower told Republican women that they must expect no "miracle overnight" to bring about a permanent peace.

And the Presidnet made it known today that he is "deeply concerned" over the delay in passing the controversial tidelands oil bill. As the Senate debate went through its 17th day the President called for its prompt passage. And in a letter to Democratic Senator Anderson he noted that the Republican platform called for such a bill. Mr. Eisenhower also noted that his desire for quick passage of the bill was not to be taken as a criticism of those who differ with his view. He said: "I respect their sincerity and their right to vote as they think best."

Ambassador Lodge told a Senate committee today that all American employees of the United Nations who refused to answer a Senate committee's loyalty questions, have now been fired.

And James A. Wechesler, the editor of the New York Post, charged today that Senator McCarthy's investigating committee was trying to intimidate him. Wechsler testified before the committee in secret. He then told reporters: he challenges what he called "the obvious interference with the press." He said he told McCarthy that he thought he was the first of a long line of editors to be called before the committee "because they refuse to equate McCarthyism with patriotism." Senator McCarthy said the committee questioned Wechesler as an author, not as a newspaperman. Wechesler admits having been a member of the Young Communist League from 1934 to 1937. He says he is "vigorously anti-Communist now." McCarthy says his committee wants to know about books Wechesler has written which are now in overseas libraries of the State Department. And the Senator says today the committee went into what McCarthy called "the question of Wechesler's leading the fight against everyone who is exposing Communists in the government."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Each exchange of prisoners brings with it new stories of steadfastness and courage. The Roman Plo-tus once summed it all up when he said: "Courage stands before everything; it is the best gift of all. It is what preserves our liberty, safety, life and our homes and parents, our country and our children. Courage comprises all things: a man with courage has every blessing."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday, April 27, 1953

This is the news:

Allied and enemy negotiators meet again at Panmunjom tonight, to try to work out a settlement on prisoners of war. The enemy has now presented his plan in some detail, and Lt. General Harrison, our chief negotiator, calls it "unreasonable and obstructive." At the same time the General says there is as yet no reason to believe the Communists will not negotiate in good faith. And the top Communist negotiator.. General Nam Il.. has called for "an effort by both sides." The basic differences at the moment are these. The Communists want a neutral state to supervise Communist prisoners, who do not want to return home. We agree.. and suggest Switzerland. The Communists don't want the Swiss to have the job. We want the prisoners to remain in Korea, under the supervision of whatever neutral state both sides finally agree on. The Communists don't want the prisoners to stay in Korea. We want a quick end to the whole business... we would have the neutral state hold the prisoners for 60 days, and then decide what to do with those who refuse to return home. The Communist plan would keep the prisoners another nine months after the war ends. Today the allies again turned over 491 North Korean prisoners. But no Americans came to Freedom Village. The enemy says he holds no more allied sick or wounded.

In Indo-China, the French ARE quickly building up the capital City of Laos. And a French officer estimated that enemy forces could be within 25 miles of the city.

In London today British newspapers suggested that Russia's latest peace proposal may contain a number of booby traps.. but they urged the West to explore it without delay.

And in West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer announced that he has changed his plans to get quick approval of a European army treaty. [The lower house has approved the treaty..the upper house has delayed action.] Adenauer originally planned to seek the signature of President Heuss, without approval of the upper house. But now he has changed his mind.. OFFERED no reason. Correspondent Dick Hottelet cables from Bonn THAT the chancellor is still determined to get the treaty approved.. even though it will require some delicate political and governmental manuverings.

Secretary of State Dulles, back in Washington from the North Atlantic treaty meeting in Paris, told reporters today:"I believe N.A.T.O. is going to be run with greater firmness, greater strength, and greater economy than ever before with greater security for the whole free WORLD.'

The Senate today voted down an amendment to the tidelands bill offered by those who oppose the bill. The measure called for federal control of the states' ownership provisions of the bill. It was tabled by a vote of 56 to 33. And supporters of state ownership of the submerged lands say this indicates eventual approval of their bill.

The President today signed an order to abolish the Truman Loyalty Program and institute a new one in 30 days. Under the new plan, which affects all government employes, the head of each agency or executive department will be responsible for the security program in his group. Under the Truman program a person could not be fired unless the government could prove "reasonable doubt" as to his loyalty. Under the Eisenhower plan, an employe can be fired, or switched to a less important job, if he does not have security qualifications. He must be able to prove, if challenged, that his employment is "clearly consistent with the interests of national security." Under the old plan, the government was interested in loyalty or disloyalty. The new plan takes into account such things as: reliability..trustworthiness, whether a person drinks too much..uses drugs.. is a sexual pervert or has indulged in "criminal, infamous, dishonest, immoral or notoriously disgraceful conduct." Under the old plan a suspect received a hearing before a loyalty panel of his fellow workers. The new plan calls for such hearings before three government employes who do not know the accused.

The F.B.I. will now start to re-check the security qualifications of all those investigated under the old program. No person will be appointed to a "sensitive" job unless the F.B.I. has first made a field examination of his background and habits. Under the old plan appeal on all loyalty decisions was made to the Civil Service Commission Loyalty Review Board. Under the new plan there is no appeal from a decision by a depeartment or agency head.

Senator McCarthy told reporters he feels the new program is a "tremendous improvement" over the old program.

The President today asked Congress to re-examine the nation's immigration policy "with a view to achieveing legislation which would be fair and just to all." He said he has received many complaints that the McCarran act..passed over former President Truman's veto.. has "many serious and unequitable restrictions." Senator McCarran says almost all the complaints listed with the President deal with administration.

A House committee was told today that an increase in foreign goods sold in this country would bring "depression and disaster" to our economy. The witness was O.R. Strackbein, head of a committee that favors high tariffs. (The committee is holding hearings on a bill to extend the present reciprocal trade act for one year.)

Deputy Defense Secretary Keyes charged today that "we are paying dearly" for two mistakes made by the Truman administration. He says the Truman program, first, made too severe a cutback in our military strength after World War Two. And then, Keyes says, the former administration "made an unsound and unrealistic rush to re-arm after the Korean war broke out." ~~Keyes says he found that the Defense Department, the largest organization in the world, has only a handful of men "whose abilities, knowledge and experience approach the requirements of their jobs." He says the department plans to cut down on the number of plants engaged in defense work, and to eliminate what he calls "unrealistic requirements, poor planning and inefficient execution" which has wasted money, manpower and materials.~~

//

Edward R. Murrow: April 27, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

General Mark Clark's headquarters is now offering one hundred thousand dollars to the first Communist pilot who sets down a modern, complete combat type aircraft in flyable condition at Kimpo Air Base, near Seoul. After that the price is fifty thousand dollars per aircraft. (This is our bid to get a MIG 15 jet fighter.) The pilot or pilots are promised political asylum, and assistance in going to any non-Communist country they may choose. This unusual announcement was made in radio broadcasts aimed at North Korea and Communist China. Leaflets carrying the same message have been dropped over MIG Alley, along the Yalu River. The offer contains specific and detailed instructions as to how enemy pilots who may want to desert can achieve their purpose. They are to fly to an island about a hundred and thirty miles north-west of Seoul, and then head for Kimpo at an altitude of twenty thousand feet. Allied planes will pick up the deserter, flying above and behind, and escort him to the big allied base at Kimpo. Presumably this offer applies also to Russian pilots based on Sakhalin Island, just north of Japan, because the announcement referred to "The Communist Air Force".

Our Far East Command says the offer was made to obtain invaluable technical intelligence, and to sow suspicion throughout the Red Air Force.

General Clark's headquarters thinks this offer should reduce the combat effectiveness of the Communist air force - in the future a MIG flight leader should be even more concerned lest his own flight shoot him down and escape. He will tend to worry about the other pilots in his flight, and they may distrust each other. Under such circumstances the flight will find it difficult to fight ably and efficiently - Squadron and Wing Commanders may find it necessary to ground able pilots whose complete devotion to Communism may be in question; and they may find it necessary to ration fuel.

General Clark's message ended with this statement: "The free world awaits your arrival."

The Far East Command annnuncement says that on the ground the enemy has been sending out patrols to watch over other patrols, to keep individuals from surrendering to the forces of the United Nations. Fire fights have been observed between enemy patrols and their satellite security patrols. Apparently it is believed that something of the same sort can be achieved through this offer to Communist fliers. - fifty thousand dollars for each plane they bring in, plus an added fifty thousand for the first one. This offer is designed to damage the morale of Communist fighter pilots, and to get us a MIG or two in flyable condition, for technical study.

This is an unorthodox and imaginative application of psychological warfare which is not likely to have any effect on the course of the war. We shall have to wait to see whether any MIGs come in; if they do the price offered will not be exorbitant. This reporter can well imagine that in the course of the coming weeks the price offered may go up. It seems to be part of our materialistic philosophy that both allies and enemies can be bought. It would be a simple thing to raise the bidding price by adding an automobile with wire wheels to be waiting on the landing strip, plus television sets, refrigerators, plenty of nylons and an attractive welcoming committee drawn from Hollywood and New York. This could be built into quite a jackpot for the first MIG pilot into Kimpo. Of course, if none comes, we may look rather silly. Nevertheless, it is possible that this move may produce a degree of caution and mutual suspicion amongst enemy pilots. It seems that this is one of those things that may be a good idea if it works. The offer was obviously given careful consideration by our psychological warriors and by the Military Establishment before General Clark attached his name to it. Questions may be raised as to the timing of this maneuver, when delicate negotiations are now underway at Panmunjom; but American and Communist pilots are still trying to shoot each other out of the sky over Korea, and what we have done is to offer to buy some of them plus MIG at fifty thousand dollars a head, with an added bonus of fifty thousand dollars for the first man in. Like every other maneuver in war, this one has its risks. If it works, we may get a MIG or two, and somebody will get a promotion; if it doesn't, we might better have offered merely freedom from political tyranny to those enemy pilots with an appetite to desert.

There ~~are probably~~ may be those who feel that we are wrong in setting up a cash reward, for the safe delivery of a Mig. But those who conceived the idea doubtless feel as John Ray did, when he said:"The worth of a thing, is best known by the want." As for the enemy, Thoreau put it nicely:"The cost of a thing is the amount of life which is required to be exchanged for it, immediately, or in the long run."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 27, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Allied and enemy negotiators meet again at Panmunjom tonight to try to work out a settlement on prisoners of war. The enemy has now presented his plan in some detail and Lt. General Harrison, our chief negotiator, calls it "unreasonable and obstructive." At the same time the General says there is as yet no reason to believe the Communists will not negotiate in good faith. And the top Communist negotiator, General Nam Il, has called for "an effort by both sides." The basic differences at the moment are these. The Communists want a neutral state to supervise Communist prisoners who do not want to return home. We agree, and suggest Switzerland. The Communists don't want the Swiss to have the job. We want the prisoners to remain in Korea, under the supervision of whatever neutral state both sides finally agree on. The Communists don't want the prisoners to stay in Korea. We want a quick end to the whole business; we would have the neutral state hold the prisoners for 60 days and then decide what to do with those who refuse to return home. The Communist plan would keep the prisoners another nine months after the war ends. Today the allies again turned over 491 North Korean prisoners. But no Americans came to Freedom Village. The enemy says he holds no more allied sick or wounded.

In Indo-China, the French are quickly building up the capital city of Laos. And a French officer estimated that enemy forces could be within 25 miles of the city.

In London today British newspapers suggested that Russia's latest peace proposal may contain a number of booby traps, but they urged the West to explore it without delay.

And in West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer announced that he has changed his plans to get quick approval of a European army treaty. The lower house has approved the treaty, the upper house has delayed action. Adenauer originally planned to seek the signature of President Heuss, without approval of the upper house. But now he has changed his mind, offered no reason. Correspondent Dick Hottelet cables from Bonn that the chancellor is still determined to get the treaty approved, even though it will require some delicate political and governmental maneuverings.

Secretary of State Dulles, back in Washington from the North Atlantic Treaty meeting in Paris, told reporters today: "I believe NATO is going to be run with greater firmness, greater strength, and greater economy than ever before with greater security for the whole free world."

The Senate today voted down an amendment to the tidelands bill offered by those who oppose the bill. The measure called for federal control of the states' ownership provisions of the bill. It was tabled by a vote of 56 to 33. And supporters of state ownership of the submerged lands say this indicates eventual approval of their bill.

The President today signed an order to abolish the Truman Loyalty Program and institute a new one in 30 days. Under the new plan, which affects all government employees, the head of each agency or executive department will be responsible for the security program in his group. Under the Truman program a person could not be fired unless the government could prove "reasonable doubt" as to his loyalty. Under the Eisenhower plan, an employee can be fired, or switched to a less important job, if he does not have security qualifications. He must be able to prove, if challenged, that his employment is "clearly consistent with the interests of national security." Under the old plan, the government was interested in loyalty or disloyalty. The new plan takes into account such things as: reliability, trustworthiness, whether a person drinks too much, used drugs, is a sexual pervert or has indulged in "criminal, infamous, dishonest, immoral or notoriously disgraceful conduct." Under the old plan a suspect received a hearing before a loyalty panel of his fellow workers. The new plan calls for such hearings before three government employees who do not know the accused.

The FBI will not start to re-check the security qualifications of all those investigated under the old program. No person will be appointed to a "sensitive" job unless the FBI has first made a field examination of his background and habits. Under the old plan appeal on all loyalty decisions was made to the Civil Service Commission Loyalty Review Board. Under the new plan there is no appeal from a decision by a department or agency head.

Senator McCarthy told reporters he feels the new program is a "tremendous improvement" over the old program.

The President today asked Congress to re-examine the nation's immigration policy "with a view to achieving legislation which would be fair and just to all." He said he has received many complaints that the McCarran Act, passed over Presidnet Truman's veto, has "many serious and unequitable restrictions." Senator McCarran says almost all the complaints listed with the President deal with administration.

A House committee was told today that an increase in foreign goods sold in this country would bring "depression and disaster" to our economy. The witness was O.R. Strackbein, head of a committee that favors high tariffs. The committee is holding hearings on a bill to extend the present reciprocal trade act for one year.

Deputy Defense Secretary Keyes charged today that "we are paying dearly" for two mistakes made by the Truman administration. He says the Truman program, first, made too severe a cutback in our military strength after World War Two. And then, Keyes says, the former administration "made an unsound and unrealistic rush to rearm after the Korean war broke out."

General Mark Clark's headquarters is not offering one hundred thousand dollars to the first Communist pilot who sets down a modern, complete combat type aircraft in flyable condition at Kimpo Air Base, near Seoul. After that the price is fifty thousand dollars per aircraft. This is our bid to get a MIG 15 jet fighter. The pilot or pilots are promised political asylum, and assistance in going to any non-Communist country they may choose. This unusual announcement was made in radio broadcasts aimed at North Korea and Communist China. Leaflets carrying the same message have been dropped over MIG Alley, along the Yalu River. The offer contains specific and detailed instructions as to how enemy pilots who may want to desert can achieve their purpose. They are to fly to an island about a hundred and thirty miles north-west of Seoul, and then head for Kimpo at an altitude of twenty thousand feet. Allied planes will pick up the deserter, flying above and behind, and escort him to the big allied base at Kimpo. Presumably this offer applies also to Russian pilots based on Sakhalin Island, just north of Japan, because the announcement referred to "The Communist Air Force."

Our Far East Command says the offer was made to obtain invaluable technical intelligence, and to sow suspicion throughout the Red Air Force. General Clark's headquarters thinks this offer should reduce the combat effectiveness of the Communist air force - in the future a MIG flight leader should be even more concerned lest his own flight shoot him down and escape. He will tend to worry about the other pilots in his flight, and they may distrust each other. Under such circumstances the flight will find it difficult to fight ably and efficiently - Squadron and Wing Commanders may find it necessary to ground able pilots whose complete devotion to Communism may be in question, and they may find it necessary to ration fuel.

General Clark's message ended with this statement: "The free world awaits your arrival."

The Far East Command announcement says that on the ground the enemy has been sending out patrols to watch over other patrols, to keep individuals from surrendering to the forces of the United Nations. Fire fights have been observed between enemy patrols and their satellite security patrols. Apparently it is believed that something of the same sort can be achieved through this offer to Communist fliers. - fifty thousand dollars for each plane they bring in, plus an added fifty thousand for the first one. This offer is designed to damage the morale of Communist fighter pilots, and to get us a MIG or two in flyable condition, for technical study.

This is an unorthodox and imaginative application of psychological warfare which is not likely to have any effect on the course of the war. We shall have to wait to see whether any MIGs come in; if they do the price offered will not be exorbitant. This reporter can well imagine that in the course of the coming weeks the price offered may go up. It seems to be part of our materialistic philosophy that both allies and enemies can be bought. It would be a simple thing to raise the bidding price by adding an automobile with wire wheels to be waiting on the landing strip, plus television sets, refrigerators, plenty of nylons and an attractive welcoming committee drawn from Hollywood and New York. This could be built into quite a jackpot for the first MIG pilot into Kimpo. Of course, if none comes, we may look rather silly. Nevertheless, it is possible that this move may produce a degree of caution and mutual suspicion amongst enemy pilots. It seems that this is one of those things that may be a good idea if it works. The offer was obviously given careful consideration by our psychological warriors and by the Military Establishment before General Clark attached his name to it. Questions may be raised as to the timing of this maneuver, when delicate negotiations are now underway at Panmunjom; but American and Communist pilots are still trying to shoot each other out of the sky over Korea, and what we have done is to offer to buy some of them, plus Mig, at fifty thousand dollars a head, with an added bonus of fifty thousand dollars for the first man in. Like every other maneuver in war, this one has its risks. If it works we may get a MIG or two and somebody will get a promotion; if it doesn't, we might better have offered merely freedom from political tyranny to those enemy pilots with an appetite to desert.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There may be those who feel that we are wrong in setting up a cash reward for the safe delivery of a Mig. But those who conceived the idea doubtless feel as John Ray did when he said: "The worth of a thing is best known by the want." As for the enemy, Thoreau put it nicely: "The cost of a thing is the amount of life which is required to be exchanged for it, immediately or in the long run."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, April 28, 1953

This is the news:

Thirty-five Americans recently released by the Communists in Korea, arrived in Honolulu today. This was the first leg of their trip home. They'll rest for about 24 hours and then continue on to California.

At PANMUNJOM [redacted] tonight, allied and enemy negotiators make another attempt to reach agreement on what to do with Communists in our hands, who refuse to return home. At the last session, allied negotiators warned the enemy that he must alter his prisoner exchange plan or we might again walk out of the conference. General Harrison, our chief negotiator, told the Communists: "We do not intend to become involved in protracted and useless arguments.. we mean what we say." The Communist radio at Peiping sayd the Chinese are waiting for "constructive views" from US. [redacted].

The Korean battlefields were comparatively quiet today.. only a few patrols were out. And bad weather grounded most of our planes, although navy [redacted] planes from the Valley Forge and the Princeton struck at enemy supply dumps.

In Indo-China, Communist-led guerrillas continued to move towards the Laos capital.

Adlai Stevenson..in Burma today..told reporters he believes Viet Nam troops will be able to take over the main responsibility for defending Indo-China within a year. He called the building-up of a Viet Nam army a "very encouraging step."

Secretary of State Dulles told a House committee today that he believes western Europe's combat strength will increase up to 30 per cent this year. He said that at the recent North Atlantic treaty meeting in Paris plans were made for more economy and greater firmness in NATO.

The State Department today replied to Moscow's latest suggestion -- a meeting of the Big Four plus Communist China. I'd like to review the reaction to this in a few minutes.

The Senate today agreed to vote a week from today on the controversial bill to give the states ownership of the submerged coastal lands. The agreement came AFTER the Senate MAD prepared to continue the debate through the night. (its been going on for 20 days) Now, the Senate will continue to debate the bill until next Tuesday in its normal six-hour sessions.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio charged today that Undersecretary of State Smith made "a deliberate misstatment" on Bricker's proposed constitutional amendment to limit the treaty-making powers of the President. Yesterday, General Smith told the United States Chamber of Commerce that the Bricker proposal was an attempt to tie the President's hands in international relations. Today, speaking to the same group, Bricker said he believes General Smith doesn't know what's he talking about. And the Senator added: "I don't intend to have any appointive officer of the State Department tell me what I'm going to do."

Commerce Secretary Weeks told the same convention that there will be "no sudden nose-dive in defense production"..and there's no reason to fear a depression when and if peace comes. He said: "The administration would not sit and twirl its thumbs if, at some far-off date, it should be confronted by a sizeable economic emergency."

The President was told today that government career men should not be "removed from their jobs, just to make room for political appointees." An emergency committee on natural resources, ..headed by Ira Gabrielson... told Mr. Eisenhower that it was shocked "to see the growing number of dismissals of career employes." The committee members quoted the President as saying he is "very much in favor of strengthening the career service."

The Senate today confirmed Thomas J. Herbert, former governor of Ohio, and Harry P. Cain, former senator from Washington state, to be members of the Subversive Activities Control Board.

And a Senate committee heard Thad Mason of New Jersey testify that he was formerly a Communist spy.. and stole some secret plans for a military deisel engine during World War Two. Mason said he worked for the General Motors plant in Cleveland..took files..smuggled them to another spy who worked as a cook. He says the plans were then photographed in the basement of the plant cafeteria and then returned to their proper place. Mason says he learned later than the plans were for only a part of the engine..although he believed he had stolen the plans for the whole engine. He says he became disillusioned with Communism during a visit to Poland in 1950.

The C.I.O. steel workers wage policy committee has decided to seek "a general wage increase" for its million members. And Benjamin Fairless, President of the United States Steel Corporation, says he thinks any industry-wide wage increase now would not be justified.

In Cairo, a high Egyptian government official says Egypt is firm in her demand that the British withdraw their troops unconditionally from the Suez Canal Zone. The British are now engaged in discussing the problem with the Egyptians.

Edward R. Murrow: April 28, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The Russians continue to insist that there should be a peace conference before there is any peace. Mr. Molotov, in a wholly unofficial fashion, has proposed that there should be a conference of the Big Five nations, that is the United States, Britain, Russia, France and Communist China. He sent this message to the Paris meeting of a Communist organisation called "Congress of the Peoples in Defense of Peace". Mr. Molotov is convinced, so he says, that his government sees no difficulties or unsolved questions which could not be decided by agreement between these five countries. The Chinese Communist Foreign Minister agrees with him. Our State Department regards such a meeting as "unnecessary" feels that we should not let "the discussion of peace settlements degenerate into a mere propaganda battle." The State Department is still waiting for the Russians to act rather than talk.

The American, British and French Governments are now engaged in a series of consultations, trying to find some formula acceptable to all three for dealing with the Soviet initiative regarding peace talks. The Western Powers are not by any means in complete agreement. The British and the French are disposed to put primary emphasis upon a peace treaty with Austria, and some sort of agreement about controlled disarmament. Our government believes that we must first stop the shooting wars in Korea and Indo-China, before attempting to deal with other points of tension. We are insisting upon taking first things first, stop the hot wars, and then talk about settling such matters as Austria and Germany. Our timetable calls first of all for the shooting to stop, then to talk about other matters, and finally to talk about effective disarmament. What is happening right now is that the Western Powers are trying to come to grips with the problem of how to handle jointly, with a united front, the Soviet move ostensibly aimed at peace.

This attempt to hammer out a joint policy, and a list of priorities, is going on very quietly, but the Western Powers will have no united policy until it is settled.

Our plan to stop shooting before we start talking, appears to be gaining ground, and the differences between the two sides at Panmunjom are, for the first time in these negotiations, not so great as to prevent agreement on a cease-fire. If there exists any real desire, by both sides, to stop the shooting in Korea, and move on to consider bigger and more difficult problems, that can now be done without either side making more than minor compromises. One thing is clear, and that is that if we can't stop shooting, it is ridiculous to start talking about peace.

So far as we know, no Communist pilot has yet landed, complete with aircraft, to claim that hundred thousand dollar reward we have offered. Two reasons were advanced in support of this proposal; the first was that it would damage the morale of enemy flyers, and create mutual suspicion. No one can tell how effective this will be. The second reason advanced, was that we would like to have a modern, Russian-built aircraft, in order to examine it in detail. The MIG 15 is an excellent fighter. It is the opinion of many of our boys who have fought them, that it's a better aircraft, particularly at high altitudes, than anything we now have operational in Korea. It would be useful to have one to test and experiment with. We rate it as worth a hundred thousand dollars. This raises the interesting question, in this reporter's mind, as to the relative value of men and machines. We ransomed the four crew members of a C-47, forced down in Hungary, for a hundred and twenty-three thousand, six hundred and five dollars and fifteen cents. As part of the deal to release Robert Voegeler, an American citizen in jail in Budapest, we agreed that the Hungarians could re-open their consulates in New York and Cleveland; we lifted the ban on travel by American citizens in Hungary; and we returned about seventy million dollars' worth of Hungarian property seized by the Nazis.

If we are in the business of ransoming men and bribing the enemy to deliver machines, then perhaps there should be some market quotation regarding the relative values of men and machines. I do not pretend to know what this ratio should be, but it presents us with a nice problem. For example, an A.P. correspondent, Bill Oatis, has been in jail in Prague for more than two years without trial. The State Department has no doubt been diligent in its efforts to secure his release, but he's still there. We offer a hundred thousand dollars for a MIG 15 plus pilot, (presumably because a pilot is required to land the thing) # Is that MIG worth more or less than Bill Oatis? Since we have ransomed others, should we not make a bid for him? And if we did, is he worth as much as one flying machine, or is he worth more, or less?

To recognise a question is not to answer it, but this situation confronts us with one which somehow will measure, in part at least, the market value we place upon a machine as compared to a man. This reporter, knowing rather more of men than machines, is obviously prejudiced. But if we bid, as we have, a hundred thousand dollars for a MIG 15, what do we offer for Bill Oatis?

We are now on the record as having offered a hundred thousand dollars for a Mig plane, but have yet to go on the record with any offer for correspondent William Oatis. La Rochefoucauld once said: "The greatest gift is the power to estimate correctly the value of things." But perhaps Moliere was right when he concluded: "Things are only worth what one makes them worth."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday April 29, 1953

This is the news:

General Harrison, our chief negotiator at Panmunjom, says some progress has been made at the truce talks. The Communists are not insisting on the time they want prisoners, who refuse to go home, to be held under a neutral nation's supervision. And the Communists, who turned down Switzerland as the proposed neutral nation, now say they will name an Asian nation, believed to be India. A High allied source in Tokyo suggests we may be able to work out a plan whereby the 35-thousand North Koreans--who refuse to go home--would remain in Korea under the supervision of a neutral nation. The 15-thousand Chinese who have turned down repatriation could be sent to the neutral nation. The Communist radio in Peiping says the United Nations should "strive for peace by concrete deeds"..that we should be "willing to compromise"..

There was little fighting in Korea today..possibly because both sides are waiting for some results from the truce talks. But the Pentagon reports we suffered another 623 casualties last week. Of these: 105 were killed..550 wounded. Today's report takes note of the prisoners who have been returned to us at Freedom Village.

The last men returned told reporters in Tokyo more stories about their hardships. Private Tully Cox of Alabama says he saw Chinese troops shooting captured allied soldiers. Corporal Preston of California says some Americans became mentally sick..went beserk..because of incessant Communist propaganda..broadcast in prison camps through the day. He says the men at his camp were forced to stand in the sun for long periods listening to enemy propaganda.

Thirty-five of the first Americans released are now back in this country. And the Air Force at Travis base in California says 26 are being sent home on 30-day leave. Six others will be flown to hospitals near their homes for immediate treatment. Three need special treatment at special hospitals .

From Hawaii comes word that one of the released Americans has told army authorities that 50 of our men, listed as missing or dead, are [redacted] alive in prison camps. The Army confirms this.. but refuses to release any names..fearing reprisals against the men in the prison camps. But the returned prisoner is reported to have memorized the names and addresses of all 50 men. Presumably the army will notify their next of kin.

2A

In Indo-China today, enemy troops carried out a surprise raid on [redacted] a native military training camp.. captured 350 Viet Min recruits. The French say the enemy has made new gains in Laos.. the second in as many days.

The [redacted] French in Paris say they may take the Laos invasion to the United Nations..the British are "seriously concerned".. and Secretary of State Dulles told a Senate committee the invasion of Laos has "created a serious new problem which disturbs all peace-loving peoples." Mr. Dulles says the problem of diverting additional equipment and material to Indo-China is getting serious State and Defense department considertaion. The Secretary will make another foreign policy address over many of these stations at 10;45 eastern time tonight.

On Formosa, Major General Chase, says Nationalist China's military forces are now so strong that, with the support of our 7th fleet, he has no fear of a Communist invasion. We now have more than 700 military men on Formosa as advisers.

The White House announced today that the President will make a "major announcement" at his news conference tomorrow. He will disclose the new Administration's plans for defense spending. ~~The news conference will come in the afternoon. After the President has completed conferences with Republican congressional leaders and the National Security Council, the government's top policy-making unit for the hot and cold war.~~

The White House also says that Mr. Eisenhower has tentatively agreed to make five speeches away from Washington in June. He'll speak in Minneapolis, AT A DAM NEAR Bismarck ~~and Minot~~, North Dakota, Rapid City, South Dakota, and at the commencement exercises of Dartmouth College, He'll also dedicate the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial at Oyster Bay, Long Island.

In the Senate's debate on tidelands, Democratic Senator MONRONEY of Oklahoma proposed that state ownership of submerged lands be limited to three miles off shore...that the federal government lease the rest of the continental shelf and devote the revenue to cutting the national debt. Senator Taft said this is "a half-baked proposition". He said that within two weeks he'll propose "a comprehensive way" to deal with the outer belt of undersea land.

John Carter Vincent, a foreign service officer for 29 years, returned to this country today to enter private life. Secretary of State Dulles recently permitted him to resign after rejecting Loyalty Board doubts about Vincent's loyalty. Vincent suggests that the Eisenhower Administration re-study the idea that we 'lost China." He says this is a phoney idea peddled by the China Lobby. He claims it was "the sheer and protracted stupidity" of the Chinese Nationalist government that lost China.. that nothing short of the establishment of an American military protectorate could have saved China. And Vincent says this would have been a much greater and more complex problem than our effort to save South Korea.

Senator McCarthy's committee today heard from Theodore Kaghan, the acting head of our public affairs divisions in Germany. Kaghan testified that he has never been a Communist..that he has been fighting Communism vigorously for the last ten years. He acknowledged that from 1935 to 1940, he lived with a room-mate who he now assumes was a Communist.. he attended some meetings with persons he now assumes were Communists..but they were never identified as such. Kaghan says the recent European trip of Mc Carthy's investigators..Roy Cohen and David Schine..provided material for stories in the German press, which hurt American prestige. He said the behavior of the two men "cast reflections on both the Senate and the United States." Democratic Senator McClelland of Arkansas says he doubts the wisdom the two investigators displayed, by holding news conferences in Europe.

The London Times said today that Senator McCarthy has damaged America's interests abroad to the "extent that it has become a direct concern of America's allies."

John W. Ford, State Department security officer, told a House committee today that at least 43-hundred department employes, have not been investigated, or not been adequately investigated.

Attorney General Brownell says he is going to add the names of 62 organizations to the 192 previously designated as subversive. The 62 new groups will be given a hearing if they request it.

Interior Secrtary McKay told the United States Chamber of Commerce: ~~that as a businessman, and a member of a business team,~~ "We're here in the saddle as an Administration representing business and industry." He added; "We businessmen are on trial right now. If we do a good job we'll be retained; if not, we will not be retained." He said businessmen must be very careful "to ask only your fair share of the profits of business."

Edward R. Murrow: April 29, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

A great many people seem to be fascinated by the phrase "The first hundred days". Much prose has been spilled analysing and drawing conclusions from the first hundred days of the Eisenhower administration. In this reporter's opinion there isn't yet enough evidence to form any reasoned judgment as to where this administration is going, because it hasn't yet been to enough places. Conclusions reached now could only be compared to the judgment that a baby who takes his first step is going to turn out to be a great hurdler, or alternatively that he'll never be able to get off the mark. Put Tonight two Democratic spokesmen are summarizing the first hundred days, Senator Herbert Lehman of New York and Thomas K. Finletter, former Secretary of the Air Force. Both men are aiming at [redacted] the Republican record. According to Senator Lehman we have convinced our own people that this great democracy of ours is honeycombed with traitors, spies, subversives and sexual deviates. Our democracy is portrayed as so weak a system that it must devote all its internal energies to investigation, recrimination and denunciation. The New York Senator says the Bill of Rights is being abridged by indirection, innuendo, smear and attack. He gives credit for this to Senators MacCarthy and Jenner, and others of their ilk.

Mr. Finletter says, "An evil force is loose in the land. Any Party which for Party unity or fancied political advantage fails to take a stand on this issue is misjudging the American people." He says, "We are told that we must wait; that the Republicans will choose the right moment, and then strike firmly at the evil. But the right moment has been with us for some time."

Yesterday, American officials in Berlin released a small bit of information. A few months - a few years ago - most of us would have regarded it as another indication of totalitarian suppression, an effort at thought-control. The information was this: libraries in the Soviet zone of Germany have been purged of all books containing what is called "pacifist tendencies which could lower readiness for defense". Among the books already purged are Remarque's "All Quiet on the Western Front", and Dos Passos' "Three Soldiers". All cosmopolitan or opportunistic books have been ordered removed. We don't know whether these books will be burned. The Russians are doing, in their occupation zone, what we have done in our information libraries in both occupied and allied countries. The sense of superiority in freedom which we had when the Nazis were burning books can scarcely sustain us now, for we too have caused casualties on the shelves of libraries that we operate. This sombre parallel recalls to this reporter's mind a little known and seldom quoted statement by Adolf Hitler before he came to power in Germany. He said, in substance, that the great strength of the totalitarian state was that it would force those who feared it to imitate it. # Historically it is possible for a people to lose their freedom while preparing to defend it. It is suggested here that we have lost a small but yet important piece of ground, when we can no longer view the banning of books by the Communists in Germany with either contempt or detached and superior amusement; and the reason we cannot do it is because we have ourselves engaged in similar practises in the same country. # It is true on both sides of the Iron Curtain that he who limits your right to read limits also your right to be informed, to conclude and to be free.

Throughout all of history, men and nations have searched for an effective means of "thought control." But more than 4-hundred years ago, the Dutch scholar Erasmus remarked:" By burning Luther's books, you may rid your bookshelves of him, but you will not rid men's minds of him." This still holds true, as does Milton's observation that:"He who destroys a good book, kills reason itself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday, April 30, 1953

This is the news:

The President proposes to cut the budget, by eight and a half billion dollars. He told White House reporters today, he is going to ask Congress to appropriate 8 and a half billion less, than former President Truman requested, for the fiscal year that begins on July first. But Mr. Eisenhower sees no possibility, at this time, of balancing the budget. He refused to speculate on the possibility of a tax cut. The President made his announcement in a prepared statement, part of which we recorded for you:

(runs 5;25 ending.. which we have always and will always cherish above all other arts.)

After the President recorded this statement, he answered questions. But he prefered not to say, at this time, what governmental functions or projects, will be reduced or eliminated. He offered no details on the precise cuts to be made, in the defense and foreign aid programs. And while he spoke of an eight and a half billion dollar reduction in appropriations, he refused to confirm, or deny, Congressional speculation, that the federal government's spending, would be cut by almost four and a half billion dollars in the fiscal year. Appropriations are usually spent over a period of years. Government spending.. together with income, determines whether we finish the year in the red.. or black.

Two Democrats offered their views on the plan to reduce our defense spending. Senator Symington of Missouri says he has not seen any program to justify cutting down or stretching out the defense program. He says: "So long as survival of the country is endangered, no one at any level has the right to place solvency above security." And Senator Fulbright of Arkansas thinks the Administration "wants to make a showing now and then come back in January, when the heat is off, and ask for more money."

The President's statement on our military strength came after he sent Congress his plan to get more "logic in the conduct of our military affairs." He proposes to overhaul the Defense Department to achieve three ends: clear and unchallenged civilian responsibility... the best possible defense at minimum cost.. and the best possible plans to guide us to sound action in case of war. The President wants an additional six civilian assistant secretaries in the department. (It now has three such secretaries.) He wants the secretary of defense.. Charles Wilson.. to have the power to name the commanders for the military theaters.. a job now done by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. And Mr. Eisenhower would relieve the Joint Chiefs of "time-consuming details, which are of minor importance." He feels the Chiefs are overworked. The presidential plan would also abolish a number of boards:.. munitions... research and development... the defense supply management agency... the office of director of installations. These duties would be taken over by the new assistant secretaries. Reporters at the White House asked Mr. Eisenhower if this plan means he'll bring in a new team in the Joint Chiefs. He said that's a question for Defense Secretary Wilson. Senator Taft, who was among Congressional leaders who conferred with the President earlier, said he questioned the confidence that could be placed in the judgment of the [redacted] chiefs of staff on military spending. He wants a new [redacted] appraisal by experts with a new approach. The President made no comment on this suggestion.

Today, the President signed a bill extending rent controls on five and a half million housing units in 32 states. The controls were to end at midnight. (Now, they'll continue until the end of July.)

Secretary of State Dulles today told a Senate committee that we cannot and should not insist on an end to the fighting in Indo-China as a condition for peace in Korea. And again he said the situation in Indo-China is dangerous and serious.

Communist-led guerrillas have now over-run the last French outpost protecting the capital city of Laos. They have an arc around the city..12 miles away at one point.

There was a third day of comparative quiet on the Korean front. Our Sabrejets destroyed three enemy Migs and damaged two others.

At Panmunjom..where the truce talks will be continued tonight.. we told the enemy that there's no point in discussing what to do about prisoners who refuse to go home...unless both sides agree on what neutral nation will supervise these prisoners. General Harrison, our chief negotiator, told the Communists we don't like the idea of naming an Asian nation as the neutral--as proposed by the enemy. We feel all Asian nations are too close to Communist countries... might be subjected to military, economic or political influence. The State Department says this is not to be interpreted as rejecting an Asian country as a neutral nation.

At the talks General Harrison also suggested.. sarcastically.. that we might follow an enemy practise and release in South Korea the 32-thousand North Korean prisoners who refuse to go home. Harrison said the Communists claim they have released some 50-thousand South Korean prisoners. (and forced them to join the Communist army.)

Two planes left Tokyo today with 63 more liberated prisoners--bound for home. Some of those who arrived in California yesterday ~~today~~ NOW HAVE returned to the homes of their ~~[illegible]~~ families.

The Senate today beat down two attempts to amend the Administration bill to give the states title to oil-bearing submerged lands off their coasts.

The House Appropriations Committee voted to reduce State Department appropriations by 32 per cent of what the Truman administration requested. The committee voted no funds for education and information services, such as the Voice of America.

A federal judge sentenced E. Merl Young to serve from four months to two years in prison for lying to Senators in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation investigation.

And Senator Tobey called Joseph P. Ryan, president of the A. F. of L. longshoremen, "un-American all-through." Ryan testified that his union will tell the [redacted] Federation next month that it has made "substantial progress" in kicking criminals out of union jobs. Committee counsel said that 60 per cent of the organizers in the New York area have criminal records. Ryan said: "Its not my business to drop everybody that had a criminal record when young."

The President has proposed a reorganization of the Defense Department. He is doubtless well aware of what Machiavelli once said:"There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct or more uncertain in its success than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of things." But then, Bruce Barton once observed:"When you're through changing, you're through."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

WA GA NX

WA

UPWA19B

ADD WITH BUDGET EISENHOWER TEXT WASHINGTON X X X CONTINUOUS IMPROV X X X X IMPROVEMENT.

"I HAVE ALWAYS FIRMLY BELIEVED THAT THERE IS A GREAT LOGIC IN THE CONDUCT OF MILITARY AFFAIRS. THERE IS AN EQUALLY GREAT LOGIC IN 1:00 ECONOMIC AFFAIRS. IF THESE TWO LOGICAL DISCIPLINES CAN BE WEDDED, IT IS THEN POSSIBLE TO CREATE A SITUATION OF MAXIMUM MILITARY STRENGTH WITHIN ECONOMIC CAPACITIES.

"IF, ON THE OTHER HAND, THESE TWO ARE ALLOWED TO PROCEED IN DISREGARD ONE FOR THE OTHER, YOU THEN CREATE A SITUATION EITHER OF DOUBTFUL MILITARY STRENGTH, OR OF SUCH PRECARIOUS ECONOMIC STRENGTH THAT YOUR MILITARY POSITION IS IN CONSTANT JEOPARDY.

"IT HAS BEEN THE PURPOSE OF THIS ADMINISTRATION EVER SINCE IT TOOK 1:30 OFFICE, FINDING ITSELF CONFRONTED WITH A CRAZY QUILT OF PROMISES, COMMITMENTS, AND CONTRACTS, TO BRING AMERICAN MILITARY LOGIC AND AMERICAN ECONOMIC LOGIC INTO JOINT STRONG HARNESS.

"NO MORE GLARING ILLUSTRATION OF THE LACK OF BALANCE BETWEEN THE MILITARY LOGIC AND THE ECONOMIC LOGIC COULD POSSIBLY BE FOUND THAN THE SITUATION THAT EXISTED WHEN WE TOOK OFFICE. ON THE ONE HAND,
2:00 WE FOUND OUR ALLIES DEPLORING OUR UNFULFILLED DEFENSE PROMISES. ON THE OTHER HAND, WE FOUND THERE WAS A TOTAL CARRY-OVER OF $81-BILLIONS IN APPROPRIATED FUNDS, LARGELY COMMITTED, FOR WHICH CASH MUST BE PROVIDED FROM REVENUES IN FUTURE FISCAL YEARS, OVER AND ABOVE THE NORMAL ANNUAL COST OF GOVERNMENT. IT'S JUST AS IF THE LATE ADMINISTRATION HAD GONE TO THE STORE AND ORDERED $1 BILLIONS OF GOODS, WHICH WE'VE GOT TO PAY FOR AS THEY'RE DELIVERED, IN ADDITION TO PAYING 2:30 THE REGULAR HOUSEHOLD RUNNING EXPENSES.

"THE FISCAL SITUATION REPRESENTED BY THESE TWO EXTREMES ABSOLUTELY HAS TO BE BROUGHT INTO SOME KIND OF REALISTIC FOCUS, AND THE ONLY WAY TO DO IT IS TO HAVE A COMPLETELY NEW, FRESH LOOK WITHOUT THE OLD MISLEADING LABELS.

"AS YOU KNOW, OVER THE PAST YEARS I HAVE BEEN INVOLVED IN THE EUROPEAN END OF DEFENSE, AND THEREFORE I THINK I KNOW ALL ABOUT PAPER DIVISIONS AND CARDBOARD WINGS. FOR THE LAST THREE MONTHS, I HAVE 3:00 BEEN HEAVILY INVOLVED IN THE AMERICAN END OF DEFENSE, AND DAY AFTER DAY HAVE HAD TO STRUGGLE WITH THE BASIC EQUATION THAT LINKS THE MILITARY SAFETY OF THIS COUNTRY AND OF THE FREE WORLD WITH THE ABILITY OF THE WORLD TO PAY ITS BILLS AND EARN A LIVING.

"THIS MORNING I TOLD THE LEGISLATIVE LEADERS THAT ALREADY WE CAN SEE OUR WAY CLEAR TO ASK THE CONGRESS TO APPROPRIATE AT LEAST $8 1/2-BILLION LESS NEW MONEY FOR FISCAL YEAR 1954 THAN HAD BEEN 3:30 ASKED FOR BY THE PREVIOUS ADMINISTRATION. THIS IS A PRELIMINARY FIGURE BASED ON THREE MONTHS' HARD WORK. THE GREAT BULK OF IT, OF COURSE, RELATES TO SECURITY PROGRAMS. MORE DEFINITE FIGURES WILL BECOME AVAILABLE AS APPROPRIATION REQUESTS ARE PRESENTED TO THE CONGRESS DURING THE NEXT FEW WEEKS.

YOU WILL NOTE THAT I HAVE BEEN TALKING ABOUT THE NEW APPROPRATIONS FOR FISCAL 1954. ACTUAL CASH SAVINGS FOR 1954 WILL BE DETERMINED

ONLY AS CONGRESS ACTS ON THE APPROPRATION REQUESTS.

4:00 THESE SAVINGS WILL NOT REDUCE THE EFFECTIVE MILITARY STRENGTH WE WILL DELIVER TO OURSELVES AND OUR ALLIES DURING FISCAL 1954. DELIVERIES ACTUALLY WILL BE SPEEDED UP THROUGH THE REDUCTION OF LEAD TIME, AND CONCENTRATION ON PRODUCING THOSE ITEMS WHICH MAKE THE MOST MILITARY SENSE FOR THE IMMEDIATE FUTURE.

ESTABLISHING THE MOST EFFECTIVE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN DEFENSE
4:30 REQUIREMENTS AND ECONOMIC CAPABILITY IN THESE DAYS IS PROBABLY THE MOST COMPLEX AND RAMIFIED PROBLEM TO BE FACED BY BY ANY GOVERNMENT. PRACTICALLY EVERYONE CONCERNED WITH THE PROBLEM CAN WITH SOME JUSTIFICATION BE A SPECIAL PLEADER.

BUT I AM SURE THAT WHAT THE OVERWHELMING MAJORITY OF AMERICANS WANT TO BELIEVE IS THAT THEIR GOVERNMENT IS WORKING WITH DILIGENCE AND INTELLIGENCE TO BRING ABOUT AS RAPIDLY AS POSSIBLE A CONDITION OF TRUE MILITARY STRENGTH. I ALSO BELIEVE THAT THE OVERWHELMING MAJORITY OF THE PEOPLE OF THE FREE WORLD APPRECIATE THE FACT
5:00 THAT A HEALTHY AMERICAN ECONOMY AND A FUNCTIONING ECONOMY IN THEIR OWN HOME COUNTRY ARE INSEPARABLE FROM TRUE DEFENSE.

FURTHERMORE, I HAVE A DEEP CONVICTION THAT ALL THESE PEOPLE POSSESS A FUNDAMENTAL COMMON SENSE WHICH PERMITS THEM TO GRASP THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A QUIET, STEADY, LONG-TERM IMPORVEMENT IN THEIR DEFENSE POSITION AND THE TEMPESTS STIRRED UP BY PUBLIC ARGUMENTS OVER THE ARTIFICIAL ARITHMETIC WHICH IS SO EASY TO PRODUCE IN THE DEFENSE FIELD.

5:30 "THE PROGRAM WE ARE PRESENTING IS A LONG-TERM PROGRAM, CALLING FOR A STEADY AND ADEQUATE FLOW OF MEN AND MATERIALS TO PRESENT A POSITION OF GENUINE STRENGTH TO ANY WOULD-BE AGGRESSOR.

"THE BASIC ELEMENTS OF OUR STRATEGID PROBLEM HAVE NOT MATERIALLY CHANGED IN RECENT YEARS, AND CERTAINLY NOT IN RECENT DAYS. THE AREAS AND PEOPLES VITAL TO OUR NATION'S WELFARE ARE THE SAME AS THEY HAVE BEEN FOR A LONG TIME. WHAT WE ARE DOING IS TO ADOPT A NEW POLICY FOR THE SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM.

6:00 /THIS CHANGE IN POLICY IS RADICAL AND CANNOT BE EFFECTED OVERNIGHT. THERE EXISTS WHAT IS, IN EFFECT, A STRAIGHT JACKET, COMPRISING PRIOR AUTHORIZATIONS, APPROPRIATIONS, AND CONTRACTS.

" THE ESSENCE OF THE CHANGE IS THIS. WE REJECT THE IDEA THAT WE MUST BUILD UP TO A MAXIMUM ATTAINABLE STRENGTH FOR SOME SPECIFIC DATE THEORETICALLY FIXED FOR A SPECIFIED TIME IN THE FUTURE. DEFENSE
6:30 IS NOT A MATTER OF MAXIMUM STRENGTH FOR A SINGLE DATE. IT IS A MATTER OF ADEQUATE PROTECTION TO BE PROJECTED AS FAR INTO THE FUTURE AS THE ACTIONS AND APPARENT PURPOSES OF OTHERS MAY COMPEL US.

"IT IS A POLICY THAT CAN IF NECESSARY BE LIVED WITH OVER A PERIOD OF YEARS.

"FINALLY, I WOULD LIKE TO REMIND YOU OF WHAT I HAVE SAID MANY TIMES BEFORE, AND WILL PROBABLY HAVE TO SAY MANY TIMES AGAIN.

"SECURITY BASED UPON HEAVY ARMAMENTS IS A WAY OF LIFE THAT HAS 7:00 BEEN FORCED UPON US AND UPON OUR ALLIES. WE DON'T LIKE IT; IN FACT, WE HATE IT. BUT SO LONG AS SUCH AN UNMISTAKABLE, SELF-CONFIRMED THREAT TO OUR FREEDOM EXISTS, WE WILL CARRY THESE BURDENS WITH DEDICATION AND DETERMINATION.

"OUR HOPE AND OUR PRAYER IS THAT THIS DEDICATION AND DETERMINATION WILL BRING ABOUT A WORLD CONDITION WHEN WE CAN ONCE AGAIN RETURN TO THE ARTS OF PEACE, WHICH WE HAVE ALWAYS AND WILL ALWAYS CHERISH ABOVE ALL OTHER ARTS.
7:25 ABOVE ALL OTHER ARTS."

(END TEXT)

KB&JE501P

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 30, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President proposes to cut the budget by eight and a half billion dollars. He told White House reporters today he is going to ask Congress to appropriate 8 and a half billion less than former President Truman requested for the fiscal year that begins on July first. But Mr. Eisenhower sees no possibility, at this time, of balancing the budget. He refused to speculate on the possibility of a tax cut. The President made his announcement in a prepared statement part of which we recorded for you:

EISENHOWER: I have always firmly believed that there is a great logic in the conduct of military affairs. There is an equally great logic in economic affairs. If these two logical disciplines can be wedded, it is then possible to create a situation of maximum military strength within economic capacities.

If, on the other hand, these two are allowed to proceed in disregard one for the other, you then create a situation either of doubtful military strength, or of such precarious economic strength that your military position is in constant jeopardy.

It has been the purpose of this administration ever since it took office, finding itself confronted with a crazy quilt of promises, commitments, and contracts, to bring American military logic and American economic logic into joing strong harness.

No more glaring illustration of the lack of balance between the military logic and the economic logic could possibly be found than the situation that existed when we took office. On the one hand, we found our allies deploring our unfulfilled defense promises. On the other hand, we found there was a total carry-over of $81-billions in appropriated funds, largely committed, for which cash must be provided from revenues in future fiscal years, over and a bove the normal annual cost of government. It's just as if the late administration had gone to the store and ordered 81 billions of goods, which we've got to pay for as they're delivered, in addition to paying the regular household running expenses.

This morning, I told the legislative leaders that already we can see our way clear to ask the Congress to appropriate at least 8½ billion less new money for fiscal year 1954 than had been asked for by the previous administration. This is a preliminary figure based on three months' hard work.

These savings will not reduce the effective military strength we will deliver to ourselves and our allies during fiscal 1954. Deliveries actually will be speeded up through the reduction of lead time, and concentration on producing those items which make the most military sense for the immediate future.

Establishing the most effective relationship between defense requirements and economic capability in these days is probably the most complex and ramified problem to be faced by any government. Practically everyone concerned with the problem can with some justification be a special pleader.

But I am sure that what the overwhelming majority of Americans want to believe is that their government is working with diligence and intelligence to bring about as rapidly as possible a condition of true military strength. I also believe that the overwhelming majority of the people of the free world appreciate the fact that a healthy American economy and a functioning economy in their own home country are inseparable from true defense.

Furthermore, I have a deep conviction that all these people possess a fundamental common sense which permits them to grasp the difference between a quiet, steady, long-term improvement in their defense position and the tempests stirred up by public arguments over the artificial arithmetic which is so easy to produce in the defense field.

The program we are presenting is a long-term program, calling for a steady and adequate flow of men and materials to present a position of genuine strength to any would-be aggressor.

The basic elements of our strategid problem have not materially changed in recent years, and certainly not in recent days. The areas and peoples vital to our nation's welfare are the same as they have been for a long time. What we are doing is to adopt a new policy for the solution of the problem.

This change in policy is radical and cannot be effected overnight. There exists what is, in effect, a straight jacket, comprising prior authorizations, appropriations, and contract. The essence of the change is this: We reject the idea that we must build up to a maximum attainable strength for some specific date theoretically fixed for a specified time in the future. Defense is not a matter of maximum strength for a single date. It is a matter of adequate protection to be projected as far into the future as the actions and apparent purposes of others may compel us. It is a policy that can if necessary be lived over a period of years. Finally, I would like to remind you of what I have said many times before, and will probably have to say many times again. Security based upon heavy armaments is a way of life that has been forced upon us and upon our allies. We don't like it; in fact, we hate it. But so long as such an unmistakable, self-confirmed threat to our freedom exists, we will carry these burdens with dedication and determination. Our hope and our prayer is that this dedication and determination will bring about a world condition when we can once again return to the arts of peace, which we have always and will always cherish above all other arts.

MURROW: After the President recorded this statement, he answered questions. But he prefered not to say, at this time, what governmental functions or projects will be reduced or eliminated. He offered no details on the cuts to be made in the defense and foreign aid programs. And while he spoke of an eight and a half billion dollar reduction in appropriations, he refused to confirm or deny Congressional speculation that the federal government's spending would be cut by almost four and a half billion dollars in the fiscal year. Appropriations are usually spent over a period of years. Government spending, together with income, determines whether we finish the year in the red, or black.

Two Democrats offered their views on the plan to reduce our defense spending. Senator Symington of Missouri says he has not seen any program to justify cutting down or stretching out the defense program. He says: "So long as survival of the country is endangered, no one at any level has the right to place solvency above security." And Senator Fulbright of Arkansas thinks the Administration "wants to make a showing now and then come back in January, when the heat is off, and ask for more money."

The President's statement on our military strength came after he sent Congress his plan to get more "logic in the conduct of our military affairs." He proposes to overhaul the Defense Department to achieve three ends: clear and unchallenged civilian responsibility, the best possible defense at minimum cost, and the best possible plans to guide us to sound action in case of war. The President wants an additional six civilian assistant secretaries in the department. It now has three such secretaries. He wants the secretary of defense, Charles Wilson, to have the power to name the commanders for the military theaters, a job now done by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. And Mr. Eisenhower would relieve the Joint Chiefs of "time consuming details which are of minor importance." He feels the Chiefs are overworked. The presidential plan would also abolish a number of boards: munitions, research and development, the defense supply management agency, the office of director of installations. These duties would be taken over by the new assistant secretaries. Reporters at the White House asked Mr. Eisenhower if this plan means he'll bring in a new team in the Joint Chiefs. He said that's a question for Defense Secretary Wilson. Senator Taft, who was among Congressional leaders who conferred with the President earlier, said he questioned the confidence that could be placed in the judgment of the chiefs of staff on military spending. He wants a new appraisal by experts with a new approach. The President made no comment on this suggestion.

Today, the President signed a bill extending rent controls on give a half million housing units in 32 states. The controls were to end at midnight. Now, they'll continue until the end of July.

Secretary of State Dulles today told a Senate committee that we cannot and should not insist on an end to the fighting in Indo-China as a condition for peace in Korea. And again he said the situation in Indo-China is dangerous and serious.

Communist-led guerrillas have now over-run the last French outpost protecting the capital city of Laos. They have an arc around the city - 12 miles away at one point.

There was a third day of comparative quiet on the Korean front. Our Sabrejets destroyed three enemy Migs and damaged two others.

At Panmunjom, where the truce talks will be continued tonight, we told the enemy that there's no point in discussing what to do about prisoners who refuse to go home, unless both sides agree on what neutral nation will supervise these prisoners. General Harrison, our chief negotiator, told the Communists we don't like the idea of naming an Asian nation as the neutral, as proposed by the enemy. We feel all Asian nations are too close to Communist countries, might be subjected to military, economic, or political influence. The State Department says this is not to be interpreted as rejecting an Asian country as a neutral nation.

At the talks General Harrison also suggested (sarcastically) that we might follow an enemy practice and release in South Korea the 32-thousand North Korean prisoners who refuse to go home. Harrison said the Communists claim they have released some 50-thousand South Korean prisoners, and forced them to join the Communist army.

Two planes left Tokyo today with 63 more liberated prisoners bound for home. Some of those who arrived in California yesterday now have returned to the homes of their families.

The Senate today beat down two attempts to amend the Administration bill to give the states title to oil-bearing submerged lands off their coasts.

The House Appropriations Committee voted to reduce State Department appropriations by 32 per cent of what the Truman Administration requested. The committee voted no funds for education and information services, such as the Voice of America.

A federal judge sentenced E. Merl Young to serve from four months to two years in prison for lying to Senators in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation investigation.

And Senator Tobey called Joseph P. Ryan, president of the AFL Longshoremen, "un-American all through." Ryan testified that his union will tell the Federation next month that it has made "substantial progress" in kicking criminals out of union jobs. Committee counsel said that 60 percent of the organizers in the New York area have criminal records. Ryan said: "It's not my business to drop everybody that had a criminal record when young."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The President has proposed a reorganization of the Defense Department. He is doubtless well aware of what Machiavelli once said: "There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct or more uncertain in its success than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of things." But then, Bruce Barton once observed: "When you're through changing, you're through."

Good Nite and Good Luck.

Friday, May 1, 1953

This is the news:

Allied truce negotiators ~~today~~ have told the Communists, we are suspicious of their objectives, and question their sincerity. At the regular meeting of the chief delegates, the Communists again refused to name thier choice for the neutral nation, to supervise prisoners who do not want to return home. We named a second choice..Sweden..but received no answer. [The Swiss were our first choice.] Then Chief Negotiaor Harrison told the enemy: nothing can be accomplished until they name a nation.. their unwilligness "increasingly casts suspicion" on their objectives. The Communists prefer an Asian nation. We fear this might lead to pressures on any free Asian nation near the Communists. And today the Chinese radio at Peiping says that by "turning down" an Asian nation we have insulted all Asians.

At another meeting..of liason officers..Rear Admiral Daniels told the enemy that we have learned, from prisoners recently returned to us, that the enemy holds at least 375 sick and wounded allied soldiers. We want them back.. and we question enemy sincerity for not having returned them. The Communist delegate called this "wilful slander" but acknowledged that they do hold some prisoners who are too sick to travel. We said we plan to send back more enemy prisoners.. we asked the Communists to return allied soldiers.

[redacted]

Another 40 Americans recently freed from prison camps are now in Hawaii on their way home. And the Air Force says a planeload of 22 Americans has now arrived in California under great military secrecy. The Air Force designates these men as "victims of Communist propaganda."

~~to us.~~

~~Another 40 Americans recently freed from prison camps are now in Hawaii on their way home. And the army in San Francisco says a second plane with 22 men has arrived in this country. Reporters were not informed when the plane landed in Honolulu last night. The army people there says he's not allowed to tell anything.~~

Twenty-two recently released British soldiers arrived in England today..six on stretchers. They told stories quite different from those told by American prisoners who spoke with reporters. One of the British soldiers says he received Communist lectures, and believes that the war is being faught for American profit. He also acknowledged:"I was never a lover of Americans." Another prisoner protested stories about "hardships" in the prison camps.. said he received very fair treatment. A Rifleman says it wasn't propaganda the Communist gave him;"they just told us what was going on." One private said he believes the Communist charge that America has used germ warfare in Korea.. he said "most other chaps believe it,too." A trooper said his prison rations were as good as he gets in England. And one soldier said:"The authorities told me not to say anything about politics or the war. Reporters were permitted to question these men for 45 minutes.

The North Koreans say they have now turned over to Russia FOR REPATRIATION seven American civilians, seized in the early days of the war. And in Korea today, our Sabrejets attacked the enemy capital at Pyongyang.

There was no significant change in the fighting in Laos, Indo-China. American diplomats say we have assured France we will support an appeal to the United Nations, for help in resisting the Communist-led invasion.

This was May Day, and in general the Communists were quieter than they've been in years. Russia's Defense Minister Bulganin, called on the West to back up its words of peace with deeds..such as disarmament. Behind the iron curtain there were parades and speeches about "peace." Some 3-thousand Communists clashed with police in Tokyo.. but no one was hurt. Here in New York, the eleven hundred police assigned to guard against disorders ALMOST [redacted] outnumbered those who attended a May Day demonstration.

In Washington, a delegation of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish leaders commended the President for asking Congress to admit another 240-thousand refugees to this country over the next two years. And the President named Dallas S. Townsend, a New York lawyer, to be assistant attorney general in charge of the Alien Property Office.

In the Senate, Morse of Oregon said that the tidelands bill is but the first of several aimed at "raiding" national resources.

And Senator Taft says he has "great sympathy" for a proposal to exempt the building industry and other local enterprises from the Taft-Hartley labor law.

Two former government economists today refused to tell Senate investigators whether they belonged to a Soviet spy ring during the war. They are: Harry Magdoff of New York, who was once an adviser to former secretary of commerce Wallace... and Edward J. Fitzgerald, also of New York.

Republican Senator Young of North Dakota says [redacted] that Cargill, Incorporated, "broke the market in oats" last year. Two [redacted] government officials say they believe the same firm is trying to [redacted] manipulate prices now by illegal trading. The company says: it has previously denied all [redacted] charges of this kind and now repeats the denial.

The new chairman of the Republican national committee..Leonard W. Hall... announced today that he's cutting 39 persons from the committee's staff. This will reduce expenditures by 100-thousand dollars a year. He named A.D. Baumhart, Junior, of Ohio, TO BE executive director.

In Middle Georgia, 19 deaths have now been counted as the result of tornados. Officials estimate the damage at 15-million dollars, much of it to government property.

In Argentina, President Peron charged today that American news agencies are spreading lies about him.

Edward R. Murrow: May 1, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The President's plan to reorganize the Defense Department appears to be meeting with a mixed reaction in Congress. DEMOCRATIC Senator Long of Louisiana deplores the attempt to get rid of the office of Director of Installations. He thinks this office has achieved savings "running into billions of dollars." Some members of the House Armed Services Committee say they fear the plan would lead to a sort of "Prussian General Staff." Most of The proposed reorganization will become law in sixty days, unless one half of the membership of the House or the Senate vote against it.

The Defense Department is considerably more complex than any corporation, but it is possible, after considerable study, to indicate the broad outlines of the changes proposed by the President. He would strengthen, very considerably, the Secretary of Defense. He becomes, in fact, a sort of Deputy Commander-in-Chief. Presumably he would not act on matters of grand strategy without consulting the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but he could. # The Joint Chiefs, under this new plan, are relieved from considering a whole host of secondary and unimportant questions, because there is created what might be called Deputy Joint Chiefs, empowered to act within limited areas. The Joint Chiefs should be able, and are indeed directed, to place more emphasis on the scientific aspects of warfare and long-range planning. Provision is made so that civilian scientists will now have direct access to the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It is not quite clear what happens if we have another row between two Services, such as occurred between the Air Force and the Navy over strategic bombing. But it seems that the Secretary of Defense is empowered to settle such disputes.

Civilian officials in the Defense Department will hereafter be empowered to fill out efficiency reports on uniformed personnel serving under them. In general, the whole proposal tends to increase rather than weaken civilian control of the Military Establishment. These proposals support the conclusions reached by the Rockefeller Committee, and they represent a real test of strength for the President, for if he cannot carry Congress with him in an area where experience and prestige fortify his judgment, his prospects of successful leadership in other areas will be considerably diminished.

Tomorrow ten or twelve horses will go to the post for the Kentucky Derby. "Native Dancer" is the favorite - officials at Churchill Downs say the track will be fast. We are unable to speak with authority about horse races, and there is little enough room for tradition or repetition in a news broadcast. But three or four years ago, admitting that we knew more about work horses, than race horses, we repeated as a tribute to all horses, a few words written by Mark Twain on how to harness one. Mr. Twain said he was not an expert on horses, didn't speak with assurance, but could always tell which was the front end of a horse; (beyond that his art was not above the ordinary.) Mr. Twain continued his description of how to harness a horse, Continental fashion.....

"The man stands up the horses on each side of the thing that projects from the front end of the wagon, and then, throws the tangled mess of gear on top of the horses, and passes the thing that goes forward, through a ring and hauls it aft, and passes the thing through the other ring and hauls it aft, on the other side of the other horse, opposite to the first one, after crossing them and bringing the loose end back, and then buckles the other thing underneath the horse, and takes another thing and wraps it around the thing I spoke of before, and puts another thing over each horse's head, with broad flappers to it (to keep the dust out of his eyes), and puts the iron thing in his mouth, for him to grit his teeth on, uphill, and brings the ends of those things aft over his back, after buckling another one around under his neck to hold his head up, and hitching another thing on a thing that goes over his shoulders, to keep his head up when he is climbing a hill; and then takes the slack of the thing which I mentioned a while ago, and fetches it aft, and makes it fast to the thing that pulls the wagon, and hands the other thing up to the driver, to steer with. I have never buckled up a horse myself," said Twain, "but I do not think we do it that way."

The harnessing of a horse, like the reorganization of the Defense Department, should perhaps be left to those who understand it.

Once again, the Kentucky Derby is with us. And while we are not in the habit of making predictions, we can find no reason not to agree with Emerson:"Let the victory fall where it will, we are on that side." There's a line from the Old Testament that would also seem appropriate tonight: "Hast thou given the horse strength ? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder ? If not, it's probably too late now!

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FRIDAY, MAY 1, 1953

7:45 - 8:00 PM EST
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Tomorrow ten or twelve horses will go to the post for the Kentucky Derby. "Native Dancer" is the favorite - officials at Churchill Downs say the trace will be fast. We are unable to speak with authority about horse races, and there is little enough room for tradition or repetition in a news broadcast. But three or four years ago, admitting that we knew more about work horses than race horses, we repeated as a tribute to all horses, a few words written by Mark Twain on how to harness one. Mr. Twain said he was not an expert on horses, didn't speak with assurance, but could always tell which was the front end of a horse; beyond that his art was not above the ordinary. Mr. Twain continued his description of how to harness a horse, Continental fashion:

"The man stands up the horses on each side of the thing that projects from the front end of the wagon, and then, throws the tangled mess of gear on top of the horses, and passes the thing that goes forward through a ring and hauls it aft, and passes the thing through the other ring and hauls it aft, on the other side of the other horse, opposite to the first one, after crossing them and bringing the loose end back, and then buckles the other thing underneath the horse, and takes another thing and wraps it around the thing I spoke of before, and puts another thing over each horse's head with broad flappers to it (to keep the dust out of his eyes), and puts the iron thing in his mouth for him to grit his teeth on, uphill, and brings the ends of those things aft over his back, after buckling another one around under his neck to hold his head up, and hitching another thing on a thing that goes over his shoulders, to keep his head up when he is climbing a hill; and then takes the slack of the thing which I mentioned a while ago, and fetches it aft, and makes it fast to the thing that pulls the wagon, and hands the other thing up to the driver, to steer with. I have never buckled up a horse myself," said Twain, "but I do not think we do it that way."

The harnessing of a horse, like the reorganization of the Defense, Department, should perhaps be left to those who understand it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Once again, the Kentucky Derby is with us. And while we are not in the habit of making predictions, we can find no reason not to agree with Emerson: "Let the victory fall where it will, we are on that side." There's a line from the Old Testament that would also seem appropriate tonight: "Hast thou given the horse strength? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" If not, it's probably too late not."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, May 4, 1953

This is the news:

The allies have warned the Communists that "time is fast running" out at the Korean truce talks. The enemy named four Asian nations that might serve as the neutral to supervise prisoners who don't want to go home. We selected one of the four..Pakistan. And General Harrison, our chief negotiator ASKED the enemy: "Are you prepared to accept Pakistan..if not we have no further issue to discuss with you." Later, the General told reporters the Communists "didn't even acknowledge" that we had mentioned Pakistan. Harrison had a number of other warnings for the enemy: we expect a demonstration of their sincerity..continued evasion will mean they don't want to reach an agreement.. we won't go on [redacted] with any "fruitless and protracted" meetings.

In London Today, Winston Churchill told the House of Commons that all matters of principle have now been settled at Panmunjom. He thinks there should be a quick agreement on "method." But left-wing Laborite Aneurin Bevan told a meeting of 100-thousand miners: the allied negotiators at Panmunjom should be changed.. civilian statesmen should take over FROM THE MILITARY and settle the matter of who should look after prisoners.

There was little ground fighting in Korea today. But our naval planes and the Battleship New Jersey struck at enemy targets. And at the Pentagon, some American air officers..who didn't want to be named.. made it clear they are angry with General Barcus, our fifth air force commander, who has made several jet flights over enemy lines. They feel that anyone with his knowledge of vital secrets should not needlessly expose himself to danger.

In Indo-China, the Communist-led troops held up their expected attack on the capital of ~~them~~ Laos. Instead, they sent a new invasion spearhead southward toward the Thailand border.

~~Winston Churchill told the House of Commons the French have asked the British for help in Indo-China but [illegible] "British resources are limited by [illegible] obligations very widespread."~~

In Chicago, Senator Wiley, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said today he's against sending any American soldiers to Indo-China, but he would favor sending atomic bombs to the French to use there.

Defense Secretary Wilson returned from a European trip today and told reporters the period of critical military danger in West Europe is passed. And Pentagon officials told Washington reporters: even if the Korean war continues the Defense Department plans a cut of 180-thousand men in the armed forces during the fiscal year that starts July first. If the war ends, then the manpower cut may run as high as 225-thousand or 250-thousand men. This would mean a reduced draft call in the future and savings of roughly two billion 400-million dollars..

The President today welcomed the governors of 44 states and five territories to a two-day conference. He told them he and his aides want to consult them on "the over-riding question of peace and security of our country." All of the meetings are being held behind closed doors.

In the Senate today, Malone of Nevada, a Republican, proposed an amendment to the tidelands bill. He would give the states ownership of the mineral rights in the federal public domain within the state borders. The Senator said that "all states should be treated alike."

~~and Texas and Florida are permitted to establish their boundaries 10 and a half miles out into the Gulf of Mexico, then the Russians can make new claims in the Baltic.~~

Robert F. Kennedy, assistant counsel to the McCarthy committee, testified today that ships sailing under the flags of western allies made at least 445 and perhaps as many as 600 voyages to and from Communist China last year. And Kenneth R. Hansen, acting deputy director of the Mutual Security Administrator, testified that it is not this government's policy, at the present time, to discontinue "all" allied shipping to Communist China. ~~John M. Talbot, of the state department, said the trade with "red China depends on the allied ships bring out what we may get something more valuable than we brought in.~~ They Senator McCarthy suspended the hearing at this point to find out if this is the "official" State Department policy.

The Defense Department today endorsed a bill by Republican Representative Keating of New York to make wire-tapping legal in hunting down spies and saboteurs. But Charles R. Wilson, of the office of Naval Intelligence, objected to a section of the bill that requires permission from a federal judge before any wire-taps are made. Representative Keating said "there is no question that wiretapping is now widely used both by government and private investigators...(federal courts do not recognize evidence gathered this way).

~~David Cole, the former head of the federal mediation service, has told a House committee that "the outlook is not good in the industrial relations field" he sees the possibility of an increase in strikes.~~

Top leaders of the AF of L and the C.I.O. are reported to have agreed to outlaw membership raids..as a first step in a proposed merger of the two groups.

Here in New York, Bandleader Artie Shaw told a House committee he attended Communist meetings but never joined the party. He said:"I hate to admit it, but I was a dupe." Committee members agreed [redacted].

The Czechoslovak government today announced an amnesty for certain civilian and military prisoners...following the pattern established by Moscow and copied by Romania. Experts doubt that this will mean the release of Associated Press Correspondent Bill Otis who was sent to prison two years ago on spying charges.

The Pulitzer Awards Committee today honored two weekly North Carolina newspapers... the Whiteville News Reporter and the Tabor City Tribune, for their successful campaign against the Ku Klux Klan. Ernest Hemingway's "The Old man and the sea" was given the fiction award". William Inge's "Picnic" won the drama award. The history prize went to George Dangerfield author of "The Era of Good Feelings....."....biography to David J. Mays for his "Edmund Pendelton." Other awards went to: Archibald McLeish for poetry...Don Whitehead of the A.P. for his story on General Eisenhower's trip to Korea... and to Austin Wehrwein of the Milwaukee Journal for articles on Canada and Vermont Connecticut Royster of the Wall Street Journal for his editorials.

Edward R. Murrow: May 4, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The Eisenhower administration continued its battle against a group of Republicans today. It occurred before the House Ways and Means Committee. The argument was over a one-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act. Republican Representative Simpson has introduced a Bill which would curb the admission to this country of foreign made goods that would cause even the slightest injury to American businesses making the same goods. This proposal is backed by Republican Representative Reid, ~~Republican~~, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Today, Secretary of State Dulles and Treasury Secretary Humphrey appeared before the committee to argue the administration's case. The administration wants the ~~[illegible]~~ extension in order to make a thorough study of ~~[illegible]~~ tariff policy. Mr. Dulles was unusually blunt. He said: "This country cannot long exist in a world surrounded by misery." He didn't want our allies to think that we had shifted our position in the matter of foreign trade; and he added: "There is a nervousness in Europe about what this new administration will do that amounts at times almost to panic or hysteria." Mr. Dulles believes the "delicate and fragile economy" of our allies might be shattered if we now place new curbs on foreign trade on top of a reduction in foreign aid. If we raise our tariff barriers so that our friends can't sell to us, they may be pushed in the direction of more trade with the Communists. (That's exactly what the Communists have been predicting since last October.) They have contended that the free world alliance would come unstuck over the question of trade between its various members. If our allies can't sell to us they can't buy from us, and so they would increasingly buy from or barter with the Communist world.

A year's study of the Reciprocal Trade Act will not change the political and economic considerations which now cause a number of Republicans to advocate a higher tariff. But the administration wants the year to make that study, and as things are shaping now it will get it, just as it got the confirmation of Charles Bohlen as Ambassador to Moscow - because enough Democrats will vote with the administration so that its policy will prevail.

This business of tariffs is one of the most difficult confronting the present administration. If we reduce our foreign aid and at the same time make it more difficult for our allies to trade with us, then the sombre estimate made today by Mr. Dulles is probably correct. Our allies will begin to trade with the Communist world, because they must trade somewhere; they will begin to think that they cannot survive as individual members of the free world alliance; and they will begin to think of neutralism and appeasement.

The law, as it stands now, makes it possible for the President to negotiate lower tariffs on goods brought into this country in exchange for lower tariffs on goods that we want to sell abroad. The administration wants this law continued [redacted] while a study is made of the whole complex business. Representative Simpson maintains that a year's delay in giving relief to American firms suffering from foreign competition will wipe them out.

There is no question at all that certain American industries have been hard hit by the competition of foreign goods which, because of access to raw materials or cheap labor costs, can be sold in this country for less money than it costs American firms to make the same product. It may be that a method must be found under which American industries are compensated for the loss of domestic markets, or where workers can be re-trained for other jobs. The administration wants the year to examine these and other more complicated matters.

If we assume, as this administration clearly does, that there is no immediate danger of a world war, then this matter of international trade becomes the great and perhaps decisive battlefield in the cold war. We have spent many years and more billions trying to persuade and pressure our allies to reduce, or abolish their tariff barriers. If we now increase ours, if we fail to practise what we preach, not only will our integrity be questioned, not only will our allies be forced to turn elsewhere - we shall be doing exactly what the Russians have predicted we would do, using our economic leverage to pry apart the alliance of the free world which we have constructed at such great cost. [redacted]

We know the enemy's plan. The administration wants a standstill for a year while it figures out a counter-plan. To this reporter that seems a reasonable proposition, for it involves one of the most important non-military decisions in the history of the country.

The administration is obviously of the opinion that we will be playing right into Russian hands if we do not ~~continue~~ extend our Reciprocal Trade Agreements. [redacted] Arnold Bennett [redacted] once said:"A cause may be inconvenient, but it's like champagne or high shoes - one must be prepared to occassionally suffer for it." In the end, it's as John Ray concluded:"If you can not bite, never show your teeth."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 4, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The allies have warned the Communists that "time is fast running" out at the Korean truce talks. The enemy named four Asian nations that might serve as the neutral to supervise prisoners who don't want to go home. We selected one of the four, Pakistan. And General Harrison, our chief negotiator asked the enemy: "Are you prepared to accept Pakistan, if not, we have no further issue to discuss with you." Later, the General told reporters the Communists "didn't even acknowledge" that we had mentioned Pakistan. Harrison had a number of other warnings for the enemy: we expect a demonstration of their sincerity, continued evasion will mean they don't want to reach an agreement; we won't go on with any "fruitless and protracted" meetings.

In London today, Winston Churchill told the House of Commons that all matters of principle have now been settled at Panmunjom. He thinks there should be a quick agreement on "method." But left-wing Laborite Aneurin Bevan told a meeting of 100-thousand miners: the allied negotiators at Panmunjom should be changed, civilian statesmen should take over from the military and settle the matter of who should look after prisoners.

There was little ground fighting in Korea today. But our naval planes and the Battleship New Jersey struck at enemy targets. And at the Pentagon, some American air officers, who didn't want to be named, made it clear they are angry with General Barcus, our fifth air force commander who has made several jet flights over enemy lines. They feel that anyone with his knowledge of vital secrets should not needlessly expose himself to danger.

In Indo-China, the Communist-led troops held up their expected attack on the capital of Laos. Instead, they sent a new invasion spearhead southward toward the Thailand border.

In Chicago, Senator Wiley, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said today he's against sending any American soldiers to Indo-China but would favor sending atomic bombs to the French to use there.

Defense Secretary Wilson returned from a European trip today and told reporters the period of critical military danger in West Europe is passed. And Pentagon officials told Washington reporters: even if the Korean war continues the Defense Department plans a cut of 180-thousand men in the armed forces during the fiscal year that starts July first. If the war ends, then the manpower cut may run as high as 225-thousand or 250-thousand men. This would mean a reduced draft call in the future and savings of roughly two billion 400-million dollars.

The President today welcomed the governors of 44 states and five territories to a two-day conference. He told them he and his aides want to consult them on "the over-riding question of peace and security of our country." All of the meetings are being held behind closed doors.

In the Senate today, Malone of Nevada, a Republican, proposed an amendment to the tidelands bill. He would give the states ownership of the mineral rights in the federal public domain within the state borders. The Senator said that "all states should be treated alike."

Robert F. Kennedy, assistant counsel to the McCarthy committee, testified today that ships sailing under the flags of western allies made at least 445 and perhaps as many as 600 voyages to and from Communist China last year. And Kenneth R. Hansen, acting deputy director of the Mutual Security Administrator, testified that it is not this government's policy, at the present time, to discontinue "all" allied shipping to Communist China. Senator McCarthy suspended the hearing at this point to find out if this is the "official" State Department policy.

The Defense Department today endorsed a bill by Republican Representative Keating of New York to make wire-tapping legal in hunting down spies and saboteurs. But Charles R. Wilson, of the office of Naval Intelligence, objected to a section of the bill that requires permission from a federal judge before any wire-taps are made. Representative Keating said "there is no question that wire-tapping is now widely used both by government and private investigators (federal courts do not recognize evidence gathered this way.)

Top leaders of the AFL and the CIO are reported to have agreed to outlaw membership raids, as a first step in a proposed merger of the two groups.

Here in New York, Bandleader Artie Shaw told a House committee he attended Communist meetings but never joined the party. He said: "I hate to admit it, but I was a dupe." Committee members agreed.

The Czechoslovak government today announced an amnesty for certain civilian and military prisoners, following the pattern established by Moscow and copied by Romania. Experts doubt that this will mean the release of Associated Press Correspondent Bill Oatis who was sent to prison two years ago on spying charges.

The Pulitzer Awards Committee today honored two weekly North Carolina newspapers, the Whiteville News Reporter and the Tabor City Tribune, for their successful campaign against the Ku Klux Klan. Ernest Hemingway's "The Old Man and the Sea" was given the fiction award." William Ing's "Picnic" won the drama award. The history prize went to George Dangerfield author of "The Era of Good Feelings." biography to David J. Mays for his "Edmund Pendelton." Other awards went to: Archibald McLeish for poetry, Don Whitehead of the AP for his story on General Eisenhower's trip to Korea, and to Austin Wehrwein of the Milwaukee Journal for articles on Canada and Vermont Connecticut Royster of the Wall Street Journal for his editorials.

The Eisenhower administration continued its battle against a group of Republicans today. It occurred before the House Ways and Means Committee. The argument was over a one-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act. Republican Representative Simpson has introduced a Bill which would curb the admission to this country of foreign made goods that would cause even the slightest injury to American businesses making the same goods. This proposal is backed by Republican Representative Reid, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Today, Secretary of State Dulles and Treasury Secretary Humphrey appeared before the committee to argue the administration's case. The administration wants the extension in order to make a thorough study of tariff policy. Mr. Dulles was unusually blunt. He said: "This country cannot long exist in a world surrounded by misery." He didn't want our allies to think that we had shifted our position in the matter of foreign trade; and he added: "There is a nervousness in Europe, about what this new administration will do that amounts at times almost to panic or hysteria." Mr. Dulles believes the "delicate and fragile economy" of our allies might be shattered if we now place new curbs on foreign trade on top of a reduction in foreign aid. If we raise our tariff barriers so that our friends can't sell to us, they may be pushed in the direction of more trade with the Communists. That's exactly what the Communists have been predicting since last October. They have contended that the free world alliance would come unstuck over the question of trade between its various members. If our allies can't sell to us they can't buy from us, and so they would increasingly buy from or barter with the Communist world.

A year's study of the Reciprocal Trade Act will not change the political and economic considerations which now cause a number of Republicans to advocate a higher tariff. But the administration wants the year to make that study, and as things are shaping now it will get it, just as it got the confirmation of Charles Bohlen as Ambassador to Moscow - because enough Democrats will vote with the administration so that its policy will prevail.

This business of tariffs is one of the most difficult confronting the present administration. If we reduce our foreign aid and at the same time make it more difficult for our allies to trade with us, then the sombre estimate made today by Mr. Dulles is probably correct. Our allies will begin to trade with the Communist world, because they must trade somewhere; they will begin to think that they cannot survive as individual members of the free world alliance; and they will begin to think of neutralism and appeasement.

The law, as it stands now, makes it possible for the President to negotiate lower tariffs on goods brought into this country in exchange for lower tariffs on goods that we want to sell abroad. The administration wants this law continued while a study is made of the whole complex business. Representative Simpson maintains that a year's delay in giving relief to American firms suffering from foreign competition will wipe them out.

There is no question at all that certain American industries have been hard hit by the competition of foreign goods which, because of access to raw materials or cheap labor costs, can be sold in this country for less money than it costs American firms to make the same product. It may be that a method must be found under which American industries are compensated for the loss of domestic markets, or where workers can be retrained for other jobs. The administration wants the year to examine these and other more complicated matters.

If we assume, as this administration clearly does, that there is no immediate danger of a world war, then this matter of international trade becomes the great and perhaps decisive battlefield in the cold war. We have spent many years and more billions trying to persuade and pressure our allies to reduce, or abolish their tariff barriers. If we now increase ours, if we fail to practice what we preach, not only will our integrity be questioned, not only will our allies be forced to turn elsewhere - we shall be doing exactly what the Russians have predicted we would do - using our economic leverage to pry apart the alliance of the free world which we have constructed at such great cost.

We know the enemy's plan. The administration wants a standstill for a year while it figures out a counter-plan. To this reporter that seems a reasonable proposition, for it involves one of the most important non-military decisions in the history of the country.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The administration is obviously of the opinion that we will be playing right into Russian hands if we do not extend our Reciprocal Trade Agreements. Arnold Bennett once said: "A cause may be inconvenient, but it's like champagne or high shoes - one must be prepared to occasionally suffer for it." In the end, it's as John Ray concluded: "If you cannot bite, never show your teeth."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday May 5, 1953.

This is the news:

The Administration today asked Congress for five billion, 800-million dollars, for foreign aid. The President says this is necessary as part of our defense against the peril of Communism. I'd like to review the Administration's proposals in a few minutes.

Mutual Aid Director Stassen told a House committee today, that we must not revive trade barriers against foreign goods "if we want to thwart the Communist objective of dividing the free world." He reminded the committee that the last time trade barriers were raised to protect American industry, a depression followed.

Secretary of State Dulles says there are many forces at work within this country who favor "further ABDICATION" of American leadership. He said these people would: raise American tariffs... cut foreign aid.. and seek additional restrictions on allied trade with the Communist world, even in non-strategic articles. (Yesterday, Senator McCarthy challenged a State Department official, who said present government policy is not aimed at cutting off "all" allied trade with Communist countries.)

The British announced today that their exports in the first three months of this year to Communist China were ten times higher than for the same period last year. Most of it was textiles and fertilizer. A spokesman says the ban on the shipment of 250 strategic items had been strictly observed.

In Korea today the Communist negotiators said it was "worth welcoming" our nomination of Pakistan to be the neutral nation in charge of prisoners who do not want to go home. But the enemy did not accept Pakistan as the neutral state. They insist we first agree to ship the prisoners (who have turned down communism) to the neutral state. General Harrison, our chief negotiator, said again the Communists "cast serious doubt on their sincerity." The Chinese Communist radio says the recent warnings by General Harrison --about recessing the truce talks-- "are against world public opinion."

The battlefields were so quiet today that one American division reported that it had seen a single Communist soldier and threw grenades at him. But again our naval planes and warships attacked the enemy port of Wonsan.

The French report that their troops are fighting Communist-led guerrillas in the state of Laos...at two outposts to the capital city. There were no new enemy troops movements to the south.

All but two of the Americans recently released by the enemy in Korea are now home or on their way home. One of the two is too ill to be moved.. the other has received permission to remain with his wife who is in Tokyo.

The Senate today passed the bill to establish state ownership to off-shore oil lands. The vote after five weeks ended the longest Senate debate in 15 years. Opponents called it a gigantic giveaway of federal property; supporters of the bill said it recognizes the justice of state claims to their own property. The vote was : 56 to 35... with 35 Republicans and 21 Democrats voting for the bill. It now goes to a conference with House members who have passed a somewhat similar bill.

Secretary of the Interior McKay today made a complete swing away from the position of the Truman administration..and gave private enterprise permission to build a series of hydro-electric power dams along the Oregon-Idaho border. The former administration had favored public power in this region. Secretary McKay says one of the reasons for his decision is to help cut federal expenditures. Oregon's Independent Senator Morse calls this a "shocking betrayal of the public interest" but Oregon's Republican Senator Cordon says it merely means that the Interior Department will not be "a special pleader." Secretary McKay told reporters this administration favors power developments by private interests "provided it does not interfere with the orderly developments of our natural resources."

The two-day conferences of governors ended in Washington today. Texas' Governor Shivers, spokesman for the group, predicted that the Eisenhower Administration will reverse what he called a trend toward "subjugation" of the states by the federal government.

Republican Senator Ives today proposed an amendment to the Taft-Hartley law to prevent any discrimination...by employer or union.. against any worker because of race, religion or color.

House Speaker Martin says that "because the cost of survival and freedom continues to be high" a tax reduction must wait until it can be done "without flirting with disaster."

The McCarthy committee investigating the state department was told today that the department furnished 50-thousand dollars to print a book by a former Communist. Witness Frieda Utley, an admitted former Communist, called the book "a marxist history of the world."

James A. Wechsler, the editor of the New York Post, was again questioned by the McCarthy committee in secret. He issued a statement saying the Senator is "engaged in a primitive fishing expedition designed to silence independent newspaper comment."

Democratic Representative Heller of New York has introduced a bill to give reporters the privilege under law of refusing to reveal sources of their information to federal grand juries.. federal courts..or congressuonal committees. This would apply in all situations except those involving national security or the concealment of a crime.

The House un-American activities committee here in New York, today heard Jerome Robbins, the choreographer and dancer, testify that he WAS a member of the Communist party from 1944 to 1947. Robbins identified seven other members. He said he joined the party because he suffered as a member of a minority group and quit because he was disillusioned. Eight other witnesses refused to say whether they had been party members.

At Langley Field, Virginia, government scientists today revealed that rocket powered "models" of tactical airplanes and missiles are now being flown at speeds of more than 3-thousand miles an hour.

Edward R. Murrow: May 5, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The administration has asked Congress for five billion, eight hundred million for foreign aid. / That's one billion, eight hundred million less than had been asked for by the Truman administration. / The President says, "the blunt, sober truth is, that we cannot afford to relax our defences, until we have seen clear, unmistakable evidence of genuinely peaceful purposes on the part of the Soviet Union. / Most of this money will go for military aid, the rest for technical and economic development. / The main weight of the effort will be in Europe, but there will be four hundred million for the French in Indo-China, as well as help for the Chinese nationalists on Formosa, and some money to bolster Japanese defense and internal security. # President Eisenhower contends that "judicious aid to our allies will give us more ultimate security, than if we spent greater sums on American forces." We must stand ready for many years if necessary to defend ourselves and our allies. We must not attempt to build up our armed strength so rapidly as to seriously dislocate our national economy. He wants a steady build-up, sustained and planned, to achieve maximum efficiency with minimum strain.

Secretary of State Dulles said, any figure less than the one proposed would be dangerous to our peace and security. He thinks the figure of five point eight billion is adequate and within our capabilities. It is also consistent with the administration's desire to move as rapidly as possible toward a balanced budget. The cut from the Truman budget is not as great as many people would like to see, but it's as big as can safely be made, because there is no evidence that the threat of war will diminish within the foreseeable future. The situation is critical. All of South-east Asia is in great peril. If Indo-China should be lost there would be a chain reaction throughout the whole of the Far East.

Defence Secretary Wilson believes that the free world has come a long way in building up its economic strength during the last five years. The danger in which we stood in '48 and '49 has been reduced to a comforting degree, but the free world has not yet been permanently rescued from the threat of Communism. # Something like 25 percent of our military aid will go the Far East. Substantial American aid will be required to handle the situation in Indo-China. # Harold Stassen, the Mutual Security Administrator, revealed that we are to take over about 40 percent of the cost of fighting that war in Indo-China.

It would appear that the Communists, while stalling for time at Panmunjom, are bidding for the benevolent neutrality of Western Europe, relaxing the pressure there, while increasing it in South-east Asia.

The situation in Laos is confused. There doesn't appear to be much fighting; preparations are being made to defend the capital city, but the Communists may well bypass it. One column of the Communist force is heading for the border of Thailand, or Siam. Today, that country appealed to the United States for more arms and equipment. The Ambassador of Thailand went to see Secretary of State Dulles, to tell him of the grave danger that threatens all Asia. According to the Ambassador, Mr. Dulles reacted favorably. The Ambassador said he didn't ask that American troops be sent to Thailand. #

Today's words by Eisenhower, Dulles, Wilson and Stassen sounded like an echo of their predecessors. There was no drawing back from existing commitments or obligations. There was no contention that the Russian threat has substantially diminished. But there was the determination to cut one billion, eight hundred million from our spending for foreign aid. However it's sliced, this sum can't be all fat or waste. # The decision to cut must, I think, have been predicated upon the assumption, that the Russians will not launch a major war this year, or next. The theory so long held by so many people, that 1954 would be the critical period has clearly been abandoned. It would seem that our ship of state has not changed course, but it has taken in some canvas and jettisoned considerable cargo in preparation for a long, rough voyage. # The difficulty about this kind of navigation and seamanship remains what it has been for the last five years. In addition to the normal hazards the Russians make the weather.

In world affairs, like it or not, the course has been chartered for us. And, as Matthew Arnold said a hundred years ago:"We must move on a rigorous line. We can neither when we will enjoy, nor when we will resign." This being the case, we might do well to remember this warning from La Fontaine:"One often meets his destiny on the very road which he took to escape it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 5, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Administration today asked Congress for five billion 800-million dollars for foreign aid. The President says this is necessary as part of our defense against the peril of Communism. I'd like to review the Administration's proposals in a few minutes.

Mutual Aid Director Stassen told a House committee today that we must not revive trade barriers against foreign goods "if we want to thwart the Communist objective of dividing the free world." He reminded the committee that the last time trade barriers were raised to protect American industry, a depression followed.

Secretary of State Dulles says there are many forces at work within this country who favor "further abdication" of American leadership. He said these people would: raise American tariffs, cut foreign aid, and seek additional restrictions on allied trade with the Communist world, even in non-stretegic articles. Yesterday, Senator McCarthy challenged a State Department official who said present government policy is not aimed at cutting off "all" allied trade with Communist countries.

The British announced today that their exports in the first three months of this year to Communist China were ten times higher than for the same period last year. Most of it was textiles and fertilizer. A spokesman says the ban on the shipment of 250 strategic items had been strictly observed.

In Korea today the Communist negotiators said it was "worth welcoming" our nomination of Pakistan to be the neutral nation in charge of prisoners who do not want to go home. But the enemy did not accept Pakistan as the neutral state. They insist we first agree to ship the prisoners (who have turn down Communism) to the neutral state. General Harrison, our chief negotiator, said again the Communists "cast serious doubt on their sincerity." The Chinese Communist radio says the recent warnings by General Harrison about recessing the truce talks are against world public opinion."

The battlefields were so quiet today that one American division reported that it had seen a single Communist soldier and threw grenades at him. But again our naval planes and warships attacked the enemy port of Wonsan.

The French report that their troops are fighting Communist-led guerrillas in the state of Laos, at two outposts to the capital city. There were no new enemy troops movements to the south. All but two of the Americans recently released by the enemy in Korea are now home or on their way home. One of the two is too ill to be moved, the other has received permission to remain with his wife who is in Tokyo.

The Senate today passed the bill to establish state ownership to off-shore oil lands. The vote after five weeks ended the longest Senate debate in 15 years. Opponents called it a gigantic giveaway of federal property; supporters of the bill said it recognizes the justice of state claims to their own property. The vote was 56 to 35, with 35 Republicans and 21 Democrats voting for the bill. It now goes to a conference with House members who have passed a somewhat similar bill.

Secretary of the Interior McKay today made a complete swing away from the position of the Truman administration, and gave private enterprise permission to build a series of hydro-electric power dams along the Oregon-Idaho border. The former administration had favored public power in this region. Secretary McKay says one of the reasons for his decision is to help cut federal expenditures. Oregon's Independent Senator Morse calls this a "shocking betrayal of the public interest" but Oregon's Republican Senator Cordon says it merely means that the Interior Department will not be "a special pleader." Secretary McKay told reporters this administration favors power developments by private interests "provided it does not interfere with the orderly developments of our natural resources."

The two-day conferences of governors ended in Washington today. Texas' Governor Shivers, spokesman for the group, predicted that the Eisenhower Administration will reverse what he called a trend toward "subjugation" of the states by the federal government.

Republican Senator Ives today proposed an amendment to the Taft-Hartley law to prevent any discrimination by employer or union against any worker because of race, religion or color.

House Speaker Martin says that "because the cost of survival and freedom continues to be high" a tax reduction must wait until it can be done "without flirting with disaster."

The McCarthy committee investigating the State Department was told today that the department furnished 50-thousand dollars to print a book by a former Communist. Witness Frieda Utley, an admitted former Communist, called the book "a Marxist history of the world."

Hames A. Wechsler, the editor of the New York Post, was again questioned by the McCarthy committee in secret. He issued a statement saying the Senator is "engaged in a primitive fishing expedition designed to silence independent newspaper comment."

Democratic Representative Heller of New York has introduced a bill to give reporters the privilege under law of refusing to reveal sources of their information to federal grand juries, federal courts, or congressional committees. This would apply in all situations except those involving national security or the concealment of a crime.

The House un-American activities committee here in New York, today heard Jerome Robbins, the choreographer and dancer, testify that he was a member of the Communist party from 1944 to 1947. Robbins identified seven other members. He said he joined the party because he suffered as a member of a minority group and quit because he was disillusioned. Eight other witnesses refused to say whether they had been party members.

At Langley Field, Virginia, government scientists today revealed that rocket powered "models" of tactical airplanes and missiles are now being flown at speeds of more than 3-thousand miles an hour.

The Administration has asked Congress for five billion, eight hundred million for foreign aid. That's one billion, eight hundred million less than had been asked for by the Truman administration. The President says, "the blunt, sober truth is that we cannot afford to relax our defenses until we have seen clear, unmistakable evidence of genuinely peaceful purposes on the part of the Soviet Union. Most of this money will go for military aid, the rest for technical and economic development. The main weight of the effort will be in Europe, but there will be four hundred million for the French in Indo-China as well as help for the Chinese nationalists on Formosa, and some money to bolster Japanese defense and internal security. President Eisenhower contends that "judicious aid to our allies will give us more ultimate security than if we spent greater sums on American forces." We must stand ready for many years if necessary to defend ourselves and our allies. We must not attempt to build up our armed strength so rapidly as to seriously dislocate our national economy. He wants a steady build-up, sustained and planned to achieve maximum efficiency with minimum strain.

Secretary of State Dulles said any figure less than the one proposed would be dangerous to our peace and security. He thinks the figure of five point eight billion is adequate and within our capabilities. It is also consistent with the administration's desire to move as rapidly as possible toward a balanced budget. The cut from the Truman budget is not as great as many people would like to see, but it's as big as can safely be made, because there is no evidence that the threat of war will diminish within the foreseeable future. The situation is critical. All of South-east Asia is in great peril. If Indo-China should be lost there would be a chain reaction throughout the whole of the Far East.

Defense Secretary Wilson believes that the free world has come a long way in building up its economic strength during the last five years. The danger in which we stood in '48 and '49 has been reduced to a comforting degree, but the free world has not yet been permanently rescued from the threat of Communism. Something like 25 percent of our military aid will go the Far East. Substantial American aid will be required to handle the situation in Indo-China. Harold Stassen, the Mutual Security Administrator, revealed that we are to take over about 40 percent of the cost of fighting that war in Indo-China.

It would appear that the Communists, while stalling for time at Panmunjom, are bidding for the benevolent neutrality of Western Europe, relaxing the pressure there while increasing it in South-east Asia.

The situation in Laos is confused. There doesn't appear to be much fighting; preparations are being made to defend the capital city, but the Communists may well bypass it. One column of the Communist force is heading for the border of Thailand, or Siam. Today that country appealed to the United States for more arms and equipment. The Ambassador of Thailand went to see Secretary of State Dulles to tell him of the grave danger that threatens all Asia. According to the Ambassador, Mr. Dulles reacted favorably. The Ambassador said he didn't ask that American troops be sent to Thailand.

Today's words by Eisenhower, Dulles, Wilson and Stassen sounded like an echo of their predecessors. There was no drawing back from existing commitments or obligations. There was no contention that the Russian threat has substantially diminished. But there was the determination to cut one billion, eight hundred million from our spending for foreign aid. However it's sliced this sum can't be all fat or waste. The decision to cut must, I think, have been predicated upon the assumption that the Russians will not launch a major war this year, or next. The theory so long held by so many people that 1954 will be the critical period has clearly been abandoned. It would seem that our ship of state has not changed course, but it has taken in some canvas and jettisoned considerable cargo in preparation for a long, rough voyage. The difficulty about this kind of navigation and seamanship remains what it has been for the last five years. In addition to the normal hazards the Russians make the weather.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In world affairs, like it or not, the course has been chartered for us. And, as Matthew Arnold said a hundred years ago: "We must move on a rigorous line. We can neither when we will, enjoy, nor when we will, resign." This being the case, we might do well to remember this warning from La Fontaine: "One often meets his destiny on the very road which he took to escape it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday, May 6, 1953

This is the news:

The French High Command reports that the Communist invaders of the Kingdom of Laos, are now withdrawing. For two days the French have been unable to make contact with enemy spearheads. Today French reconnaissance planes reported the enemy ~~with~~ is pulling back, over the same route he used to approach the capital of Laos.. the same route he used, to move to within 25 miles of the Thailand border. The French do not know why.. they guess that the enemy fears the monsoon rains, that are due to start next week.

This word came from Hanoi, as the first ~~of~~ American flying boxcars.. C 119's.. arrived in Hanoi.. loaded ~~[illegible]~~ troops and supplies.. and took off for the Laos capital 275 miles away. These six planes are said to be the first of dozens we are ~~shipping~~ sending to Indo-China from Japan.

Mutual Aid Director Stassen told Congress today we are sending ~~[illegible]~~ "large quantities" of planes, tanks and ammunition to Indo-China.

And Secretary of State Dulles said we are conferring with our allies "with regard to possible United Nations action" to curb the enemy's aggression in Laos. The Secretary said we are talking to the French, and Thailand, and the three associated states of Indo China. (Reports from Paris indicate the French do not want to bring this situation to the attention of the United Nations..because they fear the Arab-Asian bloc may then start asking questions about Morocco and Tunisia.)

Mr. Dulles did not define "the action" that may be requested of the U.N. But he made it clear that we do not plan to send American troops into Indo-China. Republican Senator Knowland of California said he hopes the Administration "will not foreclose the use of air and naval power in Southeast Asia if it is determined that our national interests require such action to deter further aggression."

Mr. Dulles made it clear that he considers the invasion of Laos "straight-out aggression"..without even the pretense of a revolutionary movement." The Secretary said the attacking troops were apparently trained in Communist China. He suggested that Thailand might be their next target. And he told the Senators: the fall of Laos and Thailand would make the position of Burma "extremely acute". Then Indonesia would be jeopardized. And he said: if southeast Asia should go under the position of Japan would be extremely precarious.

Later the State and Defense departments announced that we are going to give PROMPT consideration to Thailand's appeal for immediate military aid. Yesterday the ambassador called the situation THERE [redacted] "dangerous." And today we promised to make immediate delivery of certain items requested by Thailand.

General Van Fleet, the former 8th army commander in Korea, says THAT ANY [redacted] settlement we make with the Communists in Korea must be coordinated with agreements on Indo-China, Malaya and Formosa. In an article in Life magazine he says that in terms of high strategy the Communists have lost the Korean war and know it. He says if we start an all-out effort NOW the "Reds will soon come begging to us."

At the truce talks today our chief negotiator, General Harrison said "zero" progress was made. And American officials in Washington [redacted] say the United Nations is now "seriously considering" recessing the [redacted] talks. These officials say the outlook for a successful conclusion is [redacted] "pessimistic and disturbing" unless the enemy shows signs of willingness [redacted] TO come to terms quickly. [redacted]

President Snygman Rhee of South Korea said today that if an armistice is reached in Korea which does not unify his country then he personally will "march ahead" to the Yalu River in the fight against the Communists.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons he still hopes for a settlement in Korea. And he said additional countries are under consideration as the neutral nation to supervise prisoners.

In the House of Lords, Lord Strabolgi charged that stories about atrocities committed by the enemy against American war prisoners were lies.. made up for psychological warfare purposes. He said: "I fear that prospects of a thaw in the cold war has alarmed people who have a vested interest in it."

Today, the Russians announced that seven American civilians released by North Korea after three years in prison will arrive in Moscow on Monday.

The battlefront was again comparatively quiet..except for regular patrol action. In a few minutes we'll hear a recorded report made on one of these night patrols. Our Thunderjets today attacked 17 buildings at an abandoned enemy dam. And the Pentagon reports that last week we suffered another 395 casualties. This includes 79 men killed and 28 missing.

In Czechoslovakia today, a Communist magazine said there has been no change in the Soviet Union's foreign policy.. and no need to change it.

In France, General De Gaulle announced the end of his political party.

The French People's Rally lost more than 30 per cent of its council seats in the recent municipal elections. De Gaulle aays the 85 Gaullist deputies in the National Assembly are now free to act as individuals.. and not as party representatives Off England today, an American freighter collidded with a British ferry 40 miles off Harwich. Crewmen from this freighter and another American freighter then rescued 507 passengers as the ferry broke in two. Four persons were killed.

Secretary of State Dulles told Congress today that he HAS not given our European allies any ultimatum..or specified any date for concrete steps toward forming a European army. And he said the President has authorized "substantial" funds to be used to stockpile food, fuel and industrial goods in west Berlin... in case of another Russian blockade.

Senator McCarthy said today he has asked former Communists Louis Budenz and Harvey Matusow to give him a list of all Communists they knew to be employed in the press, radio, television or the movies.

And Movie Actor Lionel Stander today refused to tell the House un-American activities Committee whether he had been a Communist in the late 1930's. Stander said he is not a Communist today..wasn't yesterday.

He said he told this to the Committee in 1940 and also to a Los Angeles grand jury which cleared him of such charges.

W. F. McDonald, the assistant chief of the weather bureau, said today that four weather stations have been closed..and 36 more have been ordered to close...because of cuts in his agency's budget. The four stations closes are in Oregon , Washington state, and New York.

Attorney General Gentry of Arkansas says he will challenge in the courts the validity of any law "undertaking to give away natural resources" of the submerged off-shore lands. The Senate approved such legislation yesterday.

MURROW:

The fighting in Korea isn't as heavy as it has been. But the war there still goes on. Each night, patrols probe the enemy...seeking him out and testing his strength. Men still are being shot at...and killed. An Army Combat Correspondent from Illinois - Sgt. Bob Nieman - followed a Columbian unit on a nighttime patrol near Old Baldy. When he started his recording gear, the soldiers were singing to keep up their spirits. As you'll hear, by the time the mission was half-completed, the recorder had been blown right out of Nieman's grip. This is what a night patrol is like.....

TAPE RUNS 3:20 COMES AT 7:53:30

RETUURN CUE:

"...MAKES A TERRIFIC COUNT"...THEN GUNFIRE...FADE ON FIRE

MURROW:

That was Combat Correspondent Sgt Bob Nieman's report on a nighttime patrol in Korea. Tonite, like yesterday and tomorrow, the patrols will be out again. As we said earlier, the truce talks continue. Perfect cut Jimmy-

We were talking of the men who go out on the patrols. And somehow, we couldn't help recalling these lines by Carl Sandburg:"Who would guess what it cost to move two buttons one inch on the war map here in front of the newspaper office where the freckle-faced young man is laughing at us." Probably Cicero was right when he said:"The only excuse for war is that we may live in peace unharmed."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, May 6, 1953
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... The fighting in Korea isn't as heavy as it has been, but the war there still goes on. Each night patrols probe the enemy, seeking him out and testing his strength. Men arestill being shot at and being killed. An Army combat correspondent from Illinois, Sergeant Bob Nieman, followed a Colombian unit on a night patrol near Old Baldy. When he started his recording gear the soldiers were singing, perhaps in order to keep up their spirits, but, as you'll hear in just a moment, by the time the mission was half completed the recorder had been blown right out of Nieman's grip. This is what a night patrol is like.

(singing)

NIEMAN: It's dark and as I speak now I see the moon rising over one of these Korean hills. The night is going to be very bright. (drowned out by singing) ..... patrols go out because even though it means they can see much better it also means that they can be seen much more readily in moonlight. (sound of firing) At this moment the men have fallen into formation and are moving out toward the objective, across an open (bursts of fire) valley, completely under the observation of the enemy. (firing) This you can tell from the firing in the background, that there is a great deal of activity and preparation for a patrol. (firing) That's friendly fire you hear. It's our fire against the enemy (drowned out) the valley around Old Baldy. (firing) (unintelligible-voice barely audible) (firing) what is referred to as No Man's Land. (firing) Those are mortars dropping in. (sound of explosions) This might be what you'd call sitting under the gun. (firing) It's getting too close. (firing) That's the big stuff coming in now. (unintelligible-voice barely audible) ..... there's been some big stuff coming in here. Someone told me it makes a terrific (drowned out)

MURROW: And that was combat correspondent, sergeant Bob Nieman's report on a night time patrol with Colombian troops in Korea.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The French High Command reports that the Communist invaders of the Kingdom of Laos are now withdrawing. For two days the French have been unable to make contact with enemy spearheads. Today French reconnaissance planes reported the enemy is pulling back over the same route he used to approach the capital of Laos, the same route he used to move to within 25 miles of the Thailand border. The French do not know why, they guess that the enemy fears the monsoon rains that are due to start next week.

This word came from Hanoi as the first American flying boxcars, C 119's arrived in Hanoi, loaded troops and supplies, and took off for the Laos capital 275 miles away. These six planes are said to be the first of dozens we are sending to Indo-China from Japan.

Mutual Aid Director Stassen told Congress today we are sending "large" quantities of planes, tanks and ammunition to Indo-China. And Secretary of State Dulles said we are conferring with our allies "with regard to possible United Nations action" to curb the enemy's aggression in Laos. The Secretary said we are talking to the French and Thailand and the three associated states of Indo China. (Reports from Paris indicate the French do not want to bring this situation to the attention of the United Nations, because they fear the Arab-Asian bloc may then start asking questions about Morocco and Tunisia.)

Mr. Dulles did not define "the action" that may be requested of the U.N. But he made it clear that we do not plan to send American troops into Indo-China. Republican Senator Knowland of California said he hopes the Administration "will not foreclose the use of air and naval power in Southeast Asia if it is determined that our national interests require such action to deter further aggression."

Mr. Dulles made it clear that he considers the invasion of Laos "straight-out aggression" without even the pretense of a revolutionary movement. The Secretary said the attacking troops were apparently trained in Communist China. He suggested that Thailand might be their next target. And he told the Senators: the fall of Laos and Thailand would make the position of Burma "extremely acute." Then Indonesia would be jeopardized. And he said: if southeast Asia should go under the position of Japan would be extremely precarious.

Later the State and Defense departments announced that we are going to give prompt consideration to Thailand's appeal for immediate military aid. Yesterday the ambassador called the situation there "dangerous." And today we promised to make immediate delivery of certain items requested by Thailand.

General Van Fleet, the former 8th army commander in Korea, says that any settlement we make with the Communists in Korea must be coordinated with agreements on Indo-China, Malaya and Formosa. In an article in Life magazine he says that in terms of high strategy the Communists have lost the Korean war and know it. He says if we start an all-out effort now the "reds will soon come begging to us."

At the truce talks today our chief negotiator, General Harrison said "zero" progress was made. And American officials in Washington say the United Nations is now "seriously considering" recessing the talks. These officials say the outlook for a successful conclusion is "pessimistic and distrubing" unless the enemy shows signs of willingness to come to terms quickly.

President Snygman Rhee of South Korea said today that if an armistice is reached in Korea which does not unify his country then he personally will "march ahead" to the Yalu River in the fight against the Communists.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons he still hopes for a settlement in Korea. And he said additional countries are under consideration as the neutral nation to supervise prisoners.

In the House of Lords, Lord Strabolgi charged that stories about atrocities committed by the enemy against American war prisoners were lies; made up for psychological warfare purposes. He said: "I fear that prospects of a thaw in the cold war has alarmed people who have a vested interest in it."

Today, the Russians announced that seven American civilians released by North Korea after three years in prison will arrive in Moscow on Monday.

The battlefront was again comparatively quiet, except for regular patrol action. In a few minutes we'll hear a recorded report made on one of these night patrols. Our Thunderjets today attacked 17 buildings at an abandoned enemy dam. And the Pentagon reports that last week we suffered another 395 casualties. This includes 79 men killed and 28 missing.

In Czechoslovakia today, a Communist magazine said there has been no change in the Soviet Union's foreign policy, and no need to change it.

In France, General De Gaulle announced the end of his political party. The French People's Rally lost more than 30 percent of its council seats in the recent municipal elections. De Gaulle says the 85 Gaullist deputies in the National Assembly are now free to act as individuals, and not as party representative Off England today, an American freighter collided with a British ferry 40 miles off Harwich. Crewmen from this freighter and another American freighter then rescued 507 passengers as the ferry broke in two. Four persons were killed.

Secretary of State Dulles told Congress today that he has not given our European allies any ultimatum or specified any date for concrete steps toward forming a European army. And he said the President has authorized "substantial" funds to be used to stockpile food, fuel and industrial goods in West Berlin, in case of another Russian blockade.

Senator McCarthy said today he has asked former Communists Louis Budenz and Harvey Matusow to give him a list of all Communists they knew to be employed in the press, radio, television or the movies.

And Movie Actor Lionel Stander today refused to tell the House un-American activities Committee whether he had been a Communist in the late 1930's. Stander said he is not a Communist today, wasn't yesterday. He said he told this to the Committee in 1940 and also to a Los Angeles grand jury which cleared him of such charges.

W.F. McDonald, the assistant chief of the weather bureau, said today that four weather stations have been closed, and 36 more have been ordered to close, because of cuts in his agency's budget. The four stations closes are in Oregon, Washington state and New York.

Attorney General Gentry of Arkansas says he will challenge in the courts the validity of any law "undertaking to give away natural resources" of the submerged off-shore lands. The Senate approved such legislation yesterday.

The fighting in Korea isn't as heavy as it has been. But the war there still goes on. Each night, patrols probe the enemy, seeking him out and testing his strength. Men still are being shot at and killed. And Army Combat Correspondent from Illinois, Sgt. Bob Nieman, followed a Columbian unit on a nighttime patrol near Old Baldy. When he started his recording gear, the soldiers were singing to keep up their spirits. As you'll hear, by the time the mission was half-completed, the recorder had been blown right out of Nieman's grip. This is what a night patrol is like:

(singing)

NIEMAN: It's dark and as I speak now I see the moon rising over one of these Korean hills. The night is going to be very bright. (drowned out by singing) patrols go out because even though it means they can see much better it also means that they can be seen much more readily in moonlight. (sound of firing) At this moment the men have fallen into formation and are moving out toward the objective, across an open (bursts of fire) valley, completely under the observation of the enemy. (firing) This you can tell from the firing in the background, that there is a great deal of activity and preparation for a patrol. (firing) That's friendly fire you hear. It's our fire against the enemy (drowned out) the valley around Old Baldy. (firing)(unintelligible-voice barely audible) (firing) what is referred to as No Man's Land. (firing) Those are mortars dropping in. (sound of explosions) This might be what you'd call sitting under the gun. (firing) It's getting too close. (firing) That's the big stuff coming in now. (unintelligible - voice barely audible) there's been some big stuff coming in here. Someone told me it makes a terrific (drowned out)

MURROW: And that was combat correspondent, sergeant Bob Nieman's report on a nighttime patrol with Colombian troops in Korea. Tonight, like yesterday and tomorrow, the patrols will be out again. As we said earlier, the truce talks continue.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word For Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of the men who go out on the patrols. And somehow, we couldn't help recalling these lines by Carl Sandburg: "Who would guess what it cost to move two buttons one inch on the war map here in front of the newspaper office where the freckle-faced young man is laughing at us." Probably Cicero was right when he said: "The only excuse for war is that we may live in peace unharmed."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday
May 7, 1953

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says we will not allow the Communists to use the Korean truce talks as a stall to gain military advantage. He will tell a Republican party dinner here in New York later tonight that we "ernestly desire and seek an honorable peace." But we are not going to confer indefinitely on matters that have been talked about for nearly two years. The Secretary released the text of his speech some hours after he and other top State and Defense department leaders met with the President at the White House. Presumably this meeting considered the latest enemy truce plan.

That plan apparently makes two concessions to the allied point of view. The Communists now agree that the prisoners who do not want to return to their homes may remain in Korea. Previously they wanted to move them to a neutral state. We had offered to accept Pakistan as this neutral state. Now the enemy suggests a 5-nation commission: Sweden, Switzerland, India and COMMUNIST Poland and Czechoslovakia to supervise the prisoners who refuse to be repatriated. Heretfore, the enemy truce propoals called for holding the prisoners who do not want to go home for as long as nine months. Now they say they'll agree to a maximum of six months during which they are to be given the opportunity to convince Chinese and North Korean prisoners to change their minds.. and go home. The enemy also proposes that the 5 neutral nations supply an equal number of troops to "execute authority"..that the expenses of the prisoners be paid by the nation to which the prisoner belongs. The Communists want to turn over to a political conference of all nations fighting in Korea the job of deciding what to do with prisoners who refuse to go home..even after they have listened to Communist attempts to convince them that this would be the wise thing to do.

[redacted]

General Harrison, our chief negotiator at Panmunjom, has asked for a recess in the talks until tomorrow night.. (our time) Washington officials are studying the enemy proposals. And the Chinese Communist radio is saying an armistice is "completely within reach" if we accept their plan. They say this puts "American sincerity to the test."

There was very little fighting in Korea today. Once again our warships bombarded the North Korean port of Wonsan.

The President makes two political speeches here in New York tonight.

Before he left Washington he named General Nathan F. Twining to succeed General Hoyt S. Vandenbergh as air force chief of staff. General Vandenbergh is retiring at the end of June when his term expires. At age 54 he will have served more than 34 years in the air force..the last five as Air Force chief of staff, AND a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs..General Bradley..today told Congress that Russia's atomic capability is rapidly increasing..that the defenses of the free world are still relatively weak...that he has no intelligence which would give us reason to diminish, slow down or stretch-out our preparedness effort. General Bradley said the Administration's foreign aid budget is "considerably below" what the Joint chiefs originally recommended. But he fully supports IT.

Chairman Wigglesworth of the House military appropriations committee said today that the Administration plans to cut defense spending next year..for our own forces.. by two point three billion dollars below the Truman estimates. And the Defense department will trim the Truman requests for "new" funds by five point two billions. Wigglesworth says his committee will try to make additional cuts and "its is believed that our present military power can be greatly increased with less money."

The Interior Department today ordered a reduction of one thousand employes from its 13-thousand employe staff..by the end of June. Ufficials says this is necessary "to meet the demands of the new appropriation bill passed by the House."

Senator Mc Carthy today released 186 pages of TESTIMONY [redacted] before his committee by James Wechsler, the editor of the New York Post. Wechsler belonged to the Young Communist League 15 years ago. His paper, the Post, has been a consistent critic of Senator McCarthy. The transcript shows that Wechesler produced his writings and documents to show that he has been anti-Communist since his break. The Senator said: "I must say your purported reformation does not convince me at all". He suggested it was a "phoney break" with the party. Wechesler said:"Lets face it. You are saying an ex-communist who is for McCarthy is a good one; and an ex-communist who is against McCarthy is suspect." Senator McCarthy said that is not correct. He said you can judge if a man is really an ex-Communist if he cooperates with government agencies and committees digging out Communists. He added: [redacted] a real ex-Communist does not take it upon himself to fight and smear every real ex-Communist who decides to expose former Communists.

Wechesler said he inferred that the only way he could prove he has broken with the party is to praise McCarthy. He said he refused to do this.

McCarthy said he does not feel that the editor has broken with Communist ideals. He said:"I feel you are serving them very actively, whether you are doing it knowingly or not, that is in your mind. I say you are doing a tremendous damage to America.. I think you are very valuable to the Communist party."

Wechesler said he believes the hearing was a reprisal against his paper for its fight against McCarthy. He insisted that his break with Communists when he was 22 years old was sincere, complete and proven. He told McCarthy:"Its clear to me that nothing I say will be acknowledged by you to be a valid point." And he said..in reference to youngsters who might want to break with Communism now.."If I can be brought before this committee 15 years later and be subjected to this brain-washing, a lot of people are going to say'How do you possibly win back a place in decent democratic society?."

Senator McCarthy took note of Wechsler's desire to have the American Society of Newspaper Editors study the transcript of the hearings. The Senator said he hoped the Society would investigate what the called the lack of truth in the New york Post.. and [redacted] "echsler's abuse of freedom of the press and his low ethical standards as a newspaperman.

The [redacted] 186-page transcript also shows that Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri told Wechsler "you have been the most forthright witness, formerly interested in the Communist party, or a member of it, that we have had before this committee."

The House un-American Activities committee today heard Robert Rossen, a movie director and producer, testify that he had been a member of the Communist party for ten years..up to 1947. Two years ago Rossen refused to tell the Committee whether he had been a Communist. He said he changed his mind after searching his conscience. He gave the committee th names of 40 persons in Hollywood who he said he knows to have been Communists.

Lee Sabinson, a Broadway producer, refused to tell the committee whether he belonged to the party before 1952.

And in Boston, Dr. Philip Morris, a [redacted] PHYSICIST on leave from Cornell University, accused the Jenner committee of not asking him if he is now a Communist. Morrison, who worked on the atomic bomb acknowledged that he belonged to the party in his youth.

In west Germany today, American High Commissioner Conant told reporters that Russia has done nothing in Europe to prove her peaceful intentions. On the contrary, he said, Communist suppression and terror have been increasing in Soviet-occupied East Germany. He said our government is still waiting for "deeds and not words" to prove that the Russians really want peace.

Edward R. Murrow: May 7, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

The Communist forces in Laos are still reported to be withdrawing. French officials decline to estimate the scope of the withdrawal. They merely say that the number of Communist troops is "impressive". Due to the absence of factual information there is a certain atmosphere of unreality about this whole operation. The French suggestion that the withdrawal is due to the impending arrival of the monsoon rains is not very persuasive, because the coming of those rains can be predicted with great accuracy, and presumably the Communists must have looked at the calendar before they started the invasion. There have been FEW estimates of the size of the attacking force, and no information about its equipment. As a matter of fact, there is no information about how much real fighting, if any, has occurred.

Our government is inclined to place the matter before the United Nations, but the French are against this. They fear that such action would give Ho-Chi-Minh, the Communist leader in Indo-China, the status of an international belligerent; and the French fear, too, that the Arab-Asian nations at the U.N. would reopen the whole matter of Morocco and Tunisia. XXXXXXXXX We are now arguing with the French as to what should be done.

The Russian press says that what's happening is a legitimate liberation movement in Laos that was set up three years ago. Yesterday Secretary of State Dulles said: "It's a case of outright aggression - doesn't even pretend to be a revolutionary effort."

Laos is the largest of the Federated States of Indo-China, with a population of a little over a million. It's about the size of Minnesota, is rich in forests, minerals and rice. It has only about fifteen thousand regular troops. It appears that there were some minor skirmishes before the Communist withdrawal began, but there have been no credible reports of any real fighting. In the absence of any real information, and in view of the fact that the Communists are now pulling back -(apparently before they met any real opposition)- it seems unlikely that this was a serious bid XXXXX for a military victory reaching to Thailand, and perhaps beyond. It is more likely that this was a reconnaissance in strength, perhaps aimed at finding out whether this country would provide massive aid for Indo-China and Thailand, as we did for South Korea. We had promised aid, and some of it is beginning to arrive. The great land mass of Communist power resembles a fist; they stretched out a finger tentatively into Laos, and are now withdrawing it. And that doesn't tell us very much about what they'll do next.

We have yet to receive any reliable reports on the fighting in Indo-China. Without the facts, we are better off drawing no conclusions. Disraeli once observed:"To be conscious that you are ignorant is a great step to knowledge." And until we get an accurate account, we would do well to go along with Josh Billing's contention that "it's better to know nothing than to know what ain't so."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says we will not allow the Communists to use the Korean truce talks as a stall to gain military advantage. He will tell a Republican party dinner here in New York later tonight that we "earnestly desire and seek an honorable peace." But we are not going to confer indefinitely on matters that have been talked about for nearly two years. The Secretary released the text of his speech some hours after he and other top State and Defense department leaders met with the President at the White House. Presumably this meeting considered the latest enemy truce plan.

That plan apparently makes two concessions to the allied point of view. The Communists now agree that the prisoners who do not want to return to their homes may remain in Korea. Previously they wanted to move them to a neutral state. We had offered to accept Pakistan as this neutral state. Now the enemy suggests a 5-nation commission: Sweden, Switzerland, India and Communist Poland and Czechoslavakia to supervise the prisoners who refuse to be repatriated. Heretofore, the enemy truce proposals called for holding the prisoners who do not want to go home for as long as nine months. Now they say they'll agree to a maximum of six months during which they are to be given the opportunity to convince Chinese and North Korean prisoners to change their minds, and go home. The enemy also proposes that the five neutral nations supply an equal number of troops to "execute authority" that the expenses of the prisoners be paid by the nation to which the prisoner belongs. The Communists want to turn over to a political conference of all nations fighting in Korea the job of deciding what to do with prisoners who refuse to go home, even after they have listened to Communist attempts to convince them that this would be the wise thing to do.

General Harrison, our chief negotiator at Panmunjom, has asked for a recess in the talks until tomorrownight, our time. Washington officials are studying the enemy proposals. And the Chinese Communist radio is saying an armistice is "completely within reach" if we accept their plan. They say this puts "American sincerity to the test."

There was very little fighting in Korea today. Once again our warships bombarded the North Korean port of Wonsan.

The President makes two political speeches here in New York tonight. Before he left Washington he named General Nathan F. Twining to succeed General Hoyt S. Vandenbergh as air force chief of staff. General Vandenbergh is retiring at the end of June when his term expires. At age 54 he will have served more than 34 years in the air force, the last five as air force chief of staff, and a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, General Bradley, today told Congress that Russia's atomic capability is rapidly increasing that the defenses of the free world are still relatively weak, that he has no intelligence which would give us reason to diminish, slow down or stretch out our preparedness effort. General Bradley said the Administration's foreign aid budget is "considerably below" what the Joint Chiefs originally recommended. But he fully supports it.

Chairman Wigglesworth of the House military appropriations committee said today that the Administration plans to cut defense spending next year, for our own forces, by two point three billion dollars below the Truman estimates. And the Defense Department will trim the Truman requests for "new" funds by five point two billions. Wigglesworth says his committee will try to make additional cuts and "its believed that our present military power can be greatly increased with less money."

The Interior Department today ordered a reduction of one thousand employees from its 13-thousand employee staff, by the end of June. Officials say this is necessary "to meet the demands of the new appropriation bill passed by the House."

Senator McCarthy today released 186 pages of testimony before his committee by James Wechsler, the editor of the New York Post. Wechesler belonged to the Young Communist League 15 years ago. His paper, the Post, has been a consistent critic of Senator McCarthy. The transcript shows that Wechesler produced his writings and documents to show that he has been anti-Communist since his break. The Senator said: "I must say your purported reformation does not convince me at all." He suggested it was a "phoney break" with the party. Wechesler said: "Lets face it. You are saying an ex-Communist who is for McCarthy is a good one; and an ex-Communist who is against McCarthy is suspect." Senator McCarthy said that is not correct. He said you can judge if a man is really an ex-Communist if he cooperates with government agencies and committees digging out Communists. He added: a real ex-Communist does not take it upon himself to fight and smear every real ex-Eommunist who decides to expose former Communists.

Wechesler said he inferred that the only way he could prove he has broken with the party is to praise McCarthy. He said he refused to do this.

McCarthy said he does not feel that the editor has broken with Communist ideals. He said: "I feel you are serving them very actively whether you are doing it knowingly or not, that is in your mind. I say you are doing a tremendous damage to America; I think you are very valuable to the Communist party."

Wechesler said he believes the hearing was a reprisal against his paper for its fight against McCarthy. He insisted that his break with Communists when he was 22 years old was sincere, complete and proven. He told McCarthy: "Its clear to me that nothing I say will be acknowledged by you to be a valid point." And he said, in reference to youngsters who might want to break with Communism now. "If I can be brought before this committee 15 years later and be subjected to this brain-washing, a lot of people are going to say 'How do you possible win back a place in decent democratic society?'"

Senator McCarthy took note of Wechsler's desire to have the American Society of Newspaper Editors study the transcript of the hearings. The Senator said he hoped the Society would investigate what he called the lack of truth in the New York Post and Wechesler's abuse of freedom of the press and hos low ethical standards as a newspaperman.

The 186-page transcript also shows that Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri told Wechesler "You have been the most forthright witness, formerly interested in the Communist party, or a member of it, that we have had before this committee."

The House un-American Activities committee today heard Robert Rossen, a movie director and producer, testify that he had been a member of the Communist party for ten years up to 1947. Two years ago Rossen refused to tell the Committee whether he had been a Communist. He said he changed his mind after searching his conscience. He gave the committee the names of 40 persons in Hollywood who he said he knows to have been Communists.

Lee Sabinson, a Broadway producer, refused to tell the committee whether he belonged to the party before 1952.

And in Boston, Dr. Philip Morris, a physicist on leave from Cornell University, accused the Jenner committee of not asking him if he is now a Communist. Morrison, who worked on the atomic bomb acknowledged that he belonged to the party in his youth.

In West Germany today, American High Commissioner Conant told reporters that Russia has done nothing in Europe to prove her peaceful intentions. On the contrary, he said, Communist suppression and terror have been increasing in Soviet-occupied East Germany. He said our government is still waiting for "deeds and not words" to prove that the Russians really want peace.

The Communist forces in Laos are still reported to be withdrawing. French officials decline to estimate the scope of the withdrawal. They merely say that the number of Communist troops is "impressive." Due to the absence of factual information there is a certain atmosphere of unreality about this whole operation. The French suggestion that the withdrawal is due to the impending arrival of the monsoon rains is not very persuasive, because the coming of these rains can be predicted with great accuracy, and presumably the Communists must have looked at the calandar before they started the invasion. There have been few estimates of the size of the attacking force, and no information about its equipment. As a matter of fact, there is no information about how much real fighting, if any, has occured.

Our government is inclined to place the matter before the United Nations, but the French are against this. They fear that such action would give Ho-Chi-Minh, the Communist leader in Indo-China, the status of an international belligerent; and the French fear, too, that the Arab-Asian nations at the U.N. would reopen the whole matter of Morocco and Tunisia. We are now arguing with the French as to what should be done.

The Russian press says that what's happening is a legitimate liberation movement in Laos that was set up three years ago. Yesterday Secretary of State Dulles said: "It's a case of outright aggression - doesn't even pretend to be a revolutionary effort."

Laos is the largest of the Federated States of Indo-China, with a population of a little over a million. It's about the size of Minnesota, is rich in forests, minerals and rice. It has only about fifteen thousand regular troops. It appears that there were some minor skirmishes before the Communist withdrawal began, but there have been no credible reports of any real fighting. In the absence of any real information, and in view of the fact that the Communists are now pulling back (apparently before they met any real opposition) it seems unlikely that this was a serious bid for a military victory reaching to Thailand, and perhaps beyond. It is more likely that this was a reconnaissance in strength, perhaps aimed at finding out whether this country would provide massive aid for Indo-China and Thailand, as we did for South Korea. We had promised aid, and some of it is beginning to arrive. The great land mass of Communist power resembles a fist; they stretched out a finger tentatively into Laos, and are now withdrawing it. And that doesn't tell us very much about what they'll do next.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We have yet to receive any reliable reports on the fighting in Indo-China. Without the facts, we are better off drawing no conclusions. Disraeli once observed: "To be conscious that you are ignorant is a great step to knowledge." And until we get an accurate account, we would do well to go along with Josh Billing's contention that "it's better to know nothing than to know what ain't so."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, May 8, 1953.

This is the news:

The President and Canadian Prime Minister St. Laurent said today that the Communists can prove their intentions with "acts, not words." The two men.. concluding two days of conferences in Washington.. issued a communique saying that recent developments in Korea had seemed hopeful. But "the new act of aggression" in Laos casts serious doubts on Communist intentions. The communique says this might have serious consequences for Thailand and the whole of Southeast Asia. And the two leaders agree that there must be no relaxation of allied efforts to achieve unified strength and the ability to meet aggression. At the same time they pledge every effort to bring about a relaxation of current tensions.

The French in Indo-China announce that the "immediate threat" to the capital of Laos has been removed. The invaders still hold one strategic base in the heart of the kingdom. Their general positions did not change overnight. And the French fear the enemy's withdrawal from his advanced positions may be only a temporary manuver. Before the monsoon rains started today the Communists HAD SEIZED control of one-third of Laos in less than ONE month of action. One American reporter in Indo China doubts that 100 men were killed in ground fighing.

And he says all signs point to an end of the invasion of Laos "without a major battle and virtually without casualties."

Today, the French announced that American pilots..civilian cargo planes (LOANED) by the American air force, pilots..are flying into Laos..parachuting supplies to the forces around the capital. And the Moscow army newspaper Red Star speaks of "Viet Nam People's Volunteers" fighting in Laos. The Communists spoke of "Volunteers" when the Chinese entered the Korean war.

In Washington, Mutual Aid Director Stassen says we have given the French 60-million dollars in "special aid" to bolster their defenses in Indo-China. And in recent weeks we have increased our deliveries of military goods to Indo-China.

Undersecretary of State Walter Bedell Smith said TODAY that a truce in Korea would be "a delusion and a sham" if it simply gives Communists in Asia freedom for new aggression. That's why we are so concerned with Laos. Mr. Smith said Korea and Indo-China can be regarded as the flanks of our defense against Communist expansion in Asia.

The President today conferred with Secretary of States Dulles, Defense Chief Wilson and General Bradley..in addition to a two hour cabinet meeting. And Washington sources say, when our truce negotiators meet the Communists in Korea later tonight, we will ask for a number of clarifications of the enemy's armistice plan. We are said to have particular objections to allowing soldiers from Poland and Czechoslovakia..both Communist satellites..to help supervise Chinese and North Korean troops, who do not want to return to their homes. We also want a definite agreement that such prisoners will not be doomed to indefinite imprisonment, if they continue to refuse to go home.

And the Chinese Communist radio, in advance of tonight's meeting, said today: An armistice is now completely within reach... America really has to show the world if it wants an armistice.

Again there was little fighting in Korea today. But for the first time in eight days, enemy Migs came down across the Yalu River. We damaged three of them.

In Washington today, Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a Senate Committee: we cannot balance the budget this year, and he does not believe it should be balanced. After Mr. Humphrey testified behind closed doors, Senator Wiley, chairman of the Foreign Relations committee, gave reporters this summary. He said Humphreys is distressed that the budget cannot be balanced. The ADMINISTRATION HAS not been able to make the reductions he personally hoped to make. He opposes any cuts in the Administration's foreign aid bill. He thinks "the risks that would involve our security would simply be too great." And the Secretary also said: "There is no prospect at all for anything but AN increase IN the national debt at the present moment." He feels we ~~make~~ have to increase the present legal limit...which is 275-billions. The present debt is 265½ billions.

Senator Taft says that unless the Administration modifies the foreign aid budget and the military budget the Administration may find itself spending more, in its first year in office, than the Truman Administration spent in its last year.

~~Mutual AID Director Stassen today released summaries of reports by American businessmen minimizing the need for economic aid to western Europe. Fifty-four businessmen recently visited 14 countries. Their reports say Britain can do without direct economic aid after June of 1954. France still needs help, but West Germany does not, except for West Berlin. The businessmen also say our economic help cannot help Italy's chief problem, which is low productivity. And they feel that~~

~~Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands can stand on their own feet.~~

The President announced today [redacted] that he and his cabinet agree unanimously, that the United States should join Canada in building the St. Lawrence Seaway project.. between Lake Erie and Montreal. Our part would cost about 95-million dollars. (it needs the approval of Congress.)

Canadian Prime Minister St. Laurent said in Washington today that the United States should give "a bold lead" to the world's need for [redacted] MORE FREE [redacted] trade. ~~He said, "Unless the national economies of the free world can be made and kept healthy and productive, Communism could win a bloodless victory without any war, hot or cold."~~

In Kansas City today, former President Truman celebrated his 69th birthday. He told reporters he believes the most important achivement of his two administrations was the establishment of a "hard" policy toward Communism.. and the termination of isolationism in this country.

Senator TOBEY [redacted], and A. F. of L. President George Meany, argued today over how to clean-up the New York and New Jersey waterfront. The Senator said: "The American people want some decency." Meany said: "And we want [redacted] decency. But what we do about it is something we'll decide. You won't decide." [redacted] Meany explained that only the A. F of L. convention can take any action against the International Logshoremen's Association. Tobey said:"Don't you think you ought to amend the Constiution?" Meany answered:"We'll amend the constiution as we see fit, and we shall not ask you how to amend it."

In Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission conducted one of its most complex atomic tests.

~~And Attorney General McGrath asked Congress to authorize the use of wire tap evidence in federal criminal cases that involve national security or defense.~~

In Great Britain, the results of local council elections, conducted from Monday through Thursday, show landslide gains for the Socialists. # Results so far, show that Labor has scored a net gain of 348 local council seats. The Conservatives show a net loss of 227 seats. Liberals, Independents and Communists all lost seats. The Labor Party says this is a slap at Sir Winston Churchill's Conservative government. The Conservatives say the results are "misleading."

Edward R. Murrow: May 8, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

In these days, when most of the news deals with billions of dollars - the possibility of atomic destruction, and the pronouncements of world leaders, it is agreeable to find a story which is simple, straightforward and understandable....at least on the surface. # Today a Senate committee received from Alfred Ansara of San Francisco an edifying disquisition on the subject of hamburgers. He's been having an argument with the Army about how this delicacy should be packed. According to Mr. Ansara, Army requirements make him fry canned hamburgers until they shrink into round, hard balls; then the Army requires him to lay them flat in the can. Mr. Ansara contends, with what might be called geometrical logic, that you can't lay something that is round, flat - at least not in a can. He asked the committee, and received no answer, the question: "When a thing is round, what is the flat end?" Mr. Ansara says he is required to fry his hamburgers until they shrink exactly 30 percent; and by the time he's finished they aren't edible. Moreover, the cans have to be packed eighteen to a case. And according to Mr. Ansara never in the history of this country, ~~EX~~ in of canning have we packaged eighteen cans to the case, of anything.

In the interest of accuracy, Mr. Ansara says the Army has now changed its specifications for canned hamburgers, so they may now be packed either way - horizontal or vertical. This would seem to be a victory of sorts for Mr. Ansara, but he says he's tired out from weeks of arguing with the Army, and he's going home a thoroughly disillusioned and beaten man.

Inasmuch as this broadcast attempts (not always with success), to present both sides of controversies which may conceivably alter the destinies of nations, or determine the future of the free world, it is necessary to record that the Army made response to Mr. Ansara's charges. Army spokesmen contended that its hamburgers are "fit for Colonels," and if necessary they can be eaten cold. Colonel William Durbin said: "I have heard about these "tennis ball hamburgers," and I don't agree that they're not good. I've eaten them often, and will be willing to eat them any time in my own home." There will be others, including this reporter, who have also eaten those hamburgers, who may conclude that either the Colonel's LADY is away on vacation, or that the Colonel's statement is a libel against a good fresh tennis ball. Spokesmen for the Army - including an Army veterinarian - defended the canned meat specifications, saying they must be sure the food will stay edible under adverse conditions. Lest the testimony by the veterinarian should be regarded as confirming or destroying the suspicions held by soldiers who have scattered tin cans from Tripoli to Taegu, it should be pointed out that it is the practise of the Army to employ veterinarians to inspect food.

Moreover, the Army says it requires packers to reduce the moisture content in canned meat, because we don't want to pay for the delivery of water rather than meat.

It is chastening to discover, in a confused and complex world, that there is controversy, conflicting testimony, regarding the hamburger. We have done our best to remain neutral in this geometric and gastronomical controversy, but feel obliged to comment, that the Army hamburger, like most other things, is susceptible of improvement. Our confusion, (and presumably that of Mr. Ansara,) was compounded by the testimony of Major Watkins, who said that four lots of hamburgers had been rejected because they contained too much moisture, while one had been rejected because it contained too little moisture. Whatever the merits of this controversy -(and several Senators have yet to take a firm position)- our Army remains the best-fed Army in the world. Perhaps the moral is that in these trying days nothing is as simple as it appears - not even a hamburger - the question also arises whether it is anti-American and pro-British to compare meatballs with tennis balls.

It would seem that the meat-ball has become involved in some sort of minor crisis in Washington. We are determined to remain neutral - just as the Roman poet Lucretius did in 35 b.c. when he said: "What is food to one man may be fierce poison to another." Mark Twain had the answer: "Part of the secret of success in life is to eat what you like and let the food fight it out inside."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 8, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President and Canadian Prime Minister St. Laurent said today that the Communists can prove their intentions with "acts, not words." The two men, concluding two days of conferences in Washington, issued a communique saying that recent developments in Korea had seemed hopeful. But "the new act of aggression" in Laos casts serious doubts on Communist intentions. The communique says this might have serious consequences for Thailand and the whole of Southeast Asia. And the two leaders agree that there must be no relaxation of allied efforts to achieve unified strength and the ability to meet aggression. At the same time they pledge every effort to bring about a relaxation of current tensions.

The French in Indo-China announce that the "immediate threat" to the capital of Laos has been removed. The invaders still hold one strategic base in the heart of the kingdom. Their general positions did not change overnight. And the French fear the enemy's withdrawal from his advanced positions may be only a temporary maneuver. Before the monsoon rains started today the Communists had seized control of one-third of Laos in less than one month of action. One American reporter in Indo-China doubts that 100 men were killed in ground fighting. And he says all signs point to an end of the invasion of Laos "without a major battle and virtually without casualties."

Today, the French announced that American pilots, civilian pilots, are flying cargo planes (loaned) by the American air force into Laos, parachuting supplies to the forces around the capital. And the Moscow army newspaper Red Star speaks of "Viet Nam People's Volunteers" fighting in Laos. The Communists spoke of "Volunteers" when the Chinese entered the Korean war.

In Washington, Mutual Aid Director Stassen says we have given the French 60-million dollars in "special aid" to bolster their defenses in Indo-China. And in recent weeks we have increased our deliveries of military goods to Indo-China.

Undersecretary of State Walter Bedell Smith said today that a truce in Korea would be "a delusion and a sham" if it simply gives Communists in Asia freedom for new aggression. That's why we are so concerned with Laos. Mr. Smith said Korea and Indo-China can be regarded as the flanks of our defense against Communist expansion in Asia.

The President today conferred with Secretary of State Dulles, Defense Chief Wilson and General Bradley in addition to a two hour cabinet meeting. And Washington sources say when our truce negotiators meet the Communists in Korea later tonight we will ask for a number of clarifications of the enemy's armistice plan. We are said to have particular objections to allowing soldiers from Poland and Czechoslovakia, both Communist satellites, to help supervise Chinese and North Korean troops who do not want to return to their homes. We also want a definite agreement that such prisoners will not be doomed to indefinite imprisonment if they continue to refuse to go home.

And the Chinese Communist radio, in advance of tonight's meeting, said today: An armistice is not completely within reach; American really has to show the world if it wants an armistice.

Again there was little fighting in Korea today. But for the first time in eight days enemy Migs came down across the Yalu River. We damaged 3 of them.

In Washington today, Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a Senate Committee: we cannot balance the budget this year and he does not believe it should be balanced. After Mr. Humphrey testified behind closed doors, Senator Wiley, chairman of the Foreign Relations committee, gave reporters this summary. He said Humphreys is distressed that the budget cannot be balanced. The Administration has not been able to make the reductions he personally hoped to make. He opposes any cuts in the Administration's foreign aid bill. He thinks "the risks that would involve our security would simply be too great." And the Secretary also said: "There is no prospect at all for anything but an increase in the national debt at the present moment." He feels we may have to increase the present legal limit, which is 275-billions. The present debt is 265½ billions.

Senator Taft says that unless the Administration modifies the foreign aid budget and the military budget the Administration may find itself spending more, in its first year in office, than the Truman Administration spent in its last year.

The President announced today that he and his cabinet agree unanimously that the United States should join Canada in building the St. Lawrence Seaway project, between Lake Erie and Montreal. Our part would cost about 95-million dollars, (it needs the approval of Congress.)

Canadian Prime Minister St. Laurent said in Washington today that the United States should give " a bold lead" to the world's need for more free trade.

In Kansas City today, former President Truman celebrated his 69th birthday. He told reporters he believes the most important achievement of his two administrations was the establishment of a "hard" policy toward Communism, and the termination of isolationism in this country.

Senator Tobey and AFL President George Meany argued today over how to clean-up the New York and New Jersey waterfronts. The Senator said: "The American people want some decency." Meany said: "And we want decency. But what we do about it is something we'll decide. You won't decide." Meany explained that only the AFL convention can take any action against the International Longshoremen's Association. Tobey said: "Don't you think you ought to amend the Constitution?" Meany answered: "We'll amend the constitution as we see fit, and we shall not ask you how to amend it."

In Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission conducted one of its most complex atomic tests.

In Great Britain, the results of local council elections conducted from Monday through Thursday, show landslide gains for the Socialists. Results so far show that Labor has scored a net gain of 348 local council seats. The Conservatives show a net loss of 227 seats. Liberals, Independents and Communists all lost seats. The Labor Party says this is a slap at Sir Winston Churchill's Conservative government. The Conservatives say the results are "misleading."

In these days, when most of the news deals with billions of dollars - the possibility of atomic destruction, and the pronouncements of world leaders, it is agreeable to find a story which is simple, straightforward and understandable, at least on the surface. Today a Senate committee received from Alfred Ansara of San Francisco an edifying disquisition on the subject of hamburgers. He's been having an argument with the Army about how this delicacy should be packed. According to Mr. Ansara, Army requirements make him fry canned hamburgers until they shrink into round, hard balls; then the Army requires him to lay them flat in the can. Mr. Ansara contends, with what might be called geometrical logic, that you can't lay something that is round, flat - at least not in a can. He asked the committee, and received no answer, the question: "When a thing is round, what is the flat end?" Mr. Ansara says he is required to fry his hamburgers until they shrink exactly 30 percent; and by the time he's finished they aren't edible. Moreover, the cans have to be packed eighteen to a case. And according to Mr. Ansara never in the history of this country, or of canning have we packaged eighteen cans to the case, of anything.

In the interest of accuracy, Mr. Ansara says the Army has now changed its specifications for canned hamburgers, so they may now be packed either way - horizontal or vertical. This would seem to be a victory of sorts for Mr. Ansara, but he says he's tired out from weeks of arguing with the Army, and he's going home a thoroughly disillusioned and beaten man.

Inasmuch as this broadcast attempts (not always with success) to present both sides of controversies which may conceivably alter the destinies of nations, or determine the future of the free world, it is necessary to record that the Army made response to Mr. Ansara's charges. Army spokesmen contended that its hamburgers are "fit for Colonels," and if necessary they can be eaten cold. Colonel William Durbin said: "I have heard about these "tennis ball hamburgers," and I don't agree that they're not good. I've eaten them often, and will be willing to eat them any time in my own home." There will be others, including this reporter, who have also eaten those hamburgers, who may conclude that either the Colonel's lady is away on vacation, or that the Colonel's statement is a libel against a good fresh tennis ball. Spokesmen for the Army - including an Army veterinarian - defended the canned meat specifications, saying they must be sure the food will stay edible under adverse conditions. Lest the testimony by the veterinarian should be regarded as confirming or destroying the suspicions held by soldiers who have scattered tin cans from Tripoli to Taegu, it should be pointed out that it is the practice of the Army to employ veterinarians to inspect food.

Moreover, the Army says it requires packers to reduce the moisture content in canned meat, because we don't want to pay for the delivery of water rather than meat.

It is chastening to discover, in a confused and complex world, that there is controversy, conflicting testimony, regarding the hamburger. We have done our best to remain neutral in this geometric and gastronomical controversy, but feel obliged to comment that the Army hamburger, like most other things, is susceptible of improvement. Our confusion, (and presumably that of Mr. Ansara,) was compounded by the testimony of Major Watkins, who said that four lots of hamburgers had been rejected because they contained too much moisture, while one had been rejected because it contained too little moisture. Whatever the merits of this controversy (and several Senators have yet to take a firm position) our Army remains the best-fed Army in the world. Perhaps the moral is that in these trying days nothing is as simple as it appears - not even a hamburger - the question also arises whether it is anti-American and pro-British to compare meatballs with tennis balls.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that the meat-ball has become involved in some sort of minor crisis in Washington. We are determined to remain neutral - just as the Roman poet Lucretius did in 35 B.C. when he said: "What is food to one man may be fierce poison to another." Mark Twain had the answer: "Part of the secret of success in life is to eat what you like and let the food fight it out inside."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday, May 11, 1953

This is the news:

Sir Winston Churchill believes that "a conference at the highest level should take place between the leading powers without long delay." In a one-hour speech to the House of Commons the prime minister said: this conference should have the smallest number of powers and persons possible. It should be informal, private, without a long agenda, without a jungle of details. Maybe no hard agreement would come of it. But it might produce better understanding. Sir Winston believes that if two problems could be settled..Korea and Austria.. this would be a definite gain. It might lead to less tension. He feels its a mistake to think that all East-West problems can be settled by one stroke. A piecemeal solution is better than none at all. And these men at the conference might get the general feeling that they might do something better than tear the human race into bits. "I do not see,"Sir Winston Churchill told the applauding House,"why anyone should be frightened at having a try for this."

The Prime Minister reviewed Moscow's activities since Stalin's death this way: He thinks the so-called peace offensive is "a supreme event"..but the West must continue its defense efforts.

He doesn't want to discourage what he says might be "a profound movement of Russian opinion." The British welcome every sign of improved relations with Moscow. [redacted] Sir Winston regards "some of the internal manifestations in Russia, and apparent change of mood, as far more important and significant than what happens outside." He doesn't want to give Soviet leaders ground for suspicion. He would reserve judgment on the widely expressed opinion that the invasion of Laos was inspired by Moscow. He would have both East and West do agreeable rather than disagreeable things. [redacted]

Sir Winston regards Korea as the major problem. He sees no reason why the enemy's truce proposal cannot be the basis for agreement..if the Communists are sincere.. if we demonstrate "patience and sympathetic understanding." The Prime Minister says there is no disagreement on the principle of exchanging prisoners of war; just on the method and the procedure. He has doubts that Korea can be unified at this time. He'd settle for a truce..and hopes that time will be a healing factor.

Sir Winston covered a great deal of ground: he is prepared to have the British leave the Suez Canal if the BRITISH can maintain a small force there.. If the British are attacked by Egyptian forces they will fight back... He hopes Isreal and the Arab states will come to peace.., Britain is "with" the ~~European~~ federal European system "but not of it." He says no nation ever took such risks as the British are taking now to support the common defense effort..They have less than one division in their domestic force. Britain will not fail in her obligations to West Germany...She feels the French would have less trouble in Indo-China if they had a two year conscription period..and the power to send conscripts abroad.. AS THE BRITISH DO.

I'd like to discuss Sir Winston's speech in a few minutes.

As the PRIME MINISTER addressed the House of Commons, the British announced that they have invited the United States, Russia and France to send their deputy foreign ministers to London for another conference on an Austrian peace treaty.

IN Egypt, Secretary of State Dulles, in the first stop on his 20-day tour of the Middle East, conferred with Premier Naguib. THEY agreed that the British should gradually withdraw their troops from the Suez Canal zone. MR. DULLES says Naguib agreed that the area would be available to the free world in event of war.

In Indo-China, the French say they killed 25 soldiers and captured another dozen in sharp fighting in the heart of Laos...the first major clash SINCE the enemy's invasion of Laos. And today both Laos and her sister state of Viet Nam protested the sharp devaluation of their currency by the French.

In Korea, where our negotiators are prepared for another truce meeting later tonight, we will again insist that the Communists tell us: what they plan to do, eventually, with prisoners who do not want to return home. We have asked this question four times..without an answer.

35

In Washington today, Defense Secretary Wilson told a House committee that the Eisenhower Administration believes it will be two or three years before the budget can be balanced. He said its been decided that to balance the budget in fiscal 1954..starting in July..or fiscal 1955..would "seriously reduce the rate of build-up of our defense capabilities." The Secretary then revealed that it has been decided to abandon the 1955 goal of a 143-group air force. The new target will be 120 groups. But the number of groups that [redacted] actually WILL be activated in the future will depend on the [redacted] changing military situation. Mr. Wilson also revealed that the Pentagon PLANS [redacted] to cut the [redacted] monthly draft calls in half.. [redacted] AND reduce the military's manpower goal by 291-thousand men.

The Secretary's warning that it may not be possible to balance the budget for at least two years came after Republican Representative Reed of New York charged that the Administration has "surrendered to the spenders.. and run up the white flag" on its goal of balancing the budget. [redacted]

Robert J. Francis, director of the Voice of America, told a Senate committee today that the Communists now spend more money trying to keep the Voice's signal out..than we do to put it in. He told the Senators:"I only wish the American people knew what a loyal, competent and devoted staff they have" at the Voice of America.

The Department of Agriculture says retail food costs have dropped to the lowest level since December of 1950. (largely because of lower farm prices.)

~~J.R. Wiggins, chairman of the Freedom of Information Committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, says his committee members will study the transcript of the recent hearing of Editor James Wechsler before the McCarthy Committee. Wechsler said the questioning was an attack on freedom of the press.~~

>59

Edward R. Murrow: May 11, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Whenever Sir Winston Churchill makes a major speech in the House of Commons, he manages to convey the impression that his Island is too small a stage for him to play upon. (He did it again today.) When he sat down, after ranging the world for nearly an hour, he wiped his brow, and then putting on his new old-fashioned ear trumpet he looked anxiously about the Chamber to study the reaction of political friends and foes. Most of the faces bore clear evidence of a Churchill triumph. It is unlikely that the Prime Minister has spoken the mind of the nation more clearly or more eloquently since the end of the late war. Churchill came back to power in 1951 saying that his final ambition was to "help gentler breezes to blow upon this weary ~~beath~~ earth," a hope that he repeated today.

Clearly the British believe that a new tide is running in Russia. It is equally clear that Sir Winston Churchill believes that the Western Powers as well as Russia must "prove their sincerity by deeds." The single sentence that drew the most applause in today's speech was when he said, "it would be a mistake to assume that nothing can be settled with Soviet Russia unless or until everything can be settled." The proposal for the meeting of heads of state does not come from a man who is inexperienced in such meetings. He does not predict the outcome but is persuaded that the effort must be made. This is a view that is shared by the French Government.

In assessing or comparing the attitude of our allies and ourselves regarding a possible war with Russia, it is imperative to remember that they would not survive, regardless of the final outcome. Most of us think we would. From that difference in attitude stems differences in policy. Moreover, our European allies have knowledge of war at first hand, and we have not. They desire to explore even the slightest possibility of compromise before reaching the grim ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ alternative that collision is inevitable. They fear that we do not share that desire.

Sir Winston today paid tribute to this country for expending most of the blood and treasure in Korea, but he also implied concern lest we lose the opportunity for a truce through insistence upon details which have nothing to do with the actual stopping of the shooting.

As a reporter with some knowledge of Churchill's words and writings, I would presume to suggest what he was saying between the lines today. He believes that there does exist a real chance to negotiate at least a temporary agreement with the Russians. And he is fearful that the inflexibility of our policy may prevent it. He is concerned that our hatred and hysteria may prevent our administration from engaging in secret and unpublicized conversations with the Russians. And he is worried lest our intransigeance cause our allies in Europe to come to believe that we don't really want to ease the tension or achieve an agreement. Many of them already feel that way.

In weighing the words of Sir Winston Churchill it is necessary to remember that this is a man of war who has twice been near the hub of events when world war came. His political opponents in Britain have constantly accused him of being too belligerent. He obviously sees himself now as standing in clear view of a more complete and terrible war than man has ever witnessed. He does not pretend to discern the full shape of the future - he holds to the traditional British view of the inevitability of gradualness, and is determined that history shall not record of him that as the Queen's First Minister he failed to do what he could to prevent another slaughter or the collapse of the free world alliance.

As a result of today's speech, no one in Britain will suggest that Sir Winston is a "Pinko," soft towards Communists, or that he has failed to put the interests of his country first.

His knowledge of this country is considerable. British Intelligence regarding what is going on in Russia is at least as good as ours. And the British Prime Minister is clearly worried about the possibility that we have the bit in our teeth, determined to follow a path where the Russians must make all the concessions while we make none. He sees the chance for a deal. It might be partial, it could be temporary, but he is convinced the chance is there. In considering his proposals it might be useful to remember that this gallant old man has not always been wrong in his assessment of the direction in which the affairs of men and nations move.

~~Mr. Churchill's remarks to Parliament today were very much to the point.~~ ~~And~~ while some in this country might not agree with Sir Winstons speech, the Prime Minister obviously believed as John Lyly once did when he said:"I have discharged the duty of a friend, in that I have not winked at thy folly." However bluntly Mr. Churchill stated his case, he like Aristotle,apparently feels that "many a friendship can be lost for lack of speaking."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 11, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Sir Winston Churchill believes that "a conference at the highest level should take place between the leading powers without long delay." In a one-hour speech to the House of Commons the Prime Minister said: this conference should have the smallest number of powers and persons possible. It should be informal, private, without a long agenda, without a jungle of details. Maybe no hard agreement would come of it. But it might produce better understanding. Sir Winston believes that if two problems could be settled, Korea and Austria, this would be a definite gain. It might lead to less tension. He feels its a mistake to think that all East West problems can be settled by one stroke. A piecemeal solution is better than none at all. And these men at the conference might get the general feeling that they might do something better than tear the human race into bits. "I do not see," Sir Winston Churchill told the applauding House, "why anyone should be frightened at having a try for this."

The Prime Minister reviewed Moscow's activities since Stalin's death this way: He thinks the so-called peace offensive is "a supreme event" but the West must continue its defense efforts. He doesn't want to discourage what he says might be "a profound movement of Russian opinion." The British welcome every sign of improved relations with Moscow. Sir Winston regards "some of the internal manifestations in Russia, and apparent change of mood, as far more important and significant than what happens outside." He doesn't want to give Soviet leaders ground for suspicion. He would reserve judgment on the widely expressed opinion that the invasion of Laos was inspired by Moscow. He would have both East and West do agreeable rather than disagreeable things.

Sir Winston regards Korea as the major problem. He sees no reason why the enemy's truce proposal cannot be the basis for agreement, if the Communists are sincere, if we demonstrate "patience and sympathetic understanding." The Prime Minister says there is no disagreement on the principle of exchanging prisoners of war; just on the method and the procedure. He has doubts that Korea can be unified at this time. He's settle for a truce, and hopes that time will be a healing factor. Sir Winston covered a great deal of ground: he is prepared to have the British leave the Suez Canal if the British can maintain a small force there. If the British are attacked by Egyptian forces they will fight back. He hopes Israel and the Arab states will come to peace; Britain is "with" the federal European system, "but not of it." He says no nation ever took such risks as the British are taking now to support the common defense effort; they have less than one division in their domestic force. Britain will not fail in her obligations to West Germany. She feels the French would have less trouble in Indo-China if they had a two year conscription period, and the power to send conscripts abroad, as the British do. I'd like to discuss Sir Winston's speech in a few minutes.

As the Prime Minister addressed the House of Commons, the British announced that they have invited the United States, Russia and France to send their deputy foreign ministers to London for another conference on an Austrian peace treaty.

In Egypt, Secretary of State Dulles, in the first stop on his 20-day tour of the Middle East, conferred with Premier Naguib. They agreed that the British should gradually withdraw their troops from the Suez Canal zone. Mr. Dulles says Naguib agreed that the area would be available to the free world in event of war

In Indo-China, the French say they killed 25 soldiers and captured another dozen in sharp fighting in the heart of Laos, the first major clash since the enemy's invasion of Laos. And today both Laos and her sister state of Viet Nam protested the sharp devaluation of their currency by the French.

In Korea, where our negotiators are prepared for another truce meeting later tonight, we will again insist that the Communists tell us: what they plan to do, eventually, with prisoners who do not want to return home. We have asked this question four times, without an answer.

In Washington today, Defense Secretary Wilson told a House committee that the Eisenhower Administration believes it will be two or three years before the budget can be balanced. He said its been decided that to balance the budget in fiscal 1954, starting in July, or fiscal 1955, would "seriously reduce the rate of build-up of our defense capabilities." The Secretary then revealed that it has been decided to abandon the 1955 goal of a 143-group air force. The new target will be 120 groups. But the number of groups that actually will be activated in the future will depend on the changing military situation. Mr. Wilson also revealed that the Pentagon plans to cut the monthly draft calls in half, and reduce the military's manpower goal by 291-thousand men.

The Secretary's warning that it may not be possible to balance the budget for at least two years came after Republican Representative Reed of New York charged that the Administration has "surrendered to the spenders and run up the white flag" on its goal of balancing the budget.

Robert J. Francis, director of the Voice of America, told a Senate committee today that the Communists now spend more money trying to keep the Voice's signal out than we do to put it in. He told the Senators: "I only wish the American people knew what a loyal, competent and devoted staff they have" at the Voice of America.

The Department of Agriculture says retail food costs have dropped to the lowest level since December of 1950 (largely because of lower farm prices.)

Whenever Sir Winston Churchill makes a major speech in the House of Commons he manages to convey the impression that his Island is too small a stage for him to play upon. He did it again today. When he sat down, after ranging the world for nearly an hour, he wiped hiw brow, and then putting on his new old-fashioned ear trumpet he looked anxiously about the Chamber to study the reaction of political friends and foes. Most of the faces bore clear evidence of a

Churchill triumph. It is unlikely that the Prime Minister has spoken the mind of the nation more clearly or more eloquently since the end of the late war. Churchill came back to power in 1951 saying that his final ambition was to "help gentler breezes to blow upon this weary earth", a hope that he repeated today.

Clearly the British believe that a new tide is running in Russia. It is equally clear that Sir Winston Churchill believes that the Western Powers as well as Russia must "prove their sincerity by deeds." The single sentence that drew the most applause in today's speech was when he said, "it would be a mistake to assume that nothing can be settled with Soviet Russia unless or until everything can be settled." The proposal for the meeting of heads of state does not come from a man who is inexperienced in such meetings. He does not predict the outcome but is persuaded that the effort must be made. This is a view that is shared by the French Government.

In assessing or comparing the attitude of our allies and ourselves regarding a possible war with Russia, it is imperative to remember that they would not survive, regardless of the final outcome. Most of us think we would. From that difference in attitude stems differences in policy. Moreover, our European allies have knowledge of war at first hand, and we have not. They desire to explore even the slightest possibility of compromise before reaching the grim alternative that collision is inevitable. They fear that we do not share that desire.

Sir Winston today paid tribute to this country for expending most of the blood and treasure in Korea, but he also implied concern lest we lose the opportunity for a truce through insistence upon details which have nothing to do with the actual stopping of the shooting.

As a reporter with some knowledge of Churchill's words and writings, I would presume to suggest what he was saying between the lines today. He believes that there does exist a real chance to negotiate at least a temporary agreement with the Russians. And he is fearful that the inflexibility of our policy may prevent it. He is concerned that our hatred and hysteria may prevent our administration from engaging in secret and unpublicized conversations with the Russians. And he is worried lest our intransigeance cause our allies in Europe to come to believe that we don't really want to ease the tension or achieve an agreement. Many of them already feel that way.

In weighing the words of Sir Winston Churchill it is necessary to remember that this is a man of war who has twice been near the hub of events when World War came. His political opponents in Britain have constantly accused him of being too belligerent. He obviously sees himself now as standing in clear view of a more complete and terrible war than man has ever witnessed. He does not pretend to discern the full shape of the future - he holds to the traditional British view of the inevitability of gradualness, and is determined that history shall not record of him that as the Queen's First Minister he failed to do what he could to prevent another slaughter or the collapse of the free world alliance.

As a result of today's speech, no one in Britain will suggest that Sir Winston is a "Pinko", soft towards Communists, or that he has faildd to put the interests of his country first.

His knowledge of this country is considerable. British Intelligence regarding what is going on in Russia is at least as good as ours. And the British Prime Minister is clearly worried about the possibility that we have the bit in our teeth, determined to follow a path where the Russians must make all the concessions while we make none. He sees the chance for a deal. It might be partial, it could be temporary, but he is convinced the chance is there. In considering his proposals it might be useful to remember that this gallant old man has not always been wrong in his assessment of the direction in which the affairs of men and nations move.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON. COMMERCIAL

MURROW: While some in this country might not agree with Sir Winston's speech, the Prime Minister obviously believed as John Lyly once did when he said: "I have discharged the duty of a friend, in that I have not winked at thy folly." However. bluntly Mr. Churchill stated his case, he, like Aristotle, apparently feels that "many a friendship can be lost for lack of speaking."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, May 12, 1953

This is the news:

The President today named Admiral Arthur W. RADFORD to become the new chairman of the Joint chiefs of staff. Mr. Eisenhower also announced a number of other changes in our top military command. Admiral Radford will take over from General Bradley who is eligible for retirement when his term expires in August. General Ridgeway will come home to be the army chief of staff replacing General Collins. And Ridgeway's job, as head of the North Atlantic treaty forces, will go to Lieut. General Gruenther, now chief of staff to Ridgeway as he was to General Eisenhower. The new chief of naval operations will be Admiral Robert B. Carney who is now commander in chief of the Medietterranean area under Ridgeway. Carney replaces Admiral Fechteler whose term would not have expired for another two years. (He will be given a new assignment.) Like General Bradley, Admiral Fechteler and General Collins are eligible for retirement.

The Defense Department INDICATES these men will take over their news jobs as soon as possible..before the official dates..so they can become better acquainted with Pentagon problems. Senator Taft, who has called for just such a change in the personnel of our top military LEADERSHIP, says all of today's appointments are "excellent.". He's satisfied they will take a complete new look at the entire military program.

Britain's former Prime Minister Atlee today announced his complete support of Sir Winston Churchill's proposal for an informal meeting of the Big Power leaders. And Atlee charged that the hands of the Eisenhower Administration are tied , in seeking a Korean peace, by "elements that do not want a settlement." In a few minutes we'll hear direct reports on the Churchill and Atlee views from both London and Paris.

Pope Pius said today the world leaders should hold frank and loyal discussions as "the first and indispensable condition of peace." He said if this does not happen "one would not know how to take any step towards" the attainment of peace.

The White House has no comment on either the Churchill proposal or the Pope's suggestion. A British-American group, after two years of study, reports that Russia's peace offensive may intensify differences between Washington and London. Dispatches from Moscow says diplomats there believe the Russians will regard Sir Winston's suggestion as a "proposal" while they regard recent Administration speeches as a "challenge."

In Korea tonight, allied negotiators will offer the enemy a new truce counter-roposal. General Clark took it to Seoul today. A South Korean official says it may "modify or reject" the enemy's plan to put Communist Poland and Czechoslovakia on a repatriation commission. ~~General Clark, who discussed our plan with South Korean President Rhee, says only that we are sure it will observe the principle that no prisoners can be forced to return home.~~

The new secretary general of the United Nations--Dag Hammershold--says he believes there is "a very long way to go" before a Korean armistice is reached.

Seven American civilians, held through most of the war in North Korea, arrived in West Berlin today. And in Germany, Theodore Kaghan, the deputy director of the office of public affairs, has resigned. He said: "When you cross swords with Senator McCarthy, it is impossible to remain in the State Department." Kaghan says his recent appearance before the McCarthy committee in Washington, and "the very little support" he received from his superiors, has been "disillusioning."

Two Eisenhower cabinet members disagree on when the government expects to balance the budget. On Monday Defense Secretary Wilson said he didn't think it could be done for two or three years. Today, Treasury Secretary Humphrey said that's "unduly cautious"..he thinks the budget might be balanced by July of next year. But later at a news conference Wilson said he doesn't expect a balanced budget until July of 1955. Mr. Wilson also told reporters: he wants increased production of atomic artillery.. he feels there has been greater improvement in nuclear weapons than in any other type of weapon.

~~Democratic Senator Russell said today that the President's plan to reorganize the Agriculture Department is "nothing but a blank check.. and would be "the most complete abdication of legislative responsibility and power ever made by the Senate."~~

The Weather Bureau predicts that there may be more tornadoes in wide areas of Texas and Louisiana. At least seventy persons have been killed in Texas.

In Argentina, the government has ordered a ban on American news agencies receiving news from abroad. The radio teletype receivers of the United Press, Associated Press and International News have all been shut down by postal inspectors.

And now for recorded reports from Great Britain and France on Prime Minister Churchill's proposal for a big power meeting. First we'll hear [redacted] Paul Niven..reporting from London:

(runs 3" ending: Churchill would find it very difficult to resist)

[redacted]

That was Paul Niven recording from London and now a report from Paris. Dave Schoenbrun reporting:

(runs 3" ending: May God protect me from my friends)

That was Dave Schoenbrun in Paris. And one more reaction to Prime Minister Churchill's speech from Egypt. Premier Naguib said in Cairo that his country is determined to rid itself of British soldiers in the Suez Canal zone "completely." The Egyptian press says the United States has joined Britain "in a conspiracy" of evil against Egypt.

[redacted]

There can be no question that the nations of the free world are united in their search for peace. But how to move...and when...that is something else. Those favoring an aggressive approach would seem to feel as Horace did when he said:"Seize now and here the hour that is, nor trust some later day." Others may take Goethe's more cautious outlook that "the right man is he who seizes the right moment."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, May 12, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... And now, for recorded reports from Great Britain and France on Prime Minister Churchill's proposal for a Big-Power meeting. First we'll hear from Paul Niven, reporting from London.

NIVEN: There is no doubt now, Ed, that Prime Minister Churchill has all of Britain behind him. It was fairly clear, even yesterday, when that fifty-five-minute speech of his held the House of Commons enthralled and brought cheers on all sides. This afternoon ex-Prime Minister Clement Attlee made it official. On behalf of the Labor Party he gave an enthusiastic welcome to what he called "Churchill's remarkable and realistic speech." He specifically endorsed the proposal for a high-level conference with Russia. Then Attlee went on with some observations that Sir Winston hadn't made but to which he nodded agreement. "The United States," said the Laborite leader, "is greatly handicapped in formulating and executing foreign policy. The Administration may think one thing, the Congress another. One sometimes wonders" (and this is quoting Mr. Attlee) "who is more powerful - President Eisenhower or Senator McCarthy? - or even within the Executive Branch. The President makes a speech and then Secretary Dulles seems to contradict him. Then there's the Chiang Kai-shek lobby and elements in the United States which, far from wanting a truce in Korea, hope for an all-out war with China." Now, those are the statements of Clement Attlee today, but they help explain why Churchill spoke as he did yesterday, why the nation wanted him to speak as he did.

It was felt here that a positive Western response to the Soviet peace offensive was long overdue. No important Englishman suggests that the West should lay down its arms, nobody is invoking Chamberlain's phrase "peace in our time". On the other hand, everybody in Britain wants to grab whatever the Russians offer in this or that trouble spot and make the most of it. For some weeks now, London has waited for Washington

For some weeks now, London has waited for Washington to do so. Despite one or two speeches by the President, it's felt here that no clear lead has come. Perhaps most Britons would give the same reasons for American inaction that Attlee gave this afternoon. So, all last week newspapers and politicians were calling on Churchill to take the lead himself. The old statesman is a well-known advocate of personal diplomacy and, indeed, the world's foremost veteran of it. Furthermore, he had set up as his last goal in life a contribution to making peace between East and West.

I spent this morning trying to find out whether Churchill had communicated yesterday's speech to Washington before he made it. The few people in a position to know were tight-lipped. The best evidence suggests that he did. One gathers that he got from the State Department the same cold reception that has come from those quarters today, after the speech. But Churchill thought it worthwhile to go ahead anyway, to urge a high-level meeting with Russia and then spell out his proposal in some detail. The next move is up to Washington, unless Moscow moves in first. And such is the climate of opinion here in London tonite, that if the Kremlin should now propose a date for the conference, Churchill would find it very difficult to resist.

MURROW: That was Paul Niven recording from London. And now a report from Paris ... David Schoenbrun reporting.

SCHOENBRUN: The French and the Germans, the two biggest and strongest of the nations meeting here, are the most critical of Sir Winston Churchill's call for a meeting with the Russians. The Germans are almost obsessed by one overriding fear that Churchill will make a deal behind their backs, will enter into negotiations without consulting West German statesmen and perhaps reach momentous decisions about their frontiers and their future.

German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer will leave here for London on Thursday to see Sir Winston and plead with him to help Germany become a good neighbor in a free community of Western Europe. Churchill himself, when he was leader of the Opposition, raised his powerful voice for such European unity. He urged the French and the Germans to bury the past and to accept themselves as partners. Churchill, the Queen's First Minister, has been a Briton first, a European second - a distant second, they say in Paris.

The French, even more than the Germans, are alarmed by the avenues opened up by Churchill's offer to the Russians. There is no starry-eyed belief here in Paris in Russia's sudden shift, overnite, from a will to power to a will to peace. That's the exact phrase used this afternoon by the French Premier before Parliament, as he asked for more proof of Russia's peaceful intentions. The French, as much or more than other peroples, ardently desire and need peace. They welcome today the words of Pope Pius as they welcomed similar messages of peace from Eisenhower and Churchill. But, an eminently practical people, the French want to be sure of what they're getting. As one high-ranking French official put it to me, "The best way to make peace is to stop waging war." By that he meant, of course, a cease-fire in Korea and Indochina. He said: "You see, peace is not only wonderful, it is indivisible. You cannot make peace and war in two parts of the world at once. And then, the next big step towards peace," said this French diplomat, "is disarmament, controlled disarmament. How can you deal with the ~~Russian~~ German problem," he asked, "how can you talk about any arrangement with Russia so long as there is an Iron Curtain behind which powerful armies rove at will, poised at any moment for attack?"

The French are convinced that both Churchill and Eisenhower have underestimated this essential point. They told Mr. Butler and Mr. Dulles so, two weeks ago, right here in Paris. For two weeks now, the French have been preparing a private message to their Allies, asking for a common approach to Russia along these lines. They were dismayed by Mr. Churchill's personal initiative; for them, a breaking of the common front. More than anything, they were dismayed and angered by his statement that the meeting with Russia should be kept as small as possible. What does that mean, they're asking. A two-power conference? A three-power conference? Perhaps only America, Britain and Russia, leaving the French out, as they were left out at Potsdam? My French source repeated, with a thin and joyless smile, a phrase once uttered by a marshal of Napoleon: "I will protect myself from my enemies; may God protect me from my friends."

MURROW: That was David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 12, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today named Admiral Arthur W. Radford to become the new chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Mr. Eisenhower also announced a number of other changes in our top military command. Admiral Radford will take over from General Bradley who is eligible for retirement when his term expires in August. General Ridgeway will come home to be the army chief of staff replacing General Collins. And Ridgeway's job, as head of the North Atlantic treaty forces, will go to Lieutenant General Grunether, now chief of staff to Ridgeway as he was to General Eisenhower. The new chief of naval operations will be Admiral Robert B. Carney who is now commander in chief of the Mediterranean area under Ridgeway. Carney replaces Admiral Fechteler whose term would not have expired for another two years. He will be given a new assignment. Like General Bradley, Admiral Fechteler and General Collins are eligible for retirement.

The Defense Department indicates these men will take over their new jobs as soon as possible, before the official dates, so they can become better acquainted with Pentagon problems. Senator Taft, who has called for just such a change in the personnel of our top military leadership says all of today's appointments are "excellent." He's satisfied they will take a complete new look at the entire military program.

Britain's former Prime Minister Atlee today announced his complete support of Sir Winston Churchill's proposal for an informal meeting of the Big Power leaders. And Atlee charged that the hands of the Eisenhower Administration are tied, in seeking a Korean peace, by "elements that do not want a settlement." In a few minutes we'll hear direct reports on the Churchill and Atlee views from both London and Paris.

Pope Pius said today the world leaders should hold frank and loyal discussions as "the first and indespensable condition of peace." He said if this does not happen "one would not know how to take any step towards" the attainment of peace.

The White House has no comment on either the Churchill proposal or the Pope's suggestion. A British-American group, after two years of study, reports that Russia's peace offensive may intensify differences between Washington and London. Dispatches from Moscow say diplomats there believe the Russians will regard Sir Winston's suggestion as a "proposal" while they regard recent Administration speeches as a "challenge."

In Korea tonight, allied negotiators will offer the enemy a new truce counter-proposal. General Clark took it to Seoul today. A South Korean official says it may "modify or reject" the enemy's plan to put Communist Poland and Czechoslovakia on a repatriation commission.

The new Secretary General of the United Nations - Dag Hammershold - says he believes there is "a very long way to go" before a Korean armistice is reached.

Seven American civilians held through most of the war in North Korea arrived in West Berlin today. And in Germany, Theodore Kaghan, the deputy director of the office of public affairs, has resigned. He said: "When you cross swords with Senator McCarthy, it is impossible to remain in the State Department." Kaghan says his recent appearance before the McCarthy committee in Washington, and "the very little support" he received from his superiors, has been "disillusioning."

Two Eisenhower cabinet members disagree on when the government expects to balance the budget. On Monday Defense Secretary Wilson said he didn't think it could be done for two or three years. Today, Treasury Secretary Humphrey said that's "unduly cautious"; he thinks the budget might be balanced by July of next year. But later at a news conference Wilson said he doesn't expect a balanced budget until July of 1955. Mr. Wilson also told reporters: he wants increased production of atomic artillery; he feels there has been greater improvement in nuclear weapons than in any other type of weapon.

The Weather Bureau predicts that there may be more tornadoes in wide areas of Texas and Louisiana. At least seventy persons have been killed in Texas.

In Argentina, the government has ordered a ban on American news agencies receiving news from abroad. The radio teletype receivers of the United Press, Associated Press and International News have all been shut down by postal inspectors

And now for recorded reports from Great Britain and France on Prime Minister Churchill's proposal for a big power meeting. First we'll hear Paul Niven reporting from London:

NIVEN: There is no doubt now, Ed, that Prime Minister Churchill has all of Britain behind him. It was fairly clear, even yesterday, when that fifty-five-minute speech of his held the House of Commons enthralled and brought cheers on all sides. This afternoon ex-Prime Minister Clement Attlee made it official. On behalf of the Labor Party he gave an enthusiastic welcome to what he called "Churchill's remarkable and realistic speech." He specifically endorsed the proposal for a high-level conference with Russia. Then Attlee went on with some observations that Sir Winston hadn't made, but to which he nooded agreement. "The United States," said the Laborite leader, "is greatly handicapped in formulating and executing foreign policy. The Administration may think one thing, the Congress another. One sometimes wonders" (and this is quoting Mr. Attlee) "who is more powerful - President Eisenhower or Senator McCarthy? - or even within the Executive Branch. The President makes a speech and then Secretary Dulles seems to contradict him. Then there's the Chiang Kai-Shek lobby and elements in the United States which, far from wanting a truce in Korea, hope for an all-out war with China." Now, those are the statements of Clement Attlee today, but they help explain why Churchill spoke as he did yesterday, why the nation wanted him to speak as he did.

It was felt here that a positive Western response to the Soviet peace offensive was long overdue. No important Englishman suggests that the West should lay down its arms, nobody is invoking Chamberlain's phrase "peace in our time." On the other hand, everybody in Britain wants to grab whatever the Russians offer in this or that trouble spot and make the most of it. For some weeks now, London has waited for Washington to do so. Despite one or two speeches by the President, it's felt here that no clear lead has come. Perhaps most Britons would give the same reasons for American inaction that Attlee gave this afternoon. So, all last week newspapers and politicians were calling on Churchill to take the lead himself. The old statesman is a well-known advocate of personal diplomacy and, indeed, the world's foremost veteran of it. Furthermore, he had set up as his last goal in life a contribution to making peace between East and West.

I spent this morning trying to find out whether Churchill had communicated yesterday's speech to Washington before he made it. The few people in a position to know were tight-lipped. The best evidence suggests that he did. One gathers that he got from the State Department the same cold reception that has come from those quarters today, after the speech. But Churchill thought it worthwhile to go ahead anyway, to urge a high-level meeting with Russia and then spell out his proposal in some detail. The next move is up to Washington, unless Moscow moves in first. And such is the climate of opinion here in London tonight, that if the Kremlin should now propose a date for the conference, Churchill would find it very difficult to resist.

MURROW: That was Paul Niven recording from London. And now a report from Paris, David Schoenbrun reporting.

SCHOENBRUN: The French and the Germans, the two biggest and strongest of the nations meeting here, are the most critical of Sir Winston Churchill's call for a meeting with the Russians. The Germans are almost obsessed by one overriding fear that Churchill will make a deal behind their backs, will enter into negotiations without consulting West German statesmen and perhaps reach momentous decisions about their frontiers and their future.

German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer will leave here for London on Thursday to see Sir Winston and plead with him to help Germany become a good neighbor in a free community of Western Europe. Churchill himself, when he was leader of the opposition, raised his powerful voice for such European unity. He urged the French and the Germans to bury the past and to accept themselves as partners. Churchill, the Queen's First Minister, has been a Briton first, a European second - a distant second, they say in Paris.

The French, even more than the Germans, are alarmed by the avenues opened up by Churchill's offer to the Russians. There is no starry-eyed belief here in Paris in Russia's sudden shift, overnite, from a will to power to a will to peace. That's the exact phrase used this afternoon by the French Premier before Parliament, as he asked for more proof of Russia's peaceful intentions. The French, as much or more than other peoples, ardently desire and need peace. They welcome today the words of Pope Pius as they welcomed similar messages of peace from Eisenhower and Churchill. But, an eminently practical people, the French want to be sure of what they're getting. As one high-ranking French official put it to me, "The best way to make peace is to stop waging war." By that he meant, of course, a cease-fire in Korea and Indochina. He said: "You see, peace is not only wonderful, it is indivisible. You cannot make peace and war in two parts of the world at once. And then, the next big step towards peace," said this French diplomat, "is disarmament, controlled disarmament. How can you deal with the German problem," he asked, "how can you talk about any arrangement with Russia so long as there is an Iron Curtain behind which powerful armies rove at will, poised at any moment for attack?"

The French are convinced that both Churchill and Eisenhower have underestimated this essential point. They told Mr. Butler and Mr. Dulles so, two weeks ago, right here in Paris. For two weeks now, the French have been preparing a private message to their Allies, asking for a common approach to Russia along these lines. They were dismayed by Mr. Churchill's personal initiative; for them, a breaking of the common front. More than anything, they were dismayed and angered by his statement that the meeting with Russia should be kept as small as possible. What does that mean, they're asking. A two-power conference? A three-power conference? Perhaps only America, Britain and Russia, leaving the French out, as they were left out at Potsdam? My French source repeated, with a thin and joyless smile, a phrase once uttered by a marshal of Napoleon: "I will protect myself from my enemies; may God protect me from my friends."

MURROW: That was David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. And one more reaction to Prime Minister Churchill's speech from Egypt. Premier Naguib said in Cairo that his country is determined to rid itself of British soldiers in the Suez Canal zone "completely." The Egyptian press says the United States has joined Britain "in a conspiracy" of evil against Egypt.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There can be no question that the nations of the free world are united in their search for peace. But how to move, and when, that is something else. Those favoring an aggressive approach would seem to feel as Horace did when he said: "Seize now and here, the hour that is, nor trust some later day." Others may take Goethe's more cautious outlook that "the right man is he who seizes the right moment."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday, May 13, 1953

This is the news:

The State Department said today that an agreement on a truce in Korea, and an Austrian peace treaty, would help to demonstrate Russia's sincerity, and "help pave the way to a high level conference." [I would like to discuss the Department's statement in a few minutes.]

Prime Minister Churchill's suggestion for such a conference, and his remarks on Korea today prompted Republican Senator Knowland of California to warn his colleagues of what he called, a Far Eastern Munich. He said the Churchill speech, and another by former prime minister Atlee, make it clear to him, that the British have told us that if we don't accept their advice.. and Communist China persists in the Korean war, then "we must be prepared to go it alone." The Senator said the British want to seat Red China in the United Nations. He feels we should not accept a Korean truce, unless we get a binding pledge, from Russia and Communist China, for free elections in North Korea. And Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois says he feels the British are "nudging us into the position", where we will have to accept the main features of the enemy's truce proposal.

There were other reactions to the British speeches: Republican Representative Short of Missouri says Congress is tried of taking "dictation"

"from so-called allies."

Chester Bowles, our former ambassador to India, says that if we agree to a Korean truce, and general peace in Asia follows, "we must seriously consider" admitting Red China to the United Nations. He said we would not be able to withstand pressure for this from the rest of the world.

Adlai Stevenson, now in India, says he endorses Sir Winston Churchill's call for a big power meeting.

General Ridgeway in Paris told reporters that from a soldier's viewpoint "there is no information known to him that indicates a lessening of the threat from Russia."

The Russian press today published a 600-word summary of the Churchill speech. The papers asked if the British "intend to continue the policy of remilitarization of West Germany?"

The Chinese Communist radio says North Korean General Nam Il has rejected the allied plan for a truce in Korea. Radio Peiping says the plan is ridiculous..part of our "stalling tactics"..and Washington knew it would be unacceptable. Our latest proposals called for all North Korean prisoners, who do not want to go home, to be set free when an armistice is signed. We object to the enemy plan to have the Poles and Czechs, among others, send truops to Korea to supervise the armistice. We would permit only Indian troops to do this job. We also refuse to permit the fate of prisoners who do not want to go home to be settled by a political conference after an armistice is signed. And we want to make sure that the enemy WILL not threaten the prisoners they talk to. (in their attempts to convince them to return home.) There will be another truce meeting tonight.

Today about 200 of our fighter-bombers attacked an enemy troop and supply center near Sinanju. Not one Mig came up to fight us.

The Pentagon reports that we suffered 153 casualties in Korea last week: 46 killed..the rest wounded or missing.

In Moscow today, Ambassador Bohlen asked Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov to release from the Soviet Union the Russian wives of American citizens. They are now denied exit visas.

Egypt charges that the British have killed seven Egyptians and wounded 24 others in the Suez Canal zone since the first of March. The British say two of their people have been killed, two wounded, since the first of April. And the chief of staff to Premier Naguib said today that unless the British get out of the Suez area, within two or three months, there might be a popular uprising against them. The British ordered Marine Commandoes and a squadron of destroyers to the Suez zone.

In Washington the army issued a draft call for 23-thousand men in July. (the lowest quota since last June.) The Defense Department says this is in line with the new reduced military budget.

The House today passed and sent to the White House a bill that confirms the states' ownership of oil-bearing lands under the marginal seas. [redacted] The House also passed a bill giving the federal government control of all submerged lands beyond the boundaries of the states.

Chairman Hicknlooper, of a Senate committee that has been investigating the Voice of America, said today: we must strengthen the Voice.. [redacted] he's going to try to stop an order that would kill broadcasts to Latin America.. he thinks our world-wide propaganda has greatly improved. The Senator says: there is nothing wrong with the voice that cannot be straightened out. And he made no mention of Senator McCarthy's claim..in another investigation of the Voice.. that it has been sabotaged by Communists. Senator Hickenlooper says he favors making the Voice semi-independent from the State Department, which now controls it.

Foreign aid officials today told Congress that about one-third of the arms we have earmarked for our overseas allies have now been delivered. And shipments of the rest are being "materially speeded."

The Census Bureau says seven million 105-thousand persons are now on federal, state or local government payrolls. That's one out of every 22 persons in the country. The largest number of government employes work for the local governments: cities, counties, twonships and school districts.

Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois said today that the budget could be balanced if members of Congressional appropriations committees "show a little guts..reduce federal grants to states and a take a big cut in foreign and military spending.

Our State Department is gradually making it clear that we take what the British would call a "dim view" of Sir Winston Churchill's proposal for a high level conference. A spokesman for the Department calls the Churchill speech, "a further manifestation of his own high purpose and the fervent desire of all peoples of the free world to achieve peace." The spokesman for the State Department today re-affirmed President Eisenhower's willingness to meet the Communists halfway, "when and if there is concrete evidence that such a meeting would produce positive results." The State Department does not consider that there is now such evidence. A truce in Korea and a Peace Treaty for Austria might possibly be regarded as evidence of good faith.

It is necessary to remind ourselves that there is such a thing as domestic politics in Britain - that Mr. Churchill's Party suffered substantial losses in the recent municipal elections - and that he has been under pressure to take the initiative in foreign affairs. There is some evidence that the British Foreign Office does not share Sir Winston's belief that useful results might be achieved through a meeting of Presidents and Premiers. [He made the speech without consultation with his foreign policy experts.]

The French Government is disturbed, mainly because it fears the French might be excluded from the meeting. But the fact remains, and the evidence is now overwhelming, that Churchill spoke the mind of his nation, [and probably of most of Western Europe as well.] It is also a fact, that nothing that has been said by the State Department, or by various Senators, has effectively answered the major question raised by Sir Winston. He said, in effect, "I am not sure what the meeting would produce, but I can see no reason why we should be afraid to have a try at it." Our State Department says, "We will sit down and talk with the Russians when we have concrete evidence that the talks will produce positive results. This is rather like a fighter, who says he will enter the ring, providing one or the other wins a clear-cut decision - it could be a draw - in this case it might well be, no one knows. But in terms of the impact upon millions of minds, if we are going to refuse to sit down and talk with the Russians, we had better find a better answer than the one so far advanced; and also an answer to Churchill's question: "Why should we be afraid to have a try at it?"

What follows is a little poem. It may be contended, that poetry has no place in a news broadcast. This came from the typewriter of E.B. White, and appears in the current issue of that excellent magazine "The New Yorker". Here it is:.....

THE ABC OF SECURITY

Said Mr. A to Mr. B,
"I doubt the loyalty of C."

Said Mr. B to Mr. A,
"I'm shocked and stunned by what you say;
We'd better check on him today.
And since you've brought up Mr. C,
I feel that I must mention D.
I rather doubt his loyalty."

Said Mr. F to Mr. G,
"G, have you ever noticed B?
What do you make of his loyalty?"

Said Mr. G to Mr. F, "Lower your voice - people aren't deaf!
I wouldn't want you quoting me,
But sure, I've always noticed B."

Said Mr. C to Mr. A,
"I saw a funny thing today;
At least, it seemed quite odd to me.
I saw F whispering with G
And I just caught the name of B."

"No, really?" answered A to C.
"Well, anyway - I don't know B.
I guess it's just as well for me."

And so the subtle poison spread
Until there rose a Mr. Zed.
The lightning played around his head.
"My fellow-countrymen," he said,
"The past, as you'll observe, is dead,
The alphabet's discredited;
You can't trust teachers now to teach,
You can't trust ministers to preach,
And it has been my special labor,
To prove that none can trust his neighbor.
In fact, it's amply clear to see
There's no one you can trust, but me.
And by a happy turn of fate
I've come to purify the state.
My methods will be swift and strong
Against the crime of thinking wrong.
I know the cure for heresy
And you can leave it all to me.
Leave everything to me!" he said.

"Hurrah!" they cried. "Hurrah for Zed!"

That was a poetic and penetrating comment on the current scene, written by E.B. White for "The New Yorker". It seemed to this reporter that what Mr. White had to say deserved wide circulation. And the reading of his verse was my effort to contribute to that end.

It is not very often that the occasion justifies our reading some poetry on the air. The exception was Mr. White's recent effort in the New Yorker. John Ruskin once remarked:"A poet is a person who puts things together...not as a watchmaker steel or a shoemaker leather...but who puts life into action". E.S. Dallas contended:"Good poetry has a latency of meaning beyond the simple statement of facts." For these reasons, we quoted E.B. White.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday, May 14 1953

This is the news:

The President said today, that he has no objection to a conference of world leaders. But first he'd like to see some evidence of good faith from Moscow. #

When the President was asked by reporters, about Prime Minister Churchill's recent suggestion for a high level conference, he said he wants valid deeds from the Russians.. he's seen no evidence of their good faith, OR SINCERITY. [redacted] He's willing to take almost any chance to promote world peace. B.T. [redacted] the President said, that unless he's mistaken, the quick rejection of our truce proposal by the Communists in Korea, indicates a sort of "fixed attitude" on their part.

The 20th meeting of the truce negotiators begins some hours from now. And, as General Harrison, our chief negotiator puts it: "There is a complete difference of opinion on the major points." The enemy has flatly rejected our proposals for exchanging war prisoneers.. [redacted] And we have asked the Communists to explain [redacted] why they [redacted] illegally sent some allied prisoners, to prison camps in Manchuria.. why they forced others to work as [redacted] labor troops.

The State Department says it is "disappointed" at the enemy's rejection of our truce proposal. And [redacted] Republican Senator Ferguson has called on the President to speak out now..to win British support for a firm policy towards the Communists in Korea and elsewhere.

[redacted] The President, at his news conference, took note of differing American and British attitudes. He told reporters he does not believe that the rift with the British over Korea is as wide as it might appear. And in answer to a question about Former Prime Minister Atlee's recent statement that some elements in America do not want a Korean peace, the President said:"I have met no one in America who does not want peace in Korea."

Senator McCarthy took the floor of the Senate today to attack [redacted] CLEMENT Atlee [redacted] He feels the British should apologize to the President and the American people for Atlee's remarks. He called it an insulting speech.. (although he made no reference to the Atlee suggestion that he didn't know who was more powerful in this country (FOREIGN POLICY) the President or the Senator.) [redacted]

[redacted] McCARTHY [redacted] notified Atlee that..as he put it.."the days of treason and appaesement are passed in America. McCarthy said if the British want to back out of the Korean war, LET THEM BE DAMNED, this nation "has the guts and strength" to fight it alone..we want peace with honor, without surrender. [redacted]

In London, Mr. Atlee replied with a statement: HE SAID.. He and his Labor PARTY [redacted]g have been fighting Communism long before McCarthy was ever heard of. He made no attack on America. He has seen some statements by some Americans who think an all-out war against China is desireable. He pointed out that his [redacted] speech recognized America's great service to the world. And just as McCarthy said Atlee doesn't represent the British people, Atlee said no Briton judges America by McCarthy.

There was more of this on both sides of the ocean. Republican Senator Jenner said the British are now showing their thanks for [redacted] twice saving them from defeat and from bancruptcy. Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois said the [redacted] knife will go deeper into the foreign aid budget as a result of the appeasement note he says appears to be rising in Great Britain. Dirksen wonders if we have been "played for a sucker" and he threw in an appeal for full freedom for Ireland.

Republican Senator Cooper of Kentucky appealed for moderation on both sides of the ocean. He said Atlee's speech could hinder the Korean truce negotiations.. "but so could immoderate rash remarks" in the Senate.

And in London: Tom O'Brien, a member of Parliament and leader of Britain's 8-million member Trade Union Congress said Senator McCarthy is "a greater gift to Communism than Judas Iscariot was to the high priests and pharisees." And left-wing Laborite Richard Crossman challenged America to cut off British aid..He called it the greatest infringement on British soverignty they have ever had.

And the Moscow press and radio carried lengthy reviews of what it called the "ever growing dissastifaction" in the House of Commons with various aspects of American policy.

I'd like to add a FOOT- note to this debate in a few minutes.

The President, at his news conference today, ALSO spoke of domestic matters. He plans a radio speech next Tuesday night to explain to us the problems of national security..the budget and taxes.

[redacted]

[redacted]. He disagreed with a suggestion that his choice of Admiral Radford to be the new chairman of the joint chiefs of staff means a new emphasis on Asiatic problems. The President said: the world is round..it has no end... there may be tactical shifts from time to time..but our basic thinking has to be global, or it's bound to go wrong. Mr. Eisenhower SAID [redacted] Defense Secretary Wilson wanted an entirely new team, and the President agreed. [redacted]

Senator Taft said today that he [redacted] did not influence the President's choice of the new Joint chiefs of staff..although Defense Secretary Wilson consulted him in advance about the selections. TAFT IS [redacted] particularly pleased with the choice of Admiral Radford..to head the Joint Chiefs. "Because..Taft says..he's a man who has said we are capable of fighting an aggressive war in the Pacific."

Our deputy delegate to the United Nations--James J. Wadsworth-- says "only one soldier out of five in the line in Korea today is an American." Most of them are South Koreans.

~~The House appropriations committee has recommend an Agriculture Department budget that is [illegible] one point four per cent longer than requested by the President.~~

The Illinois Parole Board has refused to free Nathan Leopold who has been in prison for 28 years for the murder of Bobby Franks.

~~Carlos Romulo, the Philippine envoy to Washington and chief delegate to the United Nations. He is going to seek the nomination for president in the Philippines.~~

Egypt today issued orders making it difficult for the British in the Suez Canal zone to buy such things as food, alcohol and building materials from Egyptians.

Secretary of State Dulles left Isreal today, calling it a dynamic country.. and later, in neighboring Jordan, he refused to associate himself with an Arab official's criticism of the Truman Administration's aid to Isreal. He said Americans do not criticize each other abroad.

Edward R. Murrow: May 14, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Anglo-American relations are passing through a rather turbulent time, a period when the thoughtful citizen might well fasten his seat belt and wait for the storm to subside; there have been worse ones before. Sir Winston Churchill suggests that there ought to be a small high-level meeting. We don't think the time is ripe for such a gathering. (It is his right to propose and our right to disagree.) Mr. Attlee, the leader of the Opposition in England, suggests that our Constitution is not a perfect instrument of government, and that some Americans are rather fond of the idea of an all-out war with China. In the first place, our Constitutional procedure is, and will probably for a long time remain a mystery to European politicians. In the second place, there are people in this country who favor policies that would risk if not ensure an all-out war with China. And so now the transatlantic name-calling is in full cry. And it is not to be doubted that the men in Moscow find the sound most pleasing. Fortunately, relations between nations do not depend upon speech-making and name-calling. Such relations are determined by cultural, economic and geographical facts. The British need us to survive, and we need them, unless we are prepared to face squarely the prospect of becoming merely a great island off the coast of Kamchatka, with the rest of the world either united against us, or indifferent to our fate.

In the course of the current name-calling it would be well to remember that it is the Russians rather than the British who are the architects of our tribulation. The British have no monopoly on being right, neither have we. The two nations are joined in alliance not because of mutual love, but because of mutual necessity. Disagreement, even on basic policies, is not necessarily bad, so long as we don't accept the Russian invitation to hold our coats while we fight. When the British say our President says one thing, and then Mr. Dulles appears to change the course; when they ask whether Eisenhower or McCarthy dominates our foreign policy, they merely echo similar questions raised here. When we say the British have too much appetite to trade behind the Iron Curtain, that's a sentiment you can hear echoed in Britain. Some of us contend that the British are trying to nudge us towards a "Far Eastern Munich." The British had their Munich, and a thundering controversy it created at the time, inside Britain. Anyone who was there at the time was obliged to report that the Chamberlain Government acted at that time in accordance with the desires of the majority of the British people. In the course of the following year the nation changed its mind, went to war with almost a sense of relief, and once in it stayed, stayed for a year alone while we debated - and no Briton forgets that fact.

In the postwar years this nation has given to Britain and to our former enemies generous and unprecedented assistance. But that aid has not bought the silence or acquiescence of either our allies or our former enemies. We have had only about six years' experience in trying to make a peacetime alliance work. The British have been trying to adjust themselves to a power position vastly inferior to the one they occupied for hundreds of years. The adjustment on both sides is difficult. At the height of British power they were too strong and too fat to be universally loved, respected and catered to. That's the position we now occupy. We contend that we neither have nor want satellites. The British are engaged in proving that that is so. Their policies like ours, are based upon that mysterious thing called the ebb and flow of public opinion, the slow business of a nation making up its collective mind. It is true that the minority and often irresponsible voices carry as clearly across the Atlantic as the voices with greater restraint and responsibility. The keystone of relations between Britain and this country is not complete harmony of view about Korea, or trade, or conferences. The basis of the relationship is that the people in both countries desire to live in the same kind of world - share together a common concept of the relationship between the individual and the State. Until one nation or the other departs from that common concept, the alliance will stand. # The current transatlantic caterwauling may give our enemies some comfort, but unless both nations have taken leave of their senses and their traditions, it represents nothing more than a lusty argument as to how best to achieve a common objective.

~~Some warm words are being exchanged from both sides of the Atlantic - despite the fact that~~ we and the British ~~still~~ seek a common goal. William Sumner once said:"Doctrines are the most frightful tyrants to which men ever are subject, because doctrines get inside of a man's own reason and betray him against himself." The Greek philospher Chrysippus warned:"Anger is a blind thing;it often prevents our seeing obvious matters or ~~the~~ obscures matters already understood."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday — May 15, 1953

This is the news:

The State Department issued a statement tonight, saying: "We are ready to write an honorable truce in Korea. But the United Nations command, will not surrender its belief, that no (PRISONERS) shall be forced to go home." The Department says its statement is designed to correct some misunderstandings.. and answer questions. This could have been a reference to Prime Minister Churchill's recent statement, that the Communist plan for a truce could be the basis for an agreement. And it could be an answer to India's Prime Minister Nehru, who said today that he prefers the enemy plan, to the counter-proposal we made the Communists. Mr. Nehru feels that the Communist plan, is closer to the Indian-sponsored resolution, that the United Nations has adopted.

The State Department statement says on one point in the truce negotiations there can be no question: "The princple that force shall not be used to compel resisting prisoners to go home, excludes every form of coercion." The Department says this is not a technicality.. its a fundemental point of Free World philosophy.. [redacted] We will continue to explore every possibility for an honorable and reasonable truce. But we will not agree to regard human beings as mere chattel to be held and used as such.

At the LATEST Panmunjuom conference the Communists condemned our truce proposal and we condemned their plan. Again the enemy argued for a political meeting after the armistice to decide what to do with prisoners who refuse to go home. We say that could mean indefinite captivity for these men..

IN a talk to the Indian parliament today, Prime Minister Nehru approved Sir Winston Churchill's suggestion for a big power conference on the cold war. [redacted]..

[redacted] in Washington Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey, called on the free world for unity. "And,"he said," the brotherhood of the British and American people is fundamental to that unity." He said he could imagine nothing more pleasing to the Kremlin than the recent criticism between some members of our Senate and Great Britain's House of Commons.

[redacted]

3

Defense Secretary Wilson said tonight that the rearmament program must continue, even if peace comes in Korea. But, he said, the Administration believes "uncle Sam's big old pocket-book has been opened just too wide." Wilson said: "the free world has now reached a posture of defense, but the major danger remains."

General Bradley, the retiring chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, said today: "The possibility of war is still with us. The risk continues to be great."

[redacted] is no indication that [redacted] the [redacted] of Russia or her satellites has diminished.. [redacted] there is [redacted] indication that they will continue to develop and modernize the forces they [redacted]

then General Bradley spoke of the cost of defense.. and he made it clear he was not refering to the current Eisenhower budget. He said that we will have to spend at least 3-billion dollars a month.. (36-billions a year). for our own defense and aid to our allies "as far into the future as we can possibly see. He cautioned against those who would put economy ahead of security. [redacted]

In West Germany today, the upper House approved the European army treaty and the peace contract with the allies. This makes west Germany the first European nation to ratify the west's defense plan..under which the Germans will supply 500-thousand soldiers. But the plan must first be declared constiutional by Germany's high court. That will probably be done. And then the European army plan must be approved by France and the four other members.

In this country, the President told a convocation at William and Mary College [redacted] that Communism should be sought out and uprooted at any place where it can affect the nation's life. "But," he said, "the true way to uproot Communism in this country is to understand what freedom means, and thus develop such an impregnable wall that no thought of Communism can enter." The General also told his audience: "There is no security for a free nation in the sword alone."

Here in New York, Cedric H. Belfrage, the British-born editor of the "National Guardian" was arrested and taken to Ellis Island for deportation. He has refused to tell Congressional committees whether he is a Communist. [redacted]

The British news agency Reuters says tonight that the Prague radio has reported that A.P. Correspondent Bill Otis has been "brought under" a recent Czech amnesty for certain types of prisoners. The Prague radio did not say whether Otis has been [redacted] realeased. He has been in a Czech prison for two years after conviction on charges of spying.

Edward R. Murrow: May 15, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Mr. George F. Kennan is generally ~~agreed to be~~ considered our foremost expert on Russia. He has spent his adult life in the study of Communism. He was our Ambassador to Moscow until the Russians declared him unacceptable. (The present administration severed Mr. Kennan's connection with the State Department.) Mr. Kennan is making a speech tonight at Notre Dame University. Speaking of forces now at large in the American society, Kennan says: "They all march in one way or another under the banner of an alarmed and exercised anti-Communism, but an anti-Communism of a quite special variety, bearing an air of excited discovery and proprietorship, as though no one had ever known before that there was a Communist danger; as though no one had ever thought about it and taken its measure; as though it had all begun about the year 1945, and these people were the first to learn of it."

Mr. Kennan has no quarrel to pick with the ostensible purposes of the people in whom these forces are manifest. But he has "the deepest misgivings about the direction and effects of their efforts. "They distort and exaggerate the dimensions of the problem with which they profess to deal." "They confuse internal and external aspects of the Communist threat. They insist on portraying, as contemporary realities things that had their actuality years ago - and having thus incorrectly stated the problem it is no wonder that these people consistently find the wrong answers. They tell us to remove our eyes from the constructive and positive purposes, and to pursue with fanaticism the negative and vindictive ones. They sow timidity where there should be boldness, fear where there should be serenity, suspicion where there should be confidence and generosity. In this way they impel us - in the name of our salvation from the dangers of Communism - to many of the habits of thought and action which our Soviet adversaries, I am sure, would most like to see us adopt; and which they have tried unsuccessfully over a period of some 35 years to graft upon us through the operations of their Communist Party."

Mr. Kennan contends that "these forces look with suspicion both on the sources of intellectual and artistic activity in this country, and on impulses of this nature coming to us from abroad. The personal movements and affairs of great scholars and artists are thus passed upon and controlled by people who have no inkling or understanding for the creative work these same scholars and artists perform. In this way we begin to draw about ourselves a cultural curtain similar in some respects to the Iron Curtain of our adversaries." Mr. Kennan continues: "The tendency of these forces is exclusive and intolerant, quick to reject, slow to receive, intent on discovering what ought not to be rather than what ought to be. If uncountered, these people would eventually narrow the area of political and cultural respectability to a point where it included only themselves, ("the excited accusers") and excluded everything and everybody not embraced in the profession of denunciation." Mr. Kennan adds: "I tremble when I see this attempt to make a semi-religious cult out of emotional political currents of the moment, and particularly when I note that these currents are ones exclusively negative in nature, designed to appeal only to men's capacity for hatred and fear; never to their capacity for forgiveness and charity and understanding." Says Mr. Kennan: "I have lived more than ten years of my life in totalitarian countries. I know where this sort of thing leads. I know it to be the most shocking and XXX cynical disservice one can do to the credulity and to the spiritual equilibrium of one's fellow men."

Mr. Kennan detects "a conscious rejection and ridicule of intellectual effort and distinction. They come together here with a deap-seated weakness in the American character; a certain shy self-consciousness that tends to deny interests other than those of business, sport or war. What is it that causes us to huddle together, herd-like, in tastes and enthusiasms that represent only the common denominator of popular acquiescence, rather than to show ourselves receptive to the tremendous flights of creative imagination of which the individual mind has shown itself capable. Is it that we are forgetful of the true sources of our moral strength? Afraid of ourselves, afraid to look into the chaos of our own breasts? Afraid of the bright, penetrating light of the great teachers? This fear of the untypical, this quest for security within the walls of secular uniformity - these are traits of our national character we would do well to beware of, and to examine for their origins. They receive much encouragement these days, much automatic and unintended encouragement by virtue of the growing standardization of the cultural, and in many respects the educational influences to which our people are being subjected. The immense impact of commercial advertising, and the mass media, on our lives is - let us make no mistake about it - an impact that tends to encourage passivity, to encourage aquiescence and uniformity. It may not seem to many of us too dangerous that we should all live, dress, eat, hear and read substantially alike. But we forget how easily this uniformity of thought and habit can be exploited when the will to exploit it is there. We forget how easily it can slip over into the domination of our spiritual and political lives by self-appointed custodians who contrive to set themselves at the head of popular emotional currents." Says Mr. Kennan: "There is no greater mistake we of this generation can make than to imagine that the tendencies which in other countries have led to the nightmare of totalitarianism will, as they appear in our own midst, politely pause (out of some delicate respect for American tradition) at the point where they would begin to affect our independence of mind and belief."

Those were excerpts from a speech being made later tonight by FORMER Ambassador George Kennan at Notre Dame University.

There was a wartime sign in England reading: "YOU HAVE BEEN WARNED". It seems to this reporter that Mr. Kennan has done what one man can do to warn us.

Former Ambassador Kennan has eloquently stated the case for tolerance. Forty-three years ago, Teddy Roosevelt summed it up this way:"In a republic we must learn to combine intensity of conviction with a broad tolerance of difference of conviction." A hundred and 49 years ago, Jefferson had this to say:"I tolerate with the utmost latitude the right of others to differ from me without imputing tp them criminality."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 15, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The State Department issued a statement tonight saying: "We are ready to write an honorable truce in Korea. But the United Nations command will not surrender its belief that no prisoners shall be forced to go home." The Department says its statement is designed to correct some misunderstandings and answer questions. This could have been a reference to Prime Minister Churchill's recent statement that the Communist plan for a truce could be the basis for an agreement. And it could be an answer to India's Prime Minister Nehru who said today that he prefers the enemy plan to the counter-proposal we made the Communists. Mr. Nehru feels that the Communist plan is closer to the Indian-sponsored resolution that the United Nations has adopted.

The State Department statement says on one point in the truce negotiations there can be no question: "The principle that force shall not be used to compel resisting prisoners to go home excludes every form of coercion." The Department says this is not a technicality; its a fundamental point of Free World philosophy. We will continue to explore every possibility for an honorable and reasonable truce. But we will not agree to regard human beings as mere chattel to be held and used as such.

At the latest Panmunjom conference the Communists condemned our truce proposal and we condemned their plan. Again the enemy argued for a political meeting after the armistice to decide what to do with prisoners who refuse to go home. We say that could mean indefinite captivity for these men.

In a talk to the Indian parliament today, Prime Minister Nehru approved Sir Winston Churchill's suggestion for a big power conference on the cold war.

In Washington Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey, called on the free world for unity. "And," he said, "the brotherhood of the British and American people is fundamental to that unity." He said he could imagine nothing more pleasing to the Kremlin than the recent criticism between some members of our Senate and Great Britain's House of Commons.

Defense Secretary Wilson said tonight that the rearmament program must continue even if peace comes in Korea. But, he said, the Administration believes "Uncle Sam's big old pocket-book has been opened just too wide." Wilson said: "The free world has now reached a posture of defense, but the major danger remains.

General Bradley, the retiring chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, said "The possibility of war is still with us. The risk continues to be great." Then General Bradley spoke of the cost of defense, and he made it clear he was not referring to the current Eisenhower budget. He said that we will have to spend at least 3-billion dollars a month (36 billions a year) for our own defense and aid to our allies "as far into the future as we can possibly see. He cautioned against those who would put economy ahead of security.

In West Germany today, the upper House approved the European army treaty and the peace contract with the allies. This makes West Germany the first European nation to ratify the west's defense plan under which the Germans will supply 500-thousand soldiers. But the plan must first be declared constitutional by Germany's high court. That will probably be done. And then the European army plan must be approved by France and the four other members.

In this country, the President told a convocation at William and Mary College that Communism should be sought out and uprooted at any place where it can affect the nation's life. "But" he said, "the true way to uproot Communism in this country is to understand what freedom means, and thus develop such an impregnable wall that no thought of Communism can enter." The General also told his audience: "There is no security for a free nation in the sword alone."

Here in New York, Cedric H. Belfrage, the British-born editor of the "National Guardian" was arrested and taken to Ellis Island for deportation. He has refused to tell Congressional committees whether he is a Communist.

The British news agency Reuters says tonight that the Prague radio has reported that A.P. Correspondent Bill Oatis has been "brought under" a recent Czech amnesty for certain types of prisoners. The Prague radio did not say whether Oatis has been released. He has been in a Czech prison for two years after conviction on charges of spying.

Mr. George F. Kennan is generally considered our foremost expert on Russia. He has spent his adult life in the study of Communism. He was our Ambassador to Moscowuntil the Russians declared him unacceptable. The present administration severed Mr. Kennan's connection with the State Department. Mr. Kennan is making a speech tonight at Notre Dame University. Speaking of forces now at large in the American society, Kennan says: "They all march in one way or another under the banner of an alarmed and exercised anti-Communism, but an anti-Communism of a quite special variety, bearing an air of excited discovery and proprietorship, as though no one had ever known before that there was a Communist danger; as though no one had ever thought about it and taken its measure; as though it had all begun about the year 1945, and these people were the first to learn of it."

Mr. Kennan has no quarrel to pick with the ostensible purposes of the people in whom these forces are manifest. But he has "the deepest misgivings about the direction and effects of their efforts." They distort and exaggerate the dimensions of the problem with which they profess to deal. They confuse internal and external aspects of the Communist threat. They insist on portraying, as contemporary realities things that had their actuality years ago - and having thus incorrectly stated the problem it is no wonder that these people consistently find the wrong answers. They tell us to remove our eyes from the constructive and positive purposes, and to pursue with fanaticism the negative and vindictive ones. They sow timidity where there should be boldness, fear where there should be serenity, suspicion where there should be confidence and generosity. In this way they impel us - in the name of our salvation from the dangers of Communism - to many of the habits of thought and action which our Soviet adversaries, I am sure, would most like to see us adopt; and which they have tried unsuccessfully over a period of some 35 years to graft upon us through the operations of their Communist Party." Mr. Kennan contends that "these forces look with suspicion both on the sources of intellectual and artistic activity in this country, and on impulses of this nature coming to us from abroad. The personal movements and affairs of great scholars and artists are thus passed upon and controlled by people who have no inkling or understanding for the creative work these same scholars and artists perform. In this way we begin to draw about ourselves a cultrual curtain similar in some respects to the Iron Curtain of our adversaries." Mr. Kennan continues: "The tendency of these forces is exclusive and intolerant, quick to reject, slow to receive, intent on discovering what ought not to be rather than what ought to be. If uncountered, these people would eventually narrow the area of political and cultural respectability to a point where it included only themselves, "the excited accusers" and excluded everything and everybody not embraced in the profession of denunciation." Mr. Kennan adds: "I tremble when I see this attempt to make a semi-religious cult out of emotional political currents of the moment, and particularly when I note that these currents are ones exclusively negative in nature, designed to appeal only to men's capacity for hatred and fear; never to their capacity for foregiveness and charity and understanding." Says Mr. Kennan: "I have lived more than ten years of my life in totalitarian countries. I know where this sort of thing leads. I know it to be the most shocking and cynical disservice one can do to the credulity and to the spiritual equilibrium of one's fellow men."

Mr. Kennan detects "a conscious rejection and ridicule of intellectual effort and distinction. They come together here with a deep-seated weakness in the American character; a certain shy self-consciousness that tends to deny interests other than those of business, sport or war. What is it that causes us to huddle together, herd-like, in tastes and enthusiasms that represent only the common denominator of popular acquiescence, rather than to show ourselves receptive to the tremendous flights of creative imagination of which the individual mind has shown itself capable. Is it that we are foregetul of the true sources of our moral strength? Afraid of ourselves, afraid to look into the chaos of our own breasts? Afraid of the bright, penetrating light of the great teachers? This fear of the untypical, this quest for security within the walls of secular uniformity - these are traits of our national character we would do well to beware of, and to examine for their origins. They receive much encouragement these days, much automatic and unintended encouragement by virtue of the growing standardization of the cultural, and in many respects the educational influences to which our people are being subjected. The immense impact of commercial advertising and the mass media, on our lives is - let us make no mistake about it - an impact that tends to encourage passivity, to encourage aquiescence and uniformity. It may not seem to many of us too dangerous that we should all live, dress, eat, hear and read substantially alike. But we forget how easity this uniformity of thought and habit can be exploited when the will to exploit it is there. We forget how easily it can slip over into the domination of our spiritual and political lives by self-appointed custodians who contrive to set themselves at the head of popular emotional currents." Says Mr. Kennan: "There is no greater mistake we of this generation can make than to imagine that the tendencies which in other countries have led to the nightmare of totalitarianism will, as they appear in our own midst, politely pause out of some delicate respect for American tradition at the point where they would begin to affect our independence of mind and belief."

Those were excerpts from a speech being made later tonight by former Ambassador George Kennan at Notre Dame University.

There was a wartime sign in England reading: "YOU HAVE BEEN WARNED." It seems to this reporter that Mr. Kennan has done what one man can do to warn us.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Former Ambassador Kennan has eloquently stated the case for tolerance. Forty-three years ago, Teddy Roosevelt summed it up this way: "In a republic we must learn to combine intensity of conviction with a broad tolerance of difference of conviction." A hundred and 49 years ago, Jefferson had this to day: "I tolerate with the utmost latitude the right of others to differ from me without imputing to them criminality."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday, May 18, 1953

This is the news:

A.P. Correspondent Bill Otis returned to this country today. (after MORE THAN ~~[illegible]~~ 2 YEARS in a Czech prison.) he ~~and~~ told reporters: that from the Czech point of view there was some justification for his arrest. (We'll hear excerpts from an interview with Otis in a few minutes.)

Here in Washington, Chairman Cole of the Atomic Energy Committee, says that the Administration has decided to cut about 30 per cent, from the Atomic Energy Commission's budget. The nuclear weapons program will not be affected. But the use of atomic energy for civilian power development, and the constuction of atomic power plants for ships and planes will be delayed. The submarine project will not be affected.

~~The Army says its is studying "all installations [illegible] since the Korean war"..to determine which ones should be closed under the Administration's economy program.~~

General Ridgeway, the ~~former~~ commander of NATO..the North Atlantic Treaty forces..told a House committee today, that it would be "unwise" to cut the Administration's request for 5.8 billions for aid to our allies. Ridgeway, who is to become army chief of staff, told the Representatives:

even when NATO's present goals are achieved "we will still fall short of the minimum defensive strength" we'd need to "prevent serious reversals" in case of attack in Western Europe...Air power remains the weakest link in western defense.. we have major deficiencies of ammunition and supplies... continued aid to our allies is essential to our own security, as well as the security of Western Europe.

And in Paris, General Grunther, who will suceed Ridgeway as Nato commander, told reporters: western taxpayers will have to carry heavy defense burdens, "for a long time to come"

In Londom, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons to stop nagging the allied negotiators at Panmunjom. Sir Winston said the British are constantly exchanging views on the truce talks with Washington.

The talks are in recess..but the air war over Korea has been stepped up. Our pilots shot down 12 Migs today. And the air force says that in the last six days, the enemy has sent from 800 to 900 Migs against our Sabre Jets. IN these six days we destroyed 36, and damaged 18 others. In the first three days of fighting we lost no planes. (there is no report on the last three days.)

The Navy says nine men on the Destroyer Brush were injured last Friday when enemy shore fire hit the destroyer off Wonsan.

In Indo-China, French troops, with little opposition, have recaptured a town 90 miles southeast of the capital of Laos. And Adlai Stevenson, writing in Look magazine, says the French should make a prompt and clear-cut statement on their intentions about Viet-Nam independence. He says that in Indo-China today the French are too often behaving "as in the colonial past."

In Egypt, the Foreign Ministers says his country has made strong representations to the British against "incidents" in the Suez Canal zone.

Here in Washington, the National Manpower Council reported to the president that we have failed to provide the proper education and training for a vast reservoir of highly intelligent young people. The Council says that less than half the young Americans capable of acquiring a college education actually get such an education. Two fifths of those who start college do not graduate. We have a shortage of school teachers..some kinds of phsyicians; and a shortage of scientists and engineers has had a serious consequence on our defense program.

The President today postponed the scheduled signing of the bill to give coastal states title to submerged lands off their shores. The White House says arrangements will be made for the signing later this week when a number of interested persons will attend.

~~And the President told Jacob Potofsky of the C.I.O. clothing workers, it's all right with him if the C.I.O. Political Action Committee keeps track of the time he spends on the golf course. Mr. Eisenhower said he would go out golfing every day if he could.~~

~~Secretary of Agriculture Benson today asked Congress to permit him to re-organize the department.. but he refuses to disclose his specific plans.~~

~~Labor Secretary Durkin says the Administration probably will propose changes in the Taft-Hartley law "very shortly." He says the White House has asked his department and the Commerce Department for recommendations.~~

David Dubinsky, president of the A.F. of L. garment workers union, says the union will soon start a campaign to win a 30-hour work week.

And in Chicago, the Illinois State Boxing Commission threw out a protest by Jersey Joe Walcott on his knockout by Rocky Marciano on Friday.

At New York's International airport today, A.P. Correspondent Bill Otis, home from a Czech prison, greeted his wife and then faced newsreel cameras and reporters to answer questions. ABOVE THE AIRPORT NOISES We've recorded for you some of the questions and answers:

(runs:5;40 ending: you pick up stuff and get away with it but you can't get a way with it there)

Near the end of the Otis interview, Frank Starzel, the general manager of the Associated Press, told reporters: Otis's reluctance to discuss certain questions, cannot be fairly used as implying anything... he has been cut off from normal contacts.. he has had no opportunity to review his own case. Under these circumstances--said Starzel--"any many would have the gravest difficulty in collecting his thoughts, and answering intelligently."

At this, Otis told Starzel: "I want to thank you for a very fair statement, and I want to back you up on it. I appreciate it very much."

6

~~The State Department in an~~ zxzxx

The story that Bill Otis was ~~freed~~ freed, as a result of a well written letter from his wife to the check authorities, is in a good romantic tradition, and places the present men in Prague, in the position of considerate humanitarians...however belatedly...But there is more to the story...Last March Secretary of State Dulles had a talk with Mrs Otis...He did not like the idea of an American being held in Jail, President Eisenhower didnt either. ~~#~~ some weeks later x, what the diplomats call "representations" were made. [.This case had to do with foreign policy, and the president can act directly in this field if he wants to]... and then last Wednesday, our ambassador to Moscow Chip Bohlen, went to have a talk with Russian foreign minister Molotov, and on Friday Otis was released...this could have been co-incidence...but more likely it was a telegram from Moscow to Prague that produced results...It detracts nothing from the persuaviniss of Mrs Otis letter to note that a couple of people named Eisenhower and Dulles, were pretty active in the whole affair.....

Nicholas Spykman summed up one of our troubles when he said..."The preference of the good man for dying on his own soil instead of abroad is a serious handicap to the democratic state." And another of our problems was summed up by Pascal who wrote..."Justice without force is impotent...force without justice is tyranical...we must therefore combine justice with force"

Good night and good luck...

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, May 18, 1953
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... At New York's International Airport today, AP correspondent, Bill Oatis, home from a Czech prison, greeted his wife and then faced newsreel cameras and reporters to answer questions, above the airport noises. We've recorded for you some of the questions and answers.

SPEAKER: Could you tell us if the situation is something like one that many correspondents abroad have known, where, quite unofficially, they worked with the State Department without being employees in any sense, and this could have been the basis of the charges made against you?

OATIS: I think that you better take a look at the record of the trial on that, and see what they say about it.

SPEAKER: You mean that you stand by the record of the trial?

OATIS: I'm not saying it in just that way. I'm saying I'm letting the record speak for itself..... (interruption)

SPEAKER: Well, we .....

OATIS: For what it is!

SPEAKER: ..... confused because we supposed that the record would show a false story and now you lead us to believe that the record .....

OATIS: Well, as a matter of fact, I should say that ... that until I can see what the record is I want to let it stand. I haven't seen it. I haven't read any reports yet.

SPEAKER: Have you read the record of the trial?

OATIS: No, I haven't.

SPEAKR: (drowned out) trial.

OATIS: (drowned out) standards, by American standards. It's not a question of American standards, only Czechoslovakian.

SPEAKER: Are you holding this back because you want to wait until you confer with Government officials or because you want to have an Associated Press story?

OATIS: No, it's neither of those reasons. Those are reasons that I'm keeping to myself.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, you are (drowned out) get the answer to them, so I repeat the question, whether or not you intend to formally repudiate your confession?

OATIS: I'm studying all this business.

SPEAKER: (Drowned out)

OATIS: I'm studying all this business.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, (drowned out) reason why they picked you up other than the fact that you were reporting the news over there?

OATIS: There are many reasons. I mean ... I shouldn't say many reasons. There was a complication of factors and I don't want to go into them now. It was a very complicated situation.

SPEAKER: This is an answer I'm sure you're (drownedout) further into it (drowened out) the exact answer was ... the question was what were you doing that (drowned out) under the law certain things I did were certainly violations of the law, the Czech law. Could you tell us a little about those?

OATIS: I'll tell you this, that .....

SPEAKER: Take your time! Take your time!

OATIS: I don't know. I haven't ... I haven't myself read the law enough times to remember. It's still rather vague in my (drowed out), but, as I remember the law as it was read to me from the very first by the people who werehandling me, interrogating me, receiving ... this ... this ... this may be unfair to the law, maybe a misquotation because I don't know the exact terms of the law, but it was something to the effect that receiving economic, military, and political information in Czechoslovakia, and I think the implication was regardless of the purpose, the use of the information, constituted espionage.

SPEAKER: Do you feel, then, that you were imprisoned under an interpretation of the law or a direct application of the law?

OATIS: They imprisoned me under ... look here! ... you're a reporter, do you gather political, economic, and military information? I did, too.

SPEAKER: By interpretation, yes.

OATIS: What's that?

SPEAKER: Not classified necessarily.

OATIS: No, but my understanding ... I don't know ... I may be wrong on this. I would hate to be ... hate to be inaccurate in this case, but to my knowledge there was no mention of classification (?) of information.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, is it possible that there was a misunderstanding .....

OATIS: No, I don't think so because I heard other people talking about the same thing and no mention was made of classification to the best of my memory.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, did you see the confession before you recited the confession?

OATIS: (drowned out) is too deep. I don't like to .....

SPEAKER: No, I'm trying to find out from you, Mr. Oatis, ...

OATIS: I know what you're trying to find out from me.

SPEAKER: ..... if they used the same methods on you as they did with Cardinal Mindzenty?

OATIS: I don't know what they used on him. I didn't read that .....

SPEAKER: Did you ever take any drugs?

OATIS: They gave me about ten injections which they said consisted of a sugar solution and vitamins and I'm convinced that they were because I felt no effect at all from these things. They also gave me suntan treatment under a lamp. They wanted me to look good at the trial.

SPEAKER: They wanted you to what?

OATIS: I think they wanted me to look good at the trial.

SPEAKER: Do you realize that when you don't answer these questions it leaves you in an embarrassing position?

OATIS: Yes, I realize it. I'm in an embarrassing position right now, and I will continue to be embarrassed.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, are you doing it because somebody in the State Department or .....

OATIS: (both speaking-unintelligible) not talking about why I'm doing it. I told you ... told you that before. I'll keep telling you that as long as you ask me questions.

SPEAKER: You don't want to do it?

OATIS: That's right!

SPEAKER: Did not the Embassy have from its own normal reporting operations the same information that you would get for your normal reporting operations?

OATIS: I don't think I'm in a position to talk about what the American Embassy did in Czechoslovakia.

SPEAKER: (drowned out) the truth, I mean, trying to put a situation .....

OATIS: I know that.

SPEAKER: ..... that you didn't have anything, the Embassy didn't have and, therefore, were not of any particular service to the Government?

OATIS: Do you realize what's happened to American Embassies in some of these countries?

SPEAKER: Know they got kicked out of Bulgaria, American Legation down there.

OATIS: You don't ... you people don't realize what the situation is in these countries.

SPEAKER: (drowned out) operating like an American newsman and trying to get the news.

OATIS: American newsmen where? They operate in different ways in different countries as you know.

SPEAKER: American newspapermen operating by American .....

OATIS: You mean .....

SPEAKER: .....in Czechoslovakia.

OATIS: Let me make a suggestion. What you want to ask me, I think, is that an American operating in Czechoslovakia as he would operate in America .....

SPEAKER: Be in jeopardy of being arrested?

OATIS: He certainly would! Certainly would! You go to ... you go to unofficial sources all the time, you go to people that are filing stuff out from these various places and taking stuff out and get away with it and you can't get away with it there.

- - - - - - - - - - -

MURROW: Near the end of the Oatis interview, Frank Starzel, the General Manager of the Associated Press, told reporters: "Oatis' reluctance to discuss certain questions cannot be fairly used as implying anything. He has been cut off from normal contact. He has had no opportunity to review his own case. Under these circumstances," said Starzel, "any man would have the gravest difficulty collecting his thoughts and answering intelligently." At this, Oatis told Starzel: "I want to thank you for a very fair statement and I want to back you up on it. I appreciate it very much."

The story that Bill Oatis was freed as a result of a well-written letter from his wife to the Czech authorities is in a good romantic tradition and places the present men in Prague in the position of considerate humanitarians, however belatedly, but there is more to the story. Last March, Secretary of State Dulles had a talk with Mrs. Oatis. He did not like the idea of an American being held in jail. President Eisenhower didn't like it either. Some weeks later what the diplomats call "representations" were made. This case had to do with foreign policy and the President can act directly in this field if he wants to and then last Wednesday our Ambassador to Moscow, "Chip" Bohlen, went to have a talk with Russian Foreign Minister Molotov and on Friday Oatis was released. This could have been coincidence, but, more likely, it was a telegram from Moscow to Prague that produced the results. It detracts nothing, of course, from the persuasiveness of Mrs. Oatis' letter, to note that a couple of people, people named Eisenhower and Dulles, were pretty active in the whole affair.

This is Ed Murrow.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 18, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A.P. Correspondent Bill Oatis returned to this country today after more than two years in a Czech prison. He told reporters: that from the Czech point of view there was some justification for his arrest. We'll hear excerpts from an interview with Oatis in a few minutes.

Here in Washington, Chairman Cole of the Atomic Energy Committee says that the Administration has decided to cut about 30 per cent from the Atomic Energy Commission's budget. The nuclear weapons program will not be affected. But the use of atomic energy for civilian power development and the construction of atomic power plants for ships and planes will be delayed. The submarine project will not be affected.

General Ridgeway, the commander of NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty forces, told a House committee today that it would be unwise to cut the Administration's request for 5.8 billions for aid to our allies. Ridgeway, who is to become army chief of staff, told the Representatives: even when NATO's present goals are achieved "we will still fall short of the minimum defensive strength" we'd need to "prevent serious reversals" in case of attack in Western Europe - Air power remains the weakest link in western defense; we have major deficiencies of ammunition and supplies, continued aid to our allies is essential to our own security as well as the security of Western Europe.

And in Paris, General Grunther, who will succeed Ridgeway as NATO commander, told reporters: western taxpayers will have to carry heavy defense burdens "for a long time to come."

In London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons to stop nagging the allied negotiators at Panmunjom. Sir Winston said the British are constantly exchanging views on the truce talks with Washington.

The talks are in recess, but the air war over Korea has been stepped up.

Our pilots shot down 12 Migs today. And the air force says that in the last six days the enemy has sent from 800 to 900 Migs against our Sabre Jets. In these six days we destroyed 36, and damaged 18 others. In the first three days of fighting we lost no planes; there is no report on the last three days. The Navy says nine men on the Destroyer Brush were injured last Friday, when enemy shore fire hit the destroyer off Wonsan.

In Indo-China, French troops, with little opposition, have recaptured a town 90 miles southeast of the capital of Laos. And Adlai Stevenson, writing in Look magazine, says the French should make a prompt and clear-cut statement on their intentions about Viet-Nam independence. He says that in Indo-China today the French are too often behaving "as in the colonial past."

In Egypt, the Foreign Ministers says his country has made strong representations to the British against "incidents" in the Suez Canal zone.

Here in Washington, the National Manpower Council reported to the president that we have failed to provide the proper education and training for a vast reservoir of highly intelligent young people. The Council says that less than half the young Americans capable of acquiring a college education actually get such an education. Two fifths of those who start college do not graduate. We have a shortage of school teachers, some kinds of physicians and a shortage of scientists and engineers has had a "serious consequence on our defense program."

The President today postponed the scheduled signing of the bill to give coastal states title to submerged lands off their shores. The White House says arrangements will be made for the signing later this week when a number of interested persons will attend.

At New York's International Airport today, A.P. Correspondent Bill Oatis, home from a Czech prison, greeted his wife and then faced newsreel cameras and reporters to answer questions above the airport noises. We've recorded for you some of the questions and answers:

SPEAKER: Could you tell us if the situation is something like one that many correspondents abroad have known, where, quite unofficially, they worked with the State Department without being employees in any sense, and this could have been the basis of the charges made against you?

OATIS: I think that you better take a look at the record of the trial on that, and see what they say about it.

SPEAKER: You mean that you stand by the record of the trial?

OATIS: I'm not saying it in just that way. I'm saying I'm letting the record speak for itself (interruption)

SPEAKER: Well we.....

OATIS: For what it is.

SPEAKER: .....confused because we supposed that the record would show a false story and now you lead us to believe that the record.....

OATIS: Well, as a matter of fact, I should say that, that until I can see what the record is I want to let it stand. I haven't seen it. I haven't read any reports yet.

SPEAKER: Have you read the record of the trial?

OATIS: No, I haven't.

SPEAKER: (drowned out) trial.

OATIS: (drowned out) standards, by American standards. It's not a question of American standards, only Czechoslovakian.

SPEAKER: Are you holding this back because you want to wait until you confer with Government officials or because you want to have an Associated Press story?

OATIS: No, it's neither of those reasons. Those are reasons that I'm keeping to myself.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, you are (drowned out) get the answer to them, so I repeat the question, whether or not you intend to formally repudiate your confession?

OATIS: I'm studying all this business.

SPEAKER: (drowned out)

OATIS: I'm studying all this business.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, (drowned out) reason why they picked you up other than the fact that you were reporting the news over there?

OATIS: There are many reasons. I mean, I shouldn't say many reasons. There was a complication of factors and I don't want to go into them now. It was a very complicated situation.

SPEAKER: This is an answer I'm sure you're (drowned out) further into it (drowned out) the exact answer was; the question was what were you doing that (drowned out) under the law certain things I did were certainly violations of the law, the Czech law. Could you tell us a little about those?

OATIS: I'll tell you this, that.....

SPEAKER: Take your time! Take your time!

OATIS: I don't know. I haven't.....I haven't myself read the law enough times to remember. It's still rather vague in my (drowned out). but, as I remember the law as it was read to me from the very first by the people who were handling me, interrogating me, receiving...this...this...this may be unfair to the law, maybe a misquotation because I don't know the exact terms of the law, but it was something to the effect that receiving economic, military, and political information in Czechoslovakia, and I think the implication was regardless of the purpose, the use of the information, constituted espionage.

SPEAKER: Do you feel, then, that you were imprisoned under an interpretation of the law or a direct application of the law?

OATIS: They imprisoned me under...look here! you're a reporter, do you gather political, economic, and military information? I did, too.

SPEAKER: By interpretation, yes.

OATIS: What's that?

SPEAKER: Not classified necessarily.

OATIS: No, but my understanding, I don't know...I may be wrong on this. I would hate to be...hate to be inaccurate in this case, but to my knowledge there was no mention of classification of information.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, is it possible that there was a misunderstanding...

OATIS: No, I don't think so because I heard other people talking about the same thing and no mention was made of classification to the best of my memory.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, did you see the confession before you recited the confession?

OATIS: (drowned out) is too deep. I don't like to.....

SPEAKER: No, I'm trying to find out from you, Mr. Oatis.....

OATIS: I know what you're trying to find out from me.

SPEAKER: .....if they used the same methods on you as they did with Cardinal Mindzenty?

OATIS: I don't know what they used on him. I didn't read that.....

SPEAKER: Did you ever take any drugs?

OATIS: They gave me about ten injections which they said consisted of a sugar solution and vitamins and I'm convinced that they were because I felt no effect at all from these things. They also gave me suntan treatment under a lamp. They wanted me to look good at the trial.

SPEAKER: They wanted you to what?

OATIS: I think they wanted me to look good at the trial.

SPEAKER: Do you realize that when you don't answer these questions it leaves you in an embarrassing position?

OATIS: Yes, I realize it. I'm in an embarrassing position right now, and I will continue to be embarrassed.

SPEAKER: Mr. Oatis, are you doing it because somebody in the State Department or...

OATIS: (both speaking-unintelligible) not talking about why I'm doing it. I told you...told you that before. I'll keep telling you that as long as you ask me questions.

SPEAKER: You don't want to do it?

OATIS: That's right!

SPEAKER: Did not the Embassy have from its own normal reporting operations the same information that you would get for your normal reporting operations?

OATIS: I don't think I'm in aposition to talk about what the American Embassy did in Czechoslovakia.

SPEAKER: (dorwned out) the truth, I mean, trying to put a situation.....

OATIS: I know that.

SPEAKER: .....that you didn't have anything, the Embassy didn't have and, therefore, were not of any particular service to the Government?

OATIS: Do you realize what's happened to American Embassies in some of these countries?

SPEAKER: Know they got kicked out of Bulgaria, American Legation down there.

OATIS: You don't....you people don't realize what the situation is in these countries.

SPEAKER: (drowned out) operating like an American newsman and trying to get the news.

OATIS: American newsmen where? They operate in different ways in different countries as you know.

SPEAKER: American newspapermen operating by American.....

OATIS: You mean.....

SPEAKER: .....in Czechoslovakia.

OATIS: Let me make a suggestion. What you want to ask me, I think, is that an American operating in Czechoslovakia as he would operate in America.....

SPEAKER: Be in jeopardy of being arrested?

OATIS: He certainly would! Certainly would! you go to...you go to unofficial sources all the time, you go to people that are filing stuff out from these various places and taking stuff out and get away with it and you can't get away with it there

MURROW: Near the end of the Oatis interview, Frank Starzel, the general manager of the Associated Press, told reporters: Oatis's reluctance to discuss certain questions cannot be fairly used as implying anything...he has been cut off from normal contacts; he has had no opportunity to review his own case. Under these circumstances,"said Starzel, "any man would have the gravest difficulty in collecting his thoughts and answering intelligently."

At this, Oatis told Starzel: "I want to thank you for a very fair statement, and I want to back you up on it. I appreciate it very much."

The story that Bill Oatis was freed, as a result of a well written letter from his wife to the Czech authorities, is in a good romantic tradition, and places the present men in Prague in the position of considerate humanitarians, however belatedly But there is more to the story. Last March Secretary of State Dulles had a talk with Mrs. Oatis. He did not like the idea of an American being held in jail, President Eisenhower didn't either. Some weeks later, what the diplomats call "representations" were made. This case had to do with foreign policy and the President can act directly in this field if he wants to; and then last Wednesday our Ambassador to Moscow Chip Bohlen went to have a talk with Russian foreign minister Molotov, and on Friday Oatis was released; this could have been coincidence; but more likely it was a telegram from Moscow to Prague that produced results; It detracts nothing from the persuasiveness of Mrs. Oatis' letter to note that a couple of people named Eisenhower and Dulles were pretty active in the whole affair.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

MURROW: Nicholas Spykman summed up one of our troubles when he said: "The preference of the good man for dying on his own soil instead of abroad is a serious handicap to the democratic state. And another of our problems was summed up by Pascal who wrote: "Justice without force is impotent...force without justice is tyranical...we must therefore combine justice with force".

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, May 19, 1953.

This is the news:

The President will tell the nation tonight, that he wants no reduction in any taxes before the first of January. Mr. Eisenhower will be heard over most of these CBS Radio stations at 10;30 p.m. eastern time. Earlier, he outlined his program to Congressional leaders. Here's what he wants: the excess profits tax, which is due to expire on June 30th, should be extended until the first of next year. At that time a 10 per cent cut in individual income taxes is due to go into effect. The President approves of this. But he wants Congress to extend two other taxes, that are due to expire next April first. One, is a scheduled reduction in the regular corporate income tax. The other concerns excise taxes. He wants both continued "as is". And the President would postpone an increase scheduled for the social security tax. Under present law, its due to go up one half of one per cent, for both employers and employes, on January first. Mr. Eisenhower wants to keep it at the present one and one half per cent on incomes up to 36-hundred dollars a year.

Chairman Reed of the House ways and means committee, who is fighting for a cut in the personal income tax before next January first, and for the end of the excess profits tax...Chairman Reed says he has not changed his mind.

And Senater Taft indicates there may be some difficulty in getting Congressional approval to extend the excess profits tax beyond June 30.. when its due to expire.

Two of the men who attended the White House conference today, Senator Saltonstall and Representative Short..who head the armed services committees.. say that we are going to get more security..increased combat effectiveness..despite the Administration's reduction of the military budget. They say the effectiveness of the air force has been "practically doubled" since the President took office

And Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate Committee the Administration plans to boost the air force 30 per cent in numbers "and more than that in combat effectiveness." He says that by carrying-over to next year the money appropriated but unspent by the armed forces; the Air Force will have 52 per cent more money than the Navy and 31 per cent more than the Army.

The Senate today voted not to permit the President to impose a 90-day wage and price freeze unless we are at war..or unless the Congress approves. ~~Chairman Capehart of the Finance Committee sponsored the bill. He gives this power to the President. Senator Byrd called it necessary to the whole theory of [illegible]. The majority of Senators agreed with Taft.~~

The vice president of the National Association of Manufacturers.. C.H. Ramsey of New Jersey..said today that the N.AM's board of directors is "seriously concerned" with the ~~[illegible]~~ failure of the Administration to balance the budget. He says he thinks this can be done if the government cuts state and local aid.

The President told a lunch sponsored by the United Negro College Fund that he ~~[illegible]~~ strongly opposes ~~[illegible]~~ segregation theories that permit second class citizens. He said he "passionately believes" in equality regardless of "the ~~[illegible]~~ inconsequential background of race or color."

General Ridgeway, the commander of the North Atlantic Treaty forces, told a Senate committee today: it is absolutely essential to our security that we have allies..a "go it alone" policy would invite inevitable national disaster. The General believes it will be a long time before we can bring American troops home from Europe. And he feels the Soviet peace offensive has slowed down the military build-up in Europe.

The Associated Press reports from London that "reliable British informants" say Prime Minister Churchill has been in informal touch with Russia, on the plan for a Big Three conference. They say American leaders are being kept informed.

At Panmunjom today, we arranged for another postponment of the truce talks, scheduled to be resumed tomorrow. They now have been set forMonday. And United Nations sources say our plan is being "modified." The Chinese Communists say they don't want the negotiations dragged out.. and they feel the Monday meeting will be a "crucial test" of America's attitude.

In Korea today, the enemy called off his air activity of the past six days. And on the ground South Korean troops stopped enemy attacks on the central and eastern fronts.

In Tokyo, Prime Minister Yoshida has been returned to his job for the fifth time, when right wing Socialists broke away from the coalition that previously defeated him and decided to support Yoshida.

Here in Washington, Republican Senator Knowland of California has introduced a resolution calling on the President to withdraw this government from the United Nations if Communist China is admitted, or if Communist representatives are given the seats of the Chinese Nationalists. The Senator told the Senate there is growing pressure in the U.N. to admit Red China.

~~The Interior Department today ordered the dismissal of 2,000 employes throughout the country. Most of them in the Reclamation Bureau.~~

Harvard University announced tonight that it will not dismiss three faculty members who refused to answer questions before Congressional investigating committees. The Harvard Corporation says its own investigation shows that two had been communists but left the party, the third had never been a Communist. All three faculty members were found guilty of "misconduct" for using the Fifth Amerndment to avoid answering questions. The Harvard Corporation says it depleres this action.

A.P. Correspondent Bill Otis went shopping in New York today and another A.P. correspondent-- Mare Purdue, was given three days to get out of Iran. The government accuses him of sending out what it calls "false and provocative news against the interests of Iran."

Later tonite, the president will reveal his plans for taxing and spending... And then, it seems to this reporter, will begin the real test of Mr Eisenhowers leadership.. Many issues, such as Reciprocal trade, he has postponed for the time being, by creating study groups or comissions...the equivalent of the ~~mili~~ military staff study. This ~~xt~~ is a natural procedure for one unfamiliar with the intricies of politics...it stems from a belief that facts, will alter opinions (which doesnt always happen). So far, the president has appeared to proceed upon the assumption that he would speak his mind, and then it was up to the congress...that system could work..and it has..when the president has a sizeable and cohesive working majority in the congress. but the republicans are now working on a most narrow margin, and on many vital issues the party is split. If the predictions ~~of~~ about the presidents proposals are correct, there will be dissent in republican ranks...and Mr Eisenhower will have to decide whether to throw his tremendous personal influence into the struggle (on taxes for example)..or whether to sit back and occupy a symbolic, or ornamental post, as president. Like previous presidents he has discovered that campaign promises are easier made than kept...this is nothing new...many previous presidents have discovered the same thing. The President has now had time to formulate his fiscal policies...they will displease certain members of his own party...and some democrats too...the question still to be answered is whether Mr Eisenhower will fight for his proposals or ~~xxxxxx~~ whether he will take the attitude that..he has had his say,and if congress wont go along, ~~they~~ it wont have any trouble with him.#.To date the president has dealt gently with congress...his own party shelved the widely advertised resolution condeming secret agreements...the democrats insured the acceptance of his ambassador to Moscow.(when the republicans split).#..Mr Eisenhowers wartime reputation rests solidly upon his ability to act as a magnificantly sucesfull chairman of the board...his genius for compromise...the high regard in which he was held by the allied powers,,,but there was another weapon in his arsenal,he had real command of the men and the metal..he had the divisions,the ships and the planes #..now in the political arena ~~xxxx~~ the forces at his command are not so overwhelming..and this may result in his having a less persuasive voice..

It is a truism to say that the president of this country has the toughest job in the world#.In wartime the job has been relatively simple..for there is the heat of battle and the urgent need to get things done.#.but it is in harzardous times such as the present when the presidents task is most formidable..he must make his estimate of the future course of events..and then he must do his utmost to create a climate of opinion in the country that is favourable to that policy...He must cajole persuade and at times threaten.# and all this he must do in full view of the enemy..(the enemy in this case must be regarded as the russians and the democrats too)..for there is an election coming up in fifty four, which involves the whole house and one third of the senate...and that election could leave him the prisoner of the opposition.#.The president has not so far been thwarted in a major policy objective...he has now had time to make his estimate of the situation...to determine what the national interest requires...he has aparently decided that there is no immediate threat of all out war from Russia..that this must be a long range, grinding process...has decided that taxes cant be cut, or the budget balanced.(at least not for a while).-.he has decided to gamble on a reduction of defense and foreign aid expenditures.#.The sum total of the information that is available to the president is greater than it is for the rest of us, and only history will asses the accuracy of his estimates.#Tonite he will give us a major one.#.It seems to this reporter that the first few months of the Eisenhower administration could be compared to a certain type of golfer...he takes a considerable number of practice swings...walks around behind the ball and lines up the fairway...tees the ball a little higher or lower...changes his stance...changes his mind..and asks the caddie for a brassie instead of the driver...after hitching the belt and hauling the cap...the time finally comes -

when the ball must be struck...and then pursued,whether on the firway or in the rough. #Tonight at ten thirty eastern time the president takes a full cut at the ball..the firway is narrow,and the rough is deep, but most of the gallery will be hoping that he's well off the tee...

We Were speaking of politics and Golf...Peter Cheyney said..."The line of least resistance, is always the most difficult in the long run...(that could apply to either game)...And Kin Hubbard said..."Theres some folks standing behind the president, that ought to get around where he can watch em!"...and that could apply to golf and politics too....

good night and good luck....

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President will tell the nation tonight that he wants no reduction in any taxes before the first of January. Mr. Eisenhower will be heard over most of these CBS Radio stations at 10:30 p.m. eastern time. Earlier, he outlined his program to Congressional leaders. Here's what he wants: the excess profits tax, which is due to expire on June 30th, should be extended until the first of next year. At that time a 10 per cent cut in individual income taxes is due to go into effect. The President approves of this. But he wants Congress to extend two other taxes that are due to expire next April first. One, is a scheduled reduction in the regular corporate income tax. The other concerns exise taxes. He wants both continued "as is." And the President would postpone an increase scheduled for the social security tax. Under present law, its due to go up one half of one per cent, for both employers and employees, on January first. Mr. Eisenhower wants to keep it at the present one and one half per cent on incomes up to 36-hundred dollars a year.

Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee, who is fighting for a cut in the personal income tax before next January first, and for the end of the excess profits tax. Chairman Reed says he has not changed his mind.

And Senator Taft indicates there may be some difficulty in getting Congressional approval to extend the excess profits tax beyond June 30th, when it is due to expire.

Two of the men who attended the White House conference today, Senator Saltonstall and Representative Short, who head the armed services committee, say that we are going to get more security, increased combat effectiveness, despite the Administration's reduction of the military budget. They say the effectiveness of the air force has been "practically doubled" since the President took office.

And Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate Committee the Administration

plans to boost the air force 30 per cent in numbers "and more than that in combat effectiveness." He says that by carrying over to next year the money appropriated but unspent by the armed forces; the Air Force will have 52 per cent more money than the Navy and 31 per cent more than the Army.

The Senate today voted not to permit the President to impose a 90-day wage and price freeze unless we are at war, or unless the Congress approves.

The vice President of the National Association of Manufacturers, C.H. Ramsey of New Jersey, said today that the NAM's board of directors is "seriously concerned" with the failure of the Administration to balance the budget. He thinks this can be done if the government cuts state and local aid.

The President told a lunch sponsored by the United Negro College Fund that he strongly opposes segration theories that permit second class citizens. He said he "passionately believes" in equality regardless of "the inconsequential background of race or color."

General Ridgeway, the commander of the North Atlantic Treaty forces, told a Senate committee today: it is absolutely essential to our security that we have allies a "go it alone" policy would invite inevitable national disaster. The General believes it will be a long time before we can bring American troops home from Europe. And he feels the Soviet peace offensive has slowed down the military build-up in Europe.

The Associated Press reports from London that "reliable British informants" say Prime Minister Churchill has been in informal touch with Russia on the plan for a Big Three conference. They say American leaders are being kept informed.

At Panmunjom today, we arranged for another postponment of the truce talks scheduled to be resumed tomorrow. They now have been set for Monday. And United Nations sources say our plan is being "modified." The Chinese Communists say they don't want the negotiations dragged out, and they feel the Monday meeting will be a "crucial test" of America's attitude.

In Korea today, the enemy called off his air activity of the past six days. And on the ground South Korean troops stopped enemy attacks on the central and eastern fronts.

In Tokyo, Prime Minister Yoshida has been returned to his job for the fifth time right Socialists broke away from the coalition that previously defeated him and decided to support Yoshida.

Here in Washington, Republican Senator Knowland of California has introduced a resolution calling on the President to withdraw this government from the United Nations if Communist China is admitted or if Communist representatives are given the seats of the Chinese Nationalists. The Senator told the Senate there is growing pressure in the U.N. to admit Red China.

Harvard University announced tonight that it will not dismiss three faculty members who refused to answer questions before Congressional investigating committees. The Harvard Corporation says its own investigation shows that the two had been Communists but left the party, the third had never been a Communist. All three faculty members were found guklty of "misconduct" for using the Fifth Amendment to avoid answering questions. The Harvard Corporation says it "deplores" this action.

A.P. Correspondent Bill Oatis went shopping in New York today and another A.P. correspondent, Marc Purdue, was given three days to get out of Iran. The government accuses him of sending out what it calls "false and provocative news against the interests of Iran."

Later tonight, the President will reveal his plans for taxing and spending. And then, it seems to this reporter, will begin the real test of Mr. Eisenhower's leadership. Many issues, such as Reciprocal trade, he has postponed for the time being, by creating study groups or commissions, the equivalent of the military staff study. This is a natural procedure for one unfamiliar with the intricacies of politics; it stems from a belief that facts will alter opinions, (which doesn't always happen.) So far, the president has appeared to proceed upon the assumption that he would speak his mind and then it was up to the Congress; that system could work, and it has, when the President has a sizeable and cohesive working majority in the Congress. But the Republicans are now working on a most narrow margin and on many vital issues the party is split. If the predictions about the president's proposals are correct, there will be dissent in Republican ranks, and Mr. Eisenhower will have to decide whether to throw his tremendous personal influence into the struggle (on taxes for example) or whether to sit back and occupy a symbolic or ornamental post as president. Like previous presidents he has discovered that campaign promises are easier made than kept, this is nothing new - many previous presidents have discovered the same thing. The President has now had time to formulate his fiscal policies - they will displease certain members of his own party - and some democrats too - the question still to be answered is whether Mr. Eisenhower will fight for his proposals or whether he will take the attitude that he has had his say, and if Congress won't go along, it won't have any trouble with him. To date the president has dealt gently with Congress; his own party shelved the widely advertised resolution condeming secret agreements; the Democrats insured the acceptance of his ambassador to Moscow (when the Republicans split) Mr. Eisenhower's wartime reputation rests solidly upon his ability to act as a magnificantly successfull chairman of the board - his genius for compromise - the high regard in which he was held by the allied powers, but there was another weapon in his arsenal; he had real command of the men and the metal; he had the divisions, the ships, and the planes now in the political arena the forces at his command are not so overwhelming - and this may result in his having a less persuasive voice.

It is a truism to say that the president of this country has the toughest job in the world. In wartime the job has been relatively simple; for there is the heat of battle and the urgent need to get things done. But it is in hazardous times such as the present when the President's task is most formidable; he must make his estimate of the future course of events and then he must do his utmost to create a climate of opinion in the country that is favorable to that policy. He must cajole, persuade, and at times threaten, and all this he must do in full view of the enemy (the enemy in this case must be regarded as the Russians and the Democrats too). For there is an election coming up in fifty four which involves the whole house and one third of the Senate and that election could leave him the prisoner of the opposition. The President has not so far been thwarted in a major policy objective; he has now had time to make his estimate of the situation to determine what the national interest requires. He has apparently decided that there is no immediate threat of all out war from Russia; that this must be a long range grinding process; has decided that taxes can't be cut, or the budget balanced (at least not for a while) He has decided to gamble on a reduction of defense and foreign aid expenditures. The sum total of the information that is available to the president is greater than it is for the rest of us and only history will asses the accuracy of his estimates. Tonight he will give us a major one. It seems to this reporter that the first few months of the Eisenhower administration could be compared to a certain type of golfer - he takes a considerable number of practice swings - walks around behind the ball and lines up the fairway - tees the ball a little higher or lower - changes his stance - changes his mind - and asks the caddie for a brassie instead of the driver - after hitching the belt andhauling the cap - the time finally comes when the ball must be struck and then pursued, whether on the firway or in the rough. Tonight at ten thirty eastern time the president takes a full cut at the ball. The firway is narrow, and the rough is deep, but most of the gallery will be hoping that he's well off the tee.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of politics and golf. Peter Cheyney said: "The line of least resistance is always the most difficult in the long run (that could apply to either game) And Kin Hubbard said: "There's some folks standing behind the President that ought to get around where he can watch em" and that could apply to golf and politics too.

Good Night and good luck!

Wednesday
May 26, 1953

This is the news:

The President told Congress today that the Truman Administration left the government's financial affairs in a "critically unsound state." Mr. Eisenhower proposed to Congress the [redacted]d financial plans he [redacted] DISCLOSED to the nation by radio last night. And he said that except for the economies he proposes it would not be possible, next January, to put into effect the individual income tax reduction already written into law. [redacted]

Senator Taft said today that he's very much disappointed with the President's conclusion that we must spend at least 50-billions next year on defense and foreign aid. The Senator says that this, plus other government expenses, means there is [redacted] no way to cut taxes or eliminate deficit spending. [redacted]

The House Ways and Means Committee today decided to start hearings on the first of June on the President's proposal to extend the excess profits tax. Its due to expire at the end of June but the President wants to keep it through this year. Despite the committee decision, Chairman Reed says he will oppose the President's request. He feels the [redacted] tax is "oppressive, fosters monopoly, creates competitive disqdvantages and promotes waste." [redacted]

Nevertheless, House Speaker Martin, who met with the Republican committee members, says he is [redacted] "prayerfully hopeful" that the committee will decide to send the bill to the floor and let the House vote on whether it wants to extend the excess profits tax.

Today, the House approved a Department of Agriculture appropriation bill that calls for spending 106-millions more than the President requested. This is the first money bill the House has increased over the AdministratioN's request. [redacted]

Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate committee today that even if Congress were to restore the 5-billion dollars the President has cut from air force appropriations for the next year, this would not make the air force any stronger. He insisted that in spite of the cut the Air Force will have at least four times as much money for planes and parts in the next fiscal year as it has had in the current fiscal year. Wilson, and Deputy Secretary Kyes, told the Senators that the Truman Administration's goal of 143-wings was a "paper goal." was always being changed. [redacted] id we could meet the 143-wing plan but not with the type of planes we must have. And in this [redacted] he says, General Vandenberg, chief of the air force staff, agrees. Republican Senator Margaret Chase Smith wanted to know whether the Joint Chiefs of Staff had approved the new military budget. Apparently she was not satisfied with Wilson's answer. And Mr. Wilson suggestd that the military chiefs be called to answer that question for themselves. Deputy Secretary Kyes said the air force program has been slipping for the past three years, and he said he is not convinced that the Russians have more planes than we have. The testimony also revealed that President Eisenhower regards our long-range bombers as "the decisive striking force" if war comes.

The McCarthy committee was told today that two British-owned ships, out of Hong Kong, have been used to transport Chinese Communist troops along the Chinese coast [redacted] Assistant Counsel Kennedy also told the committee these same ships were later used to transport American aid to our allies. A spokesman for the British embassy says: "We are slightly bewildered at the report concerning unidentified ships of unknown tonnage carrying unspecified numbers of so-called troops at a date not known between unstated ports." Senator McCarthy said what he called "this aid to Communist China" more than offsets any military contribution the British have made to the Korean war.

The committee was also told that at least 100 British ships, and 62 others owned by western allies, traded with Red China during the first three months of this year. [redacted] Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Leddy told the committee that Secretary Dulles wants to stop trade with Communist China except where what the free world gets from China is more valuable than what is shipped INTO China. He mentioned the Japanese who send Red China seaweed in exchange for iron ore. Senator McCarthy insisted that Defense Secretary Wilson has said that any exports to Communist China may strengthen that country. Democratic Senator Symington suggested that the committee ask the President to make a clear statement on just what this government's attitude is on [redacted] trading with the enemy.

Republican Senator Williams of Delaware charged today that the Truman administration, in its last days in office, promoted "many thousands" of government workers illegally. Williams says if these workers serve for one year in their new positions, then they will have permanent status under Civil Service.

~~Senator Taft today called for a complete reconsideration of the entire farm program" by the Eisenhower Administration. He says the government now has stored three billion dollars worth of farm products. It will go up to six billions before the end of the year and he feels some way must be found to eliminate "these tremendous holdings."~~

~~Senator Taft entered Walter Reed hospital today for an examination of a hip that has caused him pain. And Senator McCarthy has entered the naval hospital at Bethesda for rest and a physical examination.~~

The Ford Motor Company says it is laying off 85-thousand employes across the nation because of a strike at its Canton, Ohio, plant.. (where forgings and parts are made.)

Benjamin Fairless, chairman of the Board of United States Steel predicts that American industry is on the way to solving its most difficult problem; the conflict between labor and management. He says labor leaders must get rid of two old fashioned ideas; that labor and management are natural and eternal enemies.. and that collective bargaining calls for labor and management to take something away from each other.

Raymond Swing, radio commentaor for the Voice of America, has resigned. He says the agency is crippled by "salnderous attacks on its integrity." And he charges that the State Department is guilty of "spineless failure to stand by its own staff."

Thailand announced today that she will ~~[illegible]~~ ask the United Nations Security Council to investigate the Communist invasion of Laos as a threat to peace in Southeast Asia. The State Department will support the request.

In Korea today four unidentified planes dropped bombs behind the allied lines. Nine soldiers were killed or wounded. And the Pentagon says we suffered another 197 casualties in Korea last week..including 46 men killed.

The air force says that since the war started we have destroyed 692 Russian-built Migs and lost 55 of our Sabrejets in combat with the enemy. Fifth Air Force Commander Barcus says the reasons for this are: our plane is better than the Mig and our pilots are better than the enemy.

Another Soviet Mig was made available to allied experts today when a second Polish flyer crash landed a Mig on the Danish island of Bornholm. The first Polish flyer to do this, Lieytenant Jarecki, predicts "many more will follow."

In London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons he hopes that President Eisenhower will visit Great Britain during his term as president. He made it clear that there is no urgent reason for such a visit now. The British Foreign office denies reports that the Prime Minister is in informal contact with Moscow on a proposed Big Three meeting.

A. P. Correspondent Bill Otis said tonight that at no time , while he was in Czechoslovakia, did he "act as an espionage agent for the American embassy in the sense that this term is understood in western countries" within the range of his experience. Otis returned to this country on Monday after long imprinsonment in Czecoslovakia.

Edward R. Murrow: May 20, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Normally Justices of the Supreme Court employ language remarkable for its restraint if not lucidity. Today Mr. Justice William O. Douglas made a speech to the American Law Institute which was not marked by the restraint usually practised by the honorable Members of the Court. According to Justice Douglas, America as seen from abroad seems alarmed, confused and intolerant. One important cause for this state of affairs is, according to Justice Douglas, "a growing tendency in the interests of security to take short cuts, to disregard the rights of the individual, to sponsor the cause of intolerance, and to adopt more and more the tactics of the world forces we oppose. These practises and attitudes may go unnoticed here, but they make headlines in Asia. They are a powerful voice of America, more powerful indeed than any program we can produce for radio broadcasts. They have helped lose for America the commanding position of moral leadership which we had at the end of World War II." Justice Douglas also had some blunt words about certain trial procedures in this country. He said: "We have today no exact parallel of the treason trial of Sir Walter Raleigh, no exact counterpart of the Witch Trials of the Massachussetts colony. But we have trials and investigations which perpetuate some of the evils of Raleigh's trial, and of the Witch Trials." And Justice Douglas asks: "What greater inroad on liberty can there be than an official condemnation of a man, without due process of law?"

The Justice feels that in some cases prosecutors are employing what he called "modern witchcraft", confusing the internal and external aspects of the Communist threat in an effort to get the spectre into the Jury Room." Sometimes prosecutors treat the courtroom, not as a place of dignity detached from the community, but as a place to unleash the fury of public passion."

Justice Douglas also paid his respects to the Press, which he said "has pumped into the Jury Room hearsay, confessions, theories and influence which if done in the courtroom would result in mistrials."

Another danger to the rights of the individual as seen by Justice Douglas is that there has been built up a vast network of wire-tappers and eavesdroppers."

Apparently speaking of people who work for the government, Justice Douglas said: "We allow important charges to be proved against a person in administrative proceedings, on the testimony of witnesses whose identity and therefore whose prejudices are never known to the government or to the accused.

In the past few days two eminent men, Mr. George Kennan, formerly our Ambassador to Moscow, and today Justice Douglas have ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ complained and warned about what they believe to be a tendency to confuse the internal and external aspects of the Communist threat; the threat from the outside is obvious enough. That threat determines much of our policy and affects our national pocket. The internal threat is less apparent, though in cases of espionage it may be no less real. Both men appear to believe that the external threat is being used as an excuse to create hysteria and suspicion here at home, with the result that dissent may come to be confused with disloyalty.

Having spent the last few days in Washington, this reporter is flying tomorrow to London, partly in order to report the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II, and partly to try to assess the degree ~~in~~ and depth of the divergence of policy between this country and Britain. There are many old friends there, in and out of the government, who in the past have spoken with considerable candor on equally delicate subjects. And I hope to be able to report something of the climate of opinion in Britain.

My old friend and comrade of the London Blitz, Korea and points in between/will report the news for you, and I shall attempt to add certain comments from London.

Larry Lesueur

Mr. Justice Douglas was speaking of the rights of the individual. This reminded us of something another Sumpreme Court Justice - Oliver Wendell Holmes - once said:"The word right is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls for most rights are qualified." But regardless of degree or interpertation, the novelist Dostoevski was right when he concluded:"Only by self-respect will you compel others to respect you."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 20, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President told Congress today that the Truman Administration left the government's financial affairs in a "critically unsound state." Mr. Eisenhower proposed to Congress the financial plans he disclosed to the nation by radio last night. And he said that except for the economies he proposes it would not be possible, next January, to put into effect the individual income tax reduction already written into law.

Senator Taft said today that he's very much disappointed with the President's conclusion that we must spend at least 50-billions next year on defense and foreign aid. The Senator says that this, plus other government expenses, means there is no way to cut taxes or eliminate deficit spending.

The House Ways and Means Committee today decided to start hearings on the first of June on the President's proposal to extend the excess profits tax. It's due to expire at the end of June but the President wants to keep it through this year. Despite the committee decision, Chairman Reed says he will oppose the President's request. He feels the tax is "oppressive, fosters monopoly, creates competitive disadvantages and promotes waste."

Nevertheless, House Speaker Martin, who met with the Republican committee members, says he is "prayerfully hopeful" that the committee will decide to send the bill to the floor and let the House vote on whether it wants to extend the excess profits tax.

Today, the House approved a Department of Agriculture appropriation bill that calls for spending 106-millions more than the President requested. This is the first money bill the House has increased over the Administration's request.

Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate committee today that even if Congress were to restore the 5-billion dollars the President has cut from air force appropriations for the next year, this would not make the air force any stronger. He insisted that in spite of the cut the Air Force will have at least four times as much money for planes and parts in the next fiscal year as it has had in the current fiscal year. Wilson, and Deputy Secretary Kyes, told the Senators that the Truman Administration's goal of 143-wings was a "paper goal" was always being changed. The testimony also revealed that President Eisenhower regards our long-range bombers as "the decisive striking force" if war comes.

The McCarthy committee was told today that two British-owned ships, out of Hong Kong, have been used to transport Chinese Communist troops along the Chinese coast. Assistant Counsel Kennedy also told the committee these same ships were later used to transport American aid to our allies. A spokesman for the British embassy says: "We are slightly bewildered at the report concerning unidentified ships of unknown tonnage carrying unspecified numbers of so-called troops at a date not known between unstated ports." Senator McCarthy said what he called "this aid to Communist China" more than offsets any military contribution the British have made to the Korean war.

The committee was also told that at least 100 British ships, and 62 others owned by western allies, traded with Red China during the first three months of this year. Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Leddy told the committee that Secretary Dulles wants to stop trade with Communist China except where what the free world gets from China is more valuable than what is shipped into China. He mentioned the Japanese who send Red China seaweed in exchange for iron ore. Senator McCarthy insisted that Defense Secretary Wilson has said that any exports to Communist China may strengthen that country. Democratic Senator Symington suggested that the committee ask the President to make a clear statement on just what this government's attitude is on trading with the enemy.

Republican Senator Williams of Delaware charged today that the Truman administration, in its last days in office, promoted "many thousands" of government workers illegally. Williams says if these workers serve for one year in their new positions, then they will havepermanent status under Civil Service.

The Ford Motor Company says it is laying off 85-thousand employees across the nation because of a strike at its Canton, Ohio, plant, (where forgings and parts are made.)

Benjamin Fairless, chairman of the Board of United States Steel predicts that American industry is on the way to solving its most difficult problem; the conflict between labor and management. He says labor leaders must get rid of two old fashioned ideas; that labor and management are natural and eternal enemies and that collective bargaining calls for labor and management to take something away from each other.

Raymond Swing, radio commentator for the Voice of America, has resigned. He says the agency is crippled by "slanderous attacks on its integrity." And he charges that the State Department is guilty of "spineless failure to stand by its own staff."

Thailand announced today that she will ask the United Nations Security Council to investigate the Communist invasion of Laos as a threat to peace in Southeast Asia. The State Department will support the request.

In Korea today four unidentified planes dropped bombs behind the allied lines. Nine soldiers were killed or wounded. And the Pentagon says we suffered another 197 casualties in Korea last week, including 46 men killed.

The air force says that since the war started we have destroyed 692 Russian-built Migs and lost 55 of our Sabrejets in combat with the enemy. Fifth Air Force Commander Barcus says the reasons for this are: our plane is better than the Mig and our pilots are better than the enemy.

Another Soviet Mig was made available to allied experts today when a second Polish flyer crash landed a Mig on the Danish Island of Bornholm. The first Polish flyer to do this, Lieutenant Jarecki, predicts "many more will follow."

In London, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons he hopes that President Eisenhower will visit Great Britain during his term as president. He made it clear that there is no urgent reason for such a visit now. The British Foreign office denies reports that the Prime Minister is in informal contact with Moscow on a proposed Big Three meeting.

A.P. Correspondent Bill Oatis said tonight that at no time, while he was in Czechoslovakia, did he "act as an espionage agent for the American embassy in the sense that this term is understood in western countries" within the range of his experience. Oatis returned to this country on Monday after long imprisonment in Czechoslovakia.

Normally Justices of the Supreme Court employ language remarkable for its restraint if not lucidity. Today Mr. Justice William O. Douglas made a speech to the American Law Institute which was not marked by the restraint usually practiced by the honorable Members of the Court. According to Justice Douglas, America as seen from abroad seems alarmed, confused and intolerant. One important cause for this state of affairs is, according to Justice Douglas, "a growing tendency in the interests of security to take short cuts, to disregard the rights of the individual, to sponsor the cause of intolerance, and to adopt more and more the tactics of the world forces we oppose. These practices and attitudes may go unnoticed here, but they make headlines in Asia. They are a powerful voice of America, more powerful indeed than any program we can produce for radio broadcasts. They have helped lose for America the commanding position of moral leadership which we had at the end of World War II." Justice Douglas also had some blunt words about certain trial procedures in this country. He said: "We have today no exact parallel of the treason trial of Sir Walter Raleigh, no exact counterpart of the Witch Trials of the Massachusetts colony. But we have trials and investigations which perpetuate some of the evils of Raleigh's trial, and of the Witch Trials." And Justice Douglas asks: "What greater inroad on liberty can there be than an official condemnation of a man, without due process of law?"

The Justice feels that in some cases prosecutors are employing what he called "modern witchcraft" confusing the internal and external aspects of the Communist threat in an effort to get the spectre into the Jury Room." Sometimes prosecutors treat the courtroom, not as a place of dignity detached from the community, but as a place to "unleash the fury of public passion."

Justice Douglas also paid his respects to the Press, which he said "has pumped into the Jury Room hearsay, confessions, theories and influence which if done in the courtroom would result in mistrials."

Another danger to the rights of the individual as seen by Justice Douglas is that there has been built up a "vast network of wire-tappers and eavesdroppers."

Apparently speaking of people who work for the government, Justice Douglas said: "We allow important charges to be proved against a person in administrative proceedings, on the testimony of witnesses whose identity and therefore whose prejudices are never known to the government or to the accused.

In the past few days two eminent men, Mr. George Kennan, formerly our Ambassador to Moscow, and today Justice Douglas have complained and warned about what they believe to be a tendency to confuse the internal and external aspects of the Communist threat; the threat from the outside is obvious enough. That threat determines much of our policy and affects our national pocket. The internal threat is less apparent, though in cases of espionage it may be no less real. Both men appear to believe that the external threat is being used as an excuse to create hysteria and suspicion here at home, with the result that dissent may come to be confused with disloyalty.

Having spent the last few days in Washington, this reporter is flying tomorrow to London, partly in order to report the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II, and partly to try to assess the degree and depth of the divergence of policy between this country and Britain. There are many old friends there, in and out of the government, who in the past have spoken with considerable candor on equally delicate subjects. And I hope to be able to report something of the climate of opinion in Britain.

My old friend and comrade of the London Blitz, Korea and points in between, Larry LeSueur, will report the news for you, and I shall attempt to add certain comments from London.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Mr. Justice Douglas was speaking of the rights of the individual. This reminded us of something another Supreme Court Justice - Oliver Wendell Holmes once said: "The word right is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls for most rights are qualified." But regardless of degree or interpretation, the novelist Distoevski was right when he concluded: "Only by self-respect will you compel others to respect you."

Good Nite and Good Luck.

21 May 1953 - 7/45

Thursday.
May 21, 1953.

Good evening everyone: Heres what happened today.

The leaders of the United States, Great Britain and France, have decided to confer on their common problems. The White House says, the meeting will be devoted, to "the many problems that must be solved co-operatively, so that the cause of world peace may be advanced. A simultaneous announcement was made in London and Paris. Prime Minister Churchill told me [redacted] House of Commons that his "main hope" is that this meeting will [redacted] be a "definite step forward, to a meeting of far graver import" with Malenkov of the Soviet Union. [redacted] Former, Prime Minister Atlee, leader of the opposition Labor Party, asked Sir Winston, if he considered this meeting, preliminary to talks with the rulers of Russia. The Prime Minister said, "he did". And in Paris, French Premier Mayer first made it known, that, he looks to this meeting, as a step toward an eventual meeting with the Russians. He said France, is ready to consider any Soviet proposals on the question of world disarmament. But Rene Mayer may not get to attend this meeting. Three hours after he announced the proposed conference [redacted], the French Assembly failed to give him a vote of confidence ON A DOMESTIC ISSUE. [redacted] And the vote against Mayer was 328 to 243. So, after four and a half months in office, this 18th French cabinet since the Liberation, was voted "out" of office.... French officials will not venture a guess on when they might have a new cabinet and a new premier..but they make it clear that whoevere is the French premier at the time of the meeting will attend as the representative of France.

The British and French indicate that the meeting will probably be heled in the middle of june in Bermuda. The White House agrees that Bermuda will be the place but has no definite word on the time. And in face of both the British and French indications of a possible future meeting with Malenkov, the State Department said today, that the fact that the President will meet with British and French leaders does not commit us, or either of our allies, to any ultimate Four Power meeting. #

From Yugoslavia today came a flat statement denying that Marshal Tito's relations with the Soviet Union have improved in any degree since the Russians started their peace offensive. Their have been REPORTS to this effect..passed by the censors in Moscow. But today's denial comes from none other than "Marshal Tito." He says: "relations between Yugoslavia and Russia and her satellites are as bad as ever. They have not improved.

In this country we seem to be heading for another dispute over the military budget. Republican Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine made it very clear today that she is not satisfied with the testimony received yesterday from Defense Secretary Wilson. Senator Smith has sent the secretary 32 questions she'd like him to answer in writing. The first question, concerning thr Administration's proposed five billion dollar cut in the air force budget, asks:" Is the new budget based on eceonomy or security?" And then Senator Smith inquires: how can you cut the budget, reduce the planned strength of the air force and still say it will be more powerful than it would have been under previous plans. She wants to know if the Joint Chiefs of Staff approved the budget. and who decided the air force should take the heaviest cut. And the Senator from Maine ASKS: how has the nature of the Soviet threat changed so that we need fewer air wings but the same number of army divisions and combat ships.

The Air Force itself made known its lack of agreement with Secretary Wilson in an official statement. This statement was placed in the House record by Democratic Representative Yorty of California. The statement says that under the reductions planned by the Administration:

the Air Force will have poorer equipment... reduced manning standards... fewer air force wings... The Air Force will have to cancel or delay plane deliveries, on July first, and it will have to cancel or delay future deliveries scheduled for the next two years.

The whole problem of deficits and defense was brought up again today by Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey. He told reporters: "This country is confronted with a condition no country ever faced before...the threat of an atomic Pearl Harbor." Humphrey says he's "terribly disappointed" because the government cannot balance the budget for the fiscal year starting this July first. But he hopes to balance it for the next fiscal year, unless "national considerations" make this impossible. Mr. Humphrey told a news conference, the Treasury department is working on a brand new tax law... considering everything. The new law might include a national sales tax, but the Secretary would not go on record for or against this.

The President today nominated three new ambassadors. He selected R. Douglas Stuart, [redacted] treasurer of the Republican National Committee, to be ambassador to Canada. Stuart is vice chairman of the Quaker Oats Company. [redacted] Mr. Eisenhower named Micheal McDermott, the state department's press officer, to be ambassador to El Salvador. and William T. Feifer, a New York attorney, to be ambassador to the Dominican Republican.

The President had breakfast this morning with Republican National Chairman Hall.. and two former party chairmen: Attorney General Brownell and Postmaster General Summerfield. Hall says the group discussed job patronage, but nothing specifically. And he told reporters that he believes Mr. Eisenhower is "even more popular now than when the people cast their votes for him last November."

Undersecretary of State Walter Bedell Smith today asked a House committee to approve the President's request for a law admitting 240-thousand immigrants to this country in the next two years. Smith said Europe's basic over-population and its postwar refugee problem are of the most serious concern to the United States... because of their impact on "the health and stability of friendly countries."

Senator Jenner's [redacted] committee today questioned Edwin S. Smith, a member of the National Labor Relations Board, under the Roosevelt administration. # Smith refused to tell the committee whether he was a Communist when he worked for the government. But he said: "I am not a spy. I never have and never will engage in espionage in connection with the Soviet government."

In Hong Kong, the manager of a British steamship company denied [redacted] that two company ships carried Chinese Communist troops along the China coast. Such a charge was made yesterday before the McCarthy committee. But the Hong Kong ship manager, F.J. [redacted] Horman-Fisher, says the ships in question were seized by the Chinese Communists and operated by them since 1951. He says no one ever tried to get the correct information from his office.

Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State today called on the State Department to make public the full story of what happened to the appointment of Mrs. Mildred ~~McAfee~~ MacAfee Horton, the former director of the Waves and former president of Wellsley college. She had been nominated as a delegate to the United Nations Economic and Social Commission. But later ~~[redacted]~~ someone else was named in her place. Senator Jackson says the State Department's delay, and published news stories, have left "a slur on the reputation and loyalty" of Mrs. Horton.

~~Supreme Court Justice Jackson said today that there is a "startling discrepancy between crimes committed and crimes punished" in this country. He says there is reason to believe that our system of criminal justice is often failing in one or the other of its two ends: to convict the guilty and protect the innocent."~~

The executive Council of the American Federation of Labor today unanimously rejected the Longshoremen's union proposals to reform itself. The Council has ordered the union to clean up within three months. But it did not suggest what it might do at the end of that period if its not satisfied with the Longshoremen's actions.

In Korea today, South Korean troops stopped a Communist attack on an allied ~~[illegible]~~ outpost on the eastern front.

And in India, Secretary of States Dulles and Prime Minister Nehru scheduled another private talk. Intimates of the two men say they cleared up "a great many misunderstandings" at yesterday's meeting.

~~At the United Nations here in New York, French~~

LeSueur cbs 7:45p 21 May 1953

Well, it looks as though Premier Rene Meyer of France, will have to cancell his reservations for Bermuda.. The Fall of the French government today, is not only unfortunate, but almost ludicrous, since the collapse (on a vote of confidence) came immediately after Washington and London deliberately permitted the head of the French government to break the news of the forthcoming meeting of the Western Big Three..

For even this calculated reassurance to the French, that their country is regarded as one of the Great and Sovereign powers, failed to appease the chronically-split, yet power-hungry National Assembly of France..

But in a curious way, this seemingly almost mischievous action by the French politicians, in the face of what appears to be momentous world news, may serve to place a big three or even a big four meeting in a different, if not better, perspective..

The French are known for their logic, and perhaps their cynicism.. And the attitude they displayed today, is that the dynamics of the world are not likely to be changed by a meeting of three [redacted] or even four people...The French attitude may be condemned for its [redacted] relative defeatism, or [redacted] perhaps summed up in the current American expression.. "This is bigger than both of us." In other [redacted] words, [redacted]t the world is bigger than all four [redacted] heads of [redacted] great states...

It may be, that in [redacted] an effort to divert French attention [redacted] from a domestic crisis, Premier Meyer oversold the skeptical French politicians, on the possibilities of what a Big Four meeting could accomplish.. He was making an effort [redacted] to get a vote of confidence, on his request to trim government expenses [redacted] by decree, so. The French Premier jumped the gun on the purposes of a Bermuda meeting. Stated it was to talk over the [redacted] feasability of a meeting with Russia.. A step which the State Department [redacted] cautiously says, the meeting will not be committed...

And in elaborating on his hopes of what an [redacted] prospective Big Four meeting could accomplish, the Ex-Premier declared that [redacted] France would give the utmost consideration to any disarmament proposals by the Soviet Union... [redacted]

This rapid leap into an unknown future, from [redacted] agreement to hold a big three meeting, to a dazzling promise of world [redacted] disarmament, may have looked a little too much like "pie in the sky" to the skeptical [redacted] French Assembly..

[redacted] After all, disarmament has been under discussion at the [redacted], for almost countless years now...with both sides of the world hung-up, not only on "what" is to be [redacted] Accomplished, but how it is to be accomplished, without giving either side the [redacted], and furthermore, how any disarmament could be [redacted]..

The Russians are admmantly against free inspection by [redacted] foreigners, and the West is adamantly against signing any paper agreements, which might find [redacted] disarming alone..

[redacted] It appears to most qualified observers, that in any easing of world tensions, disarmament could only be an end-product, and not a beginning. [redacted] Even if the four great powers placed ceilings on troops under arms, we've already learned that [redacted] that little states like North Korea can fight a pretty good war [redacted]. if they get help..

Time was, of course, when a big four meeting could drastically change the affairs of the world, when their military forces in the field, dictated world policy...But in times of relative peace, this just isn't true.. No four men can shape destiny, anymore than any ONE can, although several have tried..

For the French, the problem of choosing a new Premier, to go to Bermuda, will not be easy... Their parliament knows NOW, that the man they choose, must have stature in the eyes of Esienhower and Churchill, and perhaps ultimately, the Russians.. And men of such caliber and prestige, are hard come by, in France these day. Her leading statesmen, like Paul Reynaud, George Bidault, Rene Plemen and Robert Schuman, are all highly contraversial, party politicians..

But if the French have reformed their government, and the Bermuda meeting comes off on schedule next month, it might be possible for the west to unify its attitudes on Korea, on Indo-China, and perhaps even Red China...

But there are just too many other nations, and too many other problems, to hope for much more, in the immediate future..

This is Larry LeSueur...I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news..(CUE) But first a word from Bob Dixon..

The French government has fallen again...the 18th time since that country was liberated. The issue had nothing to do with atomic control [redacted] the international army [redacted] or the war in Korea. As often happens in the affairs of men, as well as nations, the crisis was reached on a small point: raising [redacted] cafe taxes and cutting [redacted] subsidies for the production of WINE [redacted]. On such things governments rise [redacted] fall.

And that's my footnote to the news.

Friday
Lesueur 22 May 1953 - 7/45

Good evening everyone.. here's what happened today:

Air Force Secretary, Harold E. Talbott says he is "disappointed" in the Administration's reduction of the air force budget. Talbott "hopes" it will not be necessary to curtail any fighting planes or air force research and development. The Secretary made known his views on the proposed 5-billion dollar budget-cut in a letter to Democratic Representative Yorty of California. And Yorty said today, that Defense Secretary Wilson should resign, because he is "a defeatist secretary" and doesn't understand our defense needs. Other Democrats attacked the proposed reduction. Representative Steed of Oklahoma says, IT WILL CUT the "heart muscle out of our national defense." Senator Russell of Georgia, feels the cuts will "make it impossible to work out world peace." feels the Russians will not bargain with us, if we are weak. But on the Republican Side, Chairman Short of the House Armed Services Committee, says, the proposed cuts "are not dangerous." Representative Cole of New York says, the Air Force will still spend 60 per cent of the military budget, "and that ought to be ample." And Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee, says: "The question to be met, is whether or not, we are getting a solid dollar's worth of defense, for each dollar this Congress is asked to provide in taxes."

Today The President signed into law the controversial tidelands bill. And he told 46 members of Congress gathered for the ceremony that he will "always resist federal encroachment upon rights and affairs of the states." Mr. Eisenhower said this bill recognizing the claims of the states to submerged offshore lands within their historic boundaries, "is in keeping with the basic principles of honesty and fair play." The tidelands measure fulfills one of the President's chief campaign promises.

The Labor Department reports that the cost of living went up a bit between March and April and is now within one-half of one per cent of the peak reached last November. Living costs now are seven-tenths of a per cent higher than a year ago and eleven-point-seven per cent above what they were when the Korean war started.

General Motors and the C.I.O. auto workers today agreed on changes in their five year contract which expires in 1955. Since the contract WENT INTO EFFECT, tied to the cost of living, 350-thousand G.M. workers have received raises of 24 cents an hour. The new agreement makes 19 cents of this permanent, as part of the base wage rate..not subject to reduction WHEN the cost of living goes down.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor today asked the President to set up a top-level commission to study ways to assure continued prosperity.

In Washington, the convention of Americans for Democratic Action, accused the President of a lack of leadership. And the A.D.A. sees threats to "the strength and freedom" of the country, in Republican efforts to reduce defense spending and THRU congressional investigations.

Bernard Baruch visited the White House today..spent 90-minutes at lunch with the President.. then told reporters: "Mr. Eisenhower has "the toughest job any president ever had." Baruch said former President Truman had the hardest job during his term.. but now "things are a good deal more complicated and mixed-up."

In India today, Secretary of State Dulles, completing three days of talks with Prime Minister Nehru and other Indian leaders , told reporters he doubts any important results could come from a Big Three meeting with Malenkov of the Soviet Union. Mr. Dulles said he will have these doubts as long as the Soviet bloc is promoting war in Korea and Indo China, and REFUSES to restore the freedom of Austria.

In Canada, the visiting General Ridgeway said, that "human inertia" might prevent the North Atlantic Treaty Forces, from reaching their military goals...He said he was not "imputing any government complacency" but "its a common human trait, to slow down..

The Secretary, answering written questions, submitted in advance, said he feels his visit to India has been very worthwhile, and should lead to better understanding between our two countries.

In Indo-China, French fighter and bomber planes attacked enemy supply routes leading to Communist China. And in Paris, a number of deputies demanded a debate on the war in Indo-China. They were aroused by a report made by four Parliamentarians who visited the fighting area. These deputies say: French beurocracy has created "a virtual dictatorship in Indo-China".. is alienating the loyal Vietnam population and reducing French chances for victory.

insert - yp pass

In Korea today, cold rain and windstorms kept air and ground fighting to a minimum. And a review of the truce proposals we will make, when negotiations are resumed on Sunday was given to a number of Congressmen in Washington. Some of the men who heard Undersecretary of State Bedell Smith testify in private say they expect no major change in our policy.

At the United Nations, a statement from the Chinese Nationalists, says the Formosa navy has intercepted 59 ships carrying strategic materials to Communist China, from August of 1949, to September of 1952. The Chinese Nationalists say 31 of these ships were of British registry..12 were of Chinese Communist origin. and the rest were Panamanian or Norweigian.

In Canada today, the visiting General Ridegway said, that "human inertia" might prevent the North Atlantic Treaty forces, from reaching their military goals. He said, he was not "imputing any government complacency" but "its a common human trait to slow down."

Here in New York, a jury found William Perl, a former Columbia University physics teacher, guilty of perjury in denying that he knew convicted Atom Spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. Perl faces a maximum sentence of [redacted] ten years in prison. #

Ed Murrow arrived in London today and a few hours ago he recorded this report for you:

#

And This is L L Lemon / I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to The News = Cue

But first a [redacted] Bob Dixon, —

Coronation fever, has apparently set in for everyone in Britain...except the Communists. (THE LONDON) [redacted] Daily Worker says the Coronation is just one "big capitalist plot to keep the workers in their place." But [redacted] of more immediate concern to the Daily Worker [redacted] is the traffic congestion. It complains that cars and trucks are all tied up in what it calls "The Coronation Crawl." It was never like this in Moscow. And that's my footnote to the news.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, May 22, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Ed Murrow arrived in London today, and a few hours ago he recorded this report for you.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON.

This is about as superficial a report as you have heard; it's based on some five or six hours in London.

After the plane sat down at Heathrow, the customs inspector asked a few perfunctory questions, one of them being whether I had ever been in England before. I told him I had for a bit - nine years, from '37 to '46. He fashioned himself a small smile and said, "Not such a terribly bad place, is it?" On the evidence of just a couple of hours' driving about these familiar streets, the customs man was, as usual, involved in an understatement. This city resembles a great theatre, stage set. All the props are familiar. They have been placed there by history. Time has even softened the hard outlines of the scars left by bombs and the V-1s and the V-2s. Down near St. Paul's there are even little greenhouses where old buildings died. There is green grass, even bushes four or five feet high, covering some of the rubble. There is more traffic on the streets than I have seen since 1939. The buses seem a brighter red than they have since Mr. Chamberlain brought back that piece of paper from Munich. The people appear better clothed than they have since Sir Winston Churchill popularized his version of the siren zip suit.

The green pots standing steady on the window ledges are greener than they were before, and the geraniums they wear with pride are as red as the color on the Union Jack. The city has been furbished and polished. Even signs like "The Midland Bank", "Lyon's", "Milk Bar" have been painted and brushed and look right impressive.

It seems that almost everything has been cleaned except Lord

Nelson atop his column in Trafalgar Square. Down around Parliament Square, along the Mall and Park Lane, the whole of the coronation procession route, the stands slope down to the street like delicate terracing or counteur plowing in the Midwest. They seem almost designed to prevent erosion, while the symbols of British history flow thru the streets.

It's a warm evening over here. The stands outside Buckingham Palace are about two-thirds filled. Nothing is happening. No one is going anywhere. These are just Londoners sitting there, looking at that rather sombre palace, maybe soaking up a little history. Someone produced a line somewhere the other day saying that the English are a religious people, but their religion is England. They're preparing for a ceremony which is uniquely their own. They're a people proud, at times arrogant, confident that they know how to act because their history provides them with so much guidance and precedence - and that includes knowing how to die in defense of this accumulation of liberty, prejudice and idiosyncracy with as much dignity as any other people.

I noticed, driving along the Embankment this afternoon, that even the boats on the Thames seemed well scrubbed and polished, saw one that was at Dunkerque. As we drove along, the wheels of the ancient car felt the little valleys or potholes where incendiary bombs had burnt themselves out on the wooden paving blocks. During a war these people in this drab but different city dug deep in their history for strength and stability; they were often frightened. But this curious combination of achievement and mythology created by their ancestors caused them to stand steady. They are now preparing to add another chapter to their long history of pageantry and performance, another incident which will serve to remind the present generation and perhaps future ones that the continuity of the development of freedom for the individual in this island has been no accident.

The Crown in this country is more than a symbol, which every resource of press and radio exalts and defends. It is a reminder of where this nation has been. The Crown has been worn by tyrants who lost their heads, by great and by mediocre men. The power of the sovereign has been reduced, in political terms, to the point where only the symbolism ~~reminds~~ remains, but in constitutional terms this country could not function without a crown, and each reduction in the sovereign's power has meant an increase in the sovereignty of the individual.

I observed today that the face of the clock Big Ben has been cleaned. I assume that that was done by the Office of Works or another appropriate Government authority. But I observed too that in some of the poorer districts, where the inhabitants have probably never had more than ten shillings ahead of the rent, the windows were washed, the curtains were white and the old, worn stone steps were freshly scrubbed. This is not, I suspect, a show for tourists. The people who live in those dwellings will garner no dollars. It is, rather, a spontaneous act which springs from national pride and the knowledge or belief widely held in this country that tomorrow is shaped and created by the sum total of a lot of yesterdays.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London.

Good night and good luck.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheimer

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESEUER SUBSTITUTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 22, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

Air Force Secretary Harold E. Talbott says he is "disappointed" in the Administration's reduction of the air force budget. Talbott "hopes" it will not be necessary to curtail any fighting planes or air force research and development. The Secretary made known his views on the proposed 5-billion dollar budget-cut in a letter to Democratic Representative Yorty of California. And Yorty said today that Defense Secretary Wilson should resign because he is "a defeatist secretary" and doesn't understand our defense needs. Other Democrats attacked the proposed reduction. Representative Steed of Oklahoma says it will cut the "heart muscle out of our national defense." Senator Russell of Georgia feels the cuts will "make it impossible to work out world peace." He feels the Russians will not bargain with us if we are weak, But on the Republican Side, Chairman Short of the House Armed Services Committee says the proposed cuts "are not dangerous." Representative Cole of New York says the Air Force will still spend 60 percent of the military budget "and that ought to be ample." And Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee says: "The question to be met is whether or not we are getting a solid dollar's worth of defense for each dollar this Congress is asked to provide in taxes.

Today the President signed into law, the controversial tidelands bill. And he told 46 members of Congress gathered for the ceremony that he will "always resist federal encroachment upon rights and affairs of the states." Mr. Eisenhower said this bill, recognizing the claims of the states to submerged offshore lands within their historic boundaries, "is in keeping with the basic principles of honesty and fair play." The tidelands measure fulfills one of the President's chief campaign promises.

The Labor Department reports that the cost of living went up a bit between March and April and is now within one-half of one per cent of the peak reached last November. Living costs now are seven-tenths of a percent higher than a year ago and eleven-point seven percent above what they were when the Korean war started.

General Motors and the CIO auto workers today agreed on changes in their five year contract which expires in 1955. Since the contract tied to the cost of living went into effect, 350-thousand G.M. workers have received raises of 24 cents an hour. The new agreement makes 19 cents of this permanent as part of the base wage rate, not subject to reduction when the cost of living goes down.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor today asked the President to set up a top-level commission to study ways to assure continued prosperity.

In Washington, the convention of Americans for Democratic Action, accused the President of a lack of leadership. And the A.D.A. sees threats to "the strength and freedom" of the country in Republican efforts to reduce defense spending and congressional investigations.

Bernard Baruch visited the White House today, spent 90 minutes at lunch with the President, then told reporters: "Mr. Eisenhower has "the toughest job any president ever had." Baruch said former President Truman had the hardest job during his term, but now "things are a good deal more complicated and mixed up."

In India today, Secretary of State Dulles, completing three days of talks with Prime Minister Nehru and other Indian leaders, told reporters he doubts any important results could come from a Big Three meeting with Malenkov of the Soviet Union. Mr. Dulles said he will have these doubts as long as the Soviet bloc is promoting war in Korea and in Indo China, and refuses to restore the freedom of Austria.

In Canada, the visiting General Ridgeway said, that "human inertia" might prevent the North Atlantic Treaty Forces, from reaching their military goals; He said he was not "imputing any government complacency" but "its a common human trait, to slow down.

The Secretary, answering written questions submitted in advance, said he feels his visit to India has been very worthwhile and should lead to better understanding between our two countries.

In Indo-China, French fighter and bomber planes attacked enemy supply routes leading to Communist China. And in Paris a number of deputies demanded a debate on the war in Indo-China. They were aroused by a report made by four Parliamentarians who visited the fighting area. These deputies say: French bureaucracy has created "a virtual dictatorship in Indo-China" is alienating the loyal Vietnam population and reducing French chances for victory.

In Korea today, cold rain and windstorms kept air and ground fighting to a minimum. And a review of the truce proposals we will make when negotiations are resumed on Sunday was given to a number of Congressmen in Washington. Some of the men who heard Undersecretary of State Bedell Smith testify in private say they expect no major change in our policy.

At the United Nations, a statement from the Chinese Nationalists say the Formosa navy has intercepted 59 ships carrying strategic materials to Communist China from August of 1949 to September of 1952. The Chinese Nationalists say 31 of these ships were of British registry, 12 were of Chinese Communist origin and the rest were Panamanian or Norwiegian.

In New York, a jury found William Perl, a former Columbia University physics teacher, guilty of perjury in denying that he knew convicted Atom Spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. Perl faces a maximum sentence of ten years in prison.

Ed Murrow arrived in London today and a few hours ago he recorded this report for you.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON.

This is about as superficial a report as you have heard; it's based on some five or six hours in London.

After the plane sat down at Heathrow, the customs inspector asked a few perfunctory questions, one of them being whether I had ever been in England before. I told him I had for a bit - nine years, from '37 to '46. He fashioned himself a small smile and said: "Not such a terribly bad place, is it?" On the evidence of just a couple of hours' driving about these familiar streets, the customs man was, as usual, involved in an understatement. This city resembles a great theatre, stage set. All the props are familiar. They have been placed there by history. Time has even softened the hard outlines of the scars left by bombs and the V-1s and the V-2s. Down near St. Paul's there are even little greenhouses where old buildings died. There is green grass, even bushes four or five feet high, covering some of the rubble. There is more traffic on the streets than I have seen since 1939; buses seem a brighter red than they have since Mr. Chamberlain brought back that piece of paper from Munich. The people appear better clothed than they have since Sir Winston Churchill popularized his version of the siren zip suit.

The green pots standing steady on the window ledges are greener than they were before, and the geraniums they wear with pride are as red as the color on the Union Jack. The city has been furbished and polished. Even signs like "The Midland Ban," "Lyon's," "Mild Bar" have been painted and brushed and look right impressive. It seems that almost everything has been cleaned except Lord Nelson atop his column in Trafalgar Square. Down around Parliament Square, along the Mall and Park Lane, the whole of the coronation procession route, the stands slope down to the street like delicate terracing or countour plowing in the Midwest. They seem almost designed to prevent erosion, while the symbols of British history flow through the streets.

It's a warm evening over here. The stands outside Buckingham Palace are about two-thirds filled. Nothing is happening. No one is going anywhere. These are just Londoners sitting there, looking at that rather sombre palace, maybe soaking up a little history. Someone produced a line somewhere the other day saying that the English are a religious people, but their religion is England. They're preparing for a ceremony which is uniquely their own. They're a people proud, at times arrogant, confident that they know how to act because their history provides them with so much guidance and precedence - and that includes knowing how to die in defense of this accumulation of liberty, prejudice and idiosyncracy with as much dignity as any other people.

I noticed, driving along the Embankment this afternoon, that even the boats on the Thames seemed well scrubbed and polished, saw one that was at Dunkerque. As we drove along, the wheels of the ancient car felt the little valleys or potholes where incendiary bombs had burnt themselves out on the wooden paving blocks. During a war these people in this drab but different city dug deep in their history for strength and stability; they were often frightened. But this curious combination of achievement and mythology created by their ancestors caused them to stand steady. They are now preparing to add another chapter to their long history of pageantry and performance, another incident which will serve to remind the present generation and perhaps future ones that the continuity of the development of freedom for the individual in this island has been no accident.

The Crown in this country is more than a symbol, which every resource of press and radio exalts and defends. It is a reminder of where this nation has been. The Crown has been worn by tyrants who lost their heads, by great and by mediocre men. The power of the sovereign has been reduced, in political terms, to the point where only the sumbolism remains, but in constitutional terms this country could not function without a crown, and each reduction in the sovereign's power has meant an increase in the sovereignty of the individual.

I observed today that the face of the clock Big Ben has been cleaned. I assume that that was done by the Office of Works or another appropriate Government authority. But I observed too, that in some of the poorer districts, where the inhabitants have probably never had more than ten shillings ahead of the rent, the windows were washed, the curtains were white and the old, worn stone steps were freshly scrubbed. This is not, I suspect, a show for tourists. The people who live in those dwellings will garner no dollars. It is, rather, a spontaneous act which springs from national pride and the knowledge or belief widely held in this country that tomorriw shaped and created by the sum total of a lot of yesterdays.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London. Good Night and Good luck!

LESEUER: And this is Larry Leseuer. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news, but first, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESEUER: Coronation fever has apparently set in for everyone in Britain, except the Communists. The London Daily Worker says the Coronation is just one "big capitalist plot to keep the workers in their place." But of more immediate concern to the Daily Worker is the traffic congestion. It complains that cars and trucks are all tied up in what it calls "The Coronation Crawl." It was never like this in Moscow. And that's my footnote to the news.

7/45 - May 25 - 1953 - hesman

Monday

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

The Soviet Union has turned down an invitation from the West, to resume talks on an Austrian peace treaty. Allied leaders, particularly in Washington, have insisted that an agreement on the future of Austria, would be a "concrete deed By which the Russian's, could back up their so-called peace offensive. The original invitation by the British, set the date for this Wednesday.

Today, Moscow radio reports, that Deputy Foreign Minister Malik, has told London:" There is no reason to suppose, that the conference now proposed, would give more favorable results than preceding conferences." Malik suggested that it would be "more expedient" to discuss Austria through "diplomatic channels by exchange of relevant opinion."

And some hours (before) Moscow made this announcement, the State Department issued a review of negotiations on Austria with the conclusion that Moscow's attitude "leaves little hope for the successful conclusion of a treaty in the immediate future." We insist that the Soviet Union "has been, and is" the stumbling block.

At the White House today, the President discussed the proposed Bermuda conference with his congressional leaders. House Speaker Martin says the President thinks this meeting will result in "immense goodwill" for us, the British and the French. And Senator Knowland said all the representatives at today's White House meeting agreed "it is a constructive move." The President and the Congressional leaders also agreed to support legislation to lend one million tons of wheat to Pakistan. Speaker Martin says the need is desperate..because of a recent draught.

Martin also says he feels that the Administration's tax program will pass the House.."if we ever get it to the floor for a vote." [redacted]

The White House today issued a statement by General Ridgeway, the commander of the North Atlantic Defense Forces, announcing that Admiral Fechteler has been appointed commander-in-chief of the Allied Forces in Southern Europe. The Admiral, who is now chief of naval operations, with a two-year-term yet to run, will replace Admiral Carney who has been called home to take the Naval Operations post. The two men swap jobs.

Out in Nevada today, America's atomic cannon successfully fired a nuclear shell. The burst from the 280 millemeter gun was fired at a target area seven miles away. The Army and the Atomic Energy Commission say the shell exploded just as it was expected to do. Defense Secretary Wilson, who witnessed the test, says - "it was extremely interesting and I am pleased with its success." Admiral Radford, who is to be chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called the test "a milestone in the history of atomic weapons."

In Washington, the Supreme Court again refused to intervene in the case of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies. The vote was 7 to 2. It was the third time our highest court turned down a request for a hearing by the Rosenbergs. Their attorney announces he'll ask the court for a stay of execution until he prepares another petition for a rehearing.

Senator McCarthy revealed today, that he has held-up a letter to the President.. requesting his views on the Administration's policy on trade with Communist China. Last week one of the McCarthy committee aides, said such a letter had been delivered to the White House. Then he said, it had been withdrawn. Now, Senator McCarthy says, the letter was not sent because he feels "it would be the same as asking the President to testify" before the committee. Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri who originally suggested that the President be asked for his views., disagrees.., says it would only be asking someone in responsible authority for the policy of the government.

The Foreign Relations Committee was told today, that a naval blockade of Communist China is not feasible. and could not be enforced... because Russia's controls two Chinese "free ports"...Dairen and Port Arthur. Kenneth R. Hansen, acting depity director of the mutual security administration, told the committee that Russia now delivers 90 per cent of all Red China's imports. [redacted]

~~received a greater value of goods from the Red Chinese than it has sold to them.~~

A majority of the Senate Labor Committee failed to show up for a meeting today, so Chairman Smith, put it off until June third.. a week from Wednesday. Democrats say this makes it unlikely that Congress can revise the Taft-Hartley law this year.

And the Senate today refused to enlarge its Labor and Armed Services committees, to make room, for Independent Senator Morse of Oregon. The vote was 56 to 19.

A House committee TODAY heard two Internal Revenue Bureau experts testify that an officer of Schenley Industries, received a favorable tax ruling, after former Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, interceded in the case. Snyder is said to have telephoned the bureau's chief counsel, to the effect that: Louis Johnson, one-time secretary of defense, was interested in the case, and "if there is anything we can do, let's try to help him out." The tax experts say the favorable ruling followed for John L. Leban, vice president of Schleny. Snyder said today: in each of his assignments for the government "I have always given wholehearted devotion to the public interest."

Republican National Chairman Hall said today that he favors lowering the federal voting age from 21 to 18. Hall says the President and Vice President Nixon approve.

In Korea we have now presented to the Communists a new truce proposal. And the meetings have been recessed for one week. Allied negotiators have refused to disclose any of the details.. or say anything about what happened at today's meeting. The Communists say: we asked for secret sessions in the future. The South Korean delegation on the U.N. truce team did not attend today's meeting.. presumably because of objections to at least part of the new proposal.

In Tokyo today, a Japanese newspaper says Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was jerked from her automobile by some 20 Japanese women who waved Communist banners. Mrs. Roosevelt's secretary denies this report.. says the demonstrators did not use physical violence.. but shouted at her: "Go home.. we don't want war." Mrs. Roosevelt herself was not available for comment.

And Now.. for a report from London.. as recorded by Ed Murrow a few minutes ago. = And This is Larry LeSueur - I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to The News - (Cue) But first a word from Bob Dixon

On Friday night, Princess Margaret will attend the Coronation Ball at Hampton Court, the largest of the Queen's Palaces, where the "No Smoking" rule is strictly enforced. So Britons are speculating whether the young Princess, who has frequently smoked in public, will perpetuate the modern age or bow to the ancient royal decree. The first...and last...time anyone smoked within the Palace Grounds was 400 years ago. It was a gentleman named Sir Walter Raleigh.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, May 25, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: And now for a report from London, as recorded by Ed Murrow a few minutes ago.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON:

And this is no time to speak of weighty affairs from London. A long week end holiday is drawing to a close. The sun has been shining for two days, temperatures in the 80s. No people react more strongly to sunshine than the English - they get so little of it. On a bright, sunny day their whole character and cast of countenance takes on a benign and gracious air. Sir Winston Churchill is down at his country place, Chartwell, dealing with official papers, behind a brick wall that he built himself, watching four baby swans, ten days old, paddle about a pond.

The British appear to be watching the news from a place X called Katmandu as eagerly as the news from Moscow or Washington. Katmandu is the cablehead for dispatches telling about Britain's team of mountain climbers trying to conquer Mt. Everest as a coronation present for the Queen. Also, Neeelah, the favorite for the Derby, is lame and may not run - and this is a matter of the utmost concern.

Down on the east coast, near Brighton, a floating mine has been lashed to the breakwater. And later this week a group of youngsters, including many Germans, will arrive in London to study the British way of life. The German kids will stay in the Borough of Westham, in the homes of working people, as their guests. The fathers or brothers of those German kids probably dropped the mine and they certainly leveled about a square mile of Westham with bombs, killed hundreds and rendered thousands homeless. This hospitality for German youngsters is another indication that the British do not attribute to nations the emotions or characteristics of individuals. And this is even true in relation to Senator McCarthy. One of the shrewdest and most experiens-ed observers of the British political scene said to me yesterday: "If his name were MacDonald or McNabb he would not be so thoroly disliked, but McCarthy sounds Irish and we've had a spot of difficulty with the Irish from time to time and the ancient association tends to increase the current dislike."

Later in the week we shall deal at some length with the subject of Anglo-American relations. But at the end of this long Whitsun week end, spent roaming the streets of London, those relations do not appear to be in such bad repair. British opinion is not made by a speech or a transatlantic exchange. These are people who believe in the inevitability of gradualness. A friend said to me today, commenting upon the Russian reaction to the Bermuda meeting, "it rather looks as tho the Russians would save us again. Their big hope is to divide the Western Alliance and we are apparently not as divided as the Russians think."

In this country much of the old flavor, the casual, ~~xxxx~~ leisurely belief that urgent questions should be aged and seasoned by delay still remains. After all, it's only about sixty years since Joseph Chamberlain wrote to Mr. Balfour, "I would like to discuss this matter with you. I think you will agree that it is urgent. I am just going abroad and will be back in a month. Could we meet then?" And Mr. Balfour sent his reply -- the month was August -- and the reply said; "I agree about the profound urgency of the matter. I shall be in Biarritz with my father-in-law when you come back, but no doubt we can arrange to meet before Christmas and go into it thoroly." The British put little premium on consistency or conformity. In the rehearsals down at Westminster Abbey the Archbishop of Canterbury, albeit in casual tones, orders about officers who were accustomed during the war to order about hundreds of thousands of troops.

Preparations are being made to present Elizabethan Britain. The script might have been written by Sir Walter Scott. The proceedings will have nothing to do with contemporary Britain. There will be no pageantry of worn-out mines, or the atomic energy plant at Harwell, or the welfare state, or the still limited diet. The Coronation will be a combination of medieval Britain and Shakespeare's Britain and, so far as this observer can discern, that's the way the people who live here want it.

(?)

Normally, the so-called British man-in-the-street talks very well on any subject. He has opinions; he isn't afraid to express them and he has no fear of being hailed before a non-existent Un-British Committee of the House of Commons. But on the subject of the Coronation Londoners are strangely uncommunicative. They take the attitude that either you understand it or you don't. The position is rather like it was during the blitz, when these same people would occasionally say, "Do you think we're really brave or just lacking in imagination?" Their bravery then bought them hope and tide now. If these people are finished, they don't know it. As a friend of mine in the London police force said today, "We've always done rather well under a Queen, haven't we, sir?" This may be judging the future by the past, but that's the way it is.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London.

Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESEUER SUBSTITUTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 25, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

The Soviet Union has turned down an invitation from the West to resume talks on an Austrian peace treaty. Allied leaders, particularly in Washington, have insisted that an agreement on the future of Austria would be a "concrete deed" by which the Russian's could back up their so-called peace offensive. The original invitation by the British set the date for this Wednesday. Today, Moscow radio reports that Deputy Foreign Minister Malik has told London: "There is no reason to suppose that the conference now proposed would give more favorable results than preceding conferences." Malik suggested that it would be "more expedient" to discuss Austria through "diplomatic channels by exchange of relevant opinion."

And some hours before Moscow made this announcement, the State Department issued a review of negotiations on Austria with the conclusion that Moscow's attitude "leaves little hope for the successful conclusion of a treaty in the immediate future." We insist that the Soviet Union "has been, and is" the stumbling block.

At the White House today, the President discussed the proposed Bermuda conference with his congressional leaders. House Speaker Martin says the President thinks this meeting will result in "immense goodwill" for us, the British and the French. And Senator Knowland said all the representatives at today's White House meeting agreed "it is a constructive move." The President and the Congressional leaders also agreed to support legislation to lend one million tons of wheat to Pakistan. Speaker Martin says the need is desperate because of a recent draught.

Martin also says he feels that the Administration's tax program will pass the House "if we ever get it to the floor for a vote."

The White House today issued a statement by General Ridgeway, the commander of the North Atlantic Defense Forces, announcing that Admiral Fechteler has been appointed commander-in-chief of the Allied Forces in Southern Europe. The Admiral, who is now chief of naval operations, with a two-year-term yet to run, will replace Admiral Carney who has been called home to take the Naval Operations post. The two men swap jobs.

Out in Nevada today, America's atomic cannon successfully fired a nuclear shell. The burst from the 280 millemeter gun was fired at a target area seven miles away. The Army and the Atomic Energy Commission say the shell exploded just as it was expected to do. Defense Secretary Wilson, who witnessed the test, says "it was extremely interesting and I am pleased with its success."

Admiral Radford, who is to be chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called the test "a milestone in the history of atomic weapons."

In Washington, the Supreme Court again refused to intervene in the case of Julius and Ethel Rosemberg, the convicted atomic spies. The vote was 7 to 2. It was the third time our highest court turned down a request for a hearing by the Rosenbergs. heir attorney announces he'll ask the court for a stay of execution until he prepares another petition for a rehearing.

Senator McCarthy revealed today that he has held up a letter to the President requesting his views on the Administration's policy on trade with Communist China. Last week one of the McCarthy committee aides said such a letter had been delivered to the White House. Then he said it had been withdrawn. Now, Senator McCarthy says the letter was not sent because he feels "it would be the same as asking the President to testify" before the committee. Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri who originally suggested that the President be asked for his views, disagrees, says it would "only be asking someone in responsible authority for the policy of the government."

The Foreign Relations Committee was told today that a naval blockade of Communist China is not feasible, and could not be enforced because Russia's controls two Chinese "free ports" Dairen and Port Arthur. Kenneth R. Hansen, acting deputy director of the mutual security administration, told the committee that Russia now delivers 90 percent of all Red China's imports.

A majority of the Senate Labor Committee failed to show up for a meeting today, so Chairman Smith put it off until June third, a week from Wednesday. Democrats say this makes it unlikely that Congress can revise the Taft-Hartley law this year.

And the Senate today refused to enlarge its Labor and Armed Services committees to make room for Independent Senator Morse of Oregon. The vote was 56 to 19.

A House committee today heard two Internal Revenue Bureau experts testify that an officer of chenley Industries received a favorable tax ruling after former Secretary of the Treasury Snyder interceded in the case. Snyder is said to have telephoned the bureau's chief counsel to the effect that Louis Johnson, one-time secretary of defense, was interested in the case, and "if there is anything we can do, let's try to help him out." The tax experts say the favorable ruling followed for John L. Leban, vice president of Schenley. Snyder said today: "In each of his assignments for the government "I have always given wholehearted devotion to the public interest."

Republican National Chairman Hall said today that he favors lowering the federal voting age from 21 to 18. Hall says the President and Vice President Nixon approve.

In Korea we have now presented to the Communists a new truce proposal. And the meetings have been recessed for one week. Allied negotiators have refused to disclose any of the details, or say anything about what happened at today's meeting. The Communists say: we asked for secret sessions in the future. The South Korean delegation on the U.N. truce team did not attend today's meeting, presumably because of objections to at least part of the new proposal.

In Tokyo today, a Japanese newspaper says Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was jerked from her automobile by some 20 Japanese women who waved Communist banners. Mrs. Roosevelt's secretary denies this report; says the demonstrators did not use physical violence, but shouted at her: "Go home, we don't want war." Mrs. Roosevelt herself was not available for comment.

And now, for a report from London, as recorded by Ed Murrow a few minutes ago.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON!

And this is no time to speak of weighty affairs from London. A long week end holiday is drawing to a close. The sun has been shining for two days, temperatures in the 80s. No people react more strongly to sunshine than the English - they get so little of it. On abright, sunny day their whole character and cast of countenance takes on a benign and gracious air. Sir Winston Churchill is down at his country place, Chartwell, dealing with official papers, behind a brick wall that he built himself, watching four baby swans, ten days old, paddle about a pond.

The British appear to be watching the news from a place called Katmandu as eagerly as the news from Moscow or Washington. Katmandu is the cablehead for dispatches telling about Britain's team of mountain climbers trying to conquer Mt. Everest as a coronation present for the Queen. Also, Neoolah, the favorite for the Derby, is lame and may not run - and this is a matter of the utmost concern.

Down on the east coast, near Brighton, a floating mine has been lashed to the breakwater. And later this week a group of youngsters, including many Germans, will arrive in London to study the British way of life. The German kids will stay in the Borough of Westham, in the homes of working people, as their guests. The fathers or brothers of those German kids probably dropped the mine and they certainly leveled about a square mile of Westham with bombs, killed hundreds and rendered thousands homeless. This hospitality for German youngsters is another indication that the British do not attribute to nations the emotions or characteristics of individuals. And this is even true in relation to Senator McCarthy. One of the shrewdest and most experienced observers of the British political scene said to me yesterday: "If his name were macDonald or McNabb he would not be so thoroughly disliked, but McCarthy sounds Irish and we've had a spot of difficulty with the Irish from time to time and the ancient association tends to increase the current dislike."

Later in the week we shall deal at some length with the subject of Anglo-American relations. But at the end of this long Whitsun Week end, spent roaming the streets of London, those relations do not appear to be in such bad repair. British opinion is not made by a speech or a transatlantic exchange. These are people who believe in the inevitability of gradualness. A friend said to me today, commenting upon the Russian reaction to the Bermuda meeting, "it looks as though the Russians would save us again. Their big hope is to divide the Western Alliance and we are apparently not as divided as the Russians think."

In this country much of the old flavor, the casual, leisurely belief that urgent questions should be aged and seasoned by delay still remains. After all, it's only about sixty years since Joseph Chamberlain wrote to Mr. Balfour, "I would like to discuss this matter with you. I think you will agree that it is urgent. I am just going abroad and will be back in a month. Could we meet then?" And Mr. Balfour sent his reply - the month was August - and the reply said: "I agree about the profound urgency of the matter. I shall be in Biarritz with my father-in-law when you come back, but no doubt we can arrange to meet before Christmas and go into it thoroughly." The British put little premium on consistency or conformity. In the rehearsals down at Westminster Abbey the Archbishop of Canterbury, albeit in casual tones, orders about officers who were accustomed during the war to order about hundreds of thousands of troops.

Preparations are being made to present Elizabethan Britain. The script might have been written by Sir Walter Scott. The proceedings will have nothing to do with contemporary Britain. There will be no pageantry of worn-out mines, or the atomic energy plant at Harwell, or the welfare state, or the still limited diet. The Coronation will be a combination of medieval Britain and Shakespeare's Britain and, so far as this observer can discern, that's the way the people who live here want it.

Normally, the so-called British man-in-the-street talks very well on any subject. He has opinions. he isn't afraid to express them and he has no fear of being hailed before a non-existent Un-British Committee of the House of Commons. But on the subject of the Coronation Londoners are strangely uncommunicative. They take the attitude that either you understand it or you don't. The position is rather like it was during the blitz, when these same people would occasionally say "do you think we're really brave or just lacking in imagination?" Their bravery then bought them hope and tide now. If these people are finished, they don't know it. As a friend of mine in the London police force said today, "We've always done rather well under a Queen, haven't we, sir?" This may be judging the future by the past, but that's the way it is.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London.

Good Night and Good Night!

LESEUER: And this is Larry Leseuer. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news, but first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESEUER: On Friday night, Princess Margaret will attend the Coronation Ball at Hampton Court, the largest of the Queen's Palaces, where the "No Smoking" rule is strictly enforced. So Britons are speculating whether the young Princess, who has frequently smoked in public, will perpetuate the modern age or bow to the ancient royal decree. The first and last time anyone smoked within the Palace Grounds was 400 years ago. It was a gentleman named Sir Walter Raleigh.

26 May 1953 7/45 Down

Tuesday

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

Prime Minister Churchill announced that his government "completely supports" the new allied truce proposal for Korea. India's Prime Minister Nehru endorses the proposal..so do the Dutch. All three were consulted before our General Harrison turned the plan over to the enemy. But from the South Korean ambassador to Washington comes this statement: "the proposals are "completely unsatisfactory to my government and to my people."

Sir Winston, in a statement announcing Britain's approval of the still secret plan, made it clear that all Commonwealth countries and all other members of the United Nations fighting in Korea were consulted. Churchill could not say more, because of the secrecy of the details, but he described the proposal as very close to the terms of the Indian resolution adopted by the United Nations General Assembly last December.

Prime Minister Nehru made the same comparison. And he urged a quick settlement of the Korean war "to relieve anxiety in Asia and clear the field for settling wider issues."

The South Korean ambassador called on our Acting Secretary of State Smith and then made known the views of his government to reporters. He said he didn't "lodge a protest" with Acting Secretary Smith. Just tried to tell him why the South Korean people don't like the whole idea. He feels the allies are making concessions to the Communists, and the Communists are making no concessions. And he says his government insists that as part of the price of peace in Korea, his country must be unified.

In Korea today, South Korean sources told American reporters what is in the secret proposals. Their accounts do not exactly jibe with reports we've had from Washington. But this appears to be what we have suggested to the enemy: A five-nation neutral commission to take charge of all prisoners who do not want to go home. They will be held for 90 days while the Chinese and North Korean Communists attempt to change their minds. At the end of this period, those North Koreans who still refuse to go home, would be released in South Korea. And Chinese Communists who refuse repatriation would be set free..possibly in Formosa, the home of the Nationalists. [redacted]

But to repeat the latest word from the White House:

No Korean prisoners of war will be repatriated by force. And no prisoners will be coerced of intimidated in any way.

The President says these principles "are basic and not subject to change."

2A

We anticipate a third group: those prisoners who tell us they do not want to go home.. yet UNDER DURESS tell the enemy they do want to return. These cases would be decided by the political conference..with a final appeal to the United Nations General Assembly. That seems to be the general outline of the proposals we have made at Panmunjom.

[redacted]

While the statesmen were explaining and endorsing or condemning these proposals, American flyers engaged enemy Migs in new air battles. We shot down 12 Migs.. damaged another. and the air force says all of our planes returned safely from today's battles.

In this country the new battle over the air force budget went through another day of charges and explanations. Deputy Defense Secretary Kyes says the Joint Chiefs of Staff, soon to be replaced, have ~~misled~~ MIS-led the American people into a false sense of security. He says the chiefs set "unfortunately" high goals for expanding the air force. And this left the impression of security because a lot of money was being spent and big figures were used as the eventual target. Kyes says flatly that the old target of 143 air wings "was too high for orderly achivement in the time available, and with unfortunate results."

But Democratic Representative Price says that the five billion dollar cut in air force funds was dictated by the Budget Bureau. without military consultation. The Budget Bureau says this is not true.. the new goals and figures were approved by the National Security Council.

General Vandenbergh, chief of staff of the air force, says he sat in on a National Security Council meeting to answer questions. But he was not consulted..not asked for opinions.. and gave none.

~~Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia made challenges recent statements by Defense Secretary Wilson that we can get more air defense for less money. Russell says: If Wilson has found a magic formula, its logical sequence would be to cut the Air Force budget by ten billions, instead of five billions, and thus get twice as much defense.~~

~~Democratic Senator Johnson of Texas says the whole issue has left people bewildered. Republican Senator Carlson of Kansas says Johnson's speech is just politics.~~

At the Supreme Court today, Chief Justice Vinson denied a stay of execution for Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies. The appeal had been filed earlier in the day..less than 24 hours after the court, for the third time, had refused to review the trial. #

The State Department announced today that we are demanding the immediate departure from this country of one Christache Zambeti, first secretary of the Romanian legation in Washington. Here is the reason in a story confirmed by the department. Sometime ago Zambeti called on Valeriu Georgescu, a Romanian-born naturalized American citizen. Zambeti made

[redacted] Georgescu an offer. He said, if the new American citizen would spy for ~~America~~ Red Romania, and betray his new country, it might be possible to get the release from Romania of the two Georgescu children, boys aged 14 and 19. To make his point, ~~to~~ the so-called diplomat from Romania, produced a picture of the two youngsters. On the back was a message: "Dear Daddy: please do all you can to help us." But Mr. Georgescu, a petroleum engineer, decided to tell the whole story to the F.B.I. and the State Department. That's why the department today ordered Zembeti to get out of the country. ~~But~~ The Department admits the two boys in Romania are not American citizens; there is little we can do for them. And their father, Valeriu Georgescu told reporters today: "Our hope is that world opinion will save ~~the~~ our children."

~~Republican Senator [illegible] said today the American [illegible] Association is a Communist-controlled [illegible] to our [illegible] in key cities.~~

Attorney General Brownell has ordered a New York grand jury to investigate the New York-New Jersey waterfronts. This will be done on the basis of evidence gathered by 150 F.B.I. agents. And George Meany, the president of the A.F. of L. today called on the International Longshoremen's

Association to cleanup the waterfront "FORTHWITH." Meany says the I.L.A's reform program is "not satisfactory" to the A.F. of L.

The Ford Motor Company today adjusted its cost-of-living contract with the C.I.O. auto workers.. gave the union the same benefits it recently received from General Motors. Then Ford pledged its 135-thousand workers a maximum monthly pension of $137.50 A MONTH.... (including social security) Previously it was $125 a month. #

Investigators for a House committee said today that government tax experts were over-ruled on a stock deal case in 1948 that resulted in savings close to one million dollars for Austin Igleheart, president of General Foods, and other stockholders. The government men say their ruling was reversed after former Treasury Secretary Snyder became interested in the case.

And the Atomic Energy Commission today asked Congress to amend the law to permit private industry to help develop atomic power for industrial use that would be "economically competitive" with other power sources.

Well Now for Ed Murrow's report from London..recorded a few minutes ago:

And This is LL I'll be back in a moment with a postscript to The news - Cue - But first a word from B.B. Dixon

The Four-Power talks dealing with an Austrian Peace Treaty have broken down again. And this new development only proves, once more, that the ways of diplomacy are strange indeed. The Russians contend that only the Foreign Ministers Council can order the Deputies to meet. But it's taken 260 sessions (OF THE DEPUTIES) since the end of the war for the Russians to get around to raising this point.

And that's my footnote to the news.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, May 26th, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Well, now for Ed Murrow's report from London, recorded a few minutes ago.

MURROW: This is London. About the only thing of note that happened here today was that the Australians took over the guard at Buckingham Palace. The boat-trains from the Queen Elizabeth poured more thousands into the city, where the traffic has already come to resemble a heavy surf rather than the progress of wheeled vehicles. Tonight, the Foreign Office released the text of the reply by the Western powers to the Russian refusal to talk about a peace treaty for Austria. The reply says, in effect, that the Russian refusal is 'too bad,' that they are quibbling, and that the next move now is up to Russia. The reply says: "It remains to be seen whether the Russians are now prepared to pursue the question of an Austrian peace treaty through diplomatic channels." It is already clear that they are not. The Russians are willing to sit down in a big power conference. They suspect that the West will gang up on them at the Bermuda meeting, and they're not going to throw away one of their big cards before the game begins.

It is safe to assume that the Russians will not make a deal on Austria or anything else of importance until some kind of agreement is made on Germany. For the Russians know - and we should - that nothing decisive is going to happen in Europe until the question of Germany's future is settled. And recent Russian pronouncements have been aimed more at the German people than at the governments of the Big Three. It becomes increasingly clear that the Big Three have a lot of agreeing to do amongst themselves before they can even agree to disagree with the Russians.

British observers are unusually blunt in saying that neither the American nor French governments arein a position to make commitments that are likely to be honored or approved by their legislative assemblies. This gives rise to the recent stresses and strains in Anglo-American relations. The British don't know what we want or how we propose to get it. The politically sophisticated acknowledge that the position of world leadership is ours, but they are both curious and apprehensive as to where we purpose to lead them. When they are told that by spending fewer dollars we will get greater defenses, they attempt to translate this statement into pounds and shillings, and still it doesn't add. This is an island that must trade in order to live; and people here are acutely aware that they may have less trade with us in the future rather than more. If that happens, the answer is obvious, - they will trade where they can.

When our spokesmen talk about rolling back the Iron Curtain or liberating the satellite nations, the average Londoner is inclined to say, "Oh, wait a minute, how do you do that without a war?" And no one from the other side of the Atlantic has told him howthat is to be done. And the Londoner looks at the scars from the last war and he says, "Thank you very much, we just had one, and we would prefer not to have another."

So far as this reporter can determine, there is not apparent in London, any unusual amount of anti-American sentiment. There is certainly apprehension and some bewilderment. Much of it stems from the old-fashioned fact that we govern ourselves in different fashions. The British cannot conceive of a head of state who says, in effect, 'I speak my piece and then it's up to the Parliament.' If that happened here, the head of state would either get his legislation or he would get out of office. The British just can't understand how a President may be forded to rely upon the opposition party in order to carry through his foreign policy legislation. So far as the visitor is concerned, there is no indication that President Eisenhower has lost any of the enormous prestige he had in this country as a general. But, it is necessary to report a widespread feeling that in the British vernacular, the chap doesn't appear to be running the show.

There is another factor that contributes to this Anglo-American quandry: It is a subtle one; it may be exaggerated on this side, but it's important, - it's a matter of individual liberty in relation to the state; the toleration of the minority view; the right to be wrong; to be non-conformist. The British spent a lot of blood winning those rights, and they protected them, even during the darkest days of the war when they stood alone. They believe that they see those ancient rights now abused and endangered in America by spokesmen and representatives of the party in power, with no substantial protest or disciplinary action by the Administration, - the Administration which is supposed to lead and ~~xxxxx~~ nourish the forces of freedom in this continuing contest with tyranny. This state of affairs gives the British furiously to think, and it causesthem to wonder, occasionally out loud, about the true nature and intent of the great nation to which they have mortgaged so much of their future.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London. Good Night and Good Luck.

LESUEUR: And this is Larry Lesueur. I'llbe back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But, first a word from Bob Dickson.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESEUER SUBSTITUTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good Evening everyone, here's what happened today:

Prime Minister Churchill announced that his government "completely supports" the new allied truce proposal for Korea. India's Prime Minister Nehru endorses the proposal, so do the Dutch. All three were consulted before our General Harrison turned the plan over to the enemy. But from the South Korean ambassador to Washington comes this statement: "The proposals are completely unsatisfactory to my government and to my people."

Sir Winston, in a statement announcing Britain's approval of the still secret plan, made it clear that all Commonwealth countries and all other members of the United Nations fighting in Korea were consulted. Churchill could not say more, because of the secrecy of the details, but he described the proposal as very close to the terms of the Indian resolution adopted by the United Nations General Assembly last December.

Prime Minister Nehru made the same comparison. And he urged a quick settlement of the Korean war "to relieve anxiety in Asia and clear the field for settling wider issues."

The South Korean ambassador called on our Acting Secretary of State Bedell Smith and then made known the views of his government to reporters. He said he didn't lodge a protest with Acting Secretary Smith, just tried to tell him why the South Korean people don't like the whole idea. He feels the allies are making concessions to the Communists and the Communists are making no concessions. And he says his government insists that as part of the price of peace in Korea his country must be unified.

In Korea today South Korean sources told American reporters what is in the secret proposals. Their accounts do not exactly jibe with reports we've had from Washington. But this apears to be what we have suggested to the enemy: A five-nation enutral commission to take charge of all prisoners who do not want to go home. They will be held for 90 days while the Chinese and North Korean Communists attempt to change their minds. At the end of this period, those North Koreans who still refuse to go home would be released in South Korea. And Chinese Communists who refuse repatriation would be set free, possibly in Formosa, the home of the Nationalists. We anticipate a third group: those prisoners who tell us they do not want to go home, yet under duress, tell the enemy they do want to return. These cases would be decided by the political conference with a final appeal to the United Nations General Assembly. That seems to be the general outline of the proposals we have made at Panmunjom.

But to repeat the latest word from the White House: No Korean prisoners of war will be repatriated by force. And no prisoners will be coerced or intimidated in any way. The President says these principles "are basic and not subject to change."

While the statesmen were explaining and endorsing or condemning these proposals, American flyers engaged enemy Migs in new air battles. We shot down 12 Migs, damaged another and the air force says all of our planes returned safely from today's battles.

In this country the new battle over the air force budget went through another day of charges and explanations. Deputy Defense Secretary Kyes says the Joint Chiefs of Staff, soon to be replaced, have misled the American people into a false sense of security. He says the chiefs set "unfortunately" high goals for expanding the air force. And this left the impression of security because alot of money was being spent and big figures were used as the eventual target. Kyes says flatly that the old target of 143 air wings "was too high for orderly achievement in the time available, and with unfortunate results."

But Democratic Representative Price says that the five billion dollar cut in air force funds was dictated by the Budget Bureau, without military consultation. The Budget Bureau says this is not true; the new goals and figures were approved by the National Security Council.

General Vandenbergh, chief of staff of the air force, says he sat in on a National Security Council meeting to answer questions. But he was not consulted, not asked for opinions, and gave none.

At the Supreme Court today, Chief Justice Vinson denied a stay of execution for Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies. The appeal had been filed earlier in the day, less than 24 hours after the court, for the third time, had refused to review the trial.

The State Department announced today that we are demanding the immediate departure from this country of one Christache Zambeti, forst secretary of the Romanian legation in Washington. Here is the reason in a story confirmed by the Department: Sometime ago Zambeti called on Valeriu Gerogescu, a Romanian-born naturalized American citizen. Zambeti made Georgescu an offer. He said if the new American citizen would spy for Red Romania, and betray his new country, it might be possible to get the release from Romania of the two Georgescu children, boys aged 14 and 19. To make his point, the so-called diplomat from Romania produced a picture of the two youngstoers. On the back was a message: "Dear Daddy: please do all you can to help us." But Mr. Georgescu, a petroleum engineer, decided to tell the whole story to the FBI and the State Department. That's why the Department admits the two boys in Romania are not American citizens; there is little we can do for them. And their father, Valeriu Georgescu told reporters today: "Our hope is that world opinion will save our children."

Attorney General Brownell has ordered a New York grand jury to investigate the New York-New Jersey waterfronts. This will be done on the basis of evidence gathered by 150 FBI agents. And George Meany, the President of the AFL today called on the International Longshoreman's Association to cleanup the waterfront "forthwith." Meany says the ILA's reform program is "not satisfactory" to the AFL.

The Ford Motor Company today adjusted its cost-of-living contract with the CIO auto workers, gave the union the same benefits it recently received from General Motors. Then Ford pledged its 135-thousand workers a maximum monthly pension of $137.50 a month (including social security). Previously it was $125 a month.

Investigators for a House committee said today that government tax experts were over-ruled on a stock deal case in 1948 that resulted in savings close to one million dollars for Austin Igleheart, president of General Foods, and other stockholders. The government men say their ruling was reversed after former Treasury Secretary Snyder became interested in the case.

And the Atomic Energy Commission today asked Congress to amend the law to permit private industry to help develop atomic power for industrial use that would be "economically competitive" with other power sources. Well, now for Ed Murrow's report from London, recorded a few minutes ago:

MURROW: This is London. About the only thing of note that happened here today was that the Australians took over the guard at Buckingham Palace. The boat trains from the Queen Elizabeth poured more thousands into the city, where the traffic has already come to resemble a heavy surf rather than the progress of wheeled vehicles. Tonight, the Foreign Office released the text of the reply by the Western powers to the Russian refusal to talk about a peace treaty for Austria. The reply says, in effect, that the Russian refusal is 'too bad,' that they are quibbling, and that the next move now is up to Russia. The reply says: "It remains to be seen whether the Russians are now prepared to pursue the question of an Austrian peace treaty through diplomatic channels." It is already clear that they are not. The Russians are willing to sit in a big power conference. They suspect that the West will gang up on them at the Bermuda meeting, and they're not going to throw away one of their big cards before the game begins.

It is safe to assume that the Russians will not make a deal on Austria or anything else of importance until some kind of agreement is made on Germany. For the Russians know - and we should - that nothing decisive is going to happen in Europe until the question of Germany's future is settled. And recent Russian pronouncements have been aimed more at the German people than at the governments of the Big Three. It becomes increasingly clear that the Big Three have a lot of agreeing to do amongst themselves before they can even agree to disagree with the Russians. British observers are unusually blunt in saying that neither the American nor French governments are in a position to make commitments that are likely to be honored or approved by their legislative assemblies. This gives rise to the recent stresses and strains in Anglo-American relations. The British don't know what we want or how we propose to get it. The politically sophisticated acknowledge that the position of world leadership is ours, but they are both curious and apprehensive as to where we purpose to lead them. When they are told that by spending fewer dollars we will get greater defenses, they attempt to translate this statement into pounds and shillings, and still it doesn't add. This is an island that must trade in order to live; and people here are acutely aware that they may have less trade with us in the future rather than more. If that happens, the answer is obvious - they will trade where they can. When our spokesmen talk about rolling back the Iron Curtain or liberating the satellite nations, the average :pmdpmer is inclined to say, "Oh, wait a minute, how do you do that without a war?" And no one from the other side of the Atlantic has told him how that is to be done. And the Londoner looks at the scars from the last war and he says, "Thank you very much, we just had one, and we would prefer not to have another."

So far as this reporter can determine, there is not apparent in London, any unusual amount of anti-American sentiment. There is certainly apprehension and some bewilderment. Much of it stems from the old fashioned fact that we govern ourselves in different fashions. The British cannot conceive of a head of state who says, in effect, 'I speak my piece and then it's up to the Parliament.' If that happened here, the head of state would either get his legislation or he would get out of office. The British just can't understand how a President may be forced to rely upon the opposition party in order to carry through his foreign policy legislation. So far as the visitor is concerned, there is no indication that President Eisenhower has lost any of the enormous prestige he had in this country as a general. But, it is necessary to report a widespread feeling that in the British vernacular, the chap doesn't appear to be running the show.

There is another factor that contributes to this Anglo-American quandry; it is a subtle one; it may be exaggerated on this side, but it's important - it's a matter of individual liberty in relation to the state; the toleration of the minority view; the right to be wrong; to be non-conformist. The British spent a lot of blood winning those rights, and they protected them, even during the darkest days of the war when they stood alone. They believe that they see those ancient rights now abused and endangered in America by spokesmen and representatives of the party in power, with no substantial protest or disciplinary action by the Administration, - the Administration which is supposed to lead and nourish the forces of freedom in this continuing contest with tyranny. This state of affairs gives the British furiously to think, and it causes them to wonder, occasionally out loud, about the true nature and intent of the great nation to which they have mortgaged so much of their future.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London. Good Night and Good Luck!

LESEUER: And this is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But, first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: The Four-Power talks dealing with an Austrian Peace Treaty have broken down again. And this new development only proves once more that the ways of diplomacy are strange indeed. The Russians contend that only the Foreign Ministers Council can order the Deputies to meet. But it's taken 260 sessions of the deputies since the end of the war for the Russians to get around to raising this point.

And that's my footnote to the news.

Wednesday 27 May 1954 - 7/45

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

The South Korean government has made it known that it "decidedly does not support" the latest allied proposals for an armistice in Korea. A government spokesman contradicted the President who said last night that "our allies" support the new and still secret--plan. And the chairman of the South Korean Foreign Relations Committee says his people are "surprised and disappointed" at both the President and Secretary of State Dulles. While these spokesman were making their views known to American reporters, our Ambassador Briggs conferred with President Syngman Rhee.. and General Taylor the 8th army commander conferred with the South Korean defense minister. The South Koreans indicate they will present an armistice proposal of their own to the allied command.

In this country we have another controversey as a result of Senator Taft's speech last night. He said: "We might as well forget the United Nations as far as the Korean war is concerned." The Senator feels we should do our best to negotiate a truce now. If it fails, he would inform England and our other allies that we are withdrawing from all future truce negotiations. He says: "We might as well abandon the idea of working with the United Nations in the East and reserve to ourselves a completely free hand

[redacted]d. Many Republican Senators refuse to comment on Taft's views. Some suggest, as did Senator Smith of New Jersey: "I'm not going to say anything on such an important matter." Chairman Wiley of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, told reporters: "If ever there was a time when America needed to be understood, and [redacted] for our allies to understand us, it is now." Democratic Senator Sparkman of Alabama was surprised at the timing of the Taft speech. He says, Taft may have torpedoed chances for a truce now. Sparkman feels [redacted] the Taft speech amounts to telling our allies: "We don't need you and we don't want you."

The Koraan battlefields were comparatively quiet today. [redacted]

The Pentagon reports that we suffered 66 casualties in Korea last week: 50 killed..16 wounded. The Defense department says this new figure.. lowest for any week of the war...is the result of bookkeeping corrections on the number of men reported wounded in previous casualty LISTS.

[redacted]

In Indo-China the French have abandoned eight forts jutting out from their Red River defense perimeter.. to tighten their lines.

In Washington, the Senate appropriations committee has voted to stop all American financial support to the United Nations..if Red China is admitted to the U.N. Chairman Bridges says only three of the 23 members voted against this.

The Administration says it has trimmed 354-million dollars from the almost 6-billion dollar foreign aid bill.. by cutting costs and planning to use cheaper military goods.

~~In Indo-China the French have abandoned eight forts jutting out~~ from ~~their Red River defense perimeter. They say they did this to tighten their lines.~~

~~In Washington the Administration today told Congress it is trimmed 354 million dollars from the almost 6 billion it has requested for foreign aid. The Mutual Security Administration says the savings will be made by cutting costs and using cheaper military goods.~~

The President met in secret session today with the joint chiefs of staff, and the men who will replace them. He also conferred with the National Security Council, the top defense strategy advisers.

And in the controversey over the air force budget cuts, Republican leaders decided to ask the President for new explanations of the reasons for the decision... ~~Defense Secretary Wilson had promised to make another public explanation of the cuts.~~ And the Air Force Association, a group of air force veterans, called the new air force budget "at best, an open invitation for Russia to pursue its long-range plan of conquest. ~~Rather~~ At worst".. says the Association--" it is a tempting challenge for Russia to get the job done quickly with an all-out atomic attack on the United States."

5.

The Senate today approved the President's plan to reorganize the Department of Agriculture, despite Democratic protests that it gives Secretary Benson, blank check powers, to change farm policies.

The attorney [redacted] for Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies, has started a new move to save his clients..asking a federal district court, to vacate the death sentences against the Rosenbergs.

~~The State Department says Russia's story about executing four spies for America is "too fantastic to deserve comment."~~

~~And in Paris, Paul Reynaud, asking the French National Assembly for confirmation as premier, said France is the sick man of Europe.. the only country that has not re-established its financial situation since the start of the Korean war.~~

And now here is a report from London recorded a few minutes ago by Ed Murrow:

And This is LL. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to The news- Cue

But first a word from Bob Dixon

A few moments ago my colleagues were discussing American policy and its impact on Europe...Well, today Sir Winston Churchill had something to say about that,too.. Remarked that it was always dangerous to compare forms of government. And one had to be very careful what they said about the American Constitution. And all he would say on the subject was, "that NO constitution was written in better English." And that's my footnote to the news..

CBS RADIO DIVISON

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, May 27, 1953
7:45-8:00 p.m.

LESUEUR: ..... And, now, here is a report from London recorded a few minutes ago by Ed Murrow.

MURROW: THIS is London! Nothing happened here today except that it rained and the big red buses traveled in convoys and one bus driver, sitting quietly on the sidewalk, smoking a cigarette, said "we haven't lost a bus all day." And men who are familiar with all the back streets and side streets of this town walked five miles rather than try to ride because it saved them time. There is, we suspect, no such thing as a European opinion about anything. That's one reason why CBS has correspondents scattered all about western Europe and we have three of them here tonight and we're going to put to them the same question -- how does America look from the outside? There have been, as you know, repeated reports that our prestige is being lowered, that our leadership is being ignored or questioned, so I am going to put the same question to all three of my colleagues and we'll start off with Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent.

Howard, how does America look from England?

SMITH: Well, Ed, last week and this week Americans are pouring in by the thousand in airplanes and in liners and I think ~~that~~ they will soon on the streets that there is no anti-Americanism in the sense of individual bitterness or hostility or resentment towards them. However, if they engage in a discussion in politics in a tea parlor or in a bus they will find that there are very grave differences of opinion about policy. People are extremely worried right now here about what American policy is. I think mainly they are worried about trade policy. Most of the indications that have come from Washington are to the effect that they will have a harder time trading there. Lately they've become worried about foreign policy, too, and they're worried about who is in control of policy in America. You'll find they speak very frankly about this.

MURROW: Yes, I have, indeed. Dick Hottelet, how does America look as viewed from Germany?

HOTTELET: Ed, I'd say that the view is a composite picture. There is one stable, rather permanent, element which is the presence in Germany of American physical power; the enormous stability that comes with the presence of six American divisions and the evidence visible to all eyes of America's commitment in the heart of Europe is certainly a clear and convincing and, in many ways, a heartening aspect, but that is rather stable and doesn't move. It's not a dynamic part of it. Imposed on that is the image of current affairs and that's rather blurred because since the death of Stalin the Germans have felt themselves caught up even more in a tug-of-war between the east and west for their very strategic part of the geography of Europe and they would like very much which side is exerting more pressure and, as they have seen in the last few weeks, the political initiative is seeming to come mainly from Moscow and from London and they would really like to know what Washington is going to do next to contribute to some way out of the dilemma that we seem to be in.

MURROW: And some of the questioning that Howard Smith reports from England is also apparent in Germany, is that right?

HOTTELET: Very much so ... yes.

MURROW: Well, now, David Schoenbrun makes his headquarters in Paris and that's anarea where there certainly exists no lack of questions or cohesion. How does America look as viewed from Paris, David?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, it would depend first, Ed, on who's doing the looking. If a French automobile part manufacturer was looking he'd think America is the most tremendous country in the world with a fabulous production. If the French (too indistinct) or wine-grower is looking he thinks America is a country that doesn't take time to take a proper meal and doens't know the gracefulness of civilization. If you had to take one single mass French opinion, I would quote a very good friend of mine, a French columnist, Jean Jacques (unintelligible-interference), who told me some time ago that he was going to become an American citizen. I was rather startled because he's a very loyal Frenchman and I said: "Why, Jean-Jacques?" and he smiled and replied: "I want to have some influence on French affairs," and so do the French; in a mass opinion, America looks like the leader of the western alliance (Allies-?) and they're very disturbed about the fact that the leader of the western alliance, while big and strong and powerful, appears to the French recently to be rudderless, no single captain at the helm.

MURROW: Well, this adds up to a not altogether optimistic picture so far as our influence in Europe is concerned. I would like to go around again and ask if you could be a little more specific as to what has produced these doubts. Why is our leadership so widely questioned? Smith?

SMITH: Well, I don't know whether I can express it properly, Ed, but people over here have the feeling in Britain that America and Britain are disagreeing, not so much because the leaders and the people in America disagree on fundamental questions ... they think that at least General Eisenhower ... President Eisenhower is an internationalist-minded man and ... but they feel that he is not acting on the basis of his own sober judgment. There's a feeling that ... that our policy-makers are acting for domestic political expediency. They believe that we're tending to act ... well, due ... for lack of a better word ... due to some kind of political intimidation and that's what worries them. They don't know where this is going to lead. If there were just an honest disagreement of opinion they think that could be ironed out, but they fear this ... this trend towards, what I call, government-by-intimidation.

MURROW: Hottelet, what causes the degree of (unintelligible) that exists in Germany?

HOTTELET: I think, Ed, the fact that in this very tense period of world affairs the Germans desperately want reassurance. They want the reassurance that comes from knowledge of being on the strongest side in the Cold War as well as in any hot war that might follow. They are not getting that assurance from Washington at the moment.

MURROW: And, Schoenbrun, what about the French?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I'd like to refer back to what Howard K. Smith said of government-by-intimidation, and tell you again about something that a French friend of mine told me when he called up one day from the Foreign Office and said: "I wonder whether you think we ought to open up a consulate (?) in the Senate Building?"

MURROW: That's a little too cryptic. Will you explain that a little?

SCHOENBRUN: All right, I'll be more specific on that, Ed. It happened the day after Senator McCarthy made his statement about the Greek-ship-owning syndicate and the French said to me -- who is running the foreign policy of the United States? Is it the Executive power, the President, or the legislative power, the Senate? And very specifically the French diplomats in Washington wonder whether they should spend their time influencing Senators rather than the President's office. They wonder whether there is a single direction of American foreign policy. This is of great concern to them because they've mortgaged their future to a successful American foreign policy.

MURROW: Well, there you have three opinions by three CBS correspondents: Howard K. Smith, based here in London; Dick Hottelet, who makes his headquarters in Germany, and David Schoenbrun from Paris. It does not add up to a particularly impressive or optimistic picture of American policy as viewed from the outside, but it is the function of all three of these men to report situations as they see them and as they are reflected in their day-to-day contacts with politicians and just ordinary people who live in the countries where they are stationed.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

WEDNESDAY, MAY 27, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

The South Korean government has made it known that it "decidedly does not support" the latest allied proposals for an armistice in Korea. A government spokesman contradicted the President who said last night that "our allies" support the new and still secret plan. And the chairman of the South Korean Foreign Relation Committee says his people are "surprised and disappointed" at both the President and Secretary of State Dulles. While these spokesman were making their views known to American reporters, our Ambassador Briggs conferred with President Syngman Rhee; and General Taylor the 8th army commander conferred with the South Korean defense minister. The South Koreans indicate they will present an armistice proposal of their own to the allied command.

In this country we have another controversy as a result of Senator Taft's speech last night. He said: "We might as well forget the United Nations as far as the Korean war is concerned." The Senator feels we should do our best to negotiate a truce now. If it fails, he would inform England and our other allies that we are withdrawing from all future truce negotiations. He says: "We might as well abandon the idea of working with the United Nations in the East and reserve to ourselves a completely free hand. Many Republican Senators refuse to comment on Taft's views. Some suggest as did Senator Smith of New Jersey: "I'm not going to say anything on such an important matter." Chairman Wiley of the Senate Foreign Relations committee told reporters: "If ever there was a time when America needed to be understood, and for our allies to understand us, it is now." Democratic Senator Sparkman of Alabama was surprised at the timing of the Taft speech. He says Taft may have torpedoed chances for a truce now. Sparkman feels the Taft speech amounts to telling our allies: "We don't need you and we don't want you."

The Korean battlefields were comparatively quiet today. The Pentagon reports that we suffered 66 casualties in Korea last week: 50 killed, 16 wounded.

The Defense Department says this new figure, lowest for any week of the war, is the result of bookkeeping corrections on the number of men reported wounded in previous casualty lists.

In Indo-China the French have abandoned eight forts jutting out from their Red River defense perimeter, to tighten their lines.

In Washington, the Senate appropriations committee has voted to stop all American financial support to the United Nations if Red China is admitted to the U.N. Chairman Bridges says only three of the 23 members voted against this.

The Administration says it has trimmed 354-million dollars from the almost 6-billion dollar foreign aid bill, by cutting costs and planning to use cheaper military goods.

The President met in secret session today with the joint chiefs of staff, and the men who will replace them. He also conferred with the National Security Council, the top defense strategy advisers.

And in the controversy over the air force budget cuts, Republican leaders decided to ask the President for new explanations of the reasons for the decision. And the Air Force Association, a group of air force veterans, called the new air force budget "at best an open invitation for Russia to pursue its long-range plan of conquest. "At worst," says the Association "it is a tempting challenge for Russia to get the job done quickly with an all all-out atomic attack on the United States."

The Senate today approved the President's plan to reorganize the Department of Agriculture despite Democratic protests that it gives Secretary Benson blank check powers to change farm policies.

The attorney for Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies, has started a new move to save his clients, asking a federal district court to vacate the death sentences against the Rosenbergs.

And now here is a report from London recorded a few minutes ago by Ed Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON: Nothing happened here today except that it rained and the big red buses traveled in convoys and one bus driver, sitting quietly on the sidewalk, smoking a cigarette, said "we haven't lost a bus all day." And men who are familiar with all the back streets and side streets of this town walked five miles rather than try to ride because it saved them time. There is, we suspect, no such thing as a European opinion about anything. That's one reason why CBS has correspondents scattered all about western Europe and we have three of them right here tonight and we're going to put to them the same question: How does America look from the outside? There have been, as you know, repeated reports that our prestige is being lowered, that our leadership is being ignored or questioned, so I am going to put the same question to all three of my colleagues and we'll start off with Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent. Howard, how does America look from England?

SMITH: Well, Ed, last week and this week Americans are pouring in by the thousands in airplanes and in liners and I think that as they walk down the street that there is no anti-Americanism in the sense of individual bitterness or hostility or resentment towards them. However, if they engage in a discussion in politics in a tea parlor or in a bus they will find that there are very grave differences of opinion about policy. People are extremely worried right now here about what American policy is. I think mainly they are worried about trade policy. Most of the indications that have come from Washington are to the effect that they will have a harder time trading there. Lately they've become worried about foreign policy, too, and they're worried about who is in control of policy in America. You'll find they speak very frankly about this.

MURROW: Yes, I have, indeed. Dick Hottelet, how does America look as viewed from Germany?

HOTTELET: Ed, I'd say that the view is a composite picture. There is one stable, rather permanent, element which is the presence in Germany of American physical power; the enormous stability that comes with the presence of six American divisions and the evidence visible to all eyes of America's committment in the heart of Europe is certainly a clear and convincing and, in many ways, a heartening aspect, but that is rather stable and doesn't move. It's not a dynamic part of it. Imposed on that is the image of current affairs and that's rather blurred because since the death of Stalin the Germans have felt themselves caught up even more in a tug-of-war between the east and west for their very strategic part of the geography of Europe and they would like very much which side is exerting more pressure and, as they have seen in the last few weeks, the political initiative is seeming to come mainly from Moscow and from London and they would really like to know what Washington is going to do next to contribute to some way out of the dilemma that we seem to be in.

MURROW: And some of the questioning that Howard Smith reports from England is also apparent in Germany, is that right?

HOTTELET: Very much so - yes.

MURROW: Well, now, David Schoenbrun makes his headquarters in Paris and that's an area where there certainly exists no lack of questions or cohesion. How does America look as viewed from Paris, David?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, it would depend first, Ed, on who's doing the looking. If a French automobile part manufacturer was looking he'd think America is the most tremendous country in the world with a fabulous production. The French think America is a country that doesn't take time to take a proper meal and doesn't know the gracefulness of civilization. If you had to take one single mass French opinion, I would quote a very good friend of mine, a French columnist, Jean Jacques who told me some time ago that he was going to become an American citizen. I was rather startled because he's a very loyal Frenchman and I said: "Why, Jean Jacques?" and he smiled and replied: "I want to have some influence on French affairs," and so do the French; in a mass opinion, America looks like the leader of the western alliance and they're very disturbed about the fact that the leader of the western alliance, while big and strong and powerful, appears to the French recently to be rudderless, no single captain at the helm.

MURROW: Well, this adds up to a not altogether optimistic picture so far as our influence in Europe is concerned. I would like to go around again and ask if you could be a little more specific as to what has produced these doubts. Why is our leadership so widely questioned? Smith?

SMITH: Well, I don't know whether I can express it properly, Ed, but people over here have the feeling in Britain that America and Britain are disagreeing, not so much because the leaders and the people in America disagree on fundamental questions, they think that at least General Eisenhower - President Eisenhower is an internationalist-minded man and - but they feel that he is not acting on the basis of his own sober judgment. There's a feeling that our policy-makers are acting for domestic political expediency. They believe that we're tending to act - well, due for lack of a better word - due to some kind of political intimidation and that's what worries them. They don't know where this is going to lead. If there were just an honest disagreement of opinion they think that could be ironed out, but they fear this - this trend towards, what I call, government-by-intimidation.

MURROW: Hottelet, what causes this in Germany?

HOTTLETE: I think, Ed, the fact that in this very tense period of world affairs the Germans desperately want reassurance. They want the reassurance that comes from knowledge of being on the strongest side in the Cold War as well as in any hot war that might follow. They are not getting that assurance from Washington at the moment.

MURROW: And, Schoenbrun, what about the French?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I'd like to refer back to what Howard K. Smith said of government-by-intimidation, and tell you again about something that a French friend of mine told me when he called up one day from the Foreign Office and said: "I wonder whether you think we ought to open up a consulate in the Senate Building?"

MURROW: That's a little too cryptic. Will you explain that a little?

SCHOENBRUN: All right, I'll be more specific on that, Ed. It happened the day after Senator McCarthy made his statement about the Greek ship-owning syndicate and the French said to me - who is running the foreign policy of the United States? Is it the Executive power, the President, or the legislative power, the Senate? And very specifically the French diplomats in Washington wonder whether they should spend their time influencing Senators rather than the President's office. They wonder whether there is a single direction of American foreign policy. This is of great concern to them because they've mortgaged their future to a successful American foreign policy.

MURROW: Well, there you have three opinions by three CBS correspondents: Howard K. Smith, based here in London; Dick Hottlete, who makes his headquarters in Germany, and David Schoenbrun from Paris. It does not add up to a particularly impressive or optimistic picture of American policy as viewed from the outside, but it is the function of all three of these men to report situations as they see them and as they are reflected in their day-to-day contacts with politicians and just ordinary people who live in the countries where they are stationed.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London. Good Night and Good Luck!

LESUEUR: And this is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: A few moments ago my colleagues were discussing American policy and its impact on Europe. Well, today Sir Winston Churchill had something to say about that, too; remarked that it was always dangerous to compare forms of government. And one had to be very careful what they said about the American Constitution. And all he would say on the subject was that NO constitution was written "in better English." And that's my footnote to the news.

Thursday - 28 may 1953 - 7X5 Lehman

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

The President says that our whole foreign policy is based on the theory, that no single free nation can live alone in the world. And we must have friends. The President made his views known, after reporters questioned him about Senator Taft's statement, the other day, that "we might as well forget the United Nations as far as the Korean war is concerned."

The President disagrees with the Senator, although he said Taft has the right to his convictions. Here's what Mr. Eisenhower told reporters: He has had a great deal of experience with coalitions. Its always a difficult task to make them work. But the President believes, you cannot have co-operation on great matters, only in isolated cases, there must be complete co-operation on all issues. As far as "going it alone" in the world, is concerned, the President said: If you go it alone in one place, of course, you have to go it alone elsewhere. He believes in compromises with our allies, compromises which will serve the cause of all of us. And Mr. Eisenhower said he believes that only patience, optimism, and a very deep faith can carry America forward.

The President also said, in answer to questions, that the planned

Big Three meeting in Bermuda could lead to an eventual Big Four conference with the Russians. But he doesn't think this will necessarily happen. He feels the meeting with British and French leaders will be a good thing..and lead to better understandings. He doubts whether he'll invite congressmen to attend because he feels a small meeting will make it easier to explore minds.

The President also said that he is opposed to admitting Communist China to the United Nations, "under present world conditions." And as far as he knows no one in the government has seriously proposed admitting Red China to the U.N.

The President gave reporters, and the nation, his personal assurance that the proposed military budget, with heavy cuts for the air force, will not reduce our defenses beyond the margin of safety. He's convinced that our military high command believes the proposed defense budget is the best thing for the nation at the moment.

Mr. Eisenhower also made known his view that certain trading with the enemy is desireable..because it benefits the free world. He says it would be foolish to refuse to trade with people we do not happen to like at the moment.

In Korea today, the South Koreans gave allied negotiators their own recommendations on how to bring about a truce. And the South Korean foreign minister, told reporters that the allied plan, which is still secret, would "inevitable lead the whole of Asia to Communism." He accused the Eisenhower administration, of appeasement.

On the battlefields, the Chinese Communists used more than 11-thousand troops for their biggest attacks of this year. They STRUCK at allied hill outposts on the central front and captured at least five hills from South Korean defenders. There were also some small battles near the Panmunjom truce site.

The State Department says, it has reliable information that at last two ships, listed as British-owned, transported Chinese Communist troops, since the start of the Korean war. The British ambassador, Sir Roger Makins, says there is no evidence that any British ships carried Chinese troops in Chinese waters. By British ships he meant "under the British flag and subject to British law."

In East Germany today, the Russians suddenly announced they are abandoning their military control over the part of Germany they control. General Chuikov, the Soviet commander in Germany, from now on will be in charge only of Soviet troops in the east zone. His civilian work will be taken over by Vladimir Semyenov, the Russia political expert on Germany. The German people are wondering if this could possibly be a first step towards the eventual withdrawal from Germany of some 300-thousand Soviet troops..

In Washington today, the Senate armed services committee, confirmed all of the President's choices for the new Joint Chiefs of Staff: Admiral Radford to be the head.. with Generals Twining and Ridgeway and Admiral Carney. Admiral Radford told Senators: he now considers our long-range bombers to be the "most important" protection for the nation. In the past, he has criticized the long-range bomber program. And General Twining, who is to head the air force, says the proposed cuts in the Air Force budget will delay building the kind of air force he thinks is essential for the security of the nation.

Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee today called on Congress to cut 2-billion dollars from the Administration's foreign aid budget... to help provide tax relief.

The President today named Nelson Rockefeller to be the [redacted] undersecretary of Health, Education and Welfare. Rockefeller has previously served the government as co-ordinator of inter-American Affairs, [redacted] and assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs. ~~This was during the years 1940 to [redacted]45.~~

And the Romanian communist diplomat, we have ordered [redacted] to leave the country, said today, that the charges against him are [redacted] "only" a frameup." Cristache Zambetti told reporters, that his government will make a statement on the charge by Valeriu [redacted] Georgescu that Zambetti tried to blackmail him into serving as a Romanian spy.

And now for a report from London..recorded a few minutes ago by E. Murrow:

And this is CC - I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news - Can
But first a word from Bob's Diner

Those concerned with the details of the Coronation, have tried to carry out the Young Queen's wish.. That it be in the tradition of ancient times...But there was no photography in those days... So even tho there'll be Cinderella coaches, 8 white horses and plumed riders, the Queen will bow to the official photographers.. She 'll be wearing red and blue make-up...

And that's my footnote to the News...

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, May 28, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: And now, for a report from London, recorded a few minutes ago, by Ed Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON!

We're told that more people are due to arrive in this city, altho it seems almost impossible. So, tonite again, we're going to look at our own country from the outside, as we did last nite; and tonite we have two more CBS Radio News correspondents with us, Ned Calmer, who makes his headquarters in Rome, and Alex Kendrick, who makes his headquarters in Vienna. And we'll start again with the same question: How does our country look from the outside? Why don't you start, Calmer?

CALMER: Well, Ed, the Italians still think that all Americans are rich and they still think that all Americans are pretty good guys - and that's about where it stops, because in the last three or four years, two of which I've been in Rome and other parts of Italy a good deal, Italy has gradually become a new nation. It's been reborn, economically, militarily and, in a certain sense, spiritually. We're envied because we're rich, but the Italians are a little different now -- they're proud again -- and they don't want our money, believe it or not, if it's going to be shoved down their throats or if it's going to be wasted on the wrong kind of projects or if, on the other hand, it's just going to be withheld from them where they need it bad and now. They like us, they think we're pretty good guys, still, but only if we don't try to push them around and arm them.

MURROW: Ned, how much of our aid has filtered down to the individual Italian citizen? Are they aware of the massive aid that has been given to their country?

CALMER: To a considerable extent, Ed, but, like everything else in Italy, it happened slowly. And that is why the deGasperi Government at the moment needs time. The Fascists and the Communists are going to do very well in this next election and, in fact, according to the last estimates I had two or three days ago, it will be lucky if the deGasperi Government does get over fifty per cent of the vote on Sunday, June 7th. But this latent feeling of nationalism and of rebirth, which the Italians are feeling very strongly now, this independence, being reborn into the world to which they want to belong, the Fascists and Communists are profiting by that by every trick known.

MURROW: Well now, Alex Kendrick, how does our nation and its policies look as viewed from Vienna?

KENDRICK: Well, on the other side of the Iron Curtain, Ed, America looks the way Moscow wants it to look at any particular time. And right now we don't look as bad as we have looked at some times in the past, but we look bad enough. I think we don't have to go into what happens behind the Iron Curtain. But on this side, in Austria, which is an occupied country, frankly, after eight years of occupation, we look like the man who came to dinner. We came just for a meal, fractured our leg, or maybe our policy, or something, and we have stayed around for eight years, rearranging things just to suit ourselves, and people are getting a little bit tired with us.

MURROW: Well, Alex, how much disappointment was caused in Austria as a result of the break of the renewed negotiations for an Austrian treaty?

KENDRICK: Ed, the only thing that makes us look good in Austria and in central Europe is the behavior of the Russians, because no matter what we may do that may seem silly or stupid, the Russians always have the knack of doing something even more stupid or silly. And in Austria the feeling of complete let-down which followed the Russian inacceptance of our proposals on the Austrian treaty is something to our balance sheet, definitely.

MURROW: Umhm. Calmer, you remember the last election in Italy, when America and Americans of Italian descent intervened rather decisively. Is anything of that sort happening now?

CALMER: It was interesting to see that just yesterday Cardinal Spellman in New York had asked Italo-Americans to write to their relatives in Italy to vote for the ... or, rather, to vote against the Left-wing. I'm afraid that a great many Italians, including those in the Government, will feel that the Cardinal didn't say quite enough. He should have also said, in the view of a good many Italians: Do not vote simply against the Left-wing. Vote for the Center, because if you vote for the extreme Right, for monarchy -- and, you will be surprised, the monarchists are doing better and better now; a great many Italians still like the King -- if you vote only for the monarchists and the fascists -- and they are also coming up -- you will find that the Center parties, with the Communists over on one side and a big vote for the Right Wing, will be deprived of enough votes to maintain a new, stable majority in the coming parliament.

MURROW: Well now, as both you gentlemen know, it has been alleged that our influence, our prestige, is declining thruout Western Europe. Would you say that is true in Austria, Kendrick?

KENDRICK: Well, I just came from Vienna, where they had a meeting of the International Chamber of Commerce, and a group of American businessmen were present, advocating free trade in what was really a public forum before the world. But, actually to Europeans what they said were words and not deeds, because they didn't represent American policy, and to businessmen in Europe, America is simply the land of unscaleable barriers, trade barriers; and for a great many people who are refugees in central Europe, the U.S. is just a land of improbable access. They're trying hard to get here, but they haven't been able to do so.

MURROW: What about American policy and prestige in Italy, Calmer?

CALMER: Well, as you know, Ed, there's a new and shining example, a very attractive lady in the home of our Ambassador - Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce - and she, so far, has been working very hard and very effectively, with a sound understanding of what the Italians need from our country.

The great fear and the thing that Mrs. Luce and all our embassy is worried about is that the Italians will come to the conclusion that we may let them down, that we may turn our backs on Europe. They still feel that President Eisenhower is on trial, even tho he's been in office now a considerable period of time. And with things such as Senator Taft said yesterday, I believe, or the day before -- I've been doing this Coronation story here and I'm not so sure about things happening outside of London at the moment -- if that kind of comment continues to be made, the Italians, who above all the nations in western Europe need our help, are going to fear that we are losing interest in them - and that will be, I think, fatal for the whole of Western Europe.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Ned Calmer, and Alex Kendrick.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London.

Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 28, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

The President says that our whole foreign policy is based on the theory that no single free nation can live alone in the world. And we must have friends. The President made his views known after reporters questioned him about Senator Taft's statement the other day that "we might as well forget the United Nations as far as the Korean war is concerned."

The President disagrees with the Senator, although he said Taft has the right to his convictions. Here's what Mr. Eisenhower told reporters: He has had a great deal of experience with coalitions. Its always a difficult task to make them work. But the President believes you cannot have cooperation on great matters only in isolated cases, there must be complete cooperation on all issues. As far as "going it alone" in the world is concerned, the President said: "If you go it alone in one place, of course you have to go it alone elsewhere. He believes in compromises with our allies, compromises which will serve the cause of all of us. And Mr. Eisenhower said he believes that only patience, optimism and a very deep faith can carry America forward.

The President also said, in answer to questions, that the planned Big Three meeting in Bermuda could lead to an eventual Big Four conference with the Russians. But he doesn't think this will necwssarily happen. He feels the meeting with British and French leaders will be a good thing and lead to better understandings. He doubts whether he'll invite congressmen to attend because he feels a small meeting will make it easier to explore minds.

The President also said he is opposed to admitting Communist China to the United Nations "under present world conditions." And as far as he knows, no one in the government has seriously proposed admitting Red China to the U.N.

The President gave reporters, and the nation, his personal assurance, that the proposed military budget, with heavy cuts for the air force, will not reduce our defenses beyond the margin of safety. He's convinced that our military high command believes the proposed defense budget is the best thing for the nation at the moment.

Mr. Eisenhower also made known his view that certain trading with the enemy is desireable because it benefits the free world. He says it would be foolish to refuse to trade with people we do not happen to like at the moment.

In Korea today, the South Koreans gave allied negotiators their own recommendations on how to bring about a truce. And the South Korean foreign minister told reporters that the allied plan, which is still secret, would "inevitably lead the whole of Asia to Communism." He accused the Eisenhower administration of appeasement.

On the battlefields, the Chinese Communists used more than 11-thousand troops for their biggest attacks of this year. They struck at allied hill outposts on the central front and captured at least five hills from South Korean defenders. There were also some small battles near the Panmunjom truce site.

The State Department says it has reliable information that at least two ships, listed as British-owned, transported Chinese Communist troops since the start of the Korean war. The British ambassador, Sir Roger Makins, says there is no evidence that any British ships carried Chinese troops in Chinese waters. By British ships he meant "under the British flag and subject to British law."

In East Germany today, the Russians suddenly announced they are abandoning their military control over the part of Germany they control. General Chuikov, the Soviet commander in Germany, from now on will be in charge only of Soviet troops in the east zone. His civilian work will be taken over by Vladimir Semyenov, the Russian political expert on Germany. The German people are wondering if this could possibly be a first step towards the eventual withdrawal from Germany of some 300-thousand Soviet troops.

In Washington today, the Senate armed services committee, confirmed all of the President's choices for the new Joint Chiefs of Staff: Admiral Radford to be the head with Generals Twining and Ridgeway and Admiral Carney. Admiral Radford told Senators: he now considers our long-range bombers to be the "most important" protection for the nation. In the past he has criticized the long-range bomber program. And General Twining, who is to head the air force, says the proposed cuts in the Air Force budget will delay building the kind of air force he thinks is essential for the security of the nation.

And now for a report from London, recorded a few minutes ago by Ed Murrow:

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON.

We're told that more people are due to arrive in this city, although it seems almost impossible. So, tonight again, we're going to look at our own country from the outside, as we did last nighte; and tonight we have two more CBS Radio News correspondents with us, Ned Calmer, who makes his headquarters in Rome, and Alex Kendrick, who makes his headquarters in Vienna. And we'll start again with the same question: How does our country look from the outside? Why don't you start, Calmer?

CALMER: Well, Ed, the Italians still think that all Americans are rich and they still think that all Americans are pretty good guys - and that's about where it stops, because in the last three or four years, two of which I've been in Rome and other parts of Italy a good deal, Italy has gradually become a new nation. It's been reborn, economically, militarily and, in a certain sense, spiritually. We're envied because we're rich, but the Italians are a little different now, they're proud again and they don't want our money, believe it or not, if it's going to be shoved down their throats or if it's going to be wasted on the wrong kind of projects or if, on the other hand, it's just going to be withheld from them where they need it bad and now. They like us, they think we're pretty good guys, still, but only if we don't try to push them around and arm them.

MURROW: Ned, how much of our aid has filtered down to the individual Italian citizen? Are they aware of the massive aid that has been given to their country?

CALMER: To a considerable extend, Ed, but, like everything else in Italy, it happened slowly. And that is why the DeGasperi Government at the moment needs time. The Fascists and the Communists are going to do very well in this next election and, in fact, according to the last estimates I had two or three days ago, it will be lucky if the DeGasperi Government does get over fifty percent of the vote on Sunday, June 7th. But this latent feeling of nationalism and of rebirth, which the Italians are feeling very strongly now, this independence, being reborn into the world to which they want to belong, the Fascists and Communists are profiting by that by every trick known.

MURROW: Well, now, Alex Kendrick, how does our nation and its policies look as viewed from Vienna?

KENDRICK: Well, on the other side of the Iron Curtain, Ed, America looks the way Moscow wants it to look at any particular time. And right now we don't look as bad as we have looked at some times in the past, but we look bad enough. I think we don't have to go into what happens behind the Iron Curtain. But on this side, in Austria, which is an occupied country, frankly, after eight years of occupation, we look like the man who came to dinner. We came just for a meal, fractured our leg, or maybe our policy, or something, and we have stayed around for eight years, rearranging things just to suit ourselves, and people are getting a little bit tired of us.

MURROW: Well, Alex, how much disappointment was caused in Austria as a result of the break of the renewed negotiations for an Austrian treaty?

KENDRICK: Ed, the only thing that makes us look good in Austria and in central Europe is the behavior of the Russians, because no matter what we may do that may seem silly or stupid, the Russians always have the knack of doing something even more stupid or silly. And in Austria the feeling of complete let-down which followed the Russian inacceptance of our proposals on the Austrian treaty is something to our balance sheet, definitely.

MURROW: Umhm. Calmer, you remember the last election in Italy, when America and American of Italian decent intervened rather decisively. Is anything of that sort happening now?

CALMER: It was interesting to see that just yesterday Cardinal Spellman in New York had asked Italo-Americans to write to their relatives in Italy to vote for the - or, rather, to vote against the Left-wing. I'm afraid that a great many Italians, including those in the government, will feel that the Cardinal didn't say quite enough. He should have also saidk in the view of a good many Italians: Do not vote simply against the Left-wing. Vote for the Center, because if you vote for the extreme Right, for monarchy - and, you will be surprised, the monarchists are doing better and better now; a great many Italians still like the King - if you vote only for the monarchists and the fascists - and they are also coming up - you will find that the Center parties, with the Communists over on one side and a big vote for the Right Wing, will be deprived of enough votes to maintain a new, stable majority in the coming parliament.

MURROW: Well now, as both you gentlemen know, it has been alleged that our influence, our prestige, is declining throughout Western Europe. Would you say that is true in Austria, Kendrick?

KENDRICK: Well, I just came from Vienna, where they had a meeting of the International Chamber of Commerce, and a group of American businessmen were present, advocating free trade in what was really a public forum before the world. But, actually to Europeans what they said were words and not deeds, because they didn't represent American policy, and to businessmen in Europe, America is simply the land of unscaleable barriers, trade barriers; and for a great many people who are refugees in central Europe, the U.S. is just a land of improbably access. They're trying hard to get here, but they haven't been able to do so.

MURROW: What about American policy and prestige in Italy, Calmer?

CALMER: Well, as you know, Ed, there's a new and shining example, a very attractive lady in the home of our Ambassador - Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce - and she, so far, has been working very hard and very effectively with a sound understanding of what the Italians need from our country. The great fear and the thing that Mrs. Luce and all our Embassy is worried about is that the Italians will come to the conclusion that we may let them down, that we may turn our backs on Europe. They still feel that President Eisenhower is on trial, even though he's been in office now a considerable period of time. And with things such as Senator Taft said yesterday, I believe, or the day before - I've been doing this Coronation story here and I'm not so sure about things happening outside of London at the moment - if that kind of comment continues to be made, the Italians, who above all the nations in Western Europe need our help, are going to fear that we are losing interest in them - and that will be, I think, fatal for the whole of Western Europe.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Ned Calmer, and Alex Kendrick.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London.

Good Night and Good Luck!

LESUEUR: And this is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news, but first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: Those concerned with the details of the Coronation, have tried to carry out the young queen's wish; that it be in the tradition of ancient times, but there was no photography in those days. So even though there'll be Cinderella coaches, 8 white horses and plumed riders, the Queen will bow to the official photographers. She'll be wearing red and blue make-up.

And that's my footnote to the news.

Friday, May 29, 1953 7:45 P LeSueur

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

Allied troops have been forced to withdraw from three MORE outposts in Korea. But the enemy attacking force, estimated at 15-thousand men, has not penetrated our main line of resistance. IT'S NOW Memorial Day in Korea and The battle now taking place, is near the truce site at Panmunjom, on the central front, IT'S described as the heaviest in eight months. Turkish troops were ordered to leave one outpost. And American infantrymen gave up two other positions. The British, guarding an outpost called "The Hook", are holding firm. An unusual communique from London says British troops inflicted "a smashing defeat" on an estimated six to seven thousand Chinese Communists. But Front reports say there were closer to 15-hundred men in that attacking force. As soon as the American and Turkish troops pulled back, our mortars and artillery assaulted ALL THREE of the vacated positions.

The South Koreans revealed today, that the Communist negotiators have already turned down the allied proposal to have the UN Assembly eventually decide the fate of some Communist prisoners who refuse to go home. The South Korean delegate, in a letter to the chief negotiator, General Harrison, also revealed that the Communists called the U.N. "a belligerent itself".. and therefore ineligible to decide the fate of any prisoners. Despite these details, made public by the South Koreans, both North Korea and Communist China have carefully avoided any mention of our truce proposal in their radio propaganda broadcasts.

In Washington today, Chairman Wiley of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, told reporters that the new enemy attacks in Korea.. coming in the midst of truce negotiations, reminds him of General MacArthur's statement that "there's only one answer in war; and that's victory."

Secretary of State Dulles returned to Washington today with Mutual Security Director Stassen who accompanied him in a 20-day tour of the Middle East and south Asia. Mr. Dulles visited the President and then told reporters: the mission "laid a new foundation for friendship" between this nation and the countries they visited. He said these countries are troubled in general by "fear, bitterness and weakness" which the Communists are trying to exploit.

The President made it known today, through a letter to Representative Arends of Illinois, that his plan to reorganize the Defense Department will not result in "a single military commander with a super staff." Ahrends had expressed concern that the reorganization plan might bring about "a single chief of staff" for all the armed forces.

A Senate committee was told today that the three and a half billion dollars in aid we have sent to Italy, under various programs, will not result in any "permanent" improvements in Italy. Frederick Crawford, a Cleveland industrialist who surveyed foreign aid in Italy, SAYS he favors an immediate end to all economic aid to Italy. He would confine our help to purely military objectives... to do whatever we can to protect the United States."

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare today announced that dismissal notices have been sent to twelve hundred of its employes. And the National Production Authority has sent pink slips to 13-hundred of its employes.

The Federal Reserve Board says industrial production in this country turned down slightly in April and stayed at about the same rate in May. That's the first drop in the rate of production since last July. And the Agriculture Department reports that the prices farmers received for their crops rose almost one percent during the month ending on May 15.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs, meeting in Washington, today defeated a resolution endorsing the President's plan to admit an additional 240-thousand Europen refugees to this country in the next two years. The close vote was 242 for the proposal...246 against it.

Here in New York, Federal Judge Kaufman set the week of June 15 for the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies. ~~Counsel for the defense are scheuled to make new arguments~~ here in New York on Monday to reduce the sentence of their clients.

In Jackson, Mississippi, Democratic National Chairman Mitchell said some Republican leaders...such as Senators Taft and McCarthy... "want to abandon the anti-communist coalition against Red aggression." He said they also have attacked the United Nations, the North Atlantic Treaty organization and the collectiv effort in Korea.

In Paris, Pierre Mendes-France, a deputy who has favored abandoning the war in Indo-China and cutting military expenses to the bone, was today selected to try to form a new French government.

And now for a recorded report from London, here is Edward R. Murrow.

and this is LL 2CL back in a moment with a tribute to the news - [illegible] - first award from Bob Dixon.

Plans for the Coronation are just about complete. And between now and Tuesday, there isn't very much the people of Britain can do, other than to wait expectantly. There's ~~to maintain a watchful wait. There is~~ just one anxious note: the official weather forecast, suggests it will probably rain on Tuesday. And it's hard to say tonite, who is more concerned about this: the people, the tourists, the Royal Household or the Insurance Companies who have issued millions of dollars of rain-protection policies.

[redacted]

And that's my footnote to the news.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 29, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

Allied troops have been forced to withdraw from three more outposts in Korea. But the enemy attacking force, estimated at 15-thousand men, has not penetrated our main line of resistance. It's now Memorial Day in Korea and the battle now taking place, is near the truce site at Panmunjom on the central front. It's described as the heaviest in eight months. Turkish troops were ordered to leave one outpost. And American infantrymen gave up two other positions. The British, guarding an outpost called "The Hook", are holding firm. An unusual communique from London says British troops inflicted "a smashing defeat" on an estimated six to seven thousand Chinese Communist. But Front reports say there were closer to 15-hundred men in that attacking force. As soon as the American and Turkish troops pulled back, our mortars and artillery assaulted all three of the vacated positions.

The South Koreans revealed today that the Communist negotiators have already turned down the allied proposal to have the U.N. assembly eventually decide the fate of some Communist prisoners who refuse to go home. The South Korean delegate, in a letter to the chief negotiator, General Harrison, also revealed that the Communists called the U.N. "a belligerent itself" and therefore ineligible to decide the fate of any prisoners. Despite these details, made public by the South Koreans, both North Korea, and Communist China have carefully avoided any mention of our truce proposal in their radio propaganda broadcasts.

In Washington today, Chairman Wiley of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, told reporters that the new enemy attacks in Korea (coming in the midst of truce negotiations) reminds him of General MacArthur's statement that "there's only one answer in war; and that's victory."

Secretary of State Dulles returned to Washington today with Mutual Security Director Stassen who accompanied him in a 20-day tour of the Middle East and South Asia. Mr. Dulles visited the President then told reporters: the mission "laid a new foundation for friendship" between this nation and the countries they visited. He said these countries are troubled in general, by "fear, bitterness and weakness" which the Communists are trying to exploit.

The President made it known today, through a letter to Representative Arends of Illinois, that his plan to reorganize the Defense Department will not result in "a single military commander with a super staff." Arends had expressed concern that the reorganization plan might bring about "a single chief of staff" for all the armed forces.

A Senate committee was told today that the three and a half billion dollars in aid we have sent to Italy, under various programs, will not result in any "permanent" improvements in Italy says he favors an immediate end to all economic aid to Italy. He would confine our help to purely military objectives to do whatever we can to protect the United States."

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare today announced that dismissal notices have been sent to twelve hundred of its employees. And the National Production Authority has sent pink slips to 13-hundred of its employees.

The Federal Reserve Board says industrial production in this country turned down slightly in April and stayed at about the same rate in May. That's the first drop in the rate of production since last July. And the Agriculture Department reports that the prices farmers received for their crops rose almost one percent during the month ending on May 15.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs, meeting in Washington, today defeated a resolution endorsing the President's plan to admit an additional 240-thousand European refugees to this country in the next two years. The close vote was: 242 for the proposal, 246 against it.

Here in New York, Federal Judge Kaufman set the week of June 15 for the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies.

And now for a recorded report from London, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON.

What is happening in this grey, scarred city beside the Thames is irrational and quite wonderful. It is an exclamation point in the long and often glorious history of this island. The streets are filled with people of good-will, equipped with tolerance and good manners. Money is coming out of the banks. This is the beginning of a big binge. The pubs will stay open till midnite or later. The traffic is impossible. But no one seems to care. The crowds are not hilarious, for the British take their pleasures seriously. On almost every street there are scars from the days and nights when this city stood steady under the ordeal of fire and bomb as the symbol of the free world's defiance of tyranny. In those days of grim glory, these people were sustained in considerable part by their history and tradition; and now they are to participate in a great pageant, a symbol of unity and continuity. Newspaper editors have discovered that the appetite for royalty is insatiable.

Essentially, the crown in this country is a symbol, a symbol of respectability and of unity. The sovereign has no power but great influence. The Royal Family must be the symbol of all the middle-class virtues - and the greatest of these is respectability. It is true that all organs of public opinion combine to glorify the monarch, but it is also true that the monarchy is more firmly based right now than at any time in recent history. When Queen Victoria was crowned, there were many voices saying she would be the last British monarch. There are few, if any, such voices today.

Normally the British talk very well on almost any subject, but about the Coronation they're not very vocal. It's something they feel. Someone once said that the English don't think till the eleventh hour, and then discover that the process is rather interesting. Right now they aren't thinking any deep thoughts. This is their first opportunity, after years of rationing and austerity, to have a party. The symbols of their empire are here; the evidence of their ancient and recent glories are all about them. The future is uncertain, the power of the empire diminished, but there have been darker days. This ceremony, these celebrations will combine glorification of the past and confidence in the future. Whatever evil befalls this island will be blamed upon the government of the day, while good fortune will be credited to the Queen.

Probably the most eloquent sentence ever written about the crown was penned by Bagehot in 1867. He wrote: "We have come to regard the crown as the head of our morality." In a real sense the monarch is the keeper of the nation's conscience. The British crown is the supreme example of the British genius for compromise. It provides not only pageantry but pride. It permits the individual to associate himself with grandeur, decency and responsibility. So far as tangible, measurable power is concerned, the whole institution of the British monarchy might be said to be constructed of moonbeams. But when put to the test, as it has been, it is strong as Sheffield steel. No foreigner should be troubled if he fails to understand why this is so. The British don't quite understand it either. They merely recognize it.

The stability of the British crown rests upon its neutrality. The Queen's ministers may make mistakes, may be turned out of office by the electorate, but the crown is never placed in jeopardy. The monarch's servants may make mistakes, but the monarch can do no wrong. Power resides in the people. Prestige, dignity, good manners, tolerance and example are the obligations of the monarch.

In these days all London is a stage and the set is peopled with willing players. I've asked my partner, Janet Murrow, to describe a few of the scenes for yo

JANET MURROW: To begin with, yesterday was a beautiful day - clear blue sky, warm in the sunshine, cool in the shade of the trees - a perfect day for the Queen's garden party. We approached Buckingham Palace down the Mall, where cars and taxis were bumper-to-bumper, where thousands of onlookers, admiring the decorations, jostled each other in an attempt to see the arriving guests. We showed our invitations to guards at the gate, walked across the palace yard, were greeted by more guards, who collected our invitations, and at last we had walked through a wing of the palace out onto the broad lawns at the back. There were said to have been seven thousand guests, but it never seemed to be that large a crowd. The guests matched the brilliance of the day.

There were people from all parts of the world, with skins of every hue. Eastern dress mingled with Western dress. The saris worn by the Indian women, gossamer materials of blue, pink, green, or white, embroidered with threads of gold, made flashes of color among the crowd. Eastern turbans looked cooler and more comfortable than the grey top hats of the West. The sun poured down, and the huge gay umbrellas of the chiefs from the Gold Coast were opened and carried over them by their attendants. I was told that when one Gold Coast chief was presented to the Duchess of Kent, the attendant executed a few intricate dance steps. All I could see from the distance was the umbrella bobbing up and down as he danced.

The person everyone hoped to see was the Queen. I was fortunate to be standing just where one of the lanes was opened up among the crowd. As Her Majesty stopped and spoke to people lining the path, I listened to the comments round about me. "Isn't she darling?" "She's so petite!" "What a pretty dress!" And, "That's the mink stole given her by the Canadian Government." "She's lovely!" "She seems so interested in everyone." And so it went. There is universal admiration for Her Majesty and it was never more apparent than yesterday as she walked around the palace garden, speaking to her guests. But the head char lady from the business office of a friend of mine and one of England's leading peeresses agreed that it couldn't have been a more colorful party.

MURROW: This has been Janet and Ed Murrow recording from London.

Good Night and Good Luck!

LESUEUR: And this is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news, but first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: Plans for the Coronation are just about complete. And between now and Tuesday there isn't very much the people of Britain can do other than to wait expectantly. There's just one anxious note: the official weather forecast suggests it will probably rain on Tuesday. And it's hard to say tonight who is more concerned about this: The people, the tourists, the Royal Household or the Insurance Companies who have issued millions of dollars of rain-protection policies.

And that's my footnote to the news.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, May 29, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON:

What is happening in this grey, scarred city beside the Thames is irrational and quite wonderful. It is an exclamation point in the long and often glorious history of this island. The streets are filled with people of good-will, equipped with tolerance and good manners. Money is coming out of the banks. This is the beginning of a big binge. The pubs will stay open till midnite or later. The traffic is impossible. But no one seems to care. The crowds are not hilarious, for the British take their pleasures seriously. On almost every street there are scars from the days and nites when this city stood steady under the ordeal of fire and bomb as the symbol of the free world's defiance of tyranny. In those days of grim glory, these people were sustained in considerable part by their history and tradition; and now they are to participate in a great pageant, a symbol of unity and continuity. Newspaper editors have discovered that the appetite for royalty is insatiable.

Essentially, the crown in this country is a symbol, a symbol of respectability and of unity. The sovereign has no power but great influence. The Royal Family must be the symbol of all the middle-class virtues - and the greatest of these is respectability. It is true that all organs of public opinion combine to glorify the monarch, but it is also true that the monarchy is more firmly based right now than at any time in recent history. When Queen Victoria was crowned, there were many voices saying she would be the last British monarch. There are few, if any, such voices today.

Normally the British talk very well on almost any subject, but about the Coronation they're not very vocal. It's something they feel. Someone once said that the English don't think till the eleventh hour, and then discover that the process is rather interesting. Right now they aren't thinking any deep thoughts. This is their first opportunity, after years of rationing and austerity, to have a party. The symbols of their empire are here; the evidence of their ancient and recent glories are all about them. The future is uncertain, the power of the empire diminished, but there have been darker days. This ceremony, these celebrations will combine glorification of the past and confidence in the future. Whatever evil befalls this island will be blamed upon the government of the day, while good fortune will be credited to the Queen.

Probably the most eloquent sentence ever written about the crown was penned by Bagehot in 1867. He wrote: "We have come to regard the crown as the head of our morality." In a real sense the monarch is the keeper of the nation's conscience. The British crown is the supreme example of the British genius for compromise. It provides not only pageantry but pride. It permits the individual to associate himself with grandeur, decency and responsibility. So far as tangible, measurable power is concerned, the whole institution of the British monarchy might be said to be constructed of moonbeams. But when put to the test, as it has been, it is strong as Sheffield steel. No foreigner should be troubled if he fails to understand why this is so. The British don't quite understand it either. They merely recognize it.

The stability of the British crown rests upon its neutrality. The Queen's ministers may make mistakes, may be turned out of office by the electorate, but the crown is never placed in jeopardy. The monarch's servants may make mistakes, but the monarch can do no wrong. Power resides in the people. Prestige, dignity, good manners, tolerance and example are the obligations of the monarch.

In these days all London is a stage and the set is peopled with willing players. I've asked my partner, Janet Murrow, to describe a few of the scenes for you.

JANET MURROW: To begin with, yesterday was a beautiful day - clear blue sky, warm in the sunshine, cool in the shade of the trees - a perfect day for the Queen's garden party. We approached Buckingham Palace down the Mall, where cars and taxis were bumper-to-bumper, where thousands of onlookers, admiring the decorations, jostled each other in an attempt to see the arriving guests. We showed our invitations to guards at the gate, walked across the palace yard, were greeted by more guards, who collected our invitations, and at last we had walked thru a wing of the palace out onto the broad lawns at the back. There were said to have been seven thousand guests, but it never seemed to be that large a crowd. The guests matched the brilliance of the day.

There were people from all parts of the world, with skins of every hue. Eastern dress mingled with Western dress. The saris worn by the Indian women, gossamer materials of blue, pink, green, or white, embroidered with threads of gold, made flashes of color among the crowd. Eastern turbans looked cooler and more comfortable than the grey top hats of the West. The sun poured down, and the huge gay umbrellas of the chiefs from the Gold Coast were opened and carried over them by their attendants. I was told that when one Gold Cast chief was presented to the Duchess of Kent, the attendant executed a few intricate dance steps. All I could see from the distance was the umbrella bobbing up and down as he danced.

The person everyone hoped to see was the Queen. I was fortunate to be standing just where one of the lanes was opened up among the crowd. As Her Majesty stopped and spoke to people lining the path, I listened to the comments round about me. "Isn't she darling?" "She's so petite!" "What a pretty dress!" And, "That's the mink stole given her by the Canadian Government." "She's lovely!" "She seems so interested in everyone." And so it went. There is universal admiration for Her Majesty and it was never more apparent than yesterday as she walked around the palace garden, speaking to her guests. But the head char lady from the business office of a friend of mine and one of England's leading peeresses agreed that it couldn't have been a more colorful party.

MURROW: This has been Janet and Ed Murrow recording from London. Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

Monday, June 1, 1953 - Lesnem 7/45

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

Republican Senator Knowland said today he does NOT believe the UN proposal for a truce in Korea would be "a truce with honor." The Republican Senate policy chairman says: "this truce could cost the free world the "power balance in Asia." He is "certain" that if the Communists accept the truce proposal, Great Britain and India will start a move to get the Chinese Communists seated in the United Nations. And he predicts that Red China would then TRY to get Formosa from the Chinese Nationalists.

Senator Knowland's views were made known after an "authoritative Washington source" told reporters that President Rhee of South Korea has given Washington his terms for going along with the still secret truce proposal. Rhee is said to have given American Ambassador Ellis Briggs a note saying he will not oppose the U.N. truce plan on four conditions: if President Eisenhower signs an agreement for a mutual defense pact with South Korea.. if we agree not to try to keep South Korea from unifying the whole country. if we continue to give South Korea large-scale military and economic aid.. and if we see that all foreign forces leave Korea as soon as a truce is signed and prisoners are exchanged. //

There is no comment on this report from either the White House or the State Department. //

But the South Koreans lent more substence to their objections to the allied proposal when their truce delegate accused our General Harrison of being "not sincere". // because Harrison didn't forward his letter to General Clark. And the acting prime minister of South Korea indicated that [redacted] ROK troops can keep on fighting even though the United States should cut off their ammunition and other military supplies.

In Washington the National Security Council met today . Secretary of State Dulles says the group discussed his report on his recent tour of the Middle East. Mr. Dulles says there was no discussion of the truce talks... (now delayed until Wednesday night.)

The fighting in Korea was limited to patrol-sized attacks today. In the air our Sabrejets destroyed one enemy Mig and damaged another. The Air Force says that during May we shot down 55 Migs and lost one Sabrejet in air combat. Sixteen other Sabres were lost to ground-fire and other causes.

From the Himalayan Mountains tonight comes word that a British expedition has reached the summit of Mt. Everest, thw world's highest peak. never before conquered. A spokesman at Buckingham Palace, on this coronotaion eve, says "the news has been received here." He OFFERED NO OTHER details. Earlier in the day there were reports that the expedition, which sought the achievement, and the news, as a gift to Queen Elizabeth, had failed in its task. Then the London Times reported that the MORE THAN 29-thousand foot mountain had been conquered. The Times quoted the expedition leader, Colonel Hunt, as saying that E. P. Hillary and a NATIVE porter had reached the summit for the first time in history and "all is well." Mt. Everest is BETWEEN on the border Tibet and Nepal.

In Washington today, Democratic Representative Yorty of California, announced that the Administration has decided to spend another billion or so, more than planned, on airpower in the next fiscal year. Yorty says this will be announced by the Administration tomorrow. He says he received the news from Air Secretary Talbott. Earlier in the DAY, Navy Secretary Anderson told a Senate committee he felt that the new Navy budget would assure "a sound and adequate navy."

Treasury Secretary Humphrey today told the House Ways and Means Committee that the excess profits tax is "vicious". but he appealed for extension of the tax for six months. until the end of the year. Mr. Humphrey agreed that the tax is: "unfair.. inequitable.. and iniquitous." He said it: "tends to limit the growth of small business, and it interferes with the normal improvement in the standard of living. But, he insisted, the government needs the 800-million dollars it will bring in if its extended to January first.

The President proposed to Congress that if put all foreign aid.. and all foreign information services. under the State Department. He would kill the Mutual Security Administration, now headed by Harold Stassen, and replace it with a Foreign Operations Administration. Mr. Eisenhower would also set up a new United States Information Agency to take over the Voice of America, and all information activities now conducted by the State Department, the Mutual Security Administration, point Four and information duties in occupied areas. The net result of the two plans would be, to give Secretary of State Dulles, responsibility for general policy direction. of both foreign aid and foreign information. But the State Department would not have the burden of actually operating [redacted] both agencies.

The President today nominated John C. Hughes, head of a New York textile firm, to be the American respresentative on the North Atlantic Council--with the rank of ambassador. And he named Robert Henry Fogler, the president of the W. T. Grant Company, chain-store firm, to be an assistant secretary of the navy.

The Senate today tentatively turned down a proposal to Give Secretary of State Dulles the absolute authority to fire any employe in his department--regardless of civil service rights. The Senate also voted against spending 4-million dollars for foreign service buildings abroad.

The President today accepted "with regret" the resignation of Carl R. Gray, Jr., as veterans administrator. Gray said he resigned because of ill health.

Harvard University today selected a new president to replace Dr. James Conant who resigned to become U.S. high commissioner for West Germany. The new president will be Dr. Nathan Marsh Pusey, who is now president of Lawrence College at Appelton, Wisconsin. He is 46.. a Greek scholar.. and the Harvard announcement says Dr. Pusey "has been a student of the problem of general education, ~~and has been~~ especially active in the movement to revitalize the teaching of the humanities in liberal arts education."

In Berlin today, West Berlin's refugee headquarters says that almost 42-thousand East German refugees have asked for political asylum in the allied-occupied part of the city during the month of May. Since January, 191-thousand East Germany refugees have registered in West Berlin.

Now, for a recorded report from London on the eve of the coronoation... a London that found something new to cheer about in the news that a British expedition had climbed to the top of Mt. Everest... and here is Edward R. Murrow:

And Thus ... L.L. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to The News (cue)

But first a word from Bob Dixon.

The world's greatest spectacle will take place tomorrow, in 900-year old Westminster Abbey, and where seats are at a premium, even for Peers of the Realm. But those sitting nearest the Queen won't be dressed in Royal robes...they have no titles or engraved invitations...and as a matter of fact, they have the closest seats in the house, they won't be able to see a thing...they're four repairmen men - on emergency duty - inside the Abbey's great organ, in case it breaks down.

And that's my footnote to the news!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, June 1, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: .... Now for a recorded report from London on the eve of the Coronation - and here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON:

No single reporter could give you an impression of what London is like on this Coronation eve, so I have sought the assistance of five of my colleagues of CBS Radio News. We shall start with Howard K. Smith, the chief of our European Bureau.

SMITH: Well, what impresses me, Ed, is the very un-British enthusiasm this affair has engendered here. I have, as you know, been covering Britain for seven years and I've been watching these elaborate Coronation preparations for twelve months, believing fully that they were being overdone and almost certain that, in this age when there's so much television and among a people so little given to exuberance in public as the British, they would never fill those miles of grandstands. Well, the past ten days have proven that I don't know the British people after all. For days now, they've been packing the gates of Buckingham Palace, shouting for the Queen; they've made traffic impossible on the streets; they've begun camping on the curbs, to be sure of a view, forty-eight hours before the event. The universal expression on faces is as the they expect something very big is about to happen to England. I've never seen a people with a reputation for phlegm and poise behave quite like this.

MURROW: Next, Richard C. Hottelet, who makes his headquarters in Germany and is here for the Coronation. Dick:

HOTTELET: The golden ceremony and tradition of the Coronation are tremendously impressive to me, Ed, but I'm even more impressed by the plain spirit behind it, the kind of thing dictatorships always try for and never get. It's in the unity, which blurs out party politics. The red-white-and-blue paper streamers festooning a London slum today are at least as happy as the purple velvet on a West End club. Few creatures could be more determined than the hundreds of people who set up housekeeping on curbstones Sunday nite for a look at the Queen some time on Tuesday, or than those who've organized the massive detail of so big and precise a spectacle. Strange uniforms, costumes, faces and languages are welcome reminders here that the Commonwealth still respects the same wholesome symbols in a world of conflicting ideologies. And the money coming in gladdens the practical heart of a nation of traders. But under all the glitter, I find a wistful hope that the Queen will bring her old country a new Elizabethan Age of trade and glory and peace.

MURROW: Next, we'll hear from Alexander Kendrick, who is in from Vienna.

KENDRICK: In the part of Europe which I cover, the only kings and queens left are those living in exile or else, as in Austria, in the storybooks of the golden past. So, what impresses me, Ed, about all this is the ability of the prosaic and absolutely stolid British to keep alive what has been called the magic of monarchy, even the their own empire has dwindled away and has been replaced by a prosaic and stolid commonwealth. It isn't only the trappings, the regalia, the royal rituals and other outward appurtenances by which they accomplish this, but by a sense of personal identification with what are, in effect, honorary rulers with vanished powers and merely ceremonial functions. It continues to be a marvel to an American that this kind of thing should be the supra-political cement that keeps together fifty-two separate parliaments and peoples thruout the world. And all I can do is to quote a British editor, who says: "Whatever one may think about the Coronation, it's too late to be cynical."

MURROW: And now Ned Calmer, who has flown up from Rome.

CALMER: It might seem a little unlikely, Ed, that tomorrow's Coronation of an English Queen could have any influence on the Italian elections// which will be held five days later. But that's one of the strong impressions I've formed here, in view of the fact that on Wednesday I'm flying back to Rome to cover those elections. There are still millions of Italians who want their King back and who accept monarchy as the best form of government in any country. And, naturally, there's widespread interest in Britain's royal family, despite the anti-British bias that exists in Italy where other aspects of British life are concerned. Advance indications on this year's election are that the monarchists are going to make a strong showing in next Sunday's vote, and the world attention which is now turned on Elizabeth and the success of Britain's regime in an atmosphere of prosperity and hope which we feel in London today gives the royalists in Italy and everywhere the additional chance to point with pride to the benefits of the constitutional monarchy system.

MURROW: And now David Schoenbrun, who makes his headquarters in Paris. David!

SCHOENBRUN: Ed, when I came across from Paris last week, I saw a contingent of some forty French correspondents on the ferryboat, the largest French team they've ever sent to cover an outside event. It's strange to see their interest in this British Coronation. Of course, every French school child knows that the Norman kings of France ruled over Britain for four centuries. The French themselves are republicans, of course. They beheaded their monarchs quite often thru the centuries - and in a way they're still doing it, only now it's the Prime Minister whose political head rolls in parliament about once every four months. It's interesting to note the comparative stability of British governments, due in no small measure to the remarkable unity of the British people under a constitutional form of monarchy that has proved more flexible, more liberal than the autocratic and now largely dead regimes of Europe.

MURROW: Thank you very much, gentlemen!

This has been Howard K. Smith, Ned Calmer, Richard C. Hottelet, Alex Kendrick and David Schoenbrun, recording from London.

Good Night and Good Luck!

(Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 1, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

Republican Senator Knowland said today he does not believe the U.N. proposal for a truce in Korea would be "a truce with honor." The Republican Senate policy chairman says: "this truce could cost the free world the power "balance in Asia." He is "certain" that if the Communists accept the truce proposal, Great Britain and India will start a move to get the Chinese Communists seated in the United Nations. And he predicts that Red China would then try to get Formosa from the Chinese Nationalists.

Senator Knowland's views were made known after an "authoritative Washington source" told reporters that President Rhee of South Korea has given Washington her terms for going along with the still secret truce proposal. Rhee is said to have given American Ambassador Ellis Briggs a note saying he will not oppose the U.N. truce plan on four conditions: if President Eisenhower signs an agreement for a mutual defense pact with South Korea, if we agree not to try to keep South Korea from unifying the whole country; if we continue to give South Korea large-scale military and economic aid; and if we see that all foreign forces leave Korea as soon as a truce is signed and prisoners are exchanged. There is no comment on this report from either the White House or the State Department.

But the South Koreans lent more substance to their objections to the allied proposal when their truce delegate accused our General Harrison of being "not sincere" because Harrison didn't forward his letter to General Clark. And the acting prime minister of South Korea indicated that ROK troops can keep on fighting even though the United States should cut off their ammunition and other military supplies.

In Washington, the National Security Council met today. Secretary of State Dulles says the group discussed his report on his recent tour of the Middle East. Mr. Dulles says there was no discussion of the truce talks now delayed until Wednesday night.

The fighting in Korea was limited to patrol-sized attacks today. In the air our Sabrejets destroyed one enemy Mig and damaged another. The Air Force says that during May we shot down 55 Migs and lost one Sabrejet in air combat. Sixteen other Sabres were lost to ground-fire and other causes.

From the Himalayan Mountains tonight comes word that a British expedition has reached the summit of Mt. Everest, the world's highest peak never before conquered. A spokesman at Buckingham Palace, on this coronation eve, says "the news has been received here." He offered no other details. Earlier in the day there were reports that the expedition, which sought the achievement and the news as a gift to Queen Elizabeth, had failed in its task. Then the London Times reported that the more than 29-thousand foot mountain had been conquered. The Times quoted the expedition leader, Colonel Hunt as saying that E.P. Hillary and a native porter had reached the summit for the first time in histoay and "all is well." Mt. Everest is on the border between Tibet and Nepal.

In Washington today, Democratic Representative Yorty of California, announced that the Administration has decided to spend another billion or so, more than planned, on airpower in the next fiscal year. Yorty says this will be announced by the Administration tomorrow. He says he received the news from Air Secretary Talbott. Earlier in the day, Navy Secretary Anderson told a Senate committee he felt that the new Navy budget would assure "a sound and adequate navy."

Treasury Secretary Humphrey today told the House Ways and Means Committee that the excess profits tax is "vicious" but he appealed for extension of the tax for six months until the end of the year. Mr. Humphrey agreed that the tax is: "unfair, inequitable" and iniquitous. He said it "tends to limit the growth of small business and it interferes with the normal improvement in the standard of living. But, he insisted, the government needs the 800-million dollars it will bring in if its extended to January first.

The President proposed to Congress that if put all foreign aid, and all foreign information services under the State Department, he would kill the Mutual Security Administration, now headed by Harold Stassen, and replace it with a Foreign Operations Administration. Mr. Eisenhower would also set up a new United States Information Agency to take over the Voice of America and all information activities now conducted by the State Department, the Mutual Security Administration, Point Four and information duties in occupied areas. The net result of the two plans would be to give Secretary of State Dulles responsibility for general policy direction of both foreign aid and foreign information. But the State Department would not have the burden of actually operating both agencies.

The President today nominated John C. Hughes, head of a New York textile firm, to be the American representative on the North Atlantic Council with the rank of ambassador. And he named Robert Henry Fogler, the President of the W.T. Grant Company chain-store firm, to be an assistant secretary of the navy.

The Senate today tentatively turned down a proposal to give Secretary of State Dulles the absolute authority to fire any employee in his department - regardless of civil service rights. The Senate also voted against spending 4-million dollars for foreign service buildings abroad.

The President today accepted "with regret" the resignation of Carl R. Gray, Jr., as veterans administrator. Grey said he resigned because of ill health.

Harvard University today selected a new president to replace Dr. James Conant who resigned to become U.S. high commissioner for West Germany. The new president will be Dr. Nathan Marsh Pusey, who is now president of Lawrence College at Appelton, Wisconsin. He is 46, a Greek scholar and the Harvard announcement says Dr. Pusey "has been a student of the problem of general education, especially active in the movement to revitalize the teaching of the humanities in liberal arts education.

In Berlin today, West Berlin's refugee headquarters says that almost 42-thousand East German refugees have asked for political asylum in the allied-occupied part of the city during the month of May. Since January, 191-thousand East Germany refugees have registered in West Berlin.

Now, for a recorded report from London on the eve of the coronation; a London that found something new to cheer about in the news that a British expedition had climbed to the top of Mr. Everest and here is Edward R. Murrow:

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON!

No single reporter could give you an impression of what London is like on this Coronation eve, so I have sought the assistance of five of my colleagues of CBS Radio News. We shall start with Howard K. Smith, the chief of our European Bureau.

SMITH: Well, what impresses me, Ed, is the very un-British enthusiasm this affair has engendered here. I have, as you know, been covering Britain for seven years and I've been watching these elaborate Coronation preparations for twelve months, believing fully that they were being overdone and almost certain that, in this age when there's so much television and among a people so little given to exhuberance in public as the British, they would never fill those miles of grandstands. Well, the past ten days have proven that I don't know the British people after all. For days now, they've been packing the gates of Buckingham Palace, shouting for the Queen; they've made traffic impossible on the streets; they've begun camping on the curbs, to be sure of a view, forty-eight hours before the event. The universal expression on faces is as though they expect something very big is about to happen to England. I've never seen a people with a reputation for phlegm and poise behave quite like this.

MURROW: Next, Richard C. Hottelet, who makes his headquarters in Germany and is here for the Coronation. Dick!

HOTTELET: The golden ceremony and tradition of the Coronation are tremendously impressive to me, Ed, but I'm even more impressed by the plain spirit behind it, the kind of thing dictatorships always try for and never get. It's in the unity, which blurs out party politics. The Red-white-and-blue paper streamers festooning a London slum today are at least as happy as the purple velvet on a West End club. Few creatures could be more determined than the hundreds of people who set up housekeeping on curbstones Sunday night for a look at the Queen some time on Tuesday, or than those who've organized the massive detail of so big and precise a spectacle. Strange uniforms, costumes, faces and languages are welcome reminders here that the Commonwealth still respects the same wholesome symbols in a world of conflicting ideologies. And the money coming in gladdens the practical heart of a nation of traders. But under all the glitter, I find a wistful hope that the Queen will bring her old country a new Elizabethan Age of trade and glory and peace.

MURROW: Next, we'll hear from Alexander Kendrick, who is in from Vienna.

KENDRICK: In the part of Europe which I cover, the only kings and queens left are those living in exile or else, as in Austria, in the storybooks of the golden past. So, what impresses me, Ed, about all this is the ability of the prosaic and absolutely stolid British to keep alive what has been called the magic of monarchy, even though their own empire has dwindled away and has been replacee by a prosaic and stolid commonwealth. It isn't only the trappings, the regalia, the royal rituals and other outward appurtenances by which they accomplish this, but by a sense of personal identification with what are, in effect, honorary rulers with vanished powers and merely ceremonial functions. It continues to be a marvel to an American that this kind of thing should be the supra-political cement that keeps together fifty-two separate parliaments and peoples throughout the world. And all I can do is to quote a British editor, who says: "Whatever one may think about the Coronation, it's too late to be cynical."

MURROW: And now Ned Calmer, who has flown up from Rome.

CALMER: It might seem a little unlikely, Ed, that tomorrow's Coronation of an English Queen could have any influence on the Italian elections which will be held five days later. But that's one of the strong impressions I've formed here, in view of the fact that on Wedn3sday I'm flying back to Rome to cover those elections. There are still millions of Italians who want their King back and who accept monarchy as the best form of government in any country. And, naturally, there's widespread interest in Britain's royal family, despite the anti-British bias that exists in Italy where other aspects of British life are concerned. Advance indications on this year's election are that the monarchists are going to make a strong showing in next Sunday's vote, and the world attention which is now turned on Elizabeth and the success of Britain's regime in an atmosphere of prosperity and hope which we feel in London today gives the royalists in Italy and everywhere the additional chance to point with pride to the benefits of the constitutional monarchy system.

MURROW: And now David Schoenbrun, who makes his headquarters in Paris. David!

SCHOENBRUN: Ed, when I came across from Paris last week, I saw a contingent of some forty French correspondents on the ferryboat, the largest French team they've ever sent to cover an outside event. It's strange to see their interest in this British Coronation. Of course every French school child knows that the Norman kings of France ruled over Britain for four centuries. The French themselves are republicans, of course. They beheaded their monarchs quite often through the centuries - and in a way they're still doing it, only now it's the Prime Minister whose political head rolls in Parliament about once every four months. It's interesting to note the comparative stability of British governments, due in no small measure to the remarkable unity of the British people under a constitutional form of monarchy that has proved more flexible, more liberal than the autocratic and now largely dead regimes of Europe.

MURROW: Thank you very much, gentlemen. This has been Howard K. Smith, Ned Calmer, Richard C. Hottelet, Alex Kendrick and David Schoenbrun, recording from London. Good Night and Good Luck!

LESUEUR: And this is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: The world's greatest spectacle will take place tomorrow, in 900-year old Westminster Abbey, where seats are at a premium, even for Peers of the Realm. But those sitting nearest the Queen won't be dressed in Royal robes; they have no titles or engraved invitations, and as a matter of fact, while they have the closest seats in the house, they won't be able to see a thing; they're four repairmen - on emergency duty - inside the Abbey's great organ, in case it breaks down.

And that's my footnote to the news!

Tuesday June 2, 1953 - 7:45p Lesson

Good evening, here's what happened today:

Queen Elizabeth was crowned, and then rode through the streets of London, to be acclaimed by the greatest crowd London has ever seen. In a few minutes we'll hear a direct report, on what happened during the ceremony, from Westminster Abbey.

In Washington, the President met with his congressional leaders, to discuss a Senate committee proposal that would cut off all American contributions to the United Nations, should Communist China be admitted. The President was said to feel, that this would split the allies, and be accepted as a threat against the United Nations. So all agreed that the proposal be withdrawn. And the President pledged that he would stand firm against admitting Red China to the UN, at this time, even as a condition of peace in Korea.

South Korea's President Rhee who, through his aides, has repeatedly attacked the latest, and still secret, United Nations truce proposal, said today: "We must co-operate with the United States at any cost." Rhee told reporters: "We must accept anything the President of the United States wants"..out of gratitude to American common sense and wisdom. This would indicate that Rhee has softened somewhat towards the truce terms.

But he made clear his country still insists that Korea be unified and all Chinese troops be withdrawn. Rhee says he has received a message from the President..but he declined to say what was in it. Informed sources suggest that the President told Rhee: he would promise to continue economic and military aid to South Korea, but this nation will not be deterred from seeking an honorable Truce. There is no comment from the White House.

The enemy today launched eleven attacks against the allied main-line positions on the eastern front and in the west. Allied officers say we inflicted 11-hundred casualties on the enemy.

Admiral Radford was in Formosa today to confer with Chiang Kai Shek and evaluate Chiang's armed forces. And in Washington, the Senate confirmed the Admiral to be the next chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. The Senate also approved General Ridgeway to be army chief of staff...Admiral Carney to be chief of naval operations and General Twining to head the Air Force.

Secretary of the army Stevens told a Senate committee today that the first three years of the war in Korea has cost the army alone--"about 15 billion dollars." He said the new army budget includes two and a half billions to continue the Korean war for twelve months beyond the first of July.

Republican Senator Duff of Pennsylvania charges that "exceedingly bad methods" of the Truman Administration resulted in great waste in the air defense program.

(20)

The President today set-up a special loyalty board to pass on the 34-hundred Americans employed by the United Nations. This will extend to the American citizens working for the U.N. the same loyalty check-up system recently put into effect for our government employes.

House Speaker Martin says, representatives from the White House have agreed with House Republicans on compromise legislation to extend the reciprocal trade act for one year.. substantially in its present form.

C.I.O. President Walter Reuther says the C.I.O. and the A.F. of L. have "made real substantial progress" toward a merger of the two big unions into one federation. Both unions have agreed on "the basis" for a "no raiding pact" that will be offered to the conventions of both unions.

(40)

And now for a report on the Coronation. Among the few American reporters to witness this historic scene from a place in Westminster Abbey was Howard K. Smith, chief of European correspondents for CBS radio. And

Ed Murrow, who is now flying home from London, asked Howard Smith to record for you, his eye-witness account of what happened inside the Abbey. Here is Smith's [redacted] report:

(runs: 7:50

return cue: This is HKSmith now back to CBS radio in NY

After the ceremony Sir Winston Churchill described the day, as "one which the oldest of us, are proud to have lived to see, and which the youngest will remember, all ~~our~~ their lives. And the Queen, in a broadcast to her people, pledged to ~~[redacted]~~ devote her life, to ~~[redacted]~~ their service - Urged them to guard freedom, and to practise tolerance "so that we can go forward together in peace."

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. Cue

But first ~~here is~~ a word from Bob Dixon.

The Coronation ceremonies came off today, almost without a hitch...And at least one Peer of the Realm had a solution for the absence of a snack bar in Westminster Abbey. During the long morning wait for the Queen, he was seen digging in one jewelled pocket after another, searching nervously ~~for something~~. Then just before the Queen arrived, his search was successful. He finally reached under his plumed hat, and extracted a sandwich wrapped in waxed paper..

And that's my footnote to the News..

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Tuesday, June 2, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... And, now, for a report on the coronation. Amongthe few American reporters to witness this historic scene from a place in Westminster Abbey, was Howard K. Smith chief of European correspondents for CBS Radio. And Ed Murrow, who is now flying home from London, asked Howard Smith to record for you his eye-witness account of what happened inside the abbey. Here is Smith's report.

SMITH: I am speaking to you from inside Westminster Abbey. A few hours ago this great ancient church was the scene of splendor such as our prosaic modern age is not likely to see soon again. Now, this evening, almost empty bathed in half-light and silent left to a thousand years of its memories this great cavern of stone seems almost as impressive this way as it was say when the floodlights were on, the crowds were here.

From an arch here in one end of the abbey high above the altar, I'm looking down the nave five hundred feet in length; sometimes called England's 'street of immortality,' and sometimes, with less dignity, known as the 'most distinguished mortuary on earth.' To the left I can see the poets' corner where England's great writers from Chaucer to Kipling are buried. On the right are the great of other fields ~~like~~ great prime ministers like William Pitt, and also one Jonas Hanvoy of whom you have probably never heard but to whom millions of Englishmen this day have special reason to be greatful. For his distinction was having invented the umbrella. Directly below me, behind the great altar, seventy of England's kings and queens and their royal relations are buried from Edward the Confessor to Elizabeth the Great.

Only thirteen years is lacking now for it to be nine centuries ago that William of Normandy conquered this country and decided to hallow his conquest by having himself anointed and crowned on the flagstones here below me. The abbey church of St. Peter in Westminster has been ever since

England's coronation church. But of the fifteen or? so coronations that these old walls have witnessed, none can have been quite as brilliant and as enthusiastic as the latest one that ended here a few hours ago. (unintelligible) stands for spectators to come and see. In the hundred differen uniforms worn by ushers and guards and most of the guests, England's great ages clashed. The Yoemen ...? stood guard in their scarlet tunics that have not altered design since the Middle Ages; Scotch officers appeared in Highland uniforms right out of Walter Scott's stories with brilliant tartans flung rackishly over their shoulders. Sailors wore their officers uniforms of Nelson's fleet at Trafalgar. The Peers, the noble (indistinct) and their ladies, were perfectly described by a lad sitting near me as looking like rows of animated strawberry sundaes, and truly in their long red robes and short white ermine capes over their shoulders and small coronets perched on their heads, that's what they looked like. Complete with whipped cream and cherry on top.

Sadly, there were no aeroplanes in ancient England so representatives of the Royal Air Force had to appear in ordinary modern uniforms, jarring the scene as the Connecticut Yankee must have when he first arrived at King Arthur's court. Brilliant as the competition of costume was, there's no doubt whatever who after Queen Elizabeth herself attracted the most admiring attention. It was Sir Winston Churchill. Though not unaccustomed to unconventional headgear, Churchill seemed somewhat self conscious throughout the ceremony in his unusually brilliant attire. When Sir Winston first entered in the queen's procession following the prime minister of all the British Commonwealth nations, he committed the only unscheduled gesture in this highly organized ritual. He broke ranks and walked over to a stall to lean over and warmly shake hands with an old and good friend, George Catlett Marshall, the official representative of the President of the United States. But even Sir Winston was forgotten when the young queen arrived. Pretty at all times but downright beautiful today in her satin gown embroidered with delicately tinted flowers and plants representative of all the lands that she ranks over. HHr cheeks were unusually red as if flushed with excitement. But at no moment in the long trying ritual did she loose the poise and control that she has become famous for.

The ceremony, a bare outline, is a simple one. But time and events have added elaborate flourishes to it. It reflects centuries of humanity's effort to resolve the difficult problem of government; to marry those so often conflicting elements of order and freedom. At the beginning of the ceremony the queen and the Archbishop of Canterbury faced in turn the four corners ofthe abbey and each time the archbishop asked the people ifthey accept Elizabeth as their queen, which they most heartily did with shouts of, God save the Queen. Then the queen was taken to the altar and made to swear that she in her turn will abide by the laws made by her people's government. That contract having been agreed before God between ruler and ruled, the rest of the ceremony consisted vesting the queen with the instruments of rule; robes, a scepter, orb, and asking God's blessing on her as she accepts them. She was anointed with holy oil by the archbishop andthen comes the climax, when she is seated in the ancient coronation chair af above the more ancient Stone of Scone. The crown of St. Edward, the founder of the abbey, is placed on her head by the archbishop. That crown though beautiful is a trying ornament; it's enormous in size and weighs seven pounds. A monarch wears it only once in her or his life, at the coronation for one hour. They say you can (indistinct) the strain of that hour by balancing three volumes of the Encyclopedia Britannica on your head for that period of time. In her long hour of that tribulation, the queen took holy communion during which breadcasting andtelevising of the ceremony was stopped - and then spated at last in herthrone in the center ofthe abbey, she received homage. One by one the senior nobles ofthe realm, her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh being the first, knelt before her and swore to obey her; a recollection this part of the ritual of many troubled times when ambitious nobles frequently rebelled against their monarch.

When the queen had first entered and stood alone inthe abbey, her stately gown and long train, lent her the illusion of tallness. But with that massive crown on her head and surrounded by her tall nobles, she magically diminished in size and looked the image of a child queen, very much resembling the dolls representing her that you see in many London shop~~s~~ windows this coronation season.

At last, the ceremony ended. The massive crown of St. Edward was removed. The more delicate and more beautiful imperial state crown, sparklingwith its three thousand diamonds, pearls, rubies and sapphires was placed on her head. As her procession moved back down the nave towards the great doors, trumpets sounded fanfares; the bells of Big Ben and Parliament nearby peeled out; cannon fired in the Tower of London - and inside this abbey seven thousand voices sang with more fervor, I'm sure, than most coronation audiences have in the past: God Save Our Gracious Queen. This is Howard K. Smith in London. Back now to CBS Radio in New York.

LESUEUR: After the ceremony, Sir Winston Churchill described today as one which the oldest of us are proud to have lived tosee and which the youngest will remember all their lives.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY JUNE 2, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good evening, here's what happened today:

Queen Elizabeth was crowned and then rode through the streets of London to be acclaimed by the greatest crowd London has ever seen. In a few minutes we'll hear a direct report on what happened during the ceremony from Westminster Abbey.

In Washington, the President met with his congressional leaders to discuss a Senate committee proposal that would cut off all American contributions to the United Nations should Communist China be admitted. The President was said to feel that this would split the allies and be accepted as a threat against the United Nations. So all agreed that the proposal be withdrawn. And the President pledged that he would stand firm against admitting Red China to the U.N. at this time even as a condition of peace in Korea.

South Korea's President Rhee, who, through his aides, has repeatedly attacked the latest, and still secret, United Nations truce proposal, said today: "We must cooperate with the United States at any cost." Rhee told reporters: "We must accept anything the President of the United States wants" out of gratitude to American common sense and wisdom. This would indicate that Rhee has softened somewhat towards the truce terms. But he made clear his country still insists that Korea be unified and all Chinese troops be withdrawn. Rhee says he has received a message from the President but declined to say what was in it. Informed sources suggest that the President told Rhee: he would promise to continue economic and military aid to South Korea, but this nation will not be deterred from seeking an honorable truce. There is no comment from the White House.

The enemy today alunched eleven attacks against the allied main-line positions on the eastern front and in the west. Allied officers say we inflicted 11-hundred casualties on the enemy.

Admiral Radford was in Formosa today to confer with Chiang Kai Shek and evaluate Chiang's armed forces. And in Washington, the Senate, confirmed the Admiral to be the next chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. The Senate also approved General Ridgeway to be army chief of staff; Admiral Carney to be chief of naval operations and General Twining to head the Air Force.

Secretary of the army Stevens told a Senate committee today that the first three years of the war in Korea has cost the army alone "about 15 billion dollars." he said the new army budget includes two and a half billions to continue the Korean war for twelve months beyond the first of July.

Republican Senator Duff of Pennsylvania charges that "exceedingly bad methods" of the Truman Administration resulted in great waste in the air defense program.

The President today set-up a special loyalty board to pass on the 34-hundred Americans employed by the United Nations. This will extend to the American citizens working for the U.N. the same loyalty check-up system recently put into effect for our government employees.

House Speaker Martin says representatives from the White House have agreed with House Republicans on compromise legislation to extend the reciprocal trade act for one year, substantially in its present form.

C.I.O. President Walter Reuther says the C.I.O. and the A.F.L. have "made real substantial progress" toward a merger of the two big unions into one federation. Both unions have agreed on "the basis" for a "no raiding pact" that will be offered to the conventions of both unions.

And now for a report on the Coronation. Among the few American reporters to witness this historic scene from a place in Westminster Abbey was Howard K. Smith, chief of European correspondents for CBS radio. And Ed Murrow, who is now flying home from London, asked Howard Smith to record for you his eye-witness account of what happened inside the Abbey. Here is Smith's report:

SMITH: I am speaking to you from inside Westminster Abbey. A few hours ago this great ancient church was the scene of splendor such as our prosaic modern age is not likely to see soon again. Now, this evening, almost empty bathed in half-light and silent left to a thousand years of its memories this great cavern of stone seems almost as impressive this way as it was say when the floodlights were on, the crowds were here.

From an arch here in one end of the abbey high above the altar, I'm looking down the nave five hundred feet in length; sometimes called England's "street of immortality," and sometimes, with less dignity, known as the "most distinguished mortuary on earth." To the left I can see the poets corner where England's great writers from Chaucer to Kipling are buried. On the right are the great of other fields great prime ministers like William Pitt, and also one Jonas Hanvoy of whom you have probably never heard but to whom millions of Englishmen this day have special reason to be grateful. For his distinction was having invented the umbrella. Directly below me, behind the great altar, seventy of England's kings and queens and their royal relations are buried from Edward the Confessor to Elizabeth the Great.

Only thirteen years is lacking now for it to be nine centuries ago that William of Normandy conquered this country and decided to hallow his conquest by having himself anointed and crowned on the flagstones here below me. The abbey church of St. Peter in Westminster has been ever since England's coronation church. But of the fifteen or so coronations that these old walls have witnessed, none can have been quite as brilliant and as enthusiastic as the latest one that ended here a few hours ago. In the hundred different uniforms worn by ushers and guards and most of the guests, England's great ages clashed. The yoemen stood guard in their scarlet tunics that have not altered design since the Middle Ages. Scotch officers appeared in Highland uniforms right out of Walter Scott's stories with brilliant tartans flung rackishly over their shoulders. Sailors wore their officers uniforms of Nelson's fleet at Trafalgar. The Peers, the Nobles and their Ladies, were perfectly described by a lad sitting near me as looking like rows of animated strawberry sundaes, and truly in their long red robes and short white ermine capes over their shoulders and small coronets perched on their heads, that's what they looked like. Complete with whipped cream and cherry on top. Sadly, there were no aeroplanes in ancient England so representatives of the Royal Air Force had to appear in ordinary modern uniforms, jarring the scene as the Connecticut Yankee must have when he first arrived at King Arthur's court. Brilliant as the competition of costume was, there's no doubt whatever who after Queen Elizabeth herself attracted the most admiring attention. It was Sir Winston Churchill. Though not unaccustomed to unconventional headgear, Churchill seemed somewhat self conscious throughout the ceremony in his unusually brilliant attire. When Sir Winston first wntered in the queen's procession following the prime minister of all the British Commonwealth nations, he committed the only unscheduled gesture in this highly organized ritual. He broke ranks and walked over to a stall to lean over and warmly shake hands with an old and good friend, George Catlett Marshall, the official representative of the President of the United States. But even Sir Winston was forgotten when the young queen arrived. Pretty at all times but downright beautiful today in her satin gown embroidered with delicately tinted flowers and plants representative of all the lands that she ranks over. Her cheeks were unusually red as if flushed with excitement. But at no moment in the long trying ritual did she lose the poise and control that she has become famous for.

The ceremony, a bare outline, is a simple one. But time and events have added elaborate flourishes to it. It reflects centuries of humanity's effort to resolve the difficult problem of government; to marry those so often conflicting elements of order and freedom. At the beginning of the ceremony the queen and the Archbishop of Canterbury faced in turn the four corners of the abbey and each time the archbishop asked the people if they accept Elizabeth as their queen, which they most heartily did with shouts of, God Save the Queen. Then the queen was taken to the altar and made to swear that she in her turn will abide by the laws made by her people's government. That contract having been agreed before God between ruler and ruled, the rest of the ceremony consisted vesting the queen with the instruments of rule; robes, a sceptor, orb, and asking God's blessing on her as she accepts them. She was anointed with holy oil by the archbishop and then comes the climax, when she is seated in the ancient coronation chair above the more ancient stone of Scone. The crown of St. Edward, the founder of the abbey, is placed on her head by the Archbishop. That crown though beautiful is a trying ornament; it's enormous in size and weighs seven pounds. A monarch wears it only once in her or his life, at the coronation for one hour. They say you can approximate the strain of that hour by balancing three volumes of the Encyclopedia Britannica on your head for that period of time. In her long hour of that tribulation, the queen took holy communion during which broadcasting and televising of the ceremony was stopped - and then seated at last in her throne in the center of the abbey, she received homage. One by one the senior nobles of the realm, her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh being the first, knelt before her and swore to obey her; a recollection this part of the ritual of many troubled times when ambitious nobles frequently rebelled against their monarch.

When the queen had first entered and stood alone in the abbey, her stately gown and long train, lent her the illusion of tallness. But with that massive crown on her head and surrounded by her tall nobles, she magically diminished in size and looked the image of a child queen, very much resembling the dolls representing her that you see in many London shops this coronation season. At last, the ceremony ended. The massive crown of St. Edward was removed. The more delicate and more beautiful imperial state crown, sparkling with its three thousand diamonds, pearls, rubies and sapphires was placed on her head. As her procession moved back down the nave towards the great doors, trumpets sounded fanfares; the bells of Big Ben and Parliament nearby peeled out; cannon fired in the Tower of London - and inside this abbey seven thousand voices sang with more fervor, I'm sure, than most coronation audiences have in the past: God Save Our Gracious Queen. This is Howard K. Smith in London. Back now to CBS Radio in New York.

LESUEUR: After the ceremony, Sir Winston Churchill described today as one which the oldest of us are proud to have lived to see and which the youngest will remember all their lives.

And the Queen, in a broadcast to her people, pledged to devote her life to their service; urged them to guard freedom and to practice tolerance "so that we can go forward together in peace."

This is Larry Lesueuer. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUER: The Coronation ceremonies came off today, almost without a hitch, and at least one Peer of the Realm had a solution for the absence of a snack bar in Westminster Abbey. During the long morning wait for the Queen, he was seen digging in one jewelled pocket after another, searching nervously. And then just before the Queen arrived, her search was successful. He finally reached under his plumed hat, and extracted a sandwich wrapped in waxed paper. And that's my footnote to the news.

Wednesday - 3 June 1953 7/45 LeSueur

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

General Hoyt Vandenbergh, the retiring [redacted] chief of staff, said [redacted] that the Administration's five billion dollar-cut in the air force budget [redacted] increase the risks to our national security. The General said, the Joint Chiefs of Staff made this view known to Defense Secretary Wilson, last March. Later, Vandenbergh personally, told the same thing to Air Force Secretary Talbott. General Vandenbergh told [redacted] Senate committee: contradictory orders, and budget cuts of this Administration, have caused "uncertainty and confusion." This, he said, has led to difficulties, within the air force and with our allies. [redacted] the Administration has offered "no sound military reason" for delaying the air-force buildup. He says the Joint Chiefs of Staff, all to be replaced, feel that we should have [redacted] 143-wing air force by December of 1955 to meet the threat of a Soviet atomic attack. He feels the danger of such an attack, has not lessened. By the middle of 1955, Vandenbergh expects Russia to have a stockpile of atomic weapons, sufficient to "mount a devastating attack" on this country. The General says the Air Force did not approve the new "interim goal" of 120-air wings and [redacted] personally, did not approve.

Another committee witness was Air Force Secretary Talbott. He said the 5-billion dollar cutback in air force funds will not seriously delay the new combat equipment needed for 143 wings or more. He says the present "interim goal" of 120 wings may be raised within the next six months after the new chiefs of staff study our overall defense plans. And he told the committee the air force budget-cut was a budgetary rather than a military decision; he does not know "for sure" who FINALLY MADE IT [redacted]

Another view on what should be done about our air power comes from a committee of industrialists and scientists who have studied defense problems for six months. This group, headed by M. J. Kelley, president of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, says we must have a sharp increase in our air defense program. AND We must speedily develop our atomic offensive capabilities. The group feels that there is no sure defense against an atomic attack on this country, short of the elimination of war. It feels that the best defense is a good offense. And it wants the nation to develop a continental air defense system "much better" than the system now planned.

Tonight, In Korea, the Communists are expected to reply to the compromise truce proposals we gave them nine days ago. On the battlefields,

South Korean troops failed to dislodge the enemy forces that cling to a narrow strip of our eastern front. //

The Pentagon has added another 141 names to the Korean casualty list. This includes a correction in the records that has reduced Marine casualties by 56.

Tonight at 10 p.m., eastern [redacted] time the President and four of his cabinet members will be heard over many of these stations. The [redacted] talk will be heard a half hour [redacted] earlier over the national television networks.

Today the President praised the European coal and steel community as "the first important step toward a United Europe."... He nominated Amos J. Peaslee, a New Jersey lawyer, to be ambassador to Australia. Peaselee was Harold Stassen's campaign manager in [redacted] 1948..

The Senate today voted 76 to nothing to approve the agreement Congressional leaders made with the President yesterday. They went on record against admitting Communist China to the United Nations.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio today called upon [redacted] Administration leaders to approve a new version of a constiutional amendment to limit the President's treaty-making powers. The Senator told reporters: "If Administration leaders want to duck their responsibility, under the party platform, then we should know it."

Treasury Secretary Humphrey told the House Ways and Means Committee today that he has urged some business groups, either to support the President's request for an extension of the excess profits tax, or at least to remain neutral. Chairman Reed warned the Secretary against "lobbying" for the President's request. Reed opposes the extension, and favors a tax reduction.

In London today, Queen Elizabeth went on a tour of a Cockney working class district, which was hard hit by the Nazi blitz. It was the first of four official tours, she will make of the city.

And General Marshal, the head of the official American delegation to the Coronation, called on the American press to help strengthen British-American understanding. " The General told American reporters, in London: "Generous understanding between the people of my country, and of the British commonwealth, is more important to the peace of the world, than anything else." He said: "The press has a tremendous responsibility to the nation in these very critical days."

In Paris, Pierre Mendes-France told the French parliament that if he is confirmed as the new premier he'll go to the Bermuda conference with "a precise plan" to end the war in Indo-China. He said he'll also work for a meeting with Russia on world issues.

In Western Germany, the United States and Chancellor Adenauer's government have signed an agreement restoring a treaty of freidnship, commerce and consular rights. an agreement that was broken by World War 2.

Italian Premier De Gasperi today warned his people that if his forces fail to win next Sunday's [redacted] election Italy might be faced with a civil war. in which the Communists would probably win over the fascists.

General [redacted] Greunther, who is to be the new commander of the North Atlantic Forces, returned to this country today. He told reporters he's confident we can prevent another world war by building up allied strength.

At Sing Sing prison, convicted atomic spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg say they have been offered a deal by the government to save their lives..if they make a confession of guilt [redacted]. They say the offer was made to them yesterday by Federal Prison Director Bennett. They say they turned it down because they are innocent.

In Washington, Chairman Jenner of the Senate internal security committee, says he's asked the Justice Department to investigate the sworn testimony of Thad Mason. Mason recently told the committee that as a former communist he helped steal for a Communist spy ring certain blueprints from a General Motors plant in Cleveland. Senator Jenner says "certain aspects" of Mason's televised testimony are "unsupported by fact."

In Miami, a federal grand jury has indicted six persons, five of whom are identified as members of the Ku Klux Klan. They are charged with ~~on charges of~~ lying under oath during an investigation of racial terrorism.

1.1.1. 3 June 1953 – 7/45 Lofman 1.1.1.

[redacted]

SLOW

Perhaps it is not such a far cry from Those Coronation ceremonies in London yesterday, to what may be a decisive meeting at Panmunjom tonite.//. Britain yesterday demonstrated one of the characteristics, that sets it apart from almost any other nation in the world, today.//. Its almost complete Unity-//-a unity that that comes, not from the top, as in Russia, where any divergences are stifled by fear, | or masked by the iron curtain, | but a unity of allegiance and enthusiasm for its Queen and its [redacted] time-tried form of government, which is practically [redacted] unparalelled throughout the world...

[redacted] And if there is one thing [redacted] on which [redacted] virtually all Britons agree, it is on their desire for Peace... Or to put it another way, on a fervent desire to avoid the possibility of world war three...

Their great historian Arnold Toynbee, summed up this feeling most succinctly, when he said Britain's new motto might well be: "No annihilation, without representation."

This fear, // [redacted] the possibility of annihilation, grows, of course, out of Britain's memories of the last war, out of the blitz, and particularly out of the year 1944, when rockets and pilotless aircraft, first exploded on the British Isles... Britain's defenses against the buzz-bombs developed almost miraculously...to a point where they were shooting down four out of five...But a certain percentage always got through, and when the Germans started lofting rockets at Britain, from as far away as Holland...Defense was impossible, except to capture the ground from which the Vee-Twos were launched...If half-a-dozen of those rockets had been equipped with atomic warheads, of course Britain's ability to wrest the launching grounds away from its enemy, would have been considerably diminished, to say the least...For that green and pleasant land, with its concentrated industry and high density of population, represents the most vulnerable target in the world...Especially since the development of the two-step rocket--which Britain's enemies might launch from so deep in the interior of Europe, that Britain might be knocked out before it could get started..

And so it would appear, that although Britain is NOT technically represented [redacted] at those decisive meetings at Panmunjom tonight, the [redacted] weight of British unity of opinion may yet be decisive...

For that tight little island, feels, it has more to lose than either Russia, Communist China or the United States, in the event of world war three...Britain's unseen prescence at Panmunjom, may be the more decisive, because Britain's mind is completely made-up... For The [redacted] the United States and Russia may desire peace, [redacted] as much as Britain, [redacted] Both are [redacted]---wary of its impact on the balance of power in Asia and throughout the world. The [redacted].

Yesterday, [redacted] the unhappy President of South Korea, Synghman Rhee, pulled in his horns, and said that "out of gratitude to the United States,...common sense and wisdom, requires that we cooperate with the United States, at Any [redacted] cost...

Today the Korean Ambassador to the United States, amplified, without explaining, the diametrically-changed views of his President..

[redacted] Said his government understood that the truce terms supported by the United States, were not necessarily, the terms [redacted] preferred by the United States government.. [redacted] they were, he said in part, at least, the result of pressure by America's allies..."

Ambassador Yang ~~said~~ added that by giving in, his people and his government feel they are putting the complete fate of Korea, in the hands of the United States...

It would appear from this, that President Eisenhower's secret message to Synghman Rhee, ~~has~~ may have pledged [redacted] a firm American diplomatic effort, to secure [redacted] free elections throughout Korea, and the withdrawal of the Chinese Communist forces, AFTER a Korean truce is signed--but not before..

This unification effort would presumably take place at the [redacted] political [redacted] conference which would follow an armistice... as previously agreed upon at Panmunjom...

as yet Nobody knows who will be represented on this political conference, where it will take place, how the voting will be handled, and whether any nation will have veto power. Those vital questions to be decided By the United Nations, if and when a truce is signed...

So The test of America's support by its friends and allies, alike, can be expected to come in the future, over the conference table, rather than on the battlefield of Korea..

This is Larry LeSueur..I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news..(CUE) But first a word from Bob Dixon..

There were 77-hundred seats in Westminister Abbey for yesterday's Coronation. And it was a fortunate man or woman who could claim the right to sit in one of Those blue-upholstered oak chairs or stools. One would think that Now, the subject of seats would be at an end. But actually, it's only begun. The privleged few who crowded the abbey will have to start all over again: in two weeks...as tradition decrees...the chairs will be for sale— offered again...this time at auction...and to the highest bidder. And that's my footnote to the news!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good evening everyone, here's what happened today:

General Hoyt Vandenbergh, the retiring Air Force chief of staff, said that the Administration's five billion dollar-cut in the air force budget will increase the risks to our national security. The General said the Joint Chiefs of Staff made this view known to Defense Secretary Wilson last March. Later, Vandenbergh personally told the same thing to Air Force Secretary Talbott. General Vandenbergh told the Senate committee: contradictory orders and budget cuts of this Administration have caused "uncertainty and confusion." This, he said, has led to difficulties within the air force and with our allies. Vandenbergh says the Administration has offered "no sound military reason" for delaying the air force buildup. He says the Joint Chiefs of Staff (all to be replaced) feel that we should have a 143-wing air force by December of 1955 to meet the threat of a Soviet atomic attack. He feels the danger of such an attack has not lessened. By the middle of 1955 Vandenbergh expects Russia to have a stockpile of atomic weapons sufficient to "mount a devastating attack" on this country. The General says the Air Force did not approve the new "interim goal" of 120-air wings and personally he did not approve. Another committee witness was Air Force Secretary Talbott. He said the 5-billion dollar cutback in air force funds will not seriously delay the new combat equipment needed for 143 wings or more. He says the present "interim goal" of 120 wings may be raised within the next six months after the new chiefs of staff study our overall defense plans. And he told the committee the air force budget-cut was a budgetary rather than a military decision; he does not know "for sure" who finally made it.

Another view on what should be done about our air power comes from a committee of industrialists and scientists who have studied defense problems for six months. This group, headed by M.J. Kelley, president of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, says we must have a sharp increase in our air defense program. And we must speedily develop our atomic offensive capabilities. The group feels that there is no sure defense against an atomic attack on this country short of the elimination of war. It feels that the best defense is a good offense. And it wants the nation to develop a continental air defense system "much better" than the system now planned.

Tonight, in Korea, the Communists are expected to reply to the compromise truce proposals we gave them nine days ago. On the battlefields, South Korean troops failed to dislodge the enemy forces that cling to a narrow strip of our eastern front.

The Pentagon has added another 141 names to the Korean casualty list. This includes a correction in the records that has reduced Marine casualties by 56.

Tonight at 10 p.m. eastern time the President and four of his cabinet members will be heard over many of these stations. The talk will be heard a half hour earlier over the national television networks.

Today the President praised the European coal and steel community as "the first important step toward a United Europe". He nominated Amos J. Peaslee, a New Jersey lawyer, to be ambassador to Australia. Peaselee was Harold Stassen's campaign manager in 1948.

The Senate today voted 76 to nothing to approve the agreement Congressional leaders made with the President yesterday. They went on record against admitting Communist China to the United Nations.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio today called upon Administration leaders to approve a new version of a constitutional amendment to limit the President's treaty-making powers. The Senator told reporters: "If Administration leaders want to duck their responsibility, under the party platform, then we should know it."

Treasury Secretary Humphrey told the House Ways and Means Committee today that he has urged some business groups either to support the President's request for an extension of the excess profits tax or at least to remain neutral. Chairman

Reed warned the Secretary against "lobbying" for the President's request. Reed opposes the extension and favors a tax reduction.

In London today, Queen Elizabeth went on a tour of a Cockney working class district which was hard hit by the Nazi blitz. It was the first of four official tours she will make of the city.

And General Marshal, the head of the official American delegation to the Coronation, called on the American press to help strengthen British-American understanding". The General told American reporters in London: "Generous understanding between the people of my country and of the British Commonwealth is more important to the peace of the world than anything else." He said: "The press has a tremendous responsibility to the nation in these very critical days."

In Paris, Pierre Mendes-France told the French parliament that if he is confirmed as the new premier he'll go to the Bermuda conference with "a precise plan" to end the war in Indo-China. He said he'll also work for a meeting with Russia on world issues.

In Western Germany, the United States and Chancellor Adenauer's government have signed an agreement restoring a treaty of friendship, commerce and consular rights - an agreement that was broken by World War 2.

Italian Premier DeGasperi today warned his people that if his forces fail to win next Sunday's election, Italy might be faced with a civil war, which the Communists would probably win over the fascists.

General Greunther, who is to be the new commander of the North Atlantic Forces returned to this country today. He told reporters he's confident we can prevent another world war by building up allied strength.

At Sing Sing prison, convicted atomic spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg say they have been offered a deal by the government to save their lives if they make a confession of guilt. They say the offer was made to them yesterday by Federal Prison Director Bennett. They say they turned it down because they are innocent.

In Washington, Chairman Jenner of the Senate internal security committee, says he's asked the Justice Department to investigate the sworn testimony of Thad Mason; Mason recently told the committee that as a former Communist he helped steal for a Communist spy ring certain blueprints from a General Motors plant in Cleveland. Senator Jenner says "certain aspects" of Mason's televised testimony are "unsupported by fact."

In Miami, a federal grand jury has indicted six persons; five of whom are identified as members of the Ku Klux Klan. They are charged with lying under oath during an investigation of racial terrorism.

Perhaps it is not such a far cry from those Coronation ceremonies in London yesterday to what may be a decisive meeting at Panmunjom tonight. Britain yesterday demonstrated one of the characteristics that sets it apart from almost any other nation in the world today. Its almost complete unity; a unity that comes not from the top, as in Russia, where any divergences are stifled by fear, or masked by the iron curtain, but a unity of allegiance and enthusiasm for its Queen and its time-tried form of government, which is practically unparalleled throughout the world.

And if there is one thing on which victually all Britons agree, it is on their desire for Peace; or to put it another way, on a fervent desire to avoid the possibility of world war three.

Their great historian Arnold Toynbee, summed up this feeling most succinctly when he said: Britain's new motto might well be: "No annihilation without representation."

This fear, the possibility of annihilation, grows, of course, out of Britain's memories of the last war, out of the blitz, and particularly out of the year 1944, when rockets and pilotless aircraft first exploded on the British Isles; Britain's defenses against the buzz-bombs developed almost miraculously to a point where they were shooting down four out of five, but a certain percentage always got through, and when the Germans started lofting rockets at Britain, from as far away as Holland. Defense was impossible, except to capture the ground from which the Vee-Two's were launched. If half-a-dozen of those rockets had been equipped with atomic warheads, of course, Britain's ability to wrest the launching grounds away from its enemy, would have been considerably diminished, to say the least. For that green and pleasant land, with its concentrated industry and high density of population, represents the most vulnerable target in the world. Especially since the development of the two-step rocket which Britain's enemies might launch from so deep in the interior of Europe, that Britain might be knocked out before it could get started.

And so it would appear, that although Britain is not technically represente at those decisive meetings at Panmunjom tonight, the weight of British unity of opinion may yet be decisive. For that tight little island feels it has more to lose than either Russia, Communist China or the United States, in the event of world war three. Britain's unseen prescence at Panmunjom, may be the more decisive, because Britain's mind is completely made-up for though the United States and Russia may desire peace as much as Britain, both are wary of its impact on the balance of power in Asia and throughout the world.

Yesterday, the unhappy President of South Korea, Synghman Rhee, pulled in his horns, and said that "out of gratitude to the United States, common sense and wisdom, requires that we cooperate with the United States at any cost.

Today the Korean Ambassador to the United States, amplified without explaining, the diametrically-changed views of his President.

Said his government understood that the truce terms supported by the United States, were not necessarily the terms preferred by the United States government; they were, he said in part, at least the result of pressure by America's allies."

Ambassador Yang added that by giving in, his people and his government feel they are putting the complete fate of Korea in the hands of the United States.

It would appear from this, that President Eisenhower's secret message to Synghman Rhee, may have pledged a firm American diplomatic effort, to secure free elections throughout Korea, and the withdrawal of the Chinese Communist forces, after a Korean truce is signed, but not before.

This unification effort would presumably take place at the political conference which would follow an armistice, as previously agreed upon at Panmunjom. As yet nobody knows who will be represented on this political conference, where it will take place, how the voting will be handled, and whether any nation will have veto power. Those vital questions to be decided by the United Nations, if and when a truce is signed. So the test of America's support by its friends and allies, alike, can be expected to come in the future, over the conference table, rather than on the battlefields of Korea.

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news, but first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: There were 77-hundred seats in Westminister Abbey for yesterday's Coronation. And it was a fortunate man or women who could claim the right to sit in one of those blue-upholstered oak chairs or stools. One would think that now, the subject of seats would be at an end. But actually, it's only begun. The privileged few who crowded the abbey will have to start all over again: in two weeks, as tradition decrees, the chairs will be for sale; this time at auction, and to the highest bidder. And that's my footnote to the news.

Thursday, June 4, 1953

This is the news:

The White House is "very carefully studying" the latest Communist answer to our proposal for a truce in Korea. There has been no ALLIED STATEMENT of what the enemy's reaction has been. But reporters in Korea and in Washington have learned from both official and unofficial government sources that: we are "generally encouraged"...that the enemy's views are "extraordinarily close" to ours".. that the Communist HAVE "virtually accepted" our plan." We asked for a one day recess. [putting off the next meeting at Panmunjom until tomorrow night]. And despite the guarded optomism from Washington and Korea there are many officials, who have had experience with the Communists, who warn that the truce talks may still run into a snag.

In this country, Gordon Dean, the chairman of the atomic energy commission, announced today that our scientists have perfected an atomic furnace that can "breed" atomic fuel...that is, it can create at least as much NEW atomic material as is used up in making the material. Dean says this means "it is now possible for mankind ultimately to utilize all of the uranium that can be extracted from the earth for atomic fuel, whether the uranium is fissionable or not in its natural state." This development is described as probably the most revolutionary in atomic development since the bomb was perfected. Dean says this holds out the promise of making civilian atomic power industry more feasible and attractive, in the long range. It will need some changes in the atomic energy law to give private industry more latitude in seeking ways to use atomic energy for power. The atomic energy commission chairman also warns: this new development, by scientists at the ARKO, Idaho, plant... does not mean [redacted] that we suddenly have all the basic materials we need for atomic energy..or that we can regard uranium as a virtually costless fuel. But it does mean that we can now produce [redacted] at least as much fissionable material as is used up in making the material.

Out in Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission set off the 11th and last blast in its spring series of tests. This caused an explosion seen or felt 500 miles away..and it produced a churning ball of fire that lasted for 30 seconds.. twice as long as that produced by any previous test in this country. The new device is believed to have been two and a half times as powerful as the original bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

In Washington, the nation's two largest business organizations, the National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chaber of Commerce have decided to oppose the President's request for an extension of the excess profits tax. The President WANTS to extend this law from the end of June to the first of next year; because the government needs the 800-million dollars in revenue it would provide. The announcement by the N. A. M. and Chamber of Commerce came after House Speaker Martin said that it would be "very doubftful" that an individual ten per cent income tax cut could be put into effect next January first unless the excess profits tax was extended. Martin said the two taxes go along together.

Only last night in an address to the nation the President appealed for extention of the excess profits tax even though he called it unjust. Mr. Eisenhower also pledged that our goal in the world is "to secure peace.. and prosperity in peace." He said, in this connection, that we are not going to cripple this nation "and we are going specifically to keep up its air power."

Today, General Vandebergh, the retiring air force chief of staff, told a Congressional committee that if Congress accepts the Administration's new goal of 120-air wings, instead of 143 wings, we will have an air force second best to Russia's. And he said the 120-wing plan would mean a cut in our aid to the North Atlantic Treaty forces. General Vandenbergh also disagreed with Defense Secretary Wilson's recent testimony that the Soviet air force is chiefly defensive. (mostly fighter planes and interceptors.) The General said the Russian air force is both "offensive and defensive."

The Senate Judicary Committee today voted 8 to 4 to approve the Bricker resolution for a constitutional amendment limiting the President's treaty making powers.

Senator Taft told reporters he still believes a truce in Korea under the final allied terms is "unsatisfactory." And he regrets that it calls for an eventual large-scale political conference which, he says, "has not been successful in the past." The Senator says he did not use the words" go-it-alone" in the recent speech in which he said that if the armistice talks fail we should forget the United Nations as far as the Korean war is concerned. And he believes that "its silly" TO LET nations like India, which claims it is neutral in Korea, to influence the allied truce decisions.

Federal Judge Holtzoff today sentenced Herny W. Grunewald to a 1-thousand dollar fine and a suspended 90-day jail sentence. Grunewald had been convicted on a contempt of Congress charge during a tax scandals investigation. A week ago Judge Holtzoff said a fine was not enough to serve the ends of justice in this case.

In France, the National Assembly has turned down the bid of Pierre Mendes-France to be the 19th postwar premier of his country. He was defeated by nine votes.

And in Italy, Communist leader Togliatti promised THAT IF LEFT-WING [redacted] parties [redacted] win the Sunday election they will scuttle both the Atlantic pact and the European army plan.

E.R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1953

Republican Senator Wiley of Wisconsin appealed today to his colleagues to moderate their speech a little bit. The Senator, who is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, is of the opinion that too many congressmen talk too big as "over-night experts" on foreign policy and other vital issues. He said, "I believe that the congressmen who are not members of the foreign policy committees should have a stronger sense of caution, and restraint when they approach the difficult foreign policy field. He wanted them to consider "not only how their statements would be applauded back home but in terms of what the reaction would be throughout the chaotic world of 1953." Senator Wiley praised Senator Taft as the "loyal captain of the Eisenhower team" - said he didntt have any personal quarrel with the Senator from Ohio. If Taft is the "loyal captain" then all that is happening is that the captain is engaging in a basic argument with the manager about how the fateful game should be played - for the president and the Senator from Ohio are not in agreement.

Senator Wiley's appeal for restraint is not likely to produce any change in the outpourings from Washington, but it seems to this reporter that he talked great good sense even though it be futile. Having spent the last ten days in England with ample opportunity to consult with American colleagues from the Continent it is necessary to report that American policies are viewed with a combination of bewilderment and alarm. This is due only in part to the fact that our constitutional procedure remains a mystery to most Europeans, (including the professional politicians.) What is happening, I think, is that the European concept of this country as a place where change, personal freedom, ~~are~~ And experimentation are at home, is altering. Senators Taft and McCarthy have rather more widespread - stature and credibility in Europe than they have here. European apprehension is based only in part upon the fact that they face the prospect of less aid and no more trade. It is only in part the fear that through ~~a~~ arrogance and lack of experience we may land them in a war which, whatever the outcome, they could not survive. There is a real crisis of confidence - a deep and wide concern that we may abuse or fail to recognize the obligations that our power and leadership impose upon us. This feeling does not reflect a lack of appreciation for past American generosity, nor is it primarily based upon the fear that that generosity will shortly diminish. The ~~concern~~ worry ~~rather~~ stems Rather from concern about the direction in which we purpose to ~~ke~~ lead the free world. Every statement about going it alone — every hearing or accusation which destroys a man's livelihood and terrorizes his colleague's is regarded as a sign that we in this country have lost our balance, our responsibility and those qualities which have won for us the grudging respect of West Europeans. This is not the traditional anti-americanism based upon the belief that we are an un-cultured, mechanized, money-mad society. This present apprehension is based upon the knowledge that it is their lives, their institutions, their survival that our spokesmen are talking about. We are too strong, too rich, too fat to expect to be loved by those nations whose greatest glory and power are in their past. What is endangered now is not love, but respect and confidence. This may be regained not with dollars or by exhortation, but by example. Every reckless, intemperet statement; every act which indicates that the individual is terrorized or victimized by the state - every indication that an elected official views the prospect of another war with equinimity reduces our resevoir of good will and confidence in western Europe. Perhaps that is unimportant, but our military leaders, (with few exceptions) tell us that it is.

There was a great gathering of reporters in London last week - professionals with long experience. I would not presume to speak for all of them, but the majority with whom I talked would agree in some measure with what has been said here. It is difficult, if not impossible, to see ourselves as others see us. Often their picture of us is distorted, influenced by considerations of self-interest, and lack of knowledge. A reporters function is not to pretty up the picture, but to report it.

This "crisis of confidence" is created in part at least by the statements on foreign policy about which Senator Wiley complained today. It is unfortunate, but traditional that his words were addressed to men more accustomed to speak than to listen - more thoughtful of the next election than of the next generation. One of the first burdens imposed by power is, or at least, it should be, restraint.

There is a tendency at times to get involved in controversey for want of a few stubborn facts. And it was precisely this situation Josh Billings had in mind when he said:"It is better not to know so much than to know so many things that ain't so." Of course everyone likes to think of himself as an expert...which is probably what prompted Will Rogers to conclude:"Everybody is ignorant,only on different subjects."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The White House is "very carefully studying" the latest Communist answer to our proposal for a truce in Korea. There has been no allied statement of what the enemy's reaction has been. But reporters in Korea and in Washington have learned from both official and unofficial government sources that: we are "generally encouraged" - that the enemy's views are "extraordinarily close" to ours; that the Communists have "virtually accepted" our plan." We asked for a one-day recess putting off the next meeting at Panmunjom until tomorrow night. And despite the guarded optimism from Washington and Korea there are many officials, who have had experience with the Communists, who warn that the truce talks may still run into a snag.

In this country, Gordon Dean, the chairman of the atomic energy commission, announced today that our scientists have perfected an atomic furnace that can "breed" atomic fuel; that is, it can create at least as much new atomic material as is used up in making the material. Dean says this means "it is now possible for mankind ultimately to utilize all of the uranium that can be extracted from the earth for atomic fuel, whether the uranium is fissionable or not in its natural state." This development is described as probably the most revolutionary in atomic development since the bomb was perfected. Dean says this holds out the promise of making civilian atomic power industry more feasible and attractive, in the long range. It will need some changes in the atomic energy law to give private industry more latitude in seeking ways to use atomic energy for power. The atomic energy commission chairman also warns: this new development, by scientists at the Arko, Idaho, plant does not mean that we suddenly have all the basic materials we need for atomic energy or that we can regard uranium as a virtually costless fuel. But it does mean that we can now produce at least as much fissionable material as is used up in making the material.

Out in Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission set off the 11th and last blast in its spring series of tests. This caused an explosion seen or felt 500 miles away and it produced a churning ball of fire that lasted for 30 seconds; twice as long as that produced by any previous test in this country. The new device is believed to have been two and a half times as powerful as the original bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

In Washington, the nation's two largest business organizations, the National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chamber of Commerce have decided to oppose the President's request for an extension of the excess profits tax. The President wants to extend this law from the end of June to the first of next year; because the government needs the 800-million dollrs in revenue it would provide. The announcement by the NAM and Chamber of Commerce came after House Speaker Martin said that it would be "very doubtful" that an individual ten percent income tax cut could be put into effect next January first unless the excess profits tax was extended. Martin said the two taxes go along together.

Only last night in an address to the nation the President appealed for extension of the excess profits tax even though he called it unjust. Mr. Eisenhower also pledged that our goal in the world is "to secure peace and prosperity in peace." He said, in this connection, that we are not going to cripple this nation "and we are going specifically to keep up its air power."

Today, General Vandenbergh, the retiring air force chief of staff, told a Congressional committee that if Congress accepts the Administration's new goal of 120-air wings, instead of 143 wings, we will have an air force second best to Russia's. And he said the 120-wing plan would mean a cut in our aid to the North Atlantic Treaty forces. General Vandenbergh also disagreed with Defense Secretary Wilson's recent testimony that the Soviet air force is chiefly defensive (mostly fighter planes and interceptors.) The General said the Russian air force is both "offensive and defensive."

The Senate Judiciary Committee today voted 8 to 4 to approve the Bricker resolution for a constitutional amendment limiting the President's treaty making powers.

Senator Taft told reporters he still believes a truce in Korea under the final allied terms is "unsatisfactory." And he regrets that it calls for an eventual large-scale political conference which, he says, "has not been successful in the past. The Senator says he did not use the words "go it alone" in the recent speech in which he said that if the armistice talks fail we should forget the United Nations as far as the Korean war is concerned. And he believes that "its silly" to let nations like India, which claims it is neutral in Korea, to influence the allied truce decisions.

Federal Judge Holtzoff today sentenced Henry W. Grunewald to a 1-thousand dollar fine and a suspended 90-day jail sentence. Grunewald had been convicted on a contempt of Congress charge during a tax scandals investigation. A week ago Judge Holtzoff said a fine was not enough to serve the ends of justice in this case.

In France, the National Assembly has turned down the bid of Pierre Mendes-France to be the 19th postwar premier of his country. He was defeated by nine votes.

And in Italy, Communist Leader Togliatti promised that if left-wing parties win the Sunday election they will scuttle both the Atlantic pact and the European army plan.

Republican Senator Wiley of Wisconsin appealed today to his colleagues to moderate their speech a little bit. The Senator, who is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, is of the opinion that too many congressmen talk too big as "over-night experts" on foreign policy and other vital issues. He said, "I believe that the congressmen who are not members of the foreign policy committees should have a stronger sense of caution, and restraint when they approach the difficult foreign policy field. He wanted them to consider "not only how their statements would be applauded back home but in terms of what the reaction would be throughout the chaotic world of 1953." Senator Wiley praised Senator Taft as the "loyal captain of the Eisenhower team" - said he didn't have any personal quarrel with the Senator from Ohio. If Taft is the "loyal captain" then all that is happening is that the captain is engaging in a basic argument with the manager about how the fateful game should be played - for the president and the Senator from Ohio are not in agreement.

Senator Wiley's appeal for restraint is not likely to produce any change in the outpourings from Washington, but it seems to this reporter that he talked great good sense even though it be futile. Having spent the last ten days in England with ample opportunity to consult with American colleagues from the Continent it is necessary to report that American policies are viewed with a combination of bewilderment and alarm. This is due only in part to the fact that our constitutional procedure remains a mystery to most Europeans (including the professional policiticans. What is happening, I think, is that the European concept of this country as a place where change, personal freedom and experimentation are at home, is altering. Senators Taft and McCarthy have rather more widespread stature and credibility in Europe than they have here. European apprehension is based only in part upon the fact that they face the prospect of less aid and no more trade. It is only in part the fear that through arrogance and lack of experience we may land them in a war which, whatever the outcome, they could not survive. There is a real crisis of confidence - a deep and wide concern that we may abuse or fail to recognize the obligations that our power and leadership impose upon us. This feeling does not reflect a lack of appreciation for past American generosity, nor is it primarily based upon the fear that that generosity will shortly diminish. The worry stems rather from concern about the direction in which we purpose to lead the free world. Every statement about going it alone - every hearing or accusation which destroys a man's livelihood and terrorizes his colleagues is regarded as a sign that we in this country have lost our balance, our responsibility and those qualities which have won for us the grudging respect of West Europeans. This is not the traditional anti-Americanism based upon the belief that we are an un-cultured, mechanized,money-mad society. This present apprehension is based upon the knowledge that it is their lives, their institutions, their survival that our spokesmen are talking about. We are too strong, too rich, too fat to expect to be loved by those nations whose greatest glory and power are in their past. What is endangered now is not love, but respect and confidence. This may be regained not with dollars or by exhortation, but by example. Every reckless, intemperate statement; every act which indicates that the individual is terrorized or victimized by the state - every indication that an elected official views the prospect of another war with equinimity reduces our resevoir of good will and confidence in western Europe. Perhaps that is unimportant, but our military leaders, (with few exceptions) tell us that it is.

There was a great gathering of reporters in London last week - professionals with long experience. I would not presume to speak for all of them, but the majority with whom I talked would agree in some measure with what has been said here. It is difficult, if not impossible, to see ourselves as others see us. Often their picture of us is distorted, influenced by considerations of self-interest, and lack of knowledge. A reporters function is not to pretty up the picture, but to report it.

This "crisis of confidence" is created part at least by the statements on foreign policy about which Senator Wiley complained today. It is unfortunate, but traditional that his words were addressed to men more accustomed to speak than to listen - more thoughtful of the next election than of the next generations. One of the first burdens imposed by power is, or at least, it should be, restraint.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There is a a tendency at times to get involved in controversey for want of a few sutbborn facts. And it was precisely this situation Josh Billings had in mind when he said: "It is better not to know so much than to know so many things that ain't so." Of course everyone likes to think of himself as an expert, which is probably what prompted Will Rogers to conclude: "Everybody is ignorant, only on different subjects." - Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday June 5, 1953.

This is the news:

A high American authority in Tokyo says its likely that an agreement on exchanging prisoners of war, will be signed at Panmunjom tonight. /No official of our government, either in Tokyo, Korea or Washington, has made any public statement on the negotiations. /But officials, who do not want their names used, have made it very clear to reporters that they anticipate a final truce agreement in the near future. /One American "political leader" says there are only one or two "slight differences" between our proposal and the enemy's answer. /A "Top American official" in Japan, says it won't be possible to sign an armistice before next week. /But he thinks the prisoner exchange agreement will come tonight.. (although he warns that this does not mean American prisoners will be released quickly). /On the battlefields, where the South Koreans were trying stubbornly, and unsuccessfully, to win back positions they lost to the enemy, Communist loudspeakers were telling American troops: "Don't stick your heads out. There will be a truce in a few days." /And the South Koreans were offering conflicting statements on the truce proposal. President Rhee, after meeting with General Clark and Admiral Briggs, told reporters: he'll go along with the allied truce terms "because the United States is forcing us to." But in Washington tonight the South Korean embassy released a statement quoting Rhee as saying the truce proposal is unacceptable. And he threatens to continue the war unless his counter-proposal is acceptable. President Rhee wants: ALL United Nations and Communist troops to withdraw from Korea at the same time. Before this happens he wants a mutual defense pact from the United States. If this is not granted Rhee says: "Then we must continue to fight. We prefer to fight on to any devices, armistice or peace."

~~terms "because the United States is forcing us to".~~ He still feels these ~~terms mean "a death warrant" for Korea~~ because they do not ~~call for unifying~~ the country. ~~The acting foreign minister of the South Korean government is~~ more ~~an~~ outspoken: ~~he says the truce terms are dishonorable, personally, he's~~ disgusted with them.. ~~disappointed with the world leadership, and has lost confidence in the United Nations.~~ And at the front, American troops question~~d~~ about their feelings on the possibility of a truce expressed suspicion and skepticism.. they know that in the past a truce appeared close at hand.."only nothing happened."

Our Sabrejet pilots today shot down 8 Migs..probably destroyed another and damaged five.

On Formosa, Admiral Radford, who is to be the new ~~[illegible]~~ ~~[illegible]~~ chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told reporters he is impressed with "the evident political and military progress" being made on the island. He says the over-all potential of Formosa has increased considerably since his last visit in October.

In Washington, Senator Taft suggested today that we "disentangle" ourselves from the United Nations, and set-up a military alliance, minus the veto, with Britain , France and our ~~other~~ Pacific allies. He feels this would give us a freer hand in Far Eastern affairs..comparable to the North Atlantic treaty organization in western Europe. /Taft says the U.N. has proved "a complete failure" in preventing aggression because of the veto in the Security Council.

Undersecretary of the Treasury Folsom told a House committee today that even if there is a truce in Korea, it will make "no difference whatever" in the government's need for continued high taxes. /Some committee members suggested that a truce would make it possible to save five billion dollars..and have a great effect on balancing the budget. /But Folsom said the President has already indicated there will be no let-up in defense spending in the event of a Korean truce.

For a third day, General Vandenbergh, the retiring air force chief, told a Senate committee why he opposes the Administration's five billion dollar cut in the air force budget. /He said this cutback will reduce our Strategic Air Command. (the big bombers). below the limits of an acceptable calculated risk. /He introduced a cable from General Le May, the strategic air commander, saying the reduction would be "an extension of the calculated risk to a point where it is no longer acceptable to the security of the United States and its allies." /The General agreed with Senator Margaret Chase Smith's "impression" that the Joint Chiefs were ignored, and had no voice in formulating the new budget.

The State Department announced today that since A. P. Correspondent Bill Oatis was freed from a Czechoslvakian prison, we have lifted three restrictions we imposed on dealings with the Czechs. They may now export goods to this country.. we can ship them non-strategic materials.. and Americans are now permitted to travel in Czechoslovakia.

A. F. of L. President Meany charged today that the President is failing to carry out his pledge to amend the Taft-Hartley law. Meany said: "The working people of this country have the right to expect action on this issue this year from the President and the Congress."

Senator McCarthy said today that Frank Coe, former secretary of the International Monetary Fund, is an "extremely dangerous individual" and should not be allowed to travel outside of the country. Coe called this "persecution.." said he is a good American, and is not an espionage agent. But he refused to tell the committee whether he was ever a spy or a Communist.

Here in New York, another court turned down an appeal for a stay of execution for Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies. And William Perl, a jet propulsion expert, was sentenced to five years in prison for lying in the Rosenberg case; he denied he knew them.

Three American B-47 Strato-jets flew from the United States to Great Britain today in less than five hours and 38 minutes -- THE OLD RECORD. They all beat it by a minute or two.

In London today, General George C. Marshal told a luncheon of the English Speaking Union that British leaders must help their people understand America's aims and problems in Korea. We've recorded for you a portion of what General Marshal had to say...the introduction was traditional...

(runs:

end cue: " for the peace we all long and pray for")

That was a portion of what General of the army George C. Marshal told the English Speaking Union in London today.

General Marshall, in his talk before the English Speaking Union, noted that the hope of the free world rests in better understanding between Britain and this country. Woodrow Wilson once remarked:"Comprehension must be the soil in which grow all the fruits of friendship." For as Goethe put it almost a hundred years earlier:"What we do not understand, we do not possess."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, June 5, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: .... In London today General George C. Marshall told a luncheon of the English-Speaking Union that British leaders must help their people to understand America's aims and problems in Korea. We've recorded for you a portion of what General Marshall had to say. The introduction was traditional.

BRRAKER: (sound of gavel) Milord Chairman, Your Excellencies, Your Graces, Milord Mayor, milords, ladies and gentlemen, pray silence for General of the Army George C. Marshall. (applause)

MARSHALL: On a Sunday morning, fifty years ago, Mrs. Marshall and I set out from our pension near Queen's Gate to attend ~~the~~ a special service at the Abbey to be conducted by a prominent divine. It was a lovely fall morning. And while waiting for the proper bus, one came along labeled "Hampton Court". (laughter) We took that bus and abandoned our plan for the Abbey. (laughter) What happened that day left a very pleasant recollection. We'd already seen Hampton Court, so we hired a punt - and I gained my first experience in punting. (laughter) I did pretty well but did collide with another punt, which was much more skillfully managed by a Britisher. He and his girl were out for a Sunday outing. Instead of recriminations, which might well have been the case, we joined forces and spent the day together, had lunch and tea together and, in effect, paved the way for my future relations with the British Chief of Staff. (laughter) (applause)

I would like to return again to the matter of British-American relations. During the World War days I made frequent appeals for a better, more generous understanding between our two countries. As I've already stated, I constantly endeavored to make clear to the American public the severe trials your nation was enduring with silent, spartan courage, the heavy losses of life both in soldiers and civilians.

You suffered the destruction of much of Britain, then in progress and always threatening. Today the situation is somewhat reversed. The American forces in Korea, as your Prime Minister has pointed out in Parliament, are suffering the greatest losses, except for the South Koreans, of any United Nations force, and our nation is called upon to make by far the heaviest expenditures. I feel that your public only partially realizes this, and for some reason -- probably a result of clever Soviet propaganda, subtle suggestion -- to believe that America is in a war-like mood, fraught with the possibility of bringing about a general conflagration.

I know nothing could be further from the desire of the American people and their leaders. Our public is intent ... is intent on seeing that nothing be permitted to lend aid to the Communist Chinese forces in maintaining their fight against us. Allegations are common that we, meaning my Government, do not pay sufficient attention to the advice of our partners on international questions. In my personal experience as Secretary of State in periods such as the Berlin blockade and, later, as Secretary of Defense during the Korean struggle, I think a maximum of attention was paid to the views of our associates, particularly those of the British Government. It is important, I think, that we constantly remind ourselves that we represent a free association of nations, opposed by a group organized into a bloc and held together by a tyranny of force. Our respective publics and our leaders must constantly keep in mind that almost all our reactions are treated in an open, democratic manner. On the other hand, all is concealed by our opponents and we are left merely to guess or to suspect as to their motives or intentions.

I have somewhat overworked the word "generous" - but I must use it again because ... to express my strong personal conviction that a generous understanding between the American people and the people of the British Commonwealth is a most important influence in the world today for the peace we all long and pray for.

MURROW: That was a portion of what General of the Army George C. Marshall told the English-Speaking Union in London today.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 5, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A high American authority in Tokyo says it's likely that an agreement on exchanging prisoners of war will be signed at Panmunjom tonight. No official of our government, either in Tokyo, Korea or Washington, has made any public statement on the negotiations. But officials, who do not want their names used have made it very clear to reporters that they anticipate a final truce agreement in the near future. One American "political leader" says there are only one or two "slight differences" between our proposal and the enemy's answer. A "Top American Official" in Japan says it won't be possible to sign an armistice before next week. But he thinks the prisoner exchange agreement will come tonight (although he warns that this does not mean American prisoners will be released quickly.) On the battlefields, where the South Koreans were trying stubbornly and unsuccessfully to win back positions they lost to the enemy, Communist loudspeakers were telling American troops: "Don't stick your heads out. There will be a truce in a few days." And the South Koreans were offering conflicting statements on the truce proposal. President Rhee, after meeting with General Clark and Admiral Briggs, told reporters: he'll go along with the allied truce terms "because the United States is forcing us to." But in Washington tonight the South Korean embassy released a statement quoting Rhee as saying the truce proposal is unacceptable. And he threatens to continue the war unless his counter-proposal is acceptable. President Rhee wants: All United Nations and Communist troops to withdraw from Korea at the same time. Before this happens he wants a mutual defense pact from the United States. If this is not granted Rhee says: "Then we must continue to fight. We prefer to fight on to any devices, armistice or peace." And at the front, American troops questioned about their feelings on the possibility of a truce expressed suspicion and skepticism; they know that in the past a truce appeared close at hand "only noghing happened."

Our Sabrejet pilots today shot down 8 Migs probably destroyed another and damaged five.

On Formosa, Admiral Radford, who is to be the new chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told reporters he is impressed with "the evident political and military progress" being made on the island. He says the over-all potential of Formosa has increased considerably since his last visit in October.

In Washington Senator Taft suggested today that we "disentangle" ourselves from the United Nations and set up a military alliance, minus the veto, with Britain, France and our Pacific allies. He feels this would give us a freer hand in Far Eastern affairs - comparable to the North Atlantic treaty organization in Western Europe. Taft says the U.N. has proved "a complete failure" in preventing aggression because of the veto in the Security Council.

Undersecretary of the Treasury Folsom told a House committee today that even if there is a truce in Korea, it will make "no difference whatever" in the government's need for continued high taxes. Some committee members suggested that a truce would make it possible to save five billion dollars - and have a great effect on balancing the budget. But Folsom said the President has already indicated there will be no let-up in defense spending in the event of a Korean truce.

For a third day, General Vandenbergh, the retiring air force chief, told a Senate committee why he opposed the Administration's five billion dollar cut in the air force budget. He said this cutback will reduce our Strategic Air Command (the big bombers) below the limits of an acceptable calculated risk. He introduced a cable from General LeMay, the strategic air commander, saying the reduction would be "an extension of the calculated risk to a point where it is no longer acceptable to the security of the United States and its allies." The General agreed with Senator Margaret Chase Smith's "impression" that the Joint Chiefs were ignored, and had no voice in formulating the new budget.

The State Department announced today that since A.P. Correspondent Bill Oatis was freed from a Czechoslovakian prison, we have lifted three restrictions we imposed on dealings with the Czechs. They may now export goods to this country, we can ship them non-strategic materials and Americans are now permitted to travel in Czechoslovakia.

AFL President Meany charged today that the President is failing to carry out his pledge to amend the Taft-Hartley law. Meany said: "The working people of this country have the right to expect action on this issue this year from the President and the Congress."

Senator McCarthy said today that Frank Coe, former secretary of the International Monetary Fund, is an "extremely dangerous individual" and should not be allowed to travel outside of the country. Coe called this "persecution" said he is a good American, and is not an espionage agent. But he refused to tell the committee whether he was ever a spy or a Communist.

Here in New York, another court turned down an appeal for a stay of execution for Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the convicted atomic spies. And William Perl, a jet propulsion expert, was sentenced to five years in prison for lying in the Rosenberg case; he denied he knew them.

Three American B-47 Strato-jets flew from the United States to Great Britain today in less than five hours and 38 minutes, the old record. They all beat it by a minute or two.

In London today, General George C. Marshal told a luncheon of the English Speaking Union that British leaders must help their people understand America's aims and problems in Korea. We've recorded for you a portion of what General Marshal had to say: the introduction was traditional:

SPEAKER: Milord Chairman, Your Excellencies, Your Graces, Milord Mayor, milords, ladies and gentlemen, pray silence for General of the Army George C. Marshall.

MARSHALL: On a Sunday morning, fifty years ago, Mrs. Marshall and I set out from our pension near Queen's Gate to attend a special service at the Abbey to be conducted by a prominent divine. It was a lovely fall morning. And while waiting for the proper bus, one came along labeled "Hampton Court." We took that bus and abandoned our plan for the Abbey. What happened that day left a very pleasant recollection. We'd already seen Hampton Court, so we hired a punt - and I gained my first experience in punting. I did pretty well, but did collide with another punt, which was much more skillfully managed by a Britisher. He and his girl were out for a Sunday outing. Instead of recriminations, which might well have been the case, we joined forces and spent the day together, had lunch and tea together and, in effect, paved the way for my future relations with the British Chief of Staff.

I would like to return again to the matter of British-American relations. During the World War days I made frequent appeals for a better, more generous understanding between our two countries. As I've already stated, I constantly endeavored to make clear to the American public the severe trials your nation was enduring with silent, spartan courage, the heavy losses of life both in soldiers and civilians. You suffered the destruction of much of Britain, then in progress and always threatening. Today the situation is somewhat reversed. The American forces in Korea, as your Prime Minister has pointed out in Parliament, are suffering the greatest losses, except for the South Koreans, of any United Nations force, and our nation is called upon to make by far the heaviest expenditures. I feel that your public only partially realizes this, and for some reason - probably a result of clever Soviet propaganda, subtle suggestion - to believe that America is in a war-like mood, fraught with the possibility of bringing about a general conflagration.

I know nothing could be further from the desire of the American people and their leaders. Our public is intent, on seeing that nothing be permitted to lend aid to the Communist Chinese forces in maintaining their fight against us. Allegations are common that we, meaning my Government, od not pay sufficient attention to the advice of our partners on international questions. In my personal experience as Secretary of State in periods such as the Berlin blockade and, later, as Secretary of Defense during the Korean struggle, I think a maximum of attention was paid to the views of our associates, particularly those of the British Government.

It is important, I think, that we constantly remind ourselves that we represent a free association of nations, opposed by a group organized into a bloc and held together by a tyranny of force. Our respective publics and our leaders must constantly keep in mind that almost all our reactions are treated in an open, democratic manner. On the other hand, all is concealed by our opponents and we are left merely to guess or to suspect as to their motives or intentions.

I have somewhat overworked the word "generous" - but I must use it again because - to express my strong personal conviction that a generous understanding between the American people and the people of the British Commonwealth is a most important influence in the world today for the peace we all long and pray for.

MURROW: That was a portion of what General of the Army George C. Marshall told the English-Speaking Union in London today.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General Marshall, in his talk before the English peaking Union, noted that the hope of the free world rests in better understanding between Britain and this country. Woodrow Wilson once remarked: "Comprehension must be the soil in which grow all the fruits of friendship." For as Goethe put it almost a hundred years earlier: "What we do not understand, we do not possess."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, June 8, 1953

This is the news:

Truce negotiators meet at Panmujom again tonight, to start working on the final details for an armistice. The delegates have now reached an agreement on exchanging prisoners of war, (a subject that held up the progress of negotiations for 17 months). Now, we're told, there are "administrative details" to be worked out. And there must be a new agreement on the buffer zone which will seperate both sides after the armistice is signed. The Chinese Communist radio says it anticipates "a complete cease-fire and armistice, without delay". Allied officials say this may take a week or so. The agreement on prisoners is this: Within 60 days after an armistice is signed, both sides will free all those prisoners who want to go home. That means we will release 75-thousand men, and the Communists will release 12-thousand allied prisoners. Of these, 32-hundred are Americans... 71-hundred are South Koreans, and the others are men from the allied nations who have fought with us. When these men are set free, we will turn attention to the 46-thousand North Koreans and Chinese Communists, who prefer not to go home. These men will be placed under a five-man neutral commission. India will be head of the delegation; only her soldiers will be available to the commission. And it may take 5-thousand of them. The other commission members will be Sweden, Switzerland, Poland and Czechoslovakia. #

Within 60 days after the armistice those men who don't want to go home will be turned over to the neutral commission. During the next 90 days the Communsists will have an opportunity to visit them, and try to talk them into changing their minds. We will permit seven Communist visitors to the prison camp for each one thousand prisoners. That comes to 322 men. Every time a Communist representative talks to a prisoner who doesn't want to go home, a member of each of the neutral NATIONS, and a member of the United Nations command, will be present. Both sides agree "that no force or threat of force shall be used" against any prisoner. When the Communists have had 90-days to CHANGE MINDS the prisoners who want to go home will be allowed to go. Those who want to stay away from China and North Korea will remain in South Korea. Then a political conference will be held..with all nations fighting in Korea having a representative at it. This conference will have 30 days to decide what to do with the prisoners. At the end of that period, the former enemy troops who refuse to go home will either be set free in South Korea as civilians or be given an opportunity to go to some neutral nation. (We dropped our plan to have the United Nations General Assembly make the final determination.)

That's the agreement on exchanging prisoners..reached after 17 months of debate.

And its on the basis of this that allied officials are optimistic about concluding an armistice agreement.

The big hitch in Korea today is the South Korean government of Syngman Rhee. He has called on his people "to risk our lives and fight on to a decisive end" in the event a truce agreement is reached. He wants his people to refrain from "resorting to unfriendly expressions and discontent" with his allies. But he says he's aware of the strong possibility of spontaneous demonstrations against the United Nations. Rhee has reminded his people that allied troops came to their aid "when we needed them most."

The South Korean cabinet and a National Assembly committee have both resolved to continue fighting (the ROK troops now hold two thirds of the battleline). And in Washington the South Korean ambassador said this afternoon that "up to this minute" ROK troops are determined to fight on alone if necessary. Ten ROK generals studing in this country have been called home. Some 380 others, studying at various army posts in this country, are awaiting a similar call.

But in Tokyo and Washington there are reports that President Rhee may yet change his mind. If so this will become known when he answers the latest message he has received from President Eisenhower. Mr. Eisenhower told Rhee: he must avoid any "reckless adventure" to unify Korea by force. We promise not to give up our efforts to reunite all Koreans by peaceful means. The President promises that after an armistice we will negotiate a mutual defense treaty with the Rhee government. (similar to those we have with other Pacific allies.) The President says that with the approval of Congress, we will give the South Koreans economic and military aid. And we now feel that acceptance of the truce terms is "required" by the United Nations and the South Koreans.

~~All of these developments brought from American troops in Korea one question: "When do we go home?" And the answer from Eisenhower officers in Korea: [illegible] United Nations~~

The President's attitude was applauded by most Congressmen. And Senator Knowland of California, who recently described the truce terms as "unsatisfactory", today called on Rhee to face the facts as they are.. and accept the terms. The Republican leader says: "any act imperiling the agreemen would be determeintal to the South Koreans and endanger the security of United Nations forces in Korea.

For American troops in Korea and Japan all of this produced one question: "When do we go home.?" And the answer from allied officers in Tokyo and officials in Washington is: Not very soon..there is still much work to be done.

Undersecretary of State Smith says: "We cannot relax. Korea is but one flank of a conflict which girdles the world. Danger spots are many. We must remain alert and ready." And in Viet Nam, and Singapore and Formosa there is the fear that a truce in Korea may free the Chinese Communists for new attacks to the south. India's Prime Minister Nehru has PRAISED the President and the Chinese Communists FOR working out the prisoner plan.

Today, while the Chinese communist radio was predicting a quick truce agreement, nine enemy planes, all single engine, attacked Seoul at night. It was the biggest Communist attack on South Korea's capital city since the war started. Two persons were killed..eight injured. And one of the bombs FELL near Syngman Rhee's home. The enemy planes came in low dropped their few bombs and managed to get away from our anti-aircraft Fire barrages.

American Ambassador Lodge said tonight that United Nations membership for Communist China is "just out of the question." He suggested that we might even use our Security Council veto, for the first time, to keep the Communists out. And in London, the British Commonwealth Prime Ministers have agreed that once there is peace in Korea they would favor admitting Red China to the U.N... but without embrassing the United States.

Defense Secretary Wilson told Senators today: "We're going to have to think straight about this Korean business. We're living in an age of peril. We must not make the mistake we made the last time".. a reference to the demobilization pace after World War Two. Wilson disagreed with General Vandenbergh, the retiring air force chief of staff, who said recently that a five billion dollar budget cut would make our air force the "second best" in the world. Wilson said: "I can assure you emphatically that are going to continue to have the best air force in the world." [redacted] to [redacted] budget [redacted] r his budget [redacted] the [redacted] And

[redacted]

The Supreme Court today upheld a Washington,D.C., law of 81 years ago that provides that all well-behaved persons must be served in Washington eating places.. regardless of color. The Court took no action on the controversial matter of racial segregation in the public schools. It asked attorneys for four states and Washington,D.C. to reargue their cases, and answer specific questions, in the fall. The question before the court is whether it should re-affirm or over-rule a 57-year-old decision that approves of "separate but equal" facilities for school children.

The court also held that the federal government is not liable for some 200-million dollars in damages claimed as a result of the 1947 Texas City disaster in which more than 500 persons were killed.

Secretary Hobby of the Health, [redacted] Education and Welfare Department, said today that some economists estimate the cost of discrimination in this country at 15 to 30 billion dollars a year.

Two Austrian-born former soldiers, who became members of a spy ring in Austria, today were sentenced to serve from 40 months to 15 years in prison. The soldiers are: Otto Verber and Kurt Ponger.

The President tonight held a private dinner party at the White House: the guests included former President Hoover, General MacArthur, Francis Cardinal Spellman, cabinet members and Senators concerned with Far Eastern affairs. Presidential Secretary Hagerty says there was no special reason for the gathering.

In Austria today, the Russians promised that beginning tomorrow they will end all of their controls on the movement of persons and goods across Soviet zone frontiers. Its not yet clear wther this means allied personnel will be permitted to enter the Soviet zone.

Italy has now completed a two-day national election. And a few minutes ago my colleague in Rome..Ned Calmer..recorded this report for you.

(runs 2 mins ending:

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York)

With the votes still being counted in Italy, Premier De Gasperi tonight praised the Italian people for their big tunrout at the polls..more than 90 per cent of the eligible voters. He said:"I am proud of the exemplary proof of civil life that we have given to the world."

~~We were discussing the framing of prisoners of war, and this reminds me~~ of ~~something~~ Wendell Willkie once said:"Freedom is an indivisible word. If we want to enjoy it and fight for it, we must be prepared to extend it to everyone, whether they are rich or poor, whether they agree with us or not, no matter what their race or the color of their skin. For if we take away the liberties of those we hate, we are opening the way to the loss of liberty for those we love."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, June 8, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Italy has now completed a two-day national election, and a few minutes ago, my colleague in Rome, Ned Calmer, recorded this report foryou.

CALMER: Well, it looks as though the Italian people have realized the threat to democracy in this country. They appear to have given Premier De Gasperi the big turnoutthat he asked for; over ninety per cent of the electorate have cast ballots and the total may even exceed the record set back in 1938 when communism in Italy was stopped at the flood tide. It should be remembered, however, that (unintelligible) at this stage sometimes tend to be over-optimistic. Despite the bad weather, which continued today, somewhere between seven and eight million persons got themselves to the polls this morning during the last three hours of the voting period. There were also the last-minute appeal by De Gasperi, a final barrage of government propaganda by radio and in the press, and an avalanche of telephone calls by government party workers to voters who had failed to turn up. Government-influenced newspapers this morning deliberately held down the figure of yesterday's vote so as to shock the stay-at-homes out of their complacency. Comparatively ~~xxxxxx~~ few returns are in so far. But the results released up to now show that as expected the Red wing is doing well and the neo-Fascists even better. In Rome alone the Fascist vote for the Senate has surpassed that for all the center coalition parties combined; that's as of now. Figures for the chamber of deputies won't give us much indication until tomorrow. But within a few hours the Senate vote, now rolling in, should give us a trend. There areinconclusive signs, at present, that communism and its allies, the left-wing Socialists, may have suffered a setback. They had been expected to just about hold their own but ...? far too early to be sure. What can be considered definite at this hour, Ed, is the remarkably large turnout of voters and the lack of violence everywhere, which may show the awakening of a new civic conscience and a new political maturity in Italy. And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: With the votes stillbeing counted in Italy, Premier De Gasperi tonight praised the Italian people for their big turnout at the polls. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 8, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Truce negotiators meet at Panmunjom again tonight to start working on the final details for an armistice. The delegates have now reached an agreement on exchanging prisoners of war (a subject that held up the progress of negotiations for 17 months.) Now, we're told, there are "administrative details" to be worked out. And there must be a new agreement on the buffer zone which will separate both sides after the armistice is signed. The Chinese Communist radio says it anticipates "a complete cease-fire and armistice without delay." Allied officials say this may take a week or so. The agreement on prisoners is this: within 60 days after an armistice is signed both sides will free all those prisoners who want to go home. That means we will release 75-thousand men and the Communists will release 12-thousand allied prisoners. Of these, 32-hundred are Americans 71-hundred are South Koreans, and the others are men from the allied nations who have fought with us. When these men are set free we will turn attention to the 46-thousand North Koreans and Chinese Communists who prefer not to go home. These men will be placed under a five-man neutral commission. India will be head of the delegation; only her soldiers will be available to the commission. And it may take 5-thousand of them. The other commission members will be Sweden, Switzerland, Poland and Czechoslovakia. Within 60 days after the armistice those men who don't want to go home will be turned over to the neutral commission. During the next 90 days the Communists will have an opportunity to visit them and try to talk them into changing their minds. We will permit seven Communist visitors to the prison camps for each one thousand prisoners. That comes to 322 men. Every time a Communist representative talks to a prisoner who doesn't want to go home, a member of each of the neutral nations and a member of the United Nations command, will be present. Both sides agree "that no force or threat of force shall be used" against any prisoner. When the Communists have had 90 days to change their minds the prisoners who want to go home will be allowed to go. Those who want to stay away from China and North Korea will remain in South Korea. Then a political conference will be held with all nations fighting in Korea having a representative at it. This conference will have 30 days to decide what to do with the prisoners. At the end of that period, the former enemy troops who refuse to go home will either be set free in South Korea as civilians or be given an opportunity to go to some neutral nation. We dropped our plan to have the United Nations General Assembly make the final determination. That's the agreement on exchanging prisoners reached after 17 months of debate. And its on the basis of this that allied officials are optimistic about concluding an armistice agreement.

The big hitch in Korea today is the South Korean government of Syngman Rhee. He has called on his people "to risk our lives and fight on to a decisive end" in the event a truce agreement is reached. He wants his people to refrain from "resorting to unfriendly expressions and discontent" with his allies. But he says he's aware of the strong possibility of spontaneous demonstrations against the United Nations. Rhee has reminded his poeple that allied troops came to their aid "when we needed them most."

The South Korean cabinet and a National Assembly committee have both resolved to continue fighting (the ROK troops now hold two thirds of the battle-line) and in Washington the South Korean ambassador said this afternoon that "up to this minute" ROK troops are determined to fight on alone if necessary. Ten ROK generals studying in this country have been called home. Some 380 others, studying at various army posts in this country, are awaiting a similar call. But in Tokyo and Washington there are reports that President Rhee may yet change his mind. If so this will become known when he answers the latest message he has received from President Eisenhower. Mr. Eisenhower told Rhee: he must avoid any "reckless adventure" to unify Korea by force. We promise not to give up our efforts to reunite all Koreans by peaceful means. The President promises that after an armistice we will negotiate a mutual defense treaty with the Rhee government (similar to those we have with other Pacific allies.) The President says that with the approval of Congress, we will give the South Koreans economic and military aid. And we now feel that acceptance of the truce terms is "required" by the United Nations and the South Koreans.

The President's attitude was applauded by most Congressmen. And Senator Knowland of California, who recently described the truce terms as "unsatisfactory" today called on Rhee to face the facts as they are and accept the terms. The Republican leader says: "any act imperiling the agreement would be detrimental to the South Koreans and endanger the security of United Nations forces in Korea.

For American troops in Korea and Japan all of this produced one question: "When do we go home?" And the answer from allied officers in Tokyo and officials in Washington is: Not very soon; there is still much work to be done.

Undersecretary of State Smith says: "We cannot relax. Korea is but one flank of a conflict which girdles the world. Danger spots are many. We must remain alert and ready." And in Viet Nam, and Singapore and Formosa there is the fear that a truce in Korea may free the Chinese Communists for new attacks to the south. India's Prime Minister Nehru has praised the President and the Chinese Communists for working out the prisoner plan.

Today, while the Chinese Communist radio was predicting a quick truce agreement, nine enemy planes, all single engine, attacked Seoul at night. It was the biggest Communist attack on South Korea's capital city since the war started. Two persons were killed, eight injured. And one of the bombs fell near Syngman Rhee's home. The enemy planes came in low dropped their few bombs and managed to get away from our anti-aircraft fire.

American Ambassador Lodge said tonight that United Nations membership for Communist China is "just out of the question." He suggested that we might even use our Security Council veto, for the first time, to keep the Communists out. And in London, the British Commonwealth Prime Ministers have agreed that once there is peace in Korea they would favor admitting Red China to the U.N., but without embarrassing the United States.

Defense Secretary Wilson told Senators today: "We're going to have to think straight about this Korean business. We're living in an age of peril. We must not make the mistake we made the last time" a reference to the demobilization pace after World War Two. Wilson disagreed with General Vandenbergh, the retiring air force chief of staff, who said recently that a five billion dollar budget cut would make our air force the "second best" in the world. Wilson said: "I can assure you emphatically that we are going to continue to have the best air force in the world."

The Supreme Court today upheld a Washington, D.C. law of 81 years ago that provides that all well-behaved persons must be served in Washington eating places, regardless of color. The Court took no action on the controversial matter of racial segregation in the public schools. It asked attorneys for four states and Washington, D.C. to reargue their cases, and answer specific questions, in the fall. The question before the court is whether it should re-affirm or over-rule a 57 year old decision that approves of "separate but equal" facilities for school children.

The court also held that the federal government is not liable for some 200-million dollars in damages claimed as a result of the 1947 Texas City disaster in which more than 500 persons were killed.

Secretary Hobby of the Health, Edication and Welfare Department, said today that some economists estimate the cost of discrimination in this country at 15 to 30 billion dollars a year.

Two Austrian-born former soldiers, who became members of a spy ring in Austria, today were sentenced to serve from 40 months to 15 years in prison. The soldiers are: Otoo Verber and Kurt Ponger.

The President tonight held a private dinner party at the White House: the guests included former President Hoover, General MacArthur, Francis Cardinal Spellman, cabinet members and Senators concerned with Far Eastern affairs. Presidential Secretary Hagerty says there was no special reason for the gathering.

Italy has now completed a two-day national election. And a few minutes ago my colleague in Rome, Ned Calmer, recorded this report for you.

CALMER: Well, it looks as though the Italian people have realized the threat to democracy in this country. They appear to have given Premier De Gasperi the big turnout that he asked for; over ninety percent of the electorate have cast ballots and the total may even exceed the record set back in 1938 when communism in Italy was stopped at the flood tide. It should be remembered, however, that (unintelligible at this stage sometimes tend to be over-optimistic. Despite the bad weather, which continued today, somewhere between seven and eight million persons got themselves to the polls this morning during the last three hours of the voting period. There were also the last-minute appeal by De Gasperi, a final barrage of government propaganda by radio and in the press, and an avalanche of telephone calls by government party workers to voters who had failed to turn up. Government-influenced newspapers this morning deliberately held down the figure of yesterday's vote so as to shock the stay-at-homes out of their complacency. Comparatively few returns are in so far. But the results released up to now show that as expected the Red wing is doing well and the neo-fascists even better. In Rome alone the Fascist vote for the Senate has surpassed that for all the center coalition parties combined; that's as of now. Figures for the chamber of deputies won't give us much indication until tomorrow. But within a few hours the Senate vote, now rolling in, should give us a trend. There are inconclusive signs, at present, that communism and its allies, the left-wing Socialists, may have suffered a setback. They had been expected to just about hold their own, but it is far too early to be sure. What can be considered definite at this hour, Ed, is the remarkable large turnout of voters and the lack of violence everywhere, which may show the awakening of a new civic conscience and a new politica maturity in Italy. And now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: With the votes still being counted in Italy, Premier De Gasperi tonight praised the Italian people for their big turnout at the polls. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Wendell Wilkie once said: "Freedom is an indivisible word. If we want to enjoy it and fight for it, we must be prepared to extend it to everyone, whether they are rich or poor, whether they agree with us or not, no matter what their race or the color of their skin. For if we take away the liberties of those we hate, we are opening the way to the loss of liberty for those we love."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday June 9, 1953

This is the news:

The Swiss government has decided not to serve on a truce commission in Korea unless the South Korean government accepts the truce terms. The decision was made by the Swiss cabinet. Four other countries--India, Sweden and Communist Poland and Czechoslovakia --have been named to the commission by the truce delegates at Panmunjom. Those delegates meet again tonight. And all day in South Korea the people and the government made it clear thay are against the proposed truce terms. In Seoul and Pusan thousands of persons demonstrated against the truce plan. An estimated 100-thousand marched on 8th army headquarters in Seoul, ran into South Korean and American military police and were finally turned back by water hoses. The nation's National Assmbly voted unanimously to reject the armistice terms. And the assembly called for "all necessary measures" at the front to prevent another Communist aggression and to be prepared for "a northward advance." The South Korean foreign minister says his troops will fight the Indian troops who are scheduled to supervise the armistice. Thus far President Syngman Rhee has not replied to President Eisenhower's message. And today the Chinese Communist radio.. which has had little to say during the final stages of the truce negotiations--attacked the Eisenhower offer of a mutual security pact with South Korea. Radio Peiping calls this an "open plot" aimed at sabotaging the political conference that is to follow the armistice.

In London, Prime Minister Churchill criticized Syngman Rhee's "attitude" and predicted an early armistice.

And Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate committee today that it will be at least six months after an armistice is signed before American soldiers start coming home. He said: "People will be a little disappointed that we can't bring the boys back here. But the situation in Korea is pretty disturbing." The Secretary wants to continue to build up ammunition supplies there even after an armistice.

In another day of testimony on the air force budget, Mr. Wilson criticized the former administration and challenged the opinions of the outgoing Joint Chiefs of staff. He said: The Truman administration ABANDONED the 143-wing goal for the air force but was not honest enough to tell the people about it. He said former Defense Secretary Lovett failed to trim the military budget because he was sick and didn't want to battle old friends on the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He challenged the Joint Chief's estimate that Russia would be capable of launching an atomic attack by the middle of 1954. Wilson said:"There is no reason to think they would have atomic bombs in quite that volume." And he also told the Senators: "There are people in the Pentagon who haven't been working for a long time and will have a hard time getting used to it."

General Ridgeway, the commander of the North Atlantic Treaty forces, who is to be the new army chief of staff, said today that "air power is still the weakest link in our defense." He said the NATO nations must give this problem "far greater attention."

In London, the leaders of 8 Commonwealth Nations are supporting Britain's drive to end the cold war with Russia. They would lose no opportunity to "compose or at least ease the differences which divide the world."

The Russians in Austria have followed up the lifting of military controls on the border that seperates their zone from the allied zones, with an agreement to discharge two Communist police officials in Vienna.

And in Moscow, the Kremlin has granted permission for two Russian wives of American citizens to leave the Soviet Union. In the past the Russians have refused such permission.

The Italian election vote is still be counted. For a late ~~report~~ recorded on the results here is Correspondent Ned Calmer:

(runs 3;15 return: now back to Ed Murrow in NY)

In Washington today the House Ways and Means committee approved a one-year extension of the Recpirocal Trade act.. as requested by the President.

In the mid-west tornadoes that struck Michigan and Ohio last night killed 141 people and injured more than 750. Flint, Michigan, was hardest hit..with 113 killed. [redacted]

[redacted]

And tonight a violent storm roared through several communities in Worcester county, Massachusetts. At least 11 persons are reported dead.. more than 350 injured. Available reports indicate that from 100 to 200 houses and buildings have been flattened.

What is now happening in Korea is another demonstration that wars are easier to start than stop. That is particularly true when neither side has won a victory. And that is the situation in Korea. The South Koreans, determined to create and preserve their union, don't want to stop fighting. They are unwilling to face the prospect of their nation trying to exist half slave, and half free. No people in Asia has resisted Communism with greater valor or sacrifice. A truce would leave them just about where they started. In the end, they will probably agree to it, however reluctantly, because they cannot "go it alone" in continuing the war. But a truce is a very delicate thing when there are two unbeaten armies in the field. It can always be broken, for a truce merely means that the guns are silent, not that they are unloaded or cast away. Nor does a truce mean that either side in this undecisive conflict has given up power -- military power-- as an instrument of policy.

If we assume that the announced Communist purpose of splitting the western alliance remains unchanged, and there is no evidence that it has changed, then the enemy may well reckon that the creation of a truce in Korea will place a greater strain on the alliance than would the continuation of the war. Once the shooting stops differences between our allies and ourselves about Asian policy may become more apparent than they were during the heat of battle. Wartime agreements are rather easy to come by, but once the war ceases, the divergence of policy amongst allies becomes more apparent. If we get a truce in Korea, the testing and dying time for the soldiers will have ended, at least temporarily, and the testing time for statesmanship will be just beginning.

The casting away of the fruits of victory has occurred in the history of this, and other countries. But in this case, we will have no victory, merely another opportunity for the negotiators on both sides to achieve something that armies couldn't.

We and our allies are not prepared to pay the price, or run the risks, required for a military victory. The limited victories we won were neither easy nor cheap, and it would probably be a mistake to assume that we shall win any easy or cheap ones about the conference table.

Tonight it would seem that the immediate prospect for peace in Korea, if not in the world, depends not upon Washington and Moscow, but upon the decision of the South Korean government. Their alternatives are to accept President Eisenhower's recommendation, or to commit national suicide. We should know tha answer before long.

+ This is Ed Murrow etc.

19

Bringing about an acceptable truce in Korea is no easy undertaking. And it is true, as Carl Sandburg once remarked:"After the strife of war, begins the strife of peace." It is equally true, as John Milton said that "Peace hath her victories no less reknowned than war." Probably Carlyle put the problem in perspective when he wrote:"The block of granite which is an obstacle in the pathway of the weak becomes a stepping stone in the pathway of the strong."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 9, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Swiss government has decided not to serve on a truce commission in Korea unless the South Korean government accepts the truce terms. The decision was made by the Swiss cabinet. Four other countries, India, Sweden, and Communist Poland and Czechoslovakia - have been named to the commission by the truce delegates at Panmunjom. Those delegates meet again tonight. And all day in South Korea the people and the government made it clear they are against the proposed truce terms. In Seoul and Pusan thousands of persons demonstrated against the truce plan. An estimated 100-thousand marched on 8th army headquarters in Seoul, ran into South Korean and American military police and were finally turned back by water hoses. The nation's National Assembly voted unanimously to reject the armistice terms. And the assembly called for "all necessary measures" at the front to prevent another Communist aggression and to be prepared for "a northward advance." The South Korean foreign minister minister says his troops will fight the Indian troops who are scheduled to supervise the armistice. Thus far President Syngman Rhee has not replied to President Eisenhower's message. And today the Chinese Communist radio which has had little to say during the final stages of the truce negotiations, attacked the Eisenhower offer of a mutual security pact with South Korea. Radio Peiping calls this an "open plot aimed at sabotaging the political conference" that is to follow the armistice.

In London, Prime Minister Churchill criticized Syngman Rhee's "Attitude" and predicted an early armistice.

And Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate committee today that it will be at least six months after an armistice is signed before American soldiers start coming home. He said: "People will be a little disappointed that we can't bring the boys back here. But the situation in Korea is pretty disturbing." The Secretary wants to continue to build up ammunition supplies there even after an armistice.

In another day's testimony on the air force budget, Mr. Wilson criticized the former administration and challenged the opinions of the outgoing Joint Chiefs of staff. He said: The Truman Administration abandoned the 143-wing goal for the air force but was not honest enough to tell the people about it. He said former Defense Secretary Lovett failed to trim the military budget because he was sick and didn't want to battle old friends on the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He challenged the Joint Chief's estimate that Russia would be capable of launching an atomic attack by the middle of 1954. Wilson said: "There is no reason to think they would have atomic bombs in quite that volume." And he also told the Senators: "There are people in the Pentagon who haven't been working for a long time and will have a hard time getting used to it."

General Ridgeway, the commander of the North Atlantic Treaty forces, who is to be the new army chief of staff, said today that "air power is still the weakest link in our defense." He said the NATO nations must give this problem "far greater attention."

In London, the leaders of 8 commonwealth nations are supporting Britain's drive to end the cold war with Russia. They would lose no opportunity to "compose or at least ease the differences which divide the world."

The Russians in Austria have followed up the lifting of military controls on the border that separates their zone from the allied zones, with an agreement to discharge two Communist police officials in Vienna.

And in Moscow, the Kremlin has granted permission for two Russian wives of American citizens to leave the Soviet Union. In the past the Russians have refused such permission.

The Italian election vote is still being counted. For a late recorded report on the results here is Correspondent Ned Calmer:

CALMER: It's now over thirty-six hours since the polls closed in Italy's Parliamentary elections. And according to the Government most of the votes have been counted, but the Ministery of Interior is reluctant to give exact figures on the number of seats won in the Senate by the various parties, and Interior Minister Scelba has backtracked on a victory prediction he made earlier in the day. As of now, we're told only that Premier De Gasperi's Center coalition has won 50.2% of the Senate seats, the Left winning about 32% and the Right-wing about 13%. That looks like a very slim majority for the Government in the new Senate whenever the Right and Left decide to gang up on the Center.

As for the Chamber, Signor Scelba declared at 1:00 o'clock local time today that at 5:00 o'clock he would give final results for both the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. He said the Government had won the Senate and he had no reason to suppose the Government would not also win the Chamber. But 5:00 o'clock came and went, and correspondents awaiting the outcome of this extremely significant election were told nothing until half past six. Then Signor Scelba appeared, looking unmistakeably worried. He would not give any results at all for the vital Chamber of Deputies because, he said, about a million votes remained to be counted and the race was now too close to confirm his earlier prediction of a Government Victory in the chamber. For those who have hoped for a continuing stable democratic regime in this country, with its present pro-American and European unity policy, that news was as depressing as the dreary rain that has been falling on Rome all day long.

Unless de Gasperi's forces can win more than fifty per cent of the vote, they will fail to get the bonus of more than sixty-four percent of the seats which they need for a working majority in the Chamber. They'll be at the mercy of the still powerful Communists and Left-wing Socialists who seem to have fully preserved their strength or better, and of the resurgent Monarchist and Fascist parties, whose comeback is the outstanding fact of this election. As for the minor parties allied with deGasperi's Christian Democrats, they seem to have been all but swept away in the push to the Right. Tonight's unscheduled delay in announcing final returns and the stalling attitude of the Ministry of Interior has aroused suspicions among the opposition - so much so that Signor Scelba has issued a denial of charges that the Government has been altering the returns. Nonetheless, there's evidently a good deal the Government knows now about results which so far it has chosen not to communicate to the public. An unconfirmed report tonight says that with only a few hundred precincts still to report, the Center is running at just about fifty per cent of the vote. When the Christian Democrats drew up the new electoral law, which was one of the hot issues in this campaign, they played their chances so close that the bonus majority was fixed at fifty per cent plus one vote. Right now, this election looks so tight that even that one vote may be needed. At the Interior Ministry veteran correspondents still waiting for the definite word are saying, "I sure hate to predict this one." This reporter feels that same way.

And now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Washington today the House Ways and Means committee approved a one-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade act, as requested by the President.

In the mid-west tornadoes that struck Michigan and Ohio last night, killed 141 people and injured more than 750. Flint, Michigan, was hardest hit, with 133 killed.

And tonight a violent storm roared through several communities in Worcester county, Massachusetts. At least 11 persons are reported dead, more than 350 injured. Available reports indicate that from 100 to 200 houses and buildings have been flattened.

What is now happening in Korea is another demonstration that wars are easier to start than stop. That is particularly true when neither side has won a victory. And that is the situation in Korea. The South Koreans, determined to create and preserve their union, don't want to stop fighting. They are unwilling to face the prospect of their nation trying to exist half slave, and half free. No people in Asia has resisted Communism with greater valor or sacrifice. A truce would leave them just about where they started. In the end, they will probably agree to it, however reluctantly, because they cannot "go it alone" in continuing the war. But a truce is a very delicate thing when there are two unbeaten armies in the field. It can always be broken, for a truce merely means that the guns are silent, not that they are unloaded or cast away. Nor does a truce mean that either side in this undecisive conflict has given up power - military power - as an instrument of policy.

If we assume that the announced Communist purpose of splitting the western alliance remains unchanged, and there is no evidence that it has changed, then the enemy may well reckon that the creation of a truce in Korea will place a greater strain on the alliance than would the continuation of the war. Once the shooting stops differences between our allies and ourselves about Asian policy may become more apparent than they were during the heat of battle. Wartime agreements are rather easy to come by, but once the war ceases the divergence of policy amongst allies becomes more apparent. If we get a truce in Korea, the testing and dying time for the soldiers will have ended at least temporarily, and the testing time for statesmanship will be just beginning.

The casting away of the fruits of victory has occurred in the history of this and other countries. But in this case, we will have no victory, merely another opportunity for the negotiators on both sides to achieve something that armies couldn't.

We and our allies are not prepared to pay the price or run the risks required for a military victory. The limited victories we won were neither easy nor cheap, and it would probably be a mistake to assume that we shall win any easy or cheap ones about the conference table.

Tonight it would seem that the immediate prospect for peace in Korea if not in the world depends not upon Washington and Moscow, but upon the decision of the South Korean government. Their alternatives are to accept President Eisenhower's recommendation, or to commit national suicide. We should know the answer before long.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Bringing about an acceptable truce in Korea is no easy undertaking. And it is true, as Carl Sandburg once remarked: "After the strife of war, begins the strife of peace." It is equally true, as John Milton said that "Peace hath her victories no less reknowned than war." Probably Carlyle put the problem in perspective when he wrote: "The block of granite which is an obstacle in the pathway of the weak becomes a steppingstone in the pathway of the strong."

Good Nite and Good Luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, June 9, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The Italian election vote is still being counted. For a late, recorded report on the results here is correspondent Ned Calmer.

CALMER: It's now over thirty-six hours since the polls closed in Italy's parliamentary elections. And according to the Government most of the votes have been counted, but the Ministery of Interior is reluctant to give exact figures on the number of seats won in the Senate by the various parties, and Interior Minister Scelba has backtracked on a victory prediction he made earlier in the day. As of now, we're told only that Premier deGasperi's Center coalition has won 50.2% of the Senate seats, the Left winning about 32% and the Right-wing about 13%. That looks like a very slim majority for the Government in the new Senate whenever the Right and Left decide to gang up on the Center.

As for the Chamber, Signor Scelba declared at 1:00 o'clock local time today that at 5:00 o'clock he would give final results for both the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. He said the Government had won the Senate and he had no reason to suppose the Government would not also win the Chamber. But 5:00 o'clock came and went, and correspondents awaiting the outcome of this extremely significant election were told nothing until half past six. Then, Signor Scelba appeared, looking unmistakeably worried. He would not give any results at all for the vital Chamber of Deputies because, he said, about a million votes remained to be counted and the race was now too close to confirm his earlier prediction of a Government victory in the Chamber. For those who have hoped for a continuing stable democratic regime in this country, with its present pro-American and European unity policy, that news was as depressing as the dreary rain that has been falling on Rome all day long.

Unless deGasperi's forces can win more than fifty per cent of the vote, they will fail to get the bonus of more than sixty-four per cent of the seats which they need for a working majority in the Chamber. They'll be at the mercy of the still powerful Communists and Left-wing Socialists, who seem to have fully preserved their strength or better, and of the resurgent Monarchist and Fascist parties, whose comeback is the outstanding fact of this election. As for the minor parties allied with deGasperi's Christian Democrats, they seem to have been all but swept away in the push to the Right.

Tonite's unscheduled delay in announcing final returns and the stalling attitude of the Ministry of Interior has aroused suspicions among the opposition - so much so that Signor Scelba has issued a denial of charges that the Government has been altering the returns. Nonetheless, there's evidently a good deal the Government knows now about results which so far it has chosen not to communicate to the public. An unconfirmed report tonite says that with only a few hundred precincts still to report, the Center is running at just about fifty per cent of the vote. When the Christian Democrats drew up the new electoral law, which was one of the hot issues in this campaign, they played their chanses so close that the bonus majority was fixed at fifty per cent plus one vote. Right now, this election looks so tight that even that one vote may be needed. At the Interior Ministry veteran correspondents still waiting for the definite word are saying, "I sure hate to predict this one." This reporter feels that same way.

And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

Wednesday
June 10, 1953.

This is the news:

The President said today that "all free nations must stand together, or they shall fall seperately."/He said free world unity against Communism "means compromise..always within a clearly defined , clearly understood framework of principle."/We'll hear [redacted] excerpts from the President's address in a few minutes.

The South Koreans still show no inclination to accept the Korean truce terms./In Seoul some 2-thousand young students demonstrated, shouting "Yankee go home."/But one of their leaders told an American reporter: "The government told us to demonstrate. We are not angry at America."/The Korean embassy in Washington released a letter President Rhee sent President Eisenhower ON MAY 30TH, rejecting Mr. Eisenhower's request that Rhee promise to honor an armistice./The South Korean delegate to the United Nations calls the proposed truce "a victory for world Communism."/And while the truce negotiators adjourned indefinitely, to let their staffs work out the final arrangements for an armistice, a United Nations official in Tokyo said: "We are taking a calculated risk with President Rhee, and we calculate he'll sign the armistice when the time comes."/Admiral Radford, who is to be the new chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, conferred with Rhee today..on a long-scheduled visit..but there was no announcement of what they discussed or decided. Senator Taft, in Washington, called Rhee's position "foolish" and said he believes Rhee will sign an armistice when the time comes.

Sweden today became the first of the five nations named to the neutral truce team to accept the job. And Switzerland, whose cabinet decided yesterday not to participate unless South Korea approves..Switzerland's Foreign Minister says his country "can be induced to serve." Prime Minister Nehru of India indicates that India will take its place on the commission unless "the South Korean break away from the U.N. command." There is no word yet from the other two members: communist Poland and Czechoslovakia.

The Pentagon reported today that we suffered another 224 casualties in Korea last week...41 killed..2 missing..the rest wounded.

In Washington, the President asked Congress to make available to Pakistan up to one million tons of wheat. And he told a New York congressman federal agencies are "pursuing the purpose" of ending racial segregation in veterans hospitals, navy shipyards and schools on army posts. The President also expressed his deep regret when informed that Senator Taft is giving up his day-to-day floor leadership of Senate Republicans.

The Senator told reporters that his hip ailemnt is "a serious one".. doctors have told him he needs x-ray and cortisone treatment. He must keep all possible weight off the hip. So the Senator will turn over to Senator Knowland of California , the acting floor leader, the Senate duties the floor leader normally performs.

IN Boston, the condition of British Foreign Secretary Eden was reported as "satisfactory" after he was operated on to relieve a bile duct obstruction.

The Senate Foreign Relations committee today approved all but 166-million dollars of the Administration's five billion 312-million foreign aid bill. The biggest cut was 150 million from the 250 million the President wanted to help allied countries modernize their military weapons.

Senator McCarthy charged today that several subversives have benefited from the State Department's educational exchange program.

And Democratic Representative Price of Illinois says "our supply of atomic weapons in dangerously inadequate both as to quantitity and variety."

Governor Herter of Massachusetts today declared a state of emergency throughout the state as a result of the TORNADO yesterday which took 87 lives in the Worcester area.

The final votes on the Italian elections are now in. Premier De Gasperi's coalition parties won a 7 seat majority in the Senate.. and a 16 seat majority in the House. But they polled only 49.7 of the total vote as the Communists, the left-wing Socialists, the monacrhists and fascists all made gains. The De Gasperi coalition dropped 2-million votes from its 1948 TALLY. The Communists won 22 per cent of the vote to continue as the second strongest party to De Gasperi's Christian Democrats who received 40 per cent of the vote. The biggest percentage gains were made by the still small Monarchist and Fascist parties.

In East Germany, the Communist party has issued a series of decrees apparently designed to make life in the Soviet zone more attractive for German unity. And the Russians have informed Austria that they are ready to appoint an ambassador to Vienna and re-establish full diplomatic relations.

[redacted]

And Czech President [redacted] Zapotocky acknowledged today that the recent currency reform in his country "caused a panic."

Out in Minneapolis today, the President spoke to the annual convention of the National Junior Chamber of Commerce. He told his audience that the Administration's defense plans call for "fewer planes in theory..more planes in fact, more swiftly and less expensively."

We've recorded for you excerpts from the President's address:

(runs 5;25 ending:

"we have achieved the first problem of national security)

You have been listening to recorded excerpts from an address the President made this afternoon to the annual convention of the National Junior Chamber of Commerce in Minneapolis.

It would seem evident from the President's speech today that he regards security as an urgent problem...(complicated by the fact that we don't know what the future...or the enemy...will require of us.) Those who agree with the President would agree with the Roman Ovid when he said:"Safety lies in the middle course." Those who feel differently, might be inclined to conclude as William Sumner did that"The only security is the constant practice of critical thinking."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

UP26

(AUTOMATIC RELEASE AT 4:30 P.M. EDT)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., JUNE 10.--(UP)--TEXT OF PRESIDENT EISENHOWER'S ADDRESS AT THE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE NATIONAL JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE:

I THANK YOU SINCERELY FOR THE HONOR OF YOUR INVITATION TO BE WITH YOU TODAY.

YOURS IS ONE OF OUR NATION'S MOST DISTINGUISHED AND ENTERPRISING ORGANIZATIONS. YOU ARE YOUNG AND RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE, WITH IMPRESSIVE CAREERS AND ACHIEVEMENTS ALREADY RECORDED TO YOUR CREDIT. MY OWN LIFE HAS BEEN SPENT WITH AMERICA'S YOUNG PEOPLE. THE GRAVE DECISIONS THAT I HAVE BEEN COMPELLED TO MAKE HAVE BEEN VINDICATED BY THEIR SKILL, THEIR SENSE OF RESPONSIBILITY AND THEIR SACRIFICE. MY FAITH IN THEM IS MY UNBOUNDED FAITH IN AMERICA ITSELF.

2:00

BECAUSE YOU ARE BOTH YOUNG AND RESPONSIBLE, YOU KNOW WHAT IS YOUR GREATEST RESPONSIBILITY OF ALL--TOMORROW--THE WHOLE FUTURE OF FREEDOM.

IN THE MINDS OF ALL OF YOU--AS IN MY OWN MIND--IS A LONG LIST OF CRITICAL SUBJECTS CONFRONTING OUR PEOPLE TODAY. I WISH I COULD DISCUSS ALL OF THEM WITH YOU--THE PROBLEMS OF HEALTHY FOREIGN TRADE; THE REGULATION OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES; THE ACHIEVING OF A MORE JUST TAX STRUCTURE; THE DEVELOPMENT OF SOUND AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS; THE GREAT WORK TO BE DONE IN THE FIELDS OF EDUCATION, HEALTH AND WELFARE.

3:00

THERE IS, HOWEVER, ONE MATTER THAT OVERSHADOWS ALL OF THESE. IT IS THE CONSTANT, CONTROLLING CONSIDERATION IN OUR NATIONAL LIFE TODAY. IT IS--OUR NATION'S SECURITY.

QUICKLY WE CAN SEE HOW THIS ONE ISSUE EFFECTIVELY RULES ALL OTHERS. IT ALONE COMES CLOSE TO FIXING THE LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT BUDGETS--WHEN TWO OF EVERY THREE DOLLARS SPENT BY OUR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT GO TO DEFENSE PURPOSES. IT THEREBY ALMOST AUTOMATICALLY SETS THE REQUIREMENTS FOR FEDERAL TAXES. IT DIRECTLY AFFECTS THE WELFARE OF OUR FARMS, SO DEPENDENT UPON WIDE OPPORTUNITIES FOR EXPORT. AND IT IS INTIMATELY BOUND UP WITH FOREIGN TRADE--FOR OUR OWN IMPORTS OF SUCH CRITICAL PRODUCTS AS NICKEL AND COBALT AND MICA ARE ESSENTIAL TO OUR NATIONAL SECURITY.

4:10

IT IS NO WONDER THAT OUR NATIONAL SECURITY IS SO VAST A MATTER--FOR THE STRUGGLE IN WHICH FREEDOM TODAY IS ENGAGED IS QUITE LITERALLY A TOTAL AND UNIVERSAL STRUGGLE. IT ENGAGES EVERY ASPECT OF OUR LIVES. IT IS WAGED IN EVERY ARENA IN WHICH A CHALLENGED CIVILIZATION MUST FIGHT TO LIVE.

(MORE)

BN1040A

UP27

ADD TEXT MINNEAPO LIS XXX TO LIVE.

IT IS A MILITARY STRUGGLE -- ON THE BATTLEFIELDS OF KOREA, OF INDO-CHINA, OF MALAYA.

IT IS AN ECONOMIC STRUGGLE -- IN WHICH THE EQUIVALENT OF A LOST BATTLE CAN BE SUFFERED IN A RUINED RICE CROP IN ASIA, OR IN THE LAGGING OF A CRITICAL PRODUCTION LINE IN AMERICA.

5:00 IT IS A POLITICAL STRUGGLE -- SPEAKING AT THE CONFERENCE TABLES OF TH UNITED NATIONS, IN THE DAILY DIPLOMATIC EXCHANGES THAT FLOOD THE CABLE WIRES AND TELEPHONE LINES OF THE WORLD.

IT IS A SCIENTIFIC STRUGGLE -- IN WHICH ATOMIC ENERGY PLANTS AND COLOSSAL RESEARCH PROJECTS CAN PRODUCE TERRIBLE WONDH

COLOSSAL RESEARCH PROJECTS CAN PRODUCE TERRIBLE WONDH

ATCH

COLOSSAL RESEARCH PROJECTS CAN PRODUCE TERRIBLE WONDERS MATCHING IN FATEFUL EFFECT THE INVENTIONS OF THE WHEEL OR OF GUNPOWDER.

IT IS AN INTELLECTUAL STRUGGLE -- FOR THE PRESS AND THE RADIO, EVERY SPOKEN AND PRINTED WORD, CAN EITHER INSPIRE OR WEAKEN MEN'S FAITH IN FREEDOM.

IT IS A SPIRITUAL STRUGGLE -- FOR ONE OF COMMUNISM'S BASIC ASSUMPTIONS ABOUT THE NATURE OF MEN IS THAT THEY ARE INCAPABLE OF 6:00 RULING THEMSELVES, INCAPABLE OF ATTAINING THE SPIRITUAL STANDARDS AND STRENGTH TO SOLVE NATIONAL PROBLEMS WHEN THESE REQUIRE VOLUNTARY PERSONAL SACRIFICE FOR THE COMMON GOOD. THIS IS THE COMMUNIST'S JUSTIFICATION FOR REGIMENTATION. ALL THIS WE DENY. AND WE MUST SEEK IN OUR CHURCHES, OUR SCHOOLS, OUR HOMES AND OUR DAILY LIVES THE CLEARNESS OF MIND AND STRONGNESS OF HEART TO GUARD THE CHANCE TO LIVE IN FREEDOM.

FOR THIS WHOLE STRUGGLE, IN THE DEEPEST SENSE, IS WAGED NEITHER FOR 7:00 LAND NOR FOR FOOD NOR FOR POWER -- BUT FOR THE SOUL OF MAN HIMSELF. (Applause)

THESE ARE REAL, TOUGH FACTS -- NOT MERE POETIC FANCIES. THEY ARE FACTS AS TRUE AND AS COMPELLING AS ANY AIRPLANE PRODUCTION SCHEDULES, OR THE FIREPOWER OF OUR GUNS, OR THE ARMOR OF OUR TANKS, OR THE SPEED OF OUR JETS.

I CANNOT PRESUME TODAY TO SPEAK OF ALL ASPECTS OF SO VAST, SO ALL-EMBRACING, SO TOTAL A STRUGGLE -- NOR OF ALL THE TRUTHS THAT MUST, BELIEVE, GUIDE US STEADFASTLY.

I WISH TO SPEAK SIMPLY OF TWO OF THESE TRUTHS.

THE FIRST IS THIS: OUR MILITARY STRENGTH AND OUR ECONOMIC STRENGTH 8:00 ARE TRULY ONE -- AND NEITHER CAN SENSIBLY BE PURCHASED AT THE PRICE OF DESTROYING THE OTHER.

THE SECOND IS THIS: THIS NATION AND ALL NATIONS DEFENDING FREEDOM, EVERYWHERE IN THE WORLD, ARE ONE IN THEIR COMMON NEED AND THEIR COMMON CAUSE -- AND NONE CAN SANELY SEEK SECURITY ALONE. (Applause)

THE FIRST OF THESE TRUTHS CONCERNS OUR MILITARY POSTURE OF DEFENSE. THE SECOND CONCERNS OUR WHOLE CONCEPT AND CONDUCT OF WORLD AFFAIRS. LET US CONSIDER EACH OF THEM BRIEFLY, FOR THE MERE ASSERTION OF A 9:00 GENERAL TRUTH PROVES NOTHING AND CONVINCES NO ONE.

BN1052A

UP28

THE CENTRAL PROBLEM OF OUR MILITARY DEFENSE IS NOT MERELY TO BECOME STRONG -- BUT TO STAY STRONG. THE REASON IS OBVIOUS; WE CANNOT COUNT UP ANY ENEMY STRIKING US AT A GIVEN, ASCERTAINABLE MOMENT. WE LIVE, AS I HAVE SAID BEFORE, NOT IN AN INSTANT OF PERIL BUT IN AN AGE OF PERIL -- A TIME OF TENSION AND WATCHFULNESS.

THE DEFENSE AGAINST THIS PERIL, THEN, MUST BE CAREFULLY PLANNED AND STEADFASTLY MAINTAINED. IT CANNOT BE A MERE REPETITION OF TODAY'S REFLEX TO YESTERDAY'S CRISIS. IT CANNOT BE A THING OF FRENZIES AND ALARMS. IT MUST BE A THING OF THOUGHT AND ORDER AND EFFICIENCY.

PRECISELY SUCH A DEFENSE IS NOW BEING BUILT FOR OUR COUNTRY. 10:00 I PERSONALLY BELIEVE IT DOES SEVERAL THINGS. IT SOBERLY PROMISES MORE EFFICIENT MILITARY PRODUCTION. IT REALISTICALLY ASSESSES OUR LONG-TERM ECONOMIC CAPACITY. IT DEMANDS THE ELIMINATION OF LUXURY, WASTE AND DUPLICATION IN ALL MILITARY ACTIVITY. AND IT ALLOCATES FUNDS AS JUSTLY AND WISELY AS POSSIBLE AMONG THE THREE ARMED SERVICES.

CONCRETELY: THESE DEFENSE PLANS ALLOCATE 60 CENTS OUT OF EVERY DEFENSE DOLLAR TO AIR POWER. WITH THE ENACTMENT OF PENDING LEGISLATION OUR AIR FORCE WILL HAVE AVAILABLE FOR ITS EXPENDITURE MORE THAN 40 11:00 BILLION DOLLARS. BY MID-1954 ITS STRENGTH WILL TOTAL 114 WINGS. AT THE SAME TIME THE AIR ARM OF THE NAVY WILL COMMAND A FULL HALF OF ALL THE FUNDS AVAILABLE TO THE ENTIRE NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT. THE NAVY AND MARINE AIR ARMS WILL ALONE TOTAL ALMOST 10,000 PLANES. ALL THIS -- I BELIEVE -- PROMISES BOTH POWERFUL AIR DEFENSE AND A NO LESS POWERFUL DETERRENT TO ANY WOULD-BE AGGRESSOR.

GREATER EFFICIENCY IN PRODUCTION WILL GIVE US LESS COSTLY PRODUCTION SCHEDULES -- AND SOMETHING EVEN MORE VITAL: FEWER PLANES ON ORDER, MORE PLANES IN THE AIR. (Applause) 12:00 TODAY TYPICAL PRODUCTION SCHEDULES REQUIRE 26 MONTHS FOR A B-47, 34 MONTHS FOR A B-52. WE BELIEVE THAT SUCH SCHEDULES CAN BE REDUCED TO SOMETHING LIKE 18 MONTHS. I REPEAT: THAT WILL MEAN FEWER PLANES IN THEORY, MORE PLANES IN FACT -- MORE SWIFTLY AND LESS EXPENSIVELY. (Applause)

HOW MANY PLANES -- HOW MANY DIVISIONS -- HOW GREAT A NAVY -- SHOULD WE HAVE? SUCH QUESTIONS ARE, THESE DAYS, EARNESTLY AND FERVENTLY DEBATED BY ADVOCATES OF DIFFERENT THEORIES, AS WELL AS A FAIR NUMBER OF 13:00 SELF-APPOINTED EXPERTS. (Applause)

ALL THIS IS HEALTHY AND PROPER ENOUGH -- PROVIDED WE DO NOT LOSE SIGHT OF CERTAIN ELEMENTAL FACTS.

FIRST: WE MUST REMEMBER ALWAYS THAT REASONABLE DEFENSE POSTURE IS NOT WON BY JUGGLING MAGIC NUMBERS -- EVEN WITH AN AIR OF GREAT AUTHORITY THERE IS NO WONDERFULLY SURE NUMBER OF PLANES OR SHIPS OR DIVISIONS -- OR BILLIONS OF DOLLARS -- THAT CAN AUTOMATICALLY GUARANTEE SECURITY. THE MOST UNCOMPROMISING ADVOCATES OF SUCH MAGIC NUMBERS HAVE THEMSELVES CHANGED THEIR CALCULATIONS ALMOST FROM YEAR TO YEAR. SUCH CHANGES ARE REASONABLE, AS TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCE REQUIRES. BUT THE INSISTENCE THAT THE LATEST CHANGE IS FINAL, DEFINITIVE, AND UNCHALLENGEABLE -- THAT IS NOT REASONABLE.

(MORE)

BN1102A

5:25

AD LIB OF Security Rests in Heart, etc 1 min

UP29

ADD TEXT MINNEAPOLIS (230PCST RELEASE) XXX NOT REASONABLE.

SECOND: WE MUST REMEMBER THAT

RESTARTING

"We have, or heard for the first problem of Nat'l. Security

UP29

ADD TEXT MINNEAPOLIS XXX NOT REASONABLE.

SECOND: WE MUST REMEMBER THAT ALL OUR PLANS MUST REALISTICALLY TAKE ACCOUNT -- NOT JUST THIS YEAR BUT EVERY YEAR -- OF COLOSSAL AND CONTINUING TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE. WE ARE LIVING IN A TIME OF REVOLUTION IN MILITARY SCIENCE. TODAY 25 AIRCRAFT EQUIPPED WITH MODERN WEAPONS CAN -- IN A SINGLE ATTACK -- VISIT UPON AN ENEMY AS MUCH EXPLOSIVE VIOLENCE AS WAS HURLED AT GERMANY BY OUR ENTIRE AIR EFFORT THROUGHOUT FOUR YEARS OF WORLD WAR II. (Applause)

16:00

AND A THIRD SERIOUS TRUTH ABOUT OUR MILITARY DEFENSE IS THIS: THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS MAXIMUM SECURITY SHORT OF TOTAL MOBILIZATION. THIS WOULD MEAN REGIMENTATION OF THE WORKER, THE FARMER, THE BUSINESSMAN -- ALLOCATION OF MATERIALS -- CONTROL OF WAGES AND PRICES -- DRAFTING OF EVERY ABLE-BODIED CITIZEN. IT WOULD MEAN, IN SHORT, ALL THE GRIM PARAPHERNALIA OF THE GARRISON STATE.

THIS WOULD DO MORE DAMAGE THAN MERELY TO STRAIN THE ECONOMIC FABRIC OF AMERICA.

IT WOULD -- IF LONG SUSTAINED -- IMPERIL THE VERY LIBERTIES WE ARE STRIVING TO DEFEND. (applause)

17:00

AND IT WOULD IGNORE THAT MOST ELEMENTAL TRUTH -- THE FACT THAT THIS TOTAL STRUGGLE CANNOT BE WON BY GUNS ALONE.

I DO NOT BELIEVE -- IN A WORD -- THAT WE CAN WISELY SUBSCRIBE TO WHAT I WOULD CALL THE "ALL-OUT" MILITARY THEORY OF DEFENSE -- IGNORING THE OTHER DEFENSES WE MUST BUILD AND HOLD.

THERE IS ANOTHER THEORY OF DEFENSE -- ANOTHER OVERSIMPLIFIED CONCEPT -- WHICH I BELIEVE EQUALLY MISLEADING AND DANGEROUS. IT IS WHAT WE MIGHT CALL THE "FORTRESS" THEORY OF DEFENSE.

AE

18:00 ADVOCATES OF THIS THEORY ASK: WHY CANNOT THE STRONGEST NATION IN THE WORLD -- OUR COUNTRY -- STAND BY ITSELF? WHAT DOES THE UNITED NATIONS MATTER? AND PARTICULARLY IN ASIA, WHERE SO MANY OF OUR SONS HAV DIED IN FREEDOM'S NAME, WHY CANNOT WE MAKE OUR OWN DECISIONS, FIGHT AND STAND AS ONLY WE OURSELVES MAY CHOOSE?

THERE ARE MANY ANSWER. I SHALL GIVE BUT A FEW.

A TOTAL STRUGGLE -- LET US NEVER FORGET IT -- CALLS FOR A TOTAL DEFENSE. AS THERE IS NO WEAPON TOO SMALL -- NO ARENA TOO REMOTE -- TO BE IGNORED, SO THERE IS NO FREE NATION TOO HUMBLE TO BE FORGOTTEN. ALL OF US HAVE LEARNED -- FIRST FROM THE ONSLAUGHT OF NAZI AGGRESSION, THEN FROM COMMUNIST AGGRESSION -- THAT ALL FREE NATIONS MUST STAND 19:00 TOGETHER, OR THEY SHALL FALL SEPARATELY. AGAIN AND AGAIN WE MUST REMIND OURSELVES THAT THIS IS A MATTER NOT ONLY OF POLITICAL PRINCIPLE BUT OF ECONOMIC NECESSITY. IT INVOLVES OUR NEED FOR MARKETS FOR OUR AGRICULTURAL AND INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTS, OUR NEED TO RECEIVE IN RETURN FROM THE REST OF THE WORLD SUCH ESSENTIALS AS MANGANESE AND COBALT, TIN AND TUNGSTEN.

THIS ESSENTIAL, INDISPENSABLE UNITY MEANS COMPROMISE -- ALWAYS WITHIN A CLEARLY DEFINED, CLEARLY UNDERSTOOD FRAMEWORK OF PRINCIPLE. WE KNOW THE NEED OF COMPROMISE, IN HARMONY WITH BASIC PRINCIPLES, WITHIN OUR OWN NATION. IT IS THE ESSENCE OF THE DEMOCRATIC PROCESS. WE SHOULD NOT BE SURPRISED THAT IT APPLIES JUST AS VITALLY AMONG NATIONS -- IN THE WIDE COMMUNITY OF THE WORLD'S FREE PEOPLES.

MORE BN1 14A

LINC Failed!

UP30

ADD TEXT MINNEAPOLIS XXX FREE PEOPLES.

NOW -- WHERE -- CAN THERE BE RETREAT FROM THIS UNITY? SURRENDER ASIA? THAT WOULD MEAN LEAVING A VAST PORTION OF THE POPULATION OF THE ENTIRE WORLD TO BE MOBILIZED BY THE FORCES OF AGGRESSION. SURRENDER EUROPE? THAT WOULD MEAN MORE THAN DOUBLING THE INDUSTRIAL POWER OF THOSE SAME FORCES.

WHO IS THERE WHO THINKS THAT THE STRENGTH OF AMERICA IS SO GREAT -- ITS BURDENS SO EASY, ITS FUTURE SO SECURE -- THAT IT COULD MAKE SO GENEROUS A GIFT TO THOSE CHALLENGING OUR VERY LIVES?

THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS PARTIAL UNITY. THAT IS A CONTRADICTION IN TERMS.

WE CANNOT SELECT THOSE AREAS OF THE GLOBE IN WHICH OUR POLICIES OR WISHES MAY DIFFER FROM OUR ALLIES -- BUILD POLITICAL FENCES AROUND THESE AREAS -- AND SAY TO OUR ALLIES: "WE SHALL DO WHAT WE WANT HERE -- AND WHERE YOU DO WHAT WE WANT, THERE AND ONLY THERE SHALL WE FAVOR UNITY." THAT IS NOT UNITY. IT IS DICTATION. AND IT IS NOT THE WAY FREE MEN ASSOCIATE.

WE ALL HEAR -- IN THIS CONNECTION -- A GOOD DEAL OF UNHAPPY MURMURING ABOUT THE UNITED NATIONS. IT IS EASY TO UNDERSTAND THE DISMAY OF MANY. NONE OF US IS ABOVE IRRITATION AND FRUSTRATION OVER THE SEEMINGLY VAIN AND TEDIOUS PROCESSES OF POLITICAL DISCOURSE IN TIMES OF GREAT CRISIS.

BUT NONE OF US CAN RIGHTLY FORGET THAT NEITHER THE WORLD--NOR THE UNITED NATIONS--IS OR CAN BE MADE IN A SINGLE IMAGE OF ONE NATION'S WILL OR IDEA. THE FACT IS THAT FROM ITS FOUNDATION THE UNITED NATIONS HAS SEEMED TO BE TWO DISTINCT THINGS TO THE TWO WORLDS DIVIDED BY THE IRON CURTAIN. TO THE COMMUNIST WORLD IT HAS SEEMED A CONVENIENT SOUNDING BOARD FOR THEIR PROPAGANDA, A WEAPON TO BE EXPLOITED IN SPREADING DISUNITY AND CONFUSION. TO THE FREE WORLD IT HAS SEEMED THAT IT SHOULD BE A CONSTRUCTIVE FORUM FOR FREE DISCUSSION OF THE WORLD'S PROBLEMS, AN EFFECTIVE AGENCY FOR HELPING TO SOLVE THOSE PROBLEMS PEACEFULLY.

THE TRUTH IS THAT EVEN IF THE UNITED NATIONS WERE TO CONFORM TO THE CONCEPT HELD BY THE FREE NATIONS, IT WOULD STILL BE BOUND TO SHOW INFINITE VARIETY OF OPINIONS SHARP CLASHES OF DEBATE, SLOW MOVEMENT TO DECISION. FOR ALL THIS IS LITTLE MORE THHAN A REFLECTION OF THE STATE OF THE WORLD ITSELF. AN IMAGE OF PERFECT SYMMETRY WOULD BE A DISTORTED IMAGE -- THE FALSE CREATION OF SOME NATION'S OR SOME BLOC'S POWER-POLITICS. AND PERHAPS THE GREATEST WORTH OF THE UNITED NATIONS IS PRECISELY THIS: IT HOLDS UP A MIRROR IN WHICH THE WORLD CAN SEE ITS TRUE SELF. AND WHAT SHOULD WE WANT TO SEE IN SUCH A MIRROR BUT THE WHOLE TRUTH -- AT SUCH A TIME OF TOTAL STRUGGLE?

THERE ARE -- AS YOU SEE -- CERTAIN COMMON DENOMINATORS TO ALL THAT I HAVE SAID, CERTAIN CONSTANT THOUGHTS I BELIEVE TO BE CONSISTENTLY RELEVANT IN FACING OUR TOMORROW.

WE MUST SEE CLEARLY THATH)) THE

WE MUST SEE CLEARLY THAT ALL THE PROBLEMS BEFORE US -- FROM FARM EXPORTS TO BALANCED BUDGETS, FROM TAXES TO THE VITAL RESOURCES FOR OUR INDUSTRY -- ALL ARE DEPENDENT ON OUR NATION'S SECURITY. AND IN THIS REAL WAY FREEDOM'S GREAT STRUGGLE TOUCHES ALL OF US ALIKE -- FARMER AND BUSINESSMAN, WORKER AND STUDENT, PASTOR AND TEACHER.

WE KNOW THIS TO BE TRUE BECAUSE WE KNOW THAT THERE IS BUT ONE STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM -- IN THE MARKET PLACE AND IN THE UNIVERSITY, ON THE BATTLEFIELD AND BESIDE THE ASSEMBLY LINE.

WE KNOW THAT STRENGTH MEANS BEING STRONG IN ALL THESE WAYS AND PLACES.

WE KNOW THAT UNITY MEANS COMRADESHIP, PATIENCE AND COMPROMISE AMONG ALL FREE NATIONS.

AND WE KNOW THAT ONLY WITH STRENGTH AND WITH UNITY -- IS THE FUTURE OF FREEDOM ASSURED. AND FREEDOM, NOW AND FOR THE FUTURE, IS OUR GOAL! + Toft ad lib. , mcw

(END TEXT)

BN-MW1131A

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President said today that "all free nations must stand together or they shall fall separately." He said free world unity against Communism "means compromise - always within a clearly defined, clearly understood framework of principle." We'll hear excerpts from the President's address in a few minutes.

The South Koreans still show no inclination to accept the Korean truce terms. In Seoul some 2-thousand young students demonstrated, shouting "Yankee go home." But one of their leaders told an American reporter: "The government told us to demonstrate. We are not angry at America." The Korean embassy in Washington released a letter President Rhee sent President Eisenhower on May 30th, rejecting Mr. Eisenhower's request that Rhee promise to honor an armistice. The South Korean delegate to the United Nations calls the proposed truce "a victory for world Communism." And while the truce negotiators adjourned indefinitely, to let their staffs work out the final arrangements for an armistice, a United Nations official in Tokyo said: "We are taking a calculated risk with President Rhee and we calculate he'll sign the armistice when the time comes." Admiral Radford, who is to be the new chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, conferred with Rhee today, on a long-scheduled visit, but there was no announcement of what they discussed or decided. Senator Taft, in Washington, called Rhee's position "foolish" and said he believes Rhee will sign an armistice when the time comes.

Sweden today became the first of the five nations named to the neutral truce team to accept the job. And Switzerland, whose cabinet decided yesterday not to participate unless South Korea approves, Switzerland's Foreign Minister says his country "can be induced to serve." Prime Minister Nehru of India indicates that India will take its place on the commission unless "the South Korean break away from the U.N. command." There is no word yet from the other two members, Communist Poland and Czechoslovakia.

The Pentagon reported today that we suffered another 224 casualties in Korea last week, 41 killed, 2 missing, the rest wounded.

In Washington, the President asked Congress to make available to Pakistan up to one million tons of wheat. And he told a New York congressman federal agencies are "pursuing the purpose" of ending racial segregation in veterans hospitals, navy shipyards and schools on army posts. The President also expressed his deep regret when informed that Senator Taft is giving up his day-to-day floor leadership of Senate Republicans.

The Senator told reporters that his hip ailment is "a serious one; doctors have told him he needs X-ray and cortisone treatment. He must keep all possible weight off the hip. So the Senator will turn over to Senator Knowland of California, the acting floor leader, the Senate duties the floor leader normally performs.

In Boston, the condition of British Foreign Secretary Eden was reported as "satisfactory" after he was operated on to relieve a bile duct obstruction.

The Senate Foreign Relations committee today approved all but 166-million dollars of the Administration's five-billion 312-million foreign aid bill. The biggest cut was 150 million from the 250 million the President wanted to help allied countries modernize their military weapons.

Senator McCarthy charged today that several subversives have benefited from the State Department's educational exchange program.

And Democratic Representative Price of Illinois says "our supply of atomic weapons is dangerously inadequate both as to quantity and variety."

Governor Herter of Massachusetts today declared a state of emergency throughout the State as a result of the Tornado yesterday which took 87 lives in the Worcester area.

The final votes on the Italian elections are now in. Premier De Gasperi's coalition parties won a 7 seat majority in the Senate and a 16-seat majority in the House. But they polled only 49.7 of the total vote as the Communists, the the left-wing Socialists, the monarchists and fascists all made gains. The De-Gasperi coalition dropped 2-million votes from its 1948 tally. The Communists won 22 per cent of the vote to continue as the second strongest party to de Gasperi's Christian Democrats who received 40 per cent of the vote. The biggest percentage gains were made by the still small Monarchist and Fascist parties.

In East Germany, the Communist party has issued a series of decrees apparently designed to make life in the Soviet zone more attractive for German unity. And the Russians have informed Austria that they are ready to appoint an ambassador to Vienna and re-establish full diplomatic relations.

And Czech President Zapotcky acknowledged today that the recent currency reform in his country "caused a panic."

Out in Minneapolis today, the President spoke to the annual convention of the National Junior Chamber of Commerce. He told his audience that the Administration's defense plans call for "fewer planes in theory, more planes in fact, more swiftly and less expensively."

We've recorded for you excerpts from the President's address:

EISENHOWER: In the minds of all of you, as in my own mind, is a long list of critical subjects confronting our people today. There is, however, one matter that overshadows all of these. It is the constant, controlling consideration in our national life today. It is, our nation's security.

It is no wonder that our national security is so vast a matter - for the struggle in which freedom today is engaged is quite literally a total and universal struggle. It engages every aspect of our lives. It is waged in every arena in which a challenged civilization must fight to live. It is a military struggle - on the battlefields of Korea, of Indo-China, of Malaya. It is an economic struggle - in which the equivalent of a lost battle can be suffered in a ruined rice crop in Asia, or in the lagging of a critical production line in America.

It is a political struggle - speaking at the conference tables of the United Nations, in the daily diplomatic exchanges that flood the cable wires and telephone lines of the world. It is a scientific struggle - in which atomic energy plants and colossal research projects can produce terrible wonders matching in fateful effect the inventions of the wheel or of gunpowder. It is an intellectual struggle - for the press and the radio, every spoken and printed word, can either inspire or weaken men's faith in freedom. It is a spiritual struggle - for one of Communism's basic assumptions about the nature of men is that they are incapable of ruling themselves, incapable of attaining the spiritual standards and strength to solve national problems when these require voluntary personal sacrifice for the common good. This is the Communist's justification for regimentation. All this we deny. And we must seek in our churches, our schools, our homes and our daily lives the clearness of mind and strongness of heart to guard the chance to live in freedom. For this whole struggle, in the deepest sense, is waged neither for land nor for food nor for power - but for the soul of man himself. I cannot presume today to speak of all aspects of so vast, so all-embracing, so total a struggle - nor of all the truths that must, I believe, guide us steadfastly. I wish to speak simply of two of these truths. The first is this: our military strength and our economic strength are truly one - and neither can sensibly be purchased at the price of destroying the other. The second is this: this nation and all nations defending freedom, everywhere in the world, are one in their common need and their common cause - and none can sanely seek security alone.

MURROW: You have been listening to recorded excerpts from an address the President made this afternoon to the annual convention of the National Junior Chamber of Commerce in Minneapolis.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem evident from the President's speech today that he regards security as an urgent problem (complicated by the fact that we don't know what the future - or the enemy - will require of us. Those who agree with the President would agree with the Roman Ovid when he said: "Safety lies in the middle course." Those who feel differently, might be inclined to conclude as William Sumner did that "The only security is the constant practice of critical thinking."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday
June 11, 1953

This is the news:

South Korean President Rhee said today his troops will fight alone if necessary to drive the Chinese Communists out of Korea. In a reply to the latest message he received from President Eisenhower... (a reply which has not yet been received by any of our top officials in Washington). Rhee said: He regrets that his views differ from ~~that~~ those of our Administration. But he feels this is "unavoidable because a truce on the present terms simply means death to us." We'll hear a summary of Rhee's position in a broadcast from Korea in a few minutes. Rhee's acting prime minister today told reporters: "we cannot and will not accept any part of the armistice terms." The prime minister indicated that ROK troops, who now hold two-thirds of the front, may refuse to withdraw the scheduled one and a quarter miles to establish a truce buffer zone. Today, the Chinese Communists broke the main South Korean line in the east and were stopped, after a heavy attack in the center, by the American Third Division. Right now reports from the front indicate that some of the heaviest fighting and artillery firing of the last two years is in progress on the two fronts. The enemy is believed to be using from eight to ten thousand troops.

[redacted]

1a

In Philadelphia today, the South Korean ambassador [redacted] charged that the United Nations has threatened to embargo military supplies and food to South Korea unless the Koreans agree to the truce terms. Dr. Yang says the U.N. is using threats to force his government to accept.

The State Department says that India has given us "a preliminary favorable reply" to an invitation to serve on the Korean truce commission. The Department refused to explain what "a preliminary favorable reply" means.

Senator Knowland suggests that at the proposed Bermuda conference we should demand that Britain and France announce their support of our insistence that Korea (BE) unified. Knowland said that until we get a peace treaty in Korea..until we unify that country.. "we are not going to sit down with Malenkov" at a Big Four Conference.

And from the president of the United Nations General Assembly, Lester Pearson of Canada, today came a warning that Americans will find few followers among our allies "to support the defeat of Communism as such in Asia." Mr. Pearson says there is no dispute on the necessity to resist Communist aggression. But he SAYS many of our allies will not go along with the theory, held by some, that the appearance of Communist governments in Asia SHOULD be prevented by all steps "short of war" or "at the risk of war."

[redacted]

The President visited North and South Dakota today. At the Garrison dam he said the federal, state and local governments must share in the [redacted]n development of natural resources. But he doesn't want to see too much power over natural resources concentrated in Washington. At Mt. Rushmore, in South Dakota he said the future of the Republican party depends on advancing a program to serve the interests and needs of all citizens.

The President said he feels his Administration has made a good beginning. And he will do all that he can to prevent the government from being caught "in the fatal crossfire of a Congress and an executive warring on each other."

In Washington today, the House Foreign affairs committee tentatively agreed to withhold more than one billion dollars in military aid from six European nations..unless they ratify the European defense community.

Defense Secretary Wilson told a Senate committee that the nation would be disappointed if it knew the "exact state" of the air force when the Eisenhower Administration took office. He said:"The congress and the people would be disappointed if they really knew the facts after all the money that had been spent for the air force."

~~Republican Representative Ahrends of Illinois, defending the Administration's 5 billion dollar cut in air force funds, told the House: one of our new atomic bombs [illegible] the explosive power of a mass bombing attack by [illegible] hundred B-17 type bombers, used in the last~~

Senator Knowland, who took over yesterday as acting floor leader for the Republicans, today told reporters he has doubts whether Congress will approve the President's request for a six months extension of the excess profits tax. He also doubts that Congress will act, before adjournment, on amendments to the Taft-Hartley law and a proposal to broaden social security coverage.

Senator McCarthy charged today that Democratic Senator Lehman of New York committed "a rather gross abuse" of the Senate's free mailing privileges. He says Lehman tried to mail up to 100-thousand pieces of literature entitled "Creeping McCarthyism." Senator Lehman said he was mailing NOT MORE THAN 20 THOUSAND copies of the letter. And he charged that McCarthy was trying to intimidate him. The New Yorker said: "I have lived too long and served the people too long to be uncertain about the sincerity of my position." Later he charged that last year the Post Office Department tried to collect money from Senator McCarthy..for mailing a commercial advertisement for a McCarthy book.

A Senate committee today heard George S. Wuchinich of New York shout that he has been a spy for the United States government. He read the committee the citation for the Distinguished Service Cross he won in the last war for parachuting behind the enemy's lines in the Balkans. But he refused to tell the committee whether he is a communist now or was when he worked for our wartime intelligence agency.

